

<36607532850014

<36607532850014

Bayer. Staatsbibliothek

2^d Brit. 100-7 Thuloe

angle 100.

A COLLECTION OF THE
STATE PAPERS

OF JOHN THURLOE, Esq;
SECRETARY,
First, to the Council of State,
And afterwards to
The Two PROTECTORS,
Oliver and Richard Cromwell.

IN SEVEN VOLUMES.

CONTAINING

Authentic MEMORIALS of the English Affairs, from the Year 1638,
to the RESTORATION of King CHARLES II.

Published from the ORIGINALS, formerly in the Library of JOHN Lord SOMERS, Lord High Chancellor of England; and since in that of Sir JOSEPH JEKYLL, Knt.
late Master of the Rolls.

Including also a considerable Number of ORIGINAL LETTERS and PAPERS, communicated by his Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury from the Library at Lambeth, the Right Honourable the Earl of Shelburn, and other Hands.

The Whole digested into an Exact Order of Time.

To which is prefixed,

The LIFE of Mr. THURLOE:

With a Complete INDEX to each VOLUME.

By THOMAS BIRCH, M. A. F. R. S.

V O L. VII.

Containing Papers from the YEAR MDCLVIII to MDCLX.

L O N D O N:

Printed for the EXECUTOR of the late Mr. FLETCHER GYLES;
THOMAS WOODWARD, at the Half-Moon, between the Temple-Gates, in Fleet-street;
And CHARLES DAVIS, in Pater-noster Row.

MDCCXLII.

COLLECTION
OF THE
STATE PAPERS

JOHN THURLOE, Esq;

SECRETARY

First, to the Council of State,

And afterwards to

The Two PROTECTORS,

Oliver and Richard Cromwell.

In SEVEN VOLUMES.

CONTAINING

Authentic Memorials of the English Affairs, from the Year 1638,
to the Restoration of King CHARLES II.

Published from the ORIGINALS, formerly in the Library of John Lord Somers, Lord High Chancellor of England; and since in that of Sir Joseph Jekyll, Knt.
late Master of the Rolls.

Including also a considerable Number of ORIGINAL LETTERS and PAPERS, communicated
by his Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury from the Library at Lambeth, the Right Honourable the Earl of Shelburne, and other Hands.

The Whole digested into an Exact Order of Time.

To which is prefixed,

The LIFE of Mr. THURLOE.

With a Complete INDEX to each Volume.

By THOMAS BIRCH, M. A. F. R. S.

VOL. VII.

Containing Papers from the Year MDCLVIII to MDCLX.

L O W D O W.

Printed for the Executor of the late Mr. Fletcher Gyles;
Thomas Woodward, at the Half-Moon, between the Temple-Gate, in Fleet-Street;
And Charles Davis, in Paternoster Row.

MDCCLII.

COLLECTION
OF
STATE PAPERS

OF

John Thurloe Esquire, &c.

Major general Jephson to secretary Thurloe.

SIR,

I DID, in my two late letters from Gottorp fully declare unto you the state of your A.D. 1658. affayres here, in which I find as yet noe alteration, having receyved noe aunswer from the K. eyther to the concept of the treatye, or the businesse, which soe nerely con- Vol. lviii. p. 24. cernes you of his intentions in relation 441 398 with 578. I did then likewise inform you of my resolutions to return into these parts, to bee here, or at Hamburgh, to receyve your orders eyther to return, or how to behave myselfe for the future; for as I have formerly told you, the state of affayres is soe chainged here, as there is nothing left for mee to act upon my former instructions, nor, if I had, could I possibly yett have gotten to the king, the sea being neyther wholly frozen, nor soe melted, that boats can passe, nor yet like to bee very suddainlye; for although the sunne bee gotten to such a height, that it thawes sumthing in the day-time, yet it freezeth still very hard by night. I cannot heare certainly, whither the K. intends still to goe for a while into Sweden: if he doth, it is generally believed, hee will goe noe farther than Gottenburgh, and will bee in those parts againe the next month. Since my return hither, I have receyved two of your letters of the States Genl.

18th and 26th of February, in both which I see the care that hath been used with 599 for Sweden's

548 26 interest; and in the latter you are pleased to furnish mee with arguments to satisfye his majesty, why the money, which was promised his ministers in England, hath not hitherto been paid. Concerning which I have already severall times discourst with the K. to the same purpose; and therefore intend a while to suspend writing, until I eyther heare from his majestie, or receyve some further orders from you, after your receipt of my letters concerning the Danish peace. I have here inclosed sent you a copy of the articles of it. I cannot undertake they are authentick, but find they agree in the maine points with what

I have heard heretofore. Sir, I confesse I am soe much amazed 110 444 149 365 at the carriage of thing s here, that I can not what to advise; it the Swede hath

452 26 250 443 44 151 340 tell 508 441 36 9 50 67 45 89; but certainly 270 548 247 any to a conjunction you, and a 4 19 3 inclination 441 36 particular 7 17 19 104 6 30 31 12 67 17 30 with 321 108 4 generl e a gue or the to f o

228 8 89 62 78 6 70 365 444 protestants, there is now a greate opportunitye 441 37 40 r e e the S.G. to join us, them the Baltick sea,

23 7 89 444 599 441 264 with 475, or else to exclude 446 598, which, I doubt not, the treat y

you will consider of. I cannot yett certainly heare, what is like to be done upon 444 461 3 Poland; nobility of Poland with 579; but it is generally reported, the 19 17 39 44 49 67 12 38 365 579 are much Austria in it.

divided amongst themselves upon the point of excluding or including 578 267 274. It is

A.D. 1658.

is sayd too, and I believe it to be probable, 443 548 refuseth 441 7 40 5 52 59 67 94 89 them in the treat y.

446 267 444 461 24. Sir, your last letter of the 26th of Feb. was written in a strange hand, which I have not formerly beene acquainted with, of which I am forct, though very unwillingly, a little to complaine; for besides it came to mee without a name, and almost every word, both materiall and indifferent, is put into characters, (which breeds a greate deale of unnecessary trouble) the figures for the letters were written without any distinction by points, that I professe it hath beene almost two dayes worke to decypher it; and some of it I cannot yett for my life understand. The alarme I gave you in my last of the Poles and Austrians entring into Pomerania, is come to nothing but a slight incurfion of a partye, who are againe retreated. I have noe more at present, but to begg the favour I may bee still esteemed, as I shall ever indeavour to approve myselfe,

Your most affectionate and faythfull

Lubeck, 15th March, 1657.

humble servant,

WM. JEPHSON.

A letter of count Palatine, the king of Sweden's brother, to Mr. Bradshaw.

ADOLPHUS JOHANNES Dei gratia comes Palatinus, &c.

Vol. lviii.
p. 106.

FAVOREM nostrum singularem, illustris & generose, nobis sincere dilecte domine legate,

Ex insertis ad nos a generoso domino gubernatore Rigense Helmsted. 5^o hujus datis, illustritati vestræ patebit, qualis post abitum ejus ex Livonia rerum ibi facies exorta, & quod tandem Woiwoda Nassokin adeo sollicitè inquirere jusserit, & ob id suum emiserit secretarium. Retulit is, dum Rigæ degerit, prædictum Nassokin, non bonam inde polliceri sibi gratiam, quod sua culpa factum esse videt, quo minus illustritas vestra a Moscis meliori modo recepta est, prout fusius ex dicta copia videre licet. Nos cum audiremus Gedani adhuc illustritatem vestram hære, necessum esse duximus hac de re eandem certiolem facere, cujus dexteritati, & in res nostras studio committimus, quid hac in re consultum videatur. De cætero illustritatem vestram divinæ commendamus tutelæ.

Marienburgi, die $\frac{24}{14}$ Martii, 1658.

Illustritatis vestræ ad officia paratissimus,

ADOLPHUS JOHANNES.

Secretary Thurloe to Lockhart, ambassador in France.

In the possession of Joseph Radcliffe, of the Inner-Temple esq;

I RECEIVED yours of the $\frac{10}{20}$ th March, and find thereby, that your excellency hath not concluded the treaty, occasioned by the commissioners departing from some things the cardinal had agreed to; and particularly in two points, both which are very material, and especially the latter, which concerns the limitation of time; and truly that of the pay is so material also, that, if it be not done, it will be hard to get the men levied. Upon the second thoughts, I make some doubt about that clause in the treaty, whereby the French should be obliged to give satisfaction in case of failure of promises; which gives them an election which they will do; and it is possible they will by it find some colours of evasion, and alledge, it was not an absolute promise, but limited, and they may chuse to give satisfaction, or, at least, to pretend to it, rather than perform the other way; but I leave it to your excellency's consideration. The men are landing; but I intreat your excellency to send us the money as soon as is possible, or it will retard that service; and to return it so, that we may have it paid without delay. That which is already received, is very well remitted. It answers 55 pence half-penny the French crown; and I desire to know, whether the rest may be returned so, or not. It is necessary also for us to have a copy of the treaty, so soon as it is concluded, that we may the better know, how to govern ourselves; and it is fit to be sent by an express.

I have inquired of the price of bisket and wheat, and the prices are as in the inclosed paper, which will be the lowest it will be had for. The commodities are dear now: the hard winter hath made them so. I intreat to know what will be resolved upon therein, that if any quantity be to be provided, it may be timely known.

It is thought here very convenient to send the men over by 3 or 400 at a time, as they be ready. It will be much more easy to do it, and prevent the running-away of many of them.

them. I know no objection against it: however, it is good to let the cardinal know it, to A.D. 1658. prevent mistakes. The lowest price of the hay will be, as my last acquainted you; and that quantity, which we buy, shall be ready by the day. It were well we had direction how to have it, when it must be landed, and who is to take care of it. We long to hear what their preparations are for the next campaign, and when they will be in the field, and also what becomes of Hesdin. The cardinal may assure himself, that if any application of that kind be made to his highness, they shall be treated as rebels, and men false to their trust, not otherwise. Mr. Bordeaux was with me this afternoon, and mentioned to me, amongst some other things, his own business; which, I perceive, he thinks not to be in a very good condition. I assure you, that his highness will take it exceedingly well, if my lord ambassador were gratified with the second place, if he cannot obtain the first. It is great reason your excellency should be allowed those contingent moneys you lay out; and if you please to make return of them hither, I will take care they be paid. I beg your lordship's pardon for this trouble; but before I end, I must assure your lordship, that there are here no grounds at all for the falsehoods, which are spread up and down of our disorders. I trust, if they ever go on with this attempt, they will find it otherwise. Upon friday last the mayor, aldermen, and common-council were with his highness at Whitehall, being sent for by him. He spake to them at large, and acquainted them with the reasons, which moved him to dissolve the last parliament. His discourse greatly satisfied them; and we think in a body they will declare some things of advantage to the present affairs.

Whitehall, $\frac{15}{25}$ March, 1657.

Yours, &c.

Inclosed in the preceding.

I HAVE informed myself, and find bisket and wheaten meal to be at present according to the following prices; together with the charge that will attend to carry them within the Splinter, besides the adventure.

Bisket 12 s. 6 d. per 112 lb.	-	-	00	12	6
Bags for each	-	-	00	1	1
Freight, per C.	-	-	00	1	2
			00	14	9
Wheaten meal 10 s. 6 d. per 122 lb.	-	-	00	10	6
Cask for 1 C. meal	-	-	00	1	6
Portage, cooperage, cartridge, wharfage, per th.	00	0	5	$\frac{1}{2}$
Freight per C.	-	-	00	0	6
			00	13	0

If it shall be thought fit, I shall undertake to deliver in the place aforesaid, what quantity shall be desired of bisket, free of all charges, at provided it may be free of all custom and convoy, that satisfaction is given in point of payment, and the goods received from aboard the vessels in convenient tyme after arrival.

Wheaten meal

March $\frac{15}{25}$. 1657.

A letter of intelligence from the Hague.

Samedy, le 23 Mars, 1658. [N. S.]

LE marchand Diest de Rotterdam declare, qu'il n'est que participant des navires prinſes Vol. lviii. par les Anglois; ne sachant rien, qu'ils soyent equippes vers Flanders, n'y portant con-P. 103. trabandes, requiert lettres de recommandation au protecteur pour ravoit ses navires. Mais en cela on fait difficulte, quoyqu' ainsy on ne soit pas enclin à le punir.

On a esté en conference avec les deutes de la comp. de Ostende touchant les dommages & outrages pretendus par le resident d'Angleterre; mais ils sont encore immutables, si qu'on ne fait qu'en faire.

Neantmoins on a escrit au protecteur touchant le sucres ou prinſes Portuguais, qu'en Angleterre on tascha de decharger. Pour les affaires du Nort, il y a apparence, qu'on renvoyera le sieur Slingelant avec des ordres doux & moderes.

On a eu une conference à ce soir avec les deutes de Munster, qui n'ont rien plus dit ny requis, que ce qui a esté desja accordé par la resolution du 2 Mars, pour estre simplement admis selon l'article 9. seulement, requirant de n'estre pas retardes jusques au consentement des 3. autres villes.

Lundy,

A.D. 1658.

Lundy, le 25 Mars 1658.

Ayant esté conference avec les deputes de Munster, le sieur Schoock & autres en ont fait rapport ; & des points proposes dans la conference a esté demandé copie par les provinces.

L'on a resolu de escrire aux admirautes, afin qu'ils avertissent les maistres de navires allants vers le Sont, à se donner garde de ce que du costé de Schoonen il n'y aura point de lumiere suspendue, comme cydevant ; parce que les Danois, qui le ont fait cydevant, ne les feront plus ; & les Swedois sans recognition ne le voudront pas faire. L'Hollande, voyant les menaces faites sur la ville de Danzigk, resume le traité pour prester de l'argent à la dite ville. Au reste (quoyque continuant l'equipage) est d'avis de ratifier le traité d'Elbing, & ajuster les elucidations le mieux qu'on peut, afin que l'on rende les ambassadeurs capables de mediation pour la paix en Pologne.

Mardy, le 26 Mars, 1658.

Le sieur ambassadeur de Spagne aura fait presenter un memoire en general, requerant, que sur tous ses memoires soit rendu response & resolu specialement pour l'admission d'un consul à Rotterdam. Item par un autre a requis satisfaction pour l'abbé de Cloosterraedt. Les commissaires de cet estat pour le traité, comme son excellence, l'avoit desja signé & feillé ; mais tous n'avoient pas leurs cachets à la main.

Messieurs de Hollande ont product leur advis provincial touchant les affaires du Nort & Ost ; qu'on doive envoyer la ratification sur le traité d'Elbing, & les elucidations vers les ambassadeurs, qui sont ou seront pas le roy de Swede pour perfectionner ce traité.

Que, ce non obstant, on continuera l'equipage de 48 navires, en suite des resolutions precedentes ; & qu'on tascher à de satisfaire aux defauts & empeschemens, qu'aucunes admirautes ont ou font en cela.

Secretary Thurloc to H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland.

MY LORD,

In the possession of the right hon. the earl of Shelburn.

ALL that hath beene done since my last in the publique affaires is to speake with the citty about them. His highnes sent for the mayor, aldermen, and comon counsell, upon friday, and opened to them the state of our affaires ever since he took upon the government, and the principles he had governed by, and how he had carryed hymselfe towards the two last parlaments, and the reasons he had to dissolve the last of all. The citty tooke very great impressions from what he was pleased to say, and were very sensible of the daunger, that both the citty and whole nation were in from the open enemy, and other secret ones ; for H. H. did at large acquaint them with the designs of the cavalier party, and of the great preparations they are makeinge in conjunction with the Spanyard.

The common counsell met yesterday, and exprest very great affection and duty to his highnes and government, and seeme to be readye to doe all they can to assist hym in the great burdens, which are upon his shoulders ; and truly, my lord, I thinke the citty, and most other parts alsoe, are to be brought to reason and a consistencie, if the Lord give wisdom in the manadgment of affaires. The great want is money, which puts us to the wall in all our buisines. But truly, my lord, nothinge troubles us more than your condition, which I finde every body sensible of ; and this afternoone wee are to come to a meetinge with the money-men, to turne every stone for the supply of Ireland. What will come of it, I knowe not ; but there will noe endeavours be wantinge in some of your servants. Our fleet is yet before Ostend, attendinge the motion of the enemye there. It's certeyne, they are still preparinge, and have assurance of great insurrections here. It's certeyne, that Ormond was here to treat with our great men, and some that never were before in open armes against the parliament ; but I beleive his encouradgments were not soe great as hee expected ; and doubtlesse they endeavour to joyne many interests together, as that of the peeres with the presbiterians. I hope they will not gaine upon those, who are honest, of either. I writ to your lordship by the last, as to an addresse of the army in Ireland, which I judge now seasonable, the armyes of England and Scotland beinge resolved upon that way. We heare nothinge further from the Dane and Swede. I believe they are agreed upon the terms my last mentioned.

I knowe not what to say upon the proceedings had against the Irish upon the last act. I feare it cannot be dispensed with but by an act of parliament. The prudent manadgment of it upon the place will be the best way. I am

Your excellencye's most humble, faithfull,

Whitehall, 16 March, 1657.

and obedient servant,

JO. THURLOE.

General

General Monck to secretary Thurloe.

HONOURABLE SIR,

THE provost of Edinburgh being, uppon the earnest request of that cittie, to attend A.D. 1658. his highness for representing the sad estate that towne is lyke to be reduced unto by their publick debts, which, though they have been well helped by his highnesses former grant, (soe as to keepe up their credit, and to hold off the extremity, which creditors would otherwise have put them to) and paying the interest and principles to the full sum of what they received by virtue of the aforesaid grant; yet, upon the examination of their accounts, I am creditably informed, the cittie is yet indebted above fifty thousand pounds sterl. and considering the readines of the magistrate to give obedience to all commands, and, according to their power, nay, even beyond their poor ability, to give assistance by lending money, and otherwise to keep forward the publick service; and that which the provost is to desire in their behalf being no way tending to the diminution of the publique revenues, but to be taken of the inhabitants of the sayd cittie, which I perceive they are generally, not only willing to, but desirous of; and considering the consequences of suffering such an antient cittie, and the chief of this nation, to be left without magistracy and government, which, if some way be not taken for satisfying their publique debts, will inevitably follow, that, according to the laws of this nation, the magistrates are lyable to the debts of this, though contracted long before their times, whereby men of quality and prudence will be scared from undertaking the magistracy: upon these, and like considerations, I am moved to intreat your help and assistance to the provost for some releefe, wherein I am perswaded you will doe a very good worke, and very acceptable both to ministry and people heere. I am, SIR,

Your most affectionate humble servant,

Dalkeith, 17^o Mar. 1657.

GEORGE MONCK.

Extract out of the register of the H. and M. L. states general of the United Netherlands.

Jovis, the 28th of March, 1658. [N. S.]

WAS once more produced in the assembly the memorandum, lately presented to their H. and M. L. by the lord resident Applebom, containing in effect, that he being certified by a letter from his king of a peace made between his majesty and the crown of Denmark, he found himself obliged to impart such good and desirable news to their H. and M. L. with an addition of civil expressions of inclination and affection for the securing and increasing of the navigation and commerce. There being also read a further memorandum of the said resident concerning the said subject; whereupon being debated, it is resolved, that this be returned in answer to the said resident's memorandum, That their H. and M. L. did receive with great pleasure the said assurance, how that by a peace concluded between the king of Sweden and king of Denmark, the troubles and inconveniences will come to cease, which of late the commerce and navigation upon the east sea have suffered; at least, that the king of Sweden on his side will not omit to contribute all that may make and tend for the increasing of the good amity and correspondence with this state, and that which may be desired of a true ally; and adding withal, that their H. and M. L. have sent and given such orders and instructions to their ministers in the Swedish court, that therewith such inclination on their side shall be effectually shewn, and that they also do expect on the side of his majesty the real effect of the said assurance. An extract of his resolution shall be sent to their H. and M. L. ambassadors with the king of Sweden and Denmark, and the duke of Brandenburg, to serve for their information.

*A letter of information.*The 18th March 1657.

CORNETT Daye in his prayer did envy much the citty of London for joyneing with the great man at Whitehall with their lives and fortunes, and said it would be the cause of much blood; and in his sermon he had these expressions, that Oliver Cromwell was noe magistrate or governor; for he was not made soe by God nor man, unless the lord mayor and court of aldermen had made him soe. And alsoe said, that Oliver Cromwell

A.D. 1658. was a jugler, and he would prove him foe by a substantiall witnesse. Many other expressions he had enveighing at the lord protector.

JOHN MARSHALL.
ROBERT TODD.

And he added to the words above exprest in saying the lord protector was a jugler, that he deserved to be sawne in pieces.

ROBERT TODD.

Secretary Thurloe to Lockhart ambassador in France.

In the possession of Joseph Radcliffe, of the Inner-Temple, esq;

I SHALL not trouble your excellency much by this post, save to let you know, I have received yours of the $\frac{1}{2}$ $\frac{3}{3}$ instant, with Mr. Willdigoe's account, and understand thereby, that your excellency hath agreed upon all the points, which will concern the next campaign; and that you intend to send the treaty hither by an exprest, which is very necessary to be done, that we may walk by a rule in what we do. In the mean time, all possible haste is made with the levies, and hope to be very punctual with them in point of time, especially if the money be returned to us, whereof we have so great need, that the men cannot be sent away without it. I will also observe your directions about the hay, but beg also, that the sum, which that will come to, may be also provided and sent.

We have no news here at all. Things remain much in one state here; only the army grows more of a piece, and more affectionate and true to his highness every day than other. This inclosed I beg your lordship to cause to be sent to Mr. St. John. I am

Whitehall, $\frac{1}{2}$ $\frac{8}{8}$ March, 1657.

Yours, &c.

I know not yet to whom the hay shall be delivered. It is necessary we should know that with the first opportunity.

Secretary Thurloe to Lockhart, ambassador in France.

In the possession of Joseph Radcliffe, of the Inner-Temple, esq;

CONCERNING the constituting of commissioners of damages before the peace, as the motion, which your excellency hath already made therein, is acceptable to his highness, and conformable to his instructions; so also the necessity of the persons and the affair seemeth such, that you are therefore desired still to insist therein with the cardinal for the appointing and sending them over, which is the only occasion of this letter, except that of assuring you, that I am

Whitehall, $\frac{1}{2}$ $\frac{8}{8}$ March, 1657.

Yours, &c.

Mr. Downing, the English envoy in Holland, to secretary Thurloe.

HONOURABLE SIR,

Hague, 29 March, 1658. [N. S.]

Vol. lviii.
p. 150.

SINCE the newes of a peace in Denmark, heere hath very little occurred. We are in daily expectation of the full execution of that peace, which many are of opinion will not be, though they seeme to have little ground to confirme that beleefe, considering the power of the king of Sweden in Zeeland, which is not lessened by the delivery of two thousand horse by the king of Denmark to him. 468 202 227 138 144 11 270 a r of the ft.gen. in Denm. hee can to a ni ma te this i

152 133 408 468 535 339 552 doth all 324 247 477 17 393 371 466 469 140 ta te a gainst the K. Swed. that the f ta re s of Holland

463 466 12 310 468 536: and this is certain, 467 468 140 463 466 140 408 557 ar e most ex t r e me li di i p le af ed,

213 40 385 294 150 132 41 379 362 267 141 119 358 217 279, but doe not well know what to do; the y do the i r u t most to ha t e n out

353 491 270; 468 173 270 468 67 131 152 145 385 477 321 151 45 110 418 the i r f le et, will e n de a v o u 468 70 135 46 358 289, and they 503 undoubtedly 42 105 263 16 155 112 154 r to as i u r e them f e l v es a gainst the K. Swed. with the 136 477 217 141 155 134 43 468 141 42 84 155 287 14 310 468 536 500 468

i r ship s, ga the r by some p a pe r s

71 136 456 142: and as you may also 308 468 136 239 460 119 13 426 135 142 hee r wi t h f e n t, the y ar e e n

924 131 502 145 60 138 39 104 145, 468 168 213 39 endeavouring to 40 105
308

ga ge the El. Brand. a gainst the K. Swed. by gu ar ra n t in g his treatie A.D. 1658.
 308 311 468 543 16 310 468 536 239 318 213 437 105 146 339 55 327 479 wi t h K Poland; w or d s of his instructions ar e a d co r 502 147 62 538; and the 158 416 34 141 408 327 349 213 41 (11 33 254 132 ro bo ra n d um an im um e j us me an in g

443 241 437 106 34 518 205 338 518 42 70 524) the 379 205 339 53 whereof you will The y ha u e or de r ed

510 503 will very easily understand. 468 168 319 152 44 also 416 263 133 279 the i r mi ni f t er s to 462 72 136 381 393 141 149 286 141 477 go to Bromsburgh, where the plenipotentiaries of Sweden are advanced, as also the ambassador of France; and probably the treaty may begin there within two or three weekes, and hardly fooner, considering the and the y will also a ni ma te the K. Poland.

weather; 207 468 170 503 201 14 393 371 466 468 538. Truly I doe thinke, and L. prot.

so doth the French ambassador, that it is absolutely necessary, that 534 doe forthwith, f e n d some pe r f on to the El. Brand. to f without any delay, 140 40 104 33 460 426 134 141 412 477 468 543 477 141 te ar e him; L. prot.

466 213 44 316; and by all that ever I can perceive any way, 543 may doe very much wi t h him; of el. Brand from me the 502 150 64 326; and the ministers 408 543 600 doe earnestly desire 306 379 468 lame, the 448, and so doeth monsieur Appleboom: and if this be not done, in all probability 468 am ba f f a d o u r of the st. gen. e n ga

202 227 141 143 13 34 114 156 136 408 468 535 will hazard to 40 105 308 ge him a gainst the K. Swed. a peace K. Poland.

311 326 14 310 468 536, in case that 16 427 be not made with the 538 589. This I write upon very serious consideration and advice. Also it is very considerable, whether it be not necessary, and truly I thinke it is, 467 534 323 460 241 267 219 20 443 88 that L. prot. have some bo di at B ro m s be r g, 140 231 134 55, the steereing of affaires there being that which is like anew to influence al this of the w or l d;

199 469 part 408 468 160 416 83 36; and it is beleaved, that much may there be f ep ar a te k. Hung. from k. Hung. co done to 141 284 286 14 466 539 306 539, or however to prevent the absolute 254 n j u n c t ion or E. Brand. wi t h the m.

106 68 154 107 28 145 345 408 543 502 150 65 468 90. I sent you by the last co p y of his treaty wi t h k. Poland.

post a 254 120 168 408 327 479 502 150 65 538; but notwithstanding thereof, much good may, I thinke, be done; but hast is all, this being the time of taking new measures, and of preventing such evils as may otherwise fall out. Heere is newes, as if the Austrians, Poles and Brandenburgers were entering Pomerania; but I beleieve it not;

and for what concerns Brandenburg, his ministers doe assure me the contrary. I beleieve do no t h in g ti l l the if f u e of the treaty

he will 270 395 159 61 339 58 475 84 87 468 346 143 156 44 408 468 479 at B ro m s be r g.

219 20 443 90 140 231 134 56.
 Ba l ca r r is,

As for 227 83 245 134 137 346, if you will have any thing done concerning 326,
 him,

you must send me authentique letters according to the tenor of the 466 106 147 63 213 te n t h ar t i c le of the treaty;

 148 70 25 358 408 468 479; and if I had also one or two more letters by me of that kind, with blanks for the 388 141 408 149 61 40 426 133 141 412 143, I could name s of t h e pe r f on s, make use of them as occasion should present; but if I should goe any other way, all I

 The to w ne s of Ha er l e m and should say might be avoided. 468 477 161 107 287 408 319 286 81 41 89 207 Le y d e n f ta t es of Holland

358 170 34 42 106 are earnestly suing to the 140 463 148 287 408 557 for a greate of h ce for a f ri e n d of the i r s under ha

408 302 251 305 16 46 441 42 106 34 408 468 70 135 142. They are 519 319
 n d to l. 60 wi t h d ra w the p ro te f

105 33 477 83 35; that if they will 502 150 64 37 437 160 468 122 43 466 143 t a gainst the f ec r et wi t h England,

150 12 310 468 141 278 135 289 502 149 64 547, that then it shal be granted;
 ta m p er rin g I p r ef f and they have been 463 90 121 286 339 55 with me, that 68 would 123 131 287 140

 e that ar t i c le l. prot. o di o us Zeland

41 467 213 150 72 31 358 only to make 534 113 267 115 524 with 558 and many others of other provinces, to noe purpose. It were high time, that ambassador were heere

A.D. 1658. heere from Portugal. Though Holland be very inclinable to a cessation, yet others are very averse, untill an ambassador come. You will perceive by the inclosed, that monsieur Appleboom hath put in another memoriall since that I sent you by the last post, testifying his master's intentions in relation to theis state; and though it's certaine ^{that the k. Swed.} 467 468 536

can no t lo v e the m, y et hee w o u l d at le i f 247 395 150 365 154 41 468 100, 169 289 324 162 114 154 83 34 219 358 143 t q u i e te the m for the p r e f e n t.

150 130 157 73 44 466 468 102 305 468 121 136 287 41 107 148. This is but Holland will do what the y can to b r i d le him, undoubtedly true; 244 557 503 270 491 468 171 247 477 21 441 36 358 326, the m be li e v e o t h beleeveing, and it's not possible to make 468 101 231 362 43 154 44 116 149 64 er wi f e, that his in te n t ion s ar e no t good to 286 502 141 40, 467 327 339 466 109 150 345 144 213 45 395 149 317 477 wa r d the m; Ap p le bo me hatn no an i w er to

483 133 35 368 102; and 210 121 358 241 412 322 395 205 141 160 286 477
his me mo ri al s; Holand

327 379 384 441 199 143; yet withall, as you will perceive by an inclosed, 557 hath r e f o l v ed, that the treaty of E l b in g be ra ti

322 134 287 112 82 153 279, 467 468 479 408 40 82 18 339 54 231 437 475 fi ed, but no t de li v er ed; co m p o

302 279, 244 395 149 263 362 154 286 279; so if matters be 254 90 121 113 f ed at B ro m i be r g, can oe t t

140 279 219 19 443 90 140 231 133 55, or that they 247 doe noe 231 147 150 er, the n i t f ha l be de li v er ed,

286, 468 107 71 148 141 319 83 231 263 362 153 286 279, and all shall be very good f r i e n d s.

317 47 441 39 105 33 139.

I have delivered yesterday the examinations of the masters and mariners taken in the ship of Vandiest, in pursuance of the desire of the states general sent me the day before.

You will perceive by an inclosed, that 68 shall be againe desired ^{I to f i g ne} 477 140 69 55 390

an act co n c e r n in g the tr a d e in the e a f 205 189 254 106 28 251 134 107 339 55 468 133 437 263 339 468 40 12 141

t f e a; but l f ha l no t do i t. you r 149 142 42 12; 244 70 142 319 82 395 148 270 72 150. I shall attend 510 133

far t h er instructions 299 147 61 286 343 concerning the treaty defensive, and I thinke I shall speedily have from 263 158 69 145 151 what by your last you desire in relation to the treaty marine.

De w i t t

De Ru i t er his ship, and the Le op ar d, take n in the S t ra y t es, fa l l e n Te x e l l:
263 447 71 149 286 327 456, 207 468 358 414 213 35, 464 104 339 468 138

145 437 170 150 287, are 298 84 87 40 105 down to the 466 165 40 82 87: it is go e to the e a f t f e a; thought, that they shall 314 43 477 468 40 14 141 148 140 41 13; and it is said, la te le v i es ar e y et go in g, and to go: that the 355 466 358 156 70 287 213 41 170 289 314 339 55 207 477 314: but ill will of Holland this is an affaire that changes every week; the best measure is the 337 503 408 557 to

k. Swed.

the 536.

go in g for Ca di s in Spayne v er y f pe ed i Here are 314 339 54 305 245 267 144 339 550 153 286 173 140 426 279 70

ly, 362, the Saint Mary, Stephen Grasby master; the Hope, which hath 30 guns, and can carry many more, Barridon Jassen master; the St. Nicholas, with 26 guns, Jan Schellon master; the Persian, 22 guns, Jean Tomeson master; the Notebom, 16 guns, Jesper Notebom master, and more will be fitting speedily: these goe all from Amsterdam. By Ca d is.

a former I gave you an accompt concerning the fleete fitting out from 244 36 346, which it's conceived will sayle about the beginning or middle at farthest of the next month.

Ri c ha r d s co r r e f po n d e
I take one 441 25 319 132 32 138 to be the 254 132 135 287 431 106 34 44

n t of le go v er no u r. f p ar e p aines 104 145 408 358 314 153 286 395 156 136. I shall not 143 122 213 41 424 or c ha r ge intimat ion s I can; 416 26 319 133 311 to give you the best 342 345 141 70 247; but I begin to be d ra w ne low.

33 437 161 390 very 369. I think that the touch I gave concerning the placart of the states general prohibiting trade with Portugal, in my last memorial, which I sent you by the last post, is enough. I am sure it will render them excuseless, if any hurt should hereafter

JOHN THURLOE ESQ. &c.

after ensue thereupon. By this post his highnesse will receive a letter in relation to the A.D. 1658. complaint I made concerning the injuries suffered by the English merchants in the East Indyes, a copy thereof having bin this morning sent me by the states generall. I am

HONOURABLE SIR,

Your very saythfull humble servant,

G. DOWNING.

I have herein inclosed a paper to be signed for the mustering of Woodrooffe, my clerke, in the troupe, in which he is mustered at present, and hath bin for many years; and when it is signed, be pleased to send it to my house to my servant Hawley. I pray also, that I may have the commission signed, and sent to me, for Mr. Zas to be advocate for the English merchants heere: he will be very stedable to me.

Monsieur Aplebom hath sent me word, that he hath letters, that the king of Hungary hath declared the rupture with the king of Sweden, and that he is at Frankford; and that 'tis thought, that the election will not be very speedily: so that the king of Sweeden's work is cut out for him. Don Stephano de Gamara is returned hither: it's said he shall not stay above a month.

Not a word yet from major general Jephson or Mr. Meadows.

Intelligence sent from Holland by resident Downing.

Extract of the resolutions of the high and mighty lords states general of the United Provinces, 29. Mar. 1658. [N. S.]

A CERTAIN memorial of Mr. Downing, resident of the lord protector of England, Vol. lviii. &c. touching the business of captain Thyssen, who hath been set at liberty, instead P. 207. of punishing him according to the request of the said resident, in conformity to the seventh article of peace made between the said lord protector and this state; whereupon, after deliberation, it hath been found good by these presents, (according to the resolution of their lordships, dated the 16th current) to require again the lords the states of Holland, that they will take care, that by the magistrate and city of Amsterdam right and justice may be administred, according to the exigence of the business, in the case of the said captain Thyssen; and an extract of this resolution shall be given to the said Mr. Downing by the agent de Heyde to inform him therein.

My memorial this day presented to the states general.

THE underwritten resident having received certain information, that there are two ships called Binenland Verders, or inland ships, whereof the master of one is called John Curmless, and the other John Schute, loaden with great guns, and now upon their way from Amsterdam to Ghent, doth desire, that effectual orders may forthwith be given for the stop of them; and being also informed, that there go frequently all sorts of ammunition from Amsterdam in those Binenland Verders to Flanders, and that (as it is said) with the consent of the admiralty of the said city; the said resident finds himself obliged seriously to represent the foresaid evils to their lordships, who, he doubts not, will find reason to give such orders therein as may be significant, according to the treaty made by his master with them. Given at the Hague, 5. April, 1658. [N. S.]

A letter to me from Rotterdam, 5. April [1658. N. S.].

THE Newport man of war, which was at the Brill, went thence last monday, and lay just in the harbour-mouth, that if any ships came to sea without convoy, or from sea, he might snap them. It was a sloop with two guns and twenty men. It's thought she rides still here, and other of them before the Maese or about Gorée. Any small man of war would force them in; then keeping them in eight or ten days, their victuals would fail, and their men run away. A man of war of eight guns would do it, and serve to convoy English ships in and out. Indeed it is a great burthen for merchants to lie so long for convoy, and their commodities spoiled, and long returns, and the markets lost; which makes merchants make use of Dutch ships, and let our English lie without employment, because the admiralty here will grant us a Dutch convoy (tho' it be but for one Dutch vessel) at one request, and by that the little trade is forced to be driven principally in Dutch ships, which I am sure is against Englishmens desire. Yesterday the Saphire frigate was before the Maese, and brought some ships out of Ostend road; but

A.D. 1658. before the English ships at the Brill had notice thereof, she was gone again, and so were still destitute of a convoy; whereas, if it had but staid two hours, and sent in her boat, or word in by the ships, that she would stay a tide, all the ships had been with him to their joy, which have laid more than two months there for convoy. There are two Hull ships, two Boston, two Yarmouth ships, and other north-country ships. Sir, I hope you will be mindful, that once in fourteen days, or as soon as the wind serves, one of the frigats may come from before Ostend, and give notice at the Brill, that if any English ships be there, they should be convoyed over. It would be great encouragement to this traffick, and be a means to have our English ships employed instead of foreigners; for here will be every fourteen days English ships ready.

Intelligence sent from Holland by resident Downing.

Resolutions of the states general, 29. March, 1658. [N. S.] touching a proposition made to them by the deputies of Zealand for the speedy ratification of the treaty of Elbing.

Vol. lviii.
p. 148.

THE deputies of the province of Zealand have made known to the states general, that they judge it very necessary, that the ratification of the treaty of Elbing should be dispatched without delay, without expecting a final accommodation of the points of the elucidation, or any other thing; they judging thereby, that the ancient amity and alliance betwixt Sweden and this state will be the better confirmed, and the navigation and commerce of the Baltic sea assured; but that there is also a probability, that by the including into that treaty the elector of Brandenburg may enjoy the assurance desired for his countries and subjects; and that the city of Dantzick will be freed from peril of war; and that they judge it very necessary, that between those that shall be comprised in the treaty, and his majesty of Sweden, a good correspondence and amity be established; and for this purpose, that the city of Dantzick be desired to accept of the said inclusion without any delay; and that instructions be given to the ambassador Isbrants to confer with the elector of Brandenburg touching the speediest way of concluding a peace between Poland and Prussia, by the mediation of this state, joined with that of England and France; requiring also the elector of Brandenburg to continue carefully his endeavours also, that, at the request of the king of Poland, ambassadors from this state be speedily dispatched to be present at the treaty of Brandenburg. After deliberation hereupon, the other provinces demanded a copy of this resolution.

Resolutions of the states general, 29. March, 1658. [N. S.]

UPON the letters of ambassador Beuningen, now at Copenhagen, touching the affairs of the North, it hath been resolved, that they stick to their former resolutions, as far as they are applicable to the present condition; and that letters be written again to the ambassador Mazedam, now with the king of Sweden, that he shall continue his endeavours, that the act of elucidation of the treaty of Elbing may be perfected, according to the several resolutions of this state, and the instrument of the resolution of the treaty of Elbing shall be sent to the said ambassador, with order nevertheless, that it be not delivered, till all the points of the elucidation be concluded, and then the ratification to be mutually delivered; and that this their intention shall be given and communicated to the public ministers of France and England, together with the treaty of Elbing, and the points of the elucidation; that this state desires thereupon with justice, that the king of France and the lord protector, according to the offers of assurances made by their ministers, would endeavour to secure the navigation and commerce of the Baltic sea. Moreover, upon profer made on behalf of the protector, that he desires nothing for his subjects, but what will be granted to this state, propositions shall be made to the resident Downing, that an act be passed on both sides, to assure each other, and also to make a treaty of guaranty to maintain the navigation and commerce; also that conditions be agreed upon to propose to the king of Sweden touching the same; also that an extract of this resolution be sent to the ambassadors of this state, now with the kings of Sweden and Denmark.

The deputies of the province of Guelderland have declared, that they have not received orders to consent to this. They of Zealand have so far consented, as it is not contrary to their resolution of the 23d. They of Utrecht expect orders from their principals. They of Friseland and Groningen continue in the resolution taken by the states general.

*Extract out of the resolutions of the H. and M. L. the lords states general of the United Netherlands.*Veneris, the 29th of March, 1658. [N. S.]

WAS once more produced in the assembly the letter of the king of Poland writ from A.D. 1658: Posna of the 3^d of the last month, and received on the 18th instant, containing in what terms the treaty of peace was brought between his majesty and the king of Sweden, desiring to that end, that their H. and M. L. as mediators, would send their ambassadors to Bransberg in Prussia against the 20th of this month, to help determine the usual preliminaries. Whereupon being debated, it is thought fit and understood, that the lord Isbrants ambassador extr. on the behalf of this state, residing at present in the court of Brandenburg, be ordered to make what haste he can to the said place, and there to help further the peace between the two said kings, in conformity to foregoing orders, and especially according to the memorandum agreed upon for that end by their H. and M. L. on the 10th of November, 1656. and in the said memorandum the necessary credentials be forthwith sent unto him; and that this be signified to the said king of Poland in form of answer upon his said letter; and the said lord Isbrants is also to acquaint the duke of Brandenburg, was therefore necessitated to take his leave, and withal to assure him at the same time, that he found himself ordered, that when he shall be come to the said place, to communicate confidently about all passages with those that be there on the behalf of the said duke; and especially to endeavour, by all fit ways and means, that the renewed confidence between the king of Poland and the duke may be strengthened and increased, the common interests promoted, as also a good and firm peace concluded between the kings of Sweden and Poland with their allies, and interested upon the same grounds and terms, which he the said lord Isbrants, according to the foregoing order of the state, shall have communicated and made known to the said duke. An extract of this their H. and M. L. resolution shall be sent to the lords their H. and M. L. extraordinary ambassadors with the kings of Sweden and Denmark to serve for their information. The lords commissioners of the province of Zealand consent in this resolution.

The lords commissioners of the province of Zealand have, by express orders of the lords states their principals, proposed to the assembly, that their noble great lordships do judge it very requisite, that the ratification of the Elbing treaty be dispatched, the sooner the better, and exchanged against that of the king of Sweden, without retarding the same, till that the points of elucidation be concluded, their noble great lordships judging thereby, that not only the ancient amity and alliance between the crown of Sweden and this state will be renewed and confirmed, the commerce and navigation upon the Baltic sea secured, but also that it is to be hoped and believed, that, by inclusion in the said treaty, the duke of Brandenburg will enjoy his desired advantages and security for his country and subjects, and that the good city of Dantzick will be secured against all fear and danger of war; and that therefore the said city of Dantzick may be desired and admonished to accept of the said inclusion without any delay; and that all the abovesaid be put into the instructions of the said lord Isbrants; as also that his lordship do consider and agree with the duke of Brandenburg or his ministers about the speediest and efficacious means, that by the mediation of this state, with the concurrence of that of France and England, the long-desired peace in Poland and Prussia may be furthered; and that he desire the duke of Brandenburg to continue his endeavours for that end with all diligence. And that this their noble great lordships intention might be received by the other provinces, the same was put to the question; whereupon the other provinces desired copies of it.

Extract of the register of the resolutions of the high and mighty lords the states general of the United Provinces.

Friday, 29. March, 1658. [N. S.]

THE deputies of the province of Zealand have, by express order from the noble and mighty lords the states their superiors, made known to this assembly, that their lordships esteem it fit and necessary, that the ratification of the treaty of Elbing be dispatched forthwith, without any delay, and exchanged against that of the king of Sweden, without deferring the exchange thereof until the conclusion or final ascertaining of the points of the elucidation, or any thing else, their lordships judging, that thereby the ancient amity and alliance between the crown of Sweden and this state, and the navigation and traffick of the Baltic sea, will not only be assured, but also that there is appearance, that by including his highness the elector of Brandenburg in the said treaty, his said majesty may enjoy the desired security for his dominions and subjects, and the good city of Dantzick

A.D. 1658. zick freed from the danger of war; and that they also judge it most fit and necessary, that a firm amity and good correspondence be established and maintained among those, who shall be included in the treaty with his said majesty of Sweden; and that to that end the said city of Dantzick be admonished and required to accept of the said inclusion without any delay; and that it will be necessary to be ordained in instructions to the ambassador Isbrants, that he shall consult with his said electoral highness, or his ministers, concerning the most ready and capable means to advance the so desired peace of Poland, and of Prussia, by the mediation of this state, together with that of France and England, requiring also his said electoral highness carefully to continue his endeavours therein.

The said deputies of Zealand have furthermore inserted, by express order, as aforesaid, that, at the request of his majesty of Poland, ambassadors be sent with all speed from this state to be present at the treaties of Bransburg, and that the other provinces would approve of this resolution, and thereupon embrace it; whereupon having had debate, the said other provinces demanded copies thereof.

Extract of the register of the high and mighty lords, the states general of the United Provinces.

Friday, the 29th of March, 1658.

THERE hath been again represented to this assembly the letters of Mr. Beuningen, ambassador extraordinary of this state with the king and crown of Denmark, dated the second and sixth of March instant; whereupon hath been debated, and taken into consideration, the present state of affairs in the quarters of the North; and resolved and ordered, that in all they will adhere to their resolutions precedent, and succession made in their affairs, so far as they may be applicable upon the present constitution of affairs; and that Mr. Mazedam, ambassador extraordinary of this state at the court of Sweden, be again written unto to endeavour by all means and good offices, that yet once at length may be perfected and concluded the act of elucidation and interpretation upon the treaty of alliance, which hath been concluded between the commissioners of the king of Sweden of the one part, and the lords ambassadors extraordinary of this state on the other part, at Elbing in Prussia, the $\frac{1}{11}$ Sept. 1656. according to the iterated resolution made their lordships upon this subject, and especially that of the fourth of August last past; as also for the better facilitating formally that, which the lord ambassador Huybert hath heretofore reported, and in prosecution of the good intention of their lordships contained in the last clause of the said resolution of the fourth of August, the instrument or act of the ratification of the treaty of Elbing shall be dispatched formally, and sent to the said Mr. Mazedam, with order notwithstanding, that he shall not render or deliver the said instrument, or act of ratification, before all the points of the elucidation and interpretation be concluded as aforesaid; and that being done, the ratifications shall be reciprocally changed and delivered by each party; and that these their lordships sincere intentions be communicated, in the name and behalf of their lordships, to the ministers of the king of France, and of the protector of the commonwealth of England, Scotland and Ireland, residing here; also to give and communicate unto them the treaty of Elbing, with the design of elucidation, which this state, by virtue of the resolution, desire thereupon; and also with instance, to the end that the king of France, and the said lord protector, would please, according to the offers and assurances, which their ministers have formerly made in their name, and by their order, to this state in the affair above-mentioned, to endeavour with their lordships, so as to serve to the best of their power the navigation and commerce of the Baltic sea, and all which depends thereupon. Furthermore also upon the reiterated presentation made on the behalf of the lord protector, that he will not endeavour to obtain any thing in favour of the subjects and inhabitants of the said republic of England, Scotland and Ireland, unless it were granted to this state, offers and propositions shall be made to the resident Downing, according to the resolution 21 Feb. that an act may be passed in writing for giving absolute assistance of the one part, and the other, and also for the making a treaty of guaranty for the maintenance of the said navigation and commerce; and that conditions shall be agreed upon, which may be added thereunto, as aforesaid, with the king of Sweden; and that an extract of this resolution of their lordships be sent to the lords ambassadors of this state residing with the king of Sweden and Denmark, and also to the court of Denmark, to give information thereof.

The deputies of Guelderland have declared, that they are not charged to consent in this affair.

The deputies of Zealand have consented thereunto, so far as is not contrary to the resolution of their superiors of the 23^d, which they have exhibited, and caused to be read to-day in this assembly.

The deputies of Utrecht say, that they do daily expect orders.

The deputies of Friseland and Groningen acquiesce in the resolution made by their lordships upon this subject.

Payne

Payne to Nieupoort.

MY LORD,

A.D. 1658:

Vol. lviii.
p. 144.

YESTERDAY I received your lordship's letters, with a letter and resolution of their H. and M. L. as also a second to the lord protector, about the restitution of the two sugar-prizes staid and unladen here. I presently made what haste I could to speak with the lord secretary about it; who told me, that he would read over his letters, which would require some time, and then he would give me an answer. God willing, I intend to mind him of it, and do all that I can to effect their H. and M. L. and your lordship's commands.

I have not been able to do any thing in the business of Monf. Lampsius, though I have several times spoken to the lord secretary about it, of whom I can only draw a bare promise, that he will cause the papers to be looked out.

Here is at present not much of importance to communicate to your lordship, but only the draught of a petition of the lord mayor and common-council of this city, wherein they give his highness thanks for his speech, which he made unto them; which is well taken at court, and looked upon as a great business.

Westminster, 29 March, 1658. [N.S.]

J. Crook to Nieupoort.

MY LORD,

AFTER that on saturday last I was got to Mafelant-fluys, I could not meet with an opportunity to transport myself with the mail for England; so that, to further my voyage, I went on the sunday following for Zeland, from whence I set sail on the wednesday, and this afternoon arrived here; and presently I delivered the letter of the lord resident Downing to the lord secretary of state, who with affection reiteratively asking after your health, declared, that he was very glad to hear of your welfare, and used me afterwards very civilly, bidding me welcome; and to-morrow I hope to begin to pursue what your lordship hath been pleased to give me in charge, and perform the same with as much faithfulness as is possible. I must refer myself at present to Monf. Payne's letters, to give your lordship advice of what concerneth the public.

Westminster, $\frac{29}{19}$ March 1658.

Payne to Nieupoort.

MY LORD,

Westminster, $\frac{29}{19}$ March, 1658.

JUST now Monf. Crook arrived here, who hath brought me a letter from your lordship, wherein you command me to deliver up the papers and moveables in the house to him, and to return home with as much speed as may be; which I shall do, if God spare my life, so soon as wind and weather will give way.

My lady Strickland doth present her service to your lordship and my lady, and giveth you hearty thanks for the great care and trouble, which your lordship doth continue to take for the good of her noble family.

Colonel H. Smith to Secretary Thurloe.

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

THE high sherriff of Yorkeeshire hath this day sent severall prisoners to this garrison, viz. Sir Robert Hillyard, Sir Matthew Appleyard, Mr. Wentworth, Mr. Sunderland, and Mr. Thorn. Sir Jordan Croland, Sir Philip Mounta, . . . Mr. Pudsey, come in to-morrow. The sherriff said to mee, that it was by his highness orders that he sent them thither; but neither sent mee . . . nor a copy of it. However, I will secure them, till I shall know his highness pleasure. I humbly intreate you to doe mee the favour to acquaint his highness with the busynes, and be pleased to lett mee receive a line or two in answer. Sir, I have for some time secured Sir Henry Slingsby in the castle, being doubtfull that hee might discover something of that busynes, which I have formerly given you an account of; which might cause him to endeavour an escape. Since his being in the castle, hee hath endeavoured

VOL. VII.

E

voured

A.D. 1658. vowed to engage captain Overton (whose companie lyes there) in the same treacherous designe, which hath beene formerly mentioned; but hath not yet proceeded soe farr with him as hee did with major Waterhouse. When the busynes is ripe, I shall dispose him according to his highnes former commands, and shall, by God's assistance, use all diligence to secure this place, and will endeavour, with the hazard of my life, and all else I can count dear to me, to render his highnes a good account of the same, both against Charles Stuart, and all his abettors, as also against all opposers whatsoever. Sir, I shall not give you further trouble at present, but subscribe my selfe,

HONOURABLE SIR,

Your most humble servant,

Hull, March 19. 1657.

HENRY SMITH.

Lords of the council to the envoys of Sweden.

MY LORDS,

Vol. lviii.
p. 154.

THE counsell, upon consideration of the severall papers delivered them, as well by your lordships, as by the commissioners deputed by his majesty of Sweden, in reference to the late proceedings betweene the commissioners on both parts about the damages sustained by the people of the one state from the other, dureing the last warr betwixt this commonwealth and the United Provinces of the Netherlands, judged it necessary (being then strangers to the matters of fact) to transmitt the papers to the commissioners of his highnesse, that they might seriously consider thereof, and returne a true narrative and state of the buisinesses, to the intent, if any failure or obstruction appeared on their part, it might be removed. Whereupon Dr Walker and Dr Turner, two of the said commissioners, have returned the counsell a particular account of their proceedings containing considerations of much importance; and apprehending withall a particular answer to those papers, we have thought it most conducing to your lordships satisfaction to adjoyne hereto a cotype thereof, with our desire, that it may be communicated to the commissioners of his majesty of Sweden, with this further, that as his highnesse was desirous, upon the making of the treaty, to put the adjusting of the said damages into such a way, wherein both sides might receive just satisfaction on any pretension that either party could make, so he was willing to make it effectual, by appointing commissioners of abillity and integrity, whom he also enjoyned to manage their duty with impartiality and equal justice; and nothing could have been more agreeable to his highnesse's mind and intentions, then the bringing that affair to such an issue and conclusion, as would not have admitted of exceptions, or needed further disputes: but finding it otherwise, and that those, who were trusted with the affaire, have differed in points, which have appeared to us of great concernment, and that the matters insisted upon by his highnesse's commissioners are serious and weighty, wee know not what to say further therein, than to let your lordships know, that his highnesse will be ready to consider of any other course, that shall be found reasonable and equal, for reconciling of what is in difference betweene them, that so the end of the treaty may be accomplished in the just satisfaction of those, who have been unjustly damaged, and to manifest, that his highnesse is desirous to performe all acts, not only of justice, but of respect and friendship, to his majesty of Sweden, and to his subjects, as he shall have occasion.

Whitehall 19th March, 1657.

To the lord generel Fleetwood.

Vol. lviii.
p. 161.

THE king of Sweden is in Sweden: he hath sent two embassadors to the king of Denmark, Monf. Coyet and another, who were honourably entertained; and it is thought a more near alliance will be made between the two crowns.

Resident Bradshaw is arrived here in safety.

Hamb. 30th March, 1658. [N. S.]

To

To the Venetian agent.

Antwerpe, 30. March, 1658 [N. S.] A.D. 1658.

AT last the marshal Hocquincourt hath delivered up Hesdin to the government: he is at Brussels. This is a good beginning, and doth presage well. This city doth still oppose the forbidding and proclaiming of the placart for prohibiting commerce with England. The truth is, we should lose more by it than they of England; and it is a thing only endeavoured to be set on foot by king Charles, who thinks to get something by it; his allowance here failing him, having great want of money.

Vol. lviii.
p. 163.Sir Charles Coote to H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland.

May it please your EXCELLENCY,

THE survey of your lordship's estate in this country not being yet finished, nor the returne of your lordship's purchased land, which I writt to doctor Gorges for to be sent by Mr. Cuff, come to my hands, I cannot at present give your lordship with what progress I have made in the settlement of your estate here, which this inclosed will particularly set forth. I have used my utmost endeavours to advance the rents, and have at last brought it to this issue, that if your lordship will accept of the rents mentioned in this rent-roll, the tenants will submit unto the same; but till your lordship approve thereof, nothing is conclusive. Most of them, as will appear by their names, are English, and such as will make improvements on your lands, though but for seven yeares; onely my lieutenant colonel insists on a lease of 21 yeares, and will engage to repair the castle of Lismore, and to bestow 200 l. thereon, and on the lands; and I humbly conceive he may deserve that encouragement, if your lordship think fit. By this accompt it appeares, your lordship's lands, with the towne, will yield 668 l. 5 s. besides som lands, that are not put in for, which will make it somewhat more; and there is yet wanting of your lordship's proportion, which the surveyor is about, 1782 acres, which lyes in a waste country on the Shanon side, and at the present, I fear, will not yield much; yet it is good land, and nobly wooded, and in the future may rise to a considerable matter.

In the possession of the right hon. the earl of Shelburn.

I have sent your lordship herewith the copy of Richardson's graunt for his lands, that your lordship's counsel may advise thereon. I am humbly of opinion, it lyeth in your lordship's power to take the lands he holds into your hands, and to pay him his 36 l. annuity, and that will likewise increase your lordship's rent. For the other 14 l. he hath a house, 25 acres of land, and the fayres and markets, out of which he cannot be put.

The tenants being at an uncertaintye, I humbly desire your excellency will be pleased to signify your approbation hereof, or how your lordship would have me proceed. And humbly kissing your lordship's hands, I remaine,

MY LORD,

Your excellency's most humble,

Portamna, March the 20th, 1657.

and faythfull servant,

CHA. COOTE:

Mr. Downing, the English resident in Holland, to secretary Thurloe.

HONOURABLE SIR,

ADMIRALL Opdam sends the berer heereof, his cornett, to buy in England five horses for himselfe, and five for the Rhyne grave governor of Mastricht, and tearing lest there may be at present some stoppe upon the exportation of them, the admirall and my lord Neuport have both earnestly entreated me, that I would write, that a passe may be granted to the berer cornett Marine for tenne geldings. I pray therefore be pleased, that he may speedily have such a passe. I have, since my coming hither, found very much civility from Opdam. Presently after my coming hither, he was one of the first came to visite me, and is a person of great worth.

Vol. lviii.
p. 167.

This day we have news by the Hamborough post, that the king of Denmarke hath delivered up the garrisons in Schonen to the king of Sweden, and that the 16th instant a regiment of Swedes marcht from Zeland to the mayne on that side; and the king of Sweden writes himselfe, that all is very well between him and the king of Denmarke; so that I see not what hurt can be done in those parts by any navall forces to the Swead, that treaty being

A.D. 1658. being exequuted. The Texell is not yet open; but many of the new-levyed forces for the king of Denmarke are on shipboard to goe for Denmarke; but I think, and so doth Monf. Appleboom, that it's better that they should goe than stay; for that otherwise most probably they would be gott into Flanders, or into the service of the king of Hungary; so that, I think, his highnesse now need not be sollicitous thereabouts; but certainly it's

el. of Brandenburg

most absolutely adviseable, that a publique minister be sent to 543; all his highnesse friends here doe earnestly desire it, and it may have a great influence to help him 306

j o y n in g his fo u r c es wi t h the k. of Hung.

67 111 168 104 339 53 327 304 152 137 25 287 565 145 61 468 539. He hath now on fo o t f i x t e c n thous. men, p r i n c e v

412 304 112 145 140 67 163 466 39 104 474 380, and is a 120 441 105 251 154

e r y g u i d a b l e , a m b a f f a d o r o f t h e f t . g e n . o r d e r

40 441 318 336 79, and the 202 227 140 449 416 408 468 535 hath 429 263 131

s t o g o t h e n c e ,

140 477 314 468 105 251, which gives the great advantage and oppertunity; but it must be done quietly. Pray testify your respect to Opdam in his cornett, and tho' there be noe prohibition to carry out horses, which I am ignorant of; yet, as a token of your respect, seeing it's desired for more securenesse, let him have the passe. I am,

HONOURABLE SIR,

Your very faithfull humble servant,

Hague, 30. March, 1658. [N. S.]

G. DOWNING.

If you did think fitt so farre to oblige Opdam, as that he might have them custome-free.

The king of Sweden is gone to Gottenburgh, to meet with the estates of Sweden, and his queen; but it's apprehended he will stay but little time there. He hath sent lately forces into Holsteyne.

The reason why they desire this, is, lest a prohibition should come out before his horses should be gott out of England, though there should be none for the present.

The in c l o f e d p r o p o f i t i o n o f d e p u t y 468 339 25 365 140 279 119 443 431 140 67 475 412 408 of the 263 120 153 475
e s o r Z e l a n d

287 408 558 is of very great consequence; and it is what I formerly gave you an account

p r o m i f e d m e m o n f i e u r H u b e r t ; was 122 443 381 141 279 379 by 384 104 142 68 40 152 132 331 231 134 150; so n o w P o l a n d a c t a l l o n e . v i o l e n t t h a n that 397 553 must 189 199 111 390. None more 155 70 114 82 40 110 151 468 109

Nieuport a gainst the k. of Swed. a g r e e a t m e a n e s t o h i n d e r

527 11 310 468 536, and hath bin 15 54 132 42 219 379 205 287 so kind that peace by f u g g e f t i o n s , l . p r o t e c t . w o u l d n o t , n o r c o u l d d o n o t h i n g f o r t h e k . o f S w e d e n .

427 239 140 154 53 311 140 475 412 145, that 534 501 395 150 395 137 254 156

82 35 270 105 111 470 305 468 536.

Mr. Downing to secretary Thurloe.

HONOURABLE SIR,

Vol. lviii.
P. 169.

SATURDAY last I wrote to you by admirall Obdam his cornett, wherein was inclosed a proposition made by the deputies of Zeland in the states general, touching the treaty at Elbing, whereof another copy is herein inclosed. I pray let the cornett have accordingly a passe for 10 geldings; for my credit is engaged in it, he and Neuport having both earnestly desired it, and I have found much civility from Obdam; and if it might be custome-free, I think it were well bestowed: however, I pray lett him not be delayed for the passe.

the k. of Swed.

ft. gen.

Concerning 468 536 his intention toward the 535, this is certaine, that he desires to carrie v e r i e f a i r e w i t h t h e m .

249 152 39 441 298 67 131 40 500 468 88. Upon saturday last Appleboom had new orders to communicate to the states general the present good understanding between 537 and him, t o k e e p t h e m f r o m e n g a g i n g a g a i n s t

207 326, thereby the more 477 350 284 468 89 306 41 104 308 312 105 53 11 310

him;

316; and the newes of the king of Hungaryes having declared the warre against the king

of

of Sweden, will make him much more of that mind, as alsoe it will give him a very great A.D. 1658. advantage against him, and keep them from engaging, who otherwise, had the king of ^{Holland,}

Sweden begune, would have bin against him; but of this be assured, that 557, and especially 556, hath all the 337 intentions 12 310 326 imaginable. At the place above are for the ship s of war 305 475 456 138 408 487 fitting out; and the intentions of them can only be against

k. Swed. intend the 536. They 341 to make elucidations of the treaty of Elbing, and with a good f le et

46 358 289 to demand the granting of them; and for the better effecting thereof, i ti r r e up the el. Brand. the y can.

to 140 475 133 137 40 522 468 543, and whom else 468 170 247. This is certainly the intention; but the forces in Schonen being now rendred up (as they are) to the king of Sweden, I see not what hurt can be done in those parts; and the king of Sweden is gone to Gottorp, to meet the states of Sweden, and his queene, so that I think you may principally intend the other affaires. It's certayn, that a main reason, why Amsterdam k. of Portugal,

566 hath been so ready of case to promise a cesation of armes with the 541, hath been to be the more at leasure to mind what may concerne the North; but that affaire hath outrunne all counsells. There are a great part of the new levyes for Denmarke now on board to goe for Denmarke; but if they had not gone thither, they would have been gotten into the king of Hungary or king of Spayne's forces; and the captains having the whole money, the king of Denmark had better have the men than nothing. I am,

HONOURABLE SIR,

Hague, April 1. 58. N. S.

Your very faithfull humble servant,

G. DOWNING.

Ormond in England, the la di Wi l mo t

If 576 hath been 339 547, 468 355 267 502 81 384 145 is his great friend and intimaet, and must have been very privy to it, I think, and to his designs.

Secretary Thurloe to Lockhart ambassador in France.

THIS post hath brought me no letter from your excellency. We do here very much long to hear the certainty of Hesdin. Those at Calais writ uncertainly thereof. Some say, that there are forty waggons of provisions cast into it from Flanders, and that Normandy also is in a rebellion; neither can the French ambassador here give any certain account of the state of that affair, but, I perceive, fears the worst. We also desire very much to hear of the preparation for the field, and when they will be ready to march. Nobody is yet come about the hay, to see it paid for, and so we shall in the levies, although your express is not yet arrived with the agreement your last mentioned. This place affords no news at all, and indeed my want of health causeth me to beg your pardon, if I already end with the subscribing me

Whitehall, ^{22 March,}
1 April, 1657.

Yours, &c.

Capt. Lingwood to general Fleetwood.

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

THIS day I apprehended and tooke into custody a Spanyard, who came hither for Vol. lviii. suffrage into France, with letters and papers written in Spanish, and one letter from p. 194. Mr. Antho. Ferdinando to one Mr. Gillyard, a French merchant in this towne; and another written to a merchant in Deep, both written in French, which I heere present your lordship with; as also the oath of this bearer, Richard Harrison, (one of my soldiers) concerning the Spanyard's confession to him in Latin, with all the other papers I could finde about him.

My lord, I humbly crave the understanding of your lordship's pleasure concerning him as speedily as may be; for he hath litle mony. It is apparent he was a prisoner in Chelshy colledge, and got away by bribing the centinell, and Antho. Ferdinando had him in his house twenty days, as this bearer acknowledges. Hee confest to him in Latin, which caused mee to send this bearer rather than another, because this last clause of Ferdinando

A.D. 1658. is not mentioned in his affidavit. And, with a reall tender of my most humble service to your lordship, I am

Rye, 22. March, 1657.

Your lordship's humble faithfull servant and soldier,

LIO. LINGWOOD.

The deposition of Richard Harrison.

Vol. lviii.
p. 192.

RICHARD Harrison, of the ancient town of Rye, in the county of Suffex, a soldier under the command of Capt. Lionel Lingwood, in the regiment of colonel Gibson, the two-and-twentieth day of March, 1657. came before Thomas Marshall esq; and now mayor of the said town of Rye, and did voluntary depose, laying his hand on the holy evangelist, that this present two-and-twentieth day of March he happened to be in company with a man, who came as a passenger to go over into France, and pretended himself to be a Portugese; but this deponent falling into some discourse with the said man in Latin, the said man told the deponent, that he was a Spaniard, and had been lately in prison in Chelsea college near London, and by giving money to the centinel had made his escape thence; and since the time of his escape he had been in the house of one Ferdinando a merchant in London, and now was come down to get passage over sea; and he also told this deponent, that Ferdinando did furnish him with all the boots, and other things necessary for his travel; all which this deponent doth affirm, that the said man, who calleth himself by the name of Franciscus Ferdinando, did declare to this deponent, and in witness whereof he hath hereunto set his hand, the day and year first above-written.

RICHARD HARRISON.

The above-named Richard Harrison, the seventeenth Day of March, 1657. aforesaid, did depose as above before me

THOMAS MARSHALL, mayor.

An information.

The 22. March, 1657.

Vol. lviii.
p. 200.

DAY delivered himselfe in his prayer in these words: Thou hast discovered unto us this treacherous cittie, that they will live and dye with this man of mischeife. Portman, Courtney, Lawson, Overton, were mentioned by him, and that they may sympathise with the impris'ned ones.

ADAMS.

King of Portugal to Mr. Downing, the English resident in Holland.

In the possession of the rt. hon. Philip lord Hardwicke, lord high chancellor of Great Britain.

GEORGE Downing, much health from the king our lord to you. By information from Francisco de Mello, my embassador to his highness the most serene protector of the commonwealth of England, and by letters from Jeronymo Nunez d'Acosta, my agent in Amsterdam, I understand the good-will wherewith you endeavour for an accommodation and peace between these kingdoms and the states general of the United Provinces. And because I hold myself much obliged by this your procedure, I do hereby shew myself thankful, and let you know, that I much desire to have an occasion, that you may prove how much I am pleased therewith, and the will I have to shew it unto you upon all occasions, which shall be offered to Don Ferdinando de Faro, whom I send for my embassador to the states.

Written in Lisbon, the 2^d of April, 1658. [N. S.]

By the KING.

RAYNHA.

To George Downing, resident for the most serene protector of the commonwealth of England to the states general of the United Provinces of the Low Countries.

Major

Major general Jephson to secretary Thurloe.

SIR,

I HAVE this day receyv'd yours of the 12. inst. by which I perceyve that the two A.D. 1658. letters I wrote from Gottorp were then not come to your hands; in which I gave you intimation of the conclusion of the treaty betwixt the two northren kings, the conditions whereof do very litle differ in all mens relations, though I have not as yet receyv'd any authenticque copy of the articles. I likewise told you in my last from Lubeck of my purpose to retyre hither to expect your farther orders, which I hope will be for my speedy returne into England; for after my beeing absent 18 months from mine owne family, (upon the publique score) first in the parliament, and since here, you cannot blame mee for my earnest desyre to goe home. I cannot fancye any other reason, which hath hindred the king of Swede from giving an awnswer to my propositions I have made to him by your commaunds, then your non-payment of the money promist him, unless it be, that he expects a person better qualifyed to treat with him, according to former promises. Whilst I saw a necessity of proceeding in your businesse, I have not complain'd; but bee pleased to pardon mee, if I now tell you, that the hast, wherein you sent mee away, forc't mee to accept of such a parcell of fearvants, as have not only grived mee in seeing God dishonoured in mine owne familye, but put mee beyond my ordinary patience in my particular concernments; all which increaseth my desyre of returning home: for if it were at my owne free election, I would not endure that single trouble for more then I am willing to mention. There will come shortly a convoy for the cloth-ships, which you may either please to order to carry mee back, or give mee leave, as I formerly desyred, to goe over land into Holland. The king of Swede's returne to these parts I find very uncertaine, although 'tis said, he will bee here before the end of Aprill. The Poles have in their assembly at Warsovia (as is generally reported) concluded to make a peace with the king of Sweden, excluding the house of Austria; but how the electour of Brandenburg is inclined, or ingadged in that basienesse, I cannot certainlye know; though some say hee oblidged himselfe, before hee knew of the king of Swede's successes, in a peace with the house of Austria for 10 yeares, which it's possible hee may now repent. If it bee soe, the newes of the Turkes intention and preparation to invade Transilvania and Hongarie (which is in the English gazette) hath much fild these parts. I receyved letters from Mr. Bradshawe, who is come back as farre as Dantzick, and intends to take the first opportunity to returne hither. The intimation of expected disturbances in England add somthing to my desyre of being at home, as fancying I may be some way or other usefull to his highnesse there; but I must submit to God's providence, and his commaunds; and soe take leave of you, and remaine,

SIR,

Hamburgh, 23. Mar. 1657.

Your most faythfull and affectionate humble servant,

WM. JEPHSON.

General Monck to secretary Thurloe.

SIR,

I RECEIVED yours of the 16. instant, by which I understand you intend to send Vol. lviii. Drywood, Short, and Medlicott downe, and one of the treasurers to bee heere, which P. 184. will all doe very well together. And for Mr. Short, wee shall bee able to charge him with 20,000 l. by the bookes we have, though there is one day-booke, that Mr. Bilton will nott bringe forth; and I hope wee shall bee able to charge them all perticularlie, when one of the treasurers comes with them; and if there bee any papers found, that concerne this bisnesse, it would doe very well they were sent downe against they come, that wee may prepare every man's perticular charge. I never heard of the like intended knavery of soe many knaves together in my life, as will be made appear to their faces, when they come; and if they doe nott some of them confesse how it stands, when they come heere, it will goe hard with them. Heere is noe newes, butt things are quiett and well; which is all at present from

Your affectionate humble servant,

Eden. 23. Mar. 1657.

GEORGE MONCK.

I heare there are gone uppe to petition for the place of master of workes in this country, and that there is two gone uppe to London about itt. There is a standing pay for

A.D. 1658. for itt; but I desire you will acquaint his highnesse, that the governours and ingineers in the severall garrisons will bee much more carefull, then these two Scotchmen, that are gone uppe about it; and therefore I desire you will prevent the granting of itt: one of them is col. Lockhart, a citizen of Edenburg.

*The examination of major Robert Harley, taken in the Tower, 23. March, 1657.
[By secretary Thurloc.]*

Vol. lviii.
p. 185.

SAITH, That the paper now mentioned to him, wherein are severall names written, and found in his lodgings, was delivered to him some years since, viz. about three or four years since; but doth not remember who delivered to him, nor knows he any of the persons in the paper, save Walter Waunklyn, and Jeffery the coachman; but saith, that the paper was delivered to him a list of those persons, who served under Sir William Waller in the late wars, and that intended to petition for their arrears; and wherein they desired his assistance; and being asked, who writ the said paper, he saith he doth not know.

Being asked further about some discourse, which should be between him and Sir William Waller touching the marquis of Ormond being in London, saith, that all the discourse he had with Sir William Waller touching the said Ormond was at the house of the said Sir William Waller in Westminster, which was occasioned by what was in the Diurnal about Ormond's being here; and this examinant supposeth and remembers, that he said, that the cavaliers spake of great matters, which Ormond had done here; and some such words as those passed, but what the particulars were, he doth not well remember; but saith, that some others were by at that time, as Mrs. Popham the widow. And being asked, whether he said not then, that he believed that Ormond had spoke with some, that had spoken with nobody, saith, that he doth not particularly remember; but that he spake them at other times, and that the reason of his so saying was, because he knew by experience, that the cavalier party did use to give out, that they had engaged severall persons, which they had never spoken with.

Being asked what discourse he hath lately had with major John Wyldeman upon the public affairs, saith, that in respect he perceives, that what he shall say will not be believed, that therefore he holds it best for him to say nothing in the business further than that he hath had no discourse about public business. Being further asked, whether there was not some discourse between him and his elder brother col. Edward Harley, about some discourse his elder brother had with Sir William Waller about the coming in of Charles Stuart, and touching Ormond's being here, he saith, he had not, nor doth he know, that his elder brother had any such discourse with Sir William Waller. Being further asked, to what purpose the two suits of arms were, which were found in his lodgings, saith, that they were made for the year 1648. when the insurrection was through the nation, and that they have been in London ever since, and were not fitted up since that, nor were they ever used; but saith, that if his highness would have given him leave, he would have ventured his life for the parliament party, if Charles Stuart had come in.

The said major Harley being desired to sign this paper, he doth refuse to set his hand to it, unless he was first advised with council; but saith it is all true to his knowledge.

Lockhart, ambassador in France, to secretary Thurloc.

May it please your LORDSHIPP,

Vol. lviii.
p. 187.

I HAVE been all this morning in expectation to have seen Mr. Colbert, whom the cardinal promised to send to me, that all things might be adjusted both concerning the levy money and the hay; but having just now received a note from him, which excuses his coming till the afternoon, and desires me to send Mr. Wildegoes to his office this afternoon, to receive some more money upon the account of the levy; so that till the next post it will be impossible for me to give your lordshipp the cleare state of these two affairs; only this farr I can give you an account concerning the levy money: there was sent over by the former bills 53692 livres 3 sols 12 dm. and by the inclosed 9945 liv. 19. which, added to the former, makes in all 63638 livres; so that there will yet remaine to be received and turned over 44362 livres, which will complete the 36000 crownes, or 108000 livres. The foresaid remainder of 44362 livres shall remain in Mr. Wildegoe's hands, who is to receive it, till your lordshipp will lett me knowe, whether you can make a more advantageous bargaine for the remitt of it with Mr. Noell, unlesse your lordshipp's next letters command the remitt of it upon the terms can be had in this exchange.

My

My lord, I hope Mr. Swift will have waited on you long before this can come to your A.D. 1658. hands. I sent him with a copy of the treaty by the last post. I begg leave to renew the humble desires I then troubled you with, for your protecting me, and obtaining my pardon for not having been able to conclude that treaty upon more advantageous termes. The French ambassador hath, in all his letters of late, represented the state of affairs in England very much to their advantage. I beseech your lordship so to take notice of it to him, as he may be encouraged to continue his so doing. Charles Stuart seems to have quitted all hopes of carrying thorough his design against England this spring. I shall endeavour to have commissaries at Mardyke time enough to receive what soldiers or hay shall be sent thither. The court moves from this the beginning of next weeke. There are yett hopes left of accomodating the business of Hesden, tho' 400 of the enemies are entrenched in the faubours of it. I am in all humility and sincerity,

May it please your LORDSHIP,

Your most faithfull

Paris, Aprill 3^d, N. S. 1657 $\frac{7}{8}$

and obedient servant,

WILL. LOCKHART.

H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland, to secretary Thurloe.

SIR,

24th Martii 1657 $\frac{7}{8}$.

WHAT you write of the city, and of the inclinations of almost all others to a ^{In the possession of} conformity, is to me great and good newes; although, perhaps, as to the city, their ^{Will. Cromwell esq;} deliverance from the fear of sending money might be some cause, why they seemed the more cheerful in their expressions. However, it will not be amiss to cherish this good disposition in them. As for our supply, I heartily thank you for your constant care therein. Mr. Standish being dispatched upon that affair, is as much as was left in my power to do, in effect whereof I shall labour to acquiesce. This week our address was put in hand, being committed to all the generall and field officers, which then happened to be in Dublin. There were present the major-general, (colonel Sankey, lieutenant-colonel Nelson, Dr. Carteret, major Smith, and major Lowe, Anabaptists) Dr. Jones, late scout-master-general, with lieutenant-colonel Purefoy, and major Read, who are no speakers. Various forms were produced and scanned; and after much (though moderate) debate upon each of the several parts, and wordings of each, that which we herewith send you was cheerfully and unanimously agreed to by all, except only major Low, who could not desire, that the government should be settled on such a basis, as should be most suitable to the constitution of these nations; saying, that those words implied a return to kingship; though some of his brethren, as Sankey and Carteret, replied, that in case kingship were really most suitable to the constitution of these nations, that then they would desire it. This agreement being made, was forthwith dispatched by those gentlemen into all the quarters, to be subscribed by all the officers and soldiers. How it will speed, time will shew, altho' we hope well. Your advice concerning the oath of abjuration is and hath been followed already to the best of our power. I have also sent the description of a monster, born this last week at Youghall, being the extract of a letter from the father thereof to Dr. Harrison. I remain

Yours, &c.

Pray acquaint his highness, that I received his commands concerning my cousin Tom Steward of Stuntney but upon Saturday last; and I shall endeavour to give him a good account thereof, as soon as the nature of the thing will permitt.

H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland, to lord Broghill.

MY DEAR LORD,

24th March, 1657 $\frac{7}{8}$.

I AM glad to hear of my lord of Kildare's good successes. Your lordship finds out ^{In the possession of} ways to oblige us all. As to what your lordship propounds concerning the ^{Will. Cromwell esq;} ministers advance, the whole business of the maintenance is under consideration, and is grown to that scurvy pass, that I have desired a meeting to be at Dublin, on the 23^d of the next month, of about 20 the most eminent ministers in the nation, to consider of regulating that affair, wherein the glory of God is so much concerned; the result of which meeting will give your lordship an answer as to the matter of advance, &c. Altho' I do not in the least doubt

VOL. VII.

G

A.D. 1658. doubt of the citty's affection to his highness, yet what your lordship said was as well a wise as a witty guess, viz. that their being delivered from the fear of lending money made them courageous in speaking gallant words for his highness. Fl. whom you thought averse to parliament, seems to tell me, that their debates will at last resolve into that. The advancing of 3 months assessments to men well-disposed would be nothing; but to others the groan of a camell. We have this week been about our address; the copy and manner of passing it Mr. secretary has. I would not have it much spoken of, till every cloud of doubt, whether it will pass current, be over. The party, which we might suppose would most cross it, were most numerous, when it was debated; and yet concluded with affection enough for it, it being drawn extempore before them, all other preconceived forms being laid aside. We long to hear how Mr. Standish speeds about money; but I will say no more till then. I remain,

Yours, &c.

H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland, to general Fleetwood.

DEAR BROTHER,

24th March, 1657.

In the possession of
Will. Cromwell esq;

AS to your main point of lending 500 of our old soldiers, I answer, that our aims are to reduce the charge, but not the force; though, till we get money, we can do neither. I take kindly your expounding such a thing; and thank you for the freedom you give me to deny it. Truly if your necessities be such as cannot be supported with less prejudice than by having them from hence, we must acquiesce in that particular, for the general good and safety. I very much fear, that the Jamaica expedition carried away many of our best men, such as were fit for extraordinary undertakings. For those, who had the hearts to go upon a baffled design with so many disadvantages, must certainly be such, as we should most want upon service; insomuch that I have been apt to think it had been discretion to have kept those, who had shewed thoughts most willing to go; and doubtless, if there had been any danger imminent, that had been the better course. I say again, that since you have given me notice of your desires, I will bethink how we may accommodate you with general safety, which we will demonstrate must suffer by our yielding, or else we will not refuse to furnish you. As for sending fresh men abroad, I fear it will not become the honour of the nation; altho', in case of invasion or insurrection at home, I think it safe to look to what is next us. The officers here have agreed upon an address to his highness, which is sent to the several regiments to be subscribed. I suppose you will have an account of particulars from others. Wherefore I forbear, and remain, &c.

The king of Portugal to the states general.

Lectum den. 22 Julii, 1658. [N.S.]

Vol. lviii.
p. 105.

CELSI potentisque status, ego dominus Alphonsus dei gratia Portugaliæ rex, Algarviorum ultra citraque mare Guiniæ in Africa dominus, conquestæ navigationis commercii cum Ethiopiæ, tum Arabiæ, Persiæ, Indiæque, &c. vestris celsis potestatibus, ut iis, quos veluti amicos mihi propeos valde amo ducoque, salutem plurimam mitto. D. Ferdinandus Telles de Faro oppidorum de Tamarosa et de Carvallio dominus, commendatarius commendarum Campanhanii, Murcia, Azerii, Nini, ordinis Jesu Christi assertoris nostri gubernator, præfectusque generalis Brasiliæ status, vestras adit celsas potestates, ut iis tanquam meus legatus desiderium proponat, quo jamdiu afficior, inter hæc regna quæ nobis subsunt vestrasque celsas potestates cujusdam firmissimæ pacis foedus ineundi, utque ejus missione jurgia deleantur, quæ, ut amicitia mutuusque amor, qui inter hæc nostras semper extitit nationes, frangeretur, occasione fuerunt, ab illo expecto ita se gesturum, ut ejus persona legatioque vestris celsis potestatibus non sint ingrata, præcipue cum id ad quod mittitur negotium, conferre conficereque debeat, cum interventione regis christianissimi mei fidissimi fratris consanguineique, tum etiam domini protectoris republicæ Ang. qui, ut credi debent, media æqualia et justa inquirent utriusque parti convenientia. A vestris celsis potestatibus enixe deprecor prædictum meum legatum benevole audire, eumque breviter expedire dignentur, et in omnibus, quidquid ex nostra parte dixerit, vestris celsis potestatibus ad integram fidem adhibere. Celsi potentisque status, quos ut mei amicos propeosque magno prosequor amore magnique facio, Deus Opt. Maximus eos in suam recipiat protectionem. Datis Ulissiponæ, 4. Aprilis, 1658. Signatum,

REGINA.

Heads

Heads of a treaty, to be made with the king of Sweden, for a nearer union, &c. [in the hand-writing of secretary Thurloc.]

March 25. 1658.

1. SAVEINGE all former leagues and confederacyes made and ratefied betweene the A.D. 1658. most serene protector of England, &c. and the king of Swethland, this confederation shal be defensive and offensive betweene them; their kingdomes, cuntryes, people and subjects, against the kinges of Spayne, Hungary and Poland, and house of Austria, and all others who shall adhere to them, or ayde or assist them, directly or indirectly; privately or openly; or shall molest the free navigation and commerce, either in the Baltique sea or Ocean. In the possession of the right hon. Philip lord Hardwicke, lord high chancellor of Great Britain.

2. That the kinge of France, states general of the United Provinces, and such other states and princes as shal be agreed upon between these confederates, shall not only be admitted, but shall be invited into this confederacy; and that ambassadors, or other publique ministers, be sent from both these confederates to such princes and states for this purpose.

That these confederates, with the first opportunitie and occasion, shall with their forces, both at land and sea, invade and prosecute the sayd common enemies, and their adherents, &c. prout in the 2^d article.

3. And forasmuch as the most serene kinge of Sweden lyes most comodious to invade the kinge of Hungary, and that part of the house of Austria, who, out of their boundlesse desires to encrease his dominions, and put the yoake of his servitude upon the necke of all his neighbours, hath broake the treaty of Osnaburgh, and is likely thereby to distract the whole empire: it is agreed, that the king of Sweden shall, with an army consisting of thousand horse, and thousand foot, invade the dominions of the kinge of Hungary in Germany, and prosecute the warre against him there to his utmost power.

4. That the better to enable hym to make the invasion expressed in the foregoinge article, it is agreed, that his highnes the lord protector shall, at the charges and expences of the said kinge of Sweden, and accordinge to the accompt and calculation annexed to this treatye, shall leavy, for the services of the said kinge foot-soldiers, under good and sufficient officers; and shall send them into any part of the kinge of Sweden's dominions, borderinge on the ocean, to be conducted by him to his aforesaid army.

5. That the said men shall be received into the pay of the said kinge, from the tyme they shall land in any of the dominions of the said kinge; and be continued therein untill their departure out of their service: and for securitie of payment, the said king shall deliver, &c.

6. Whereas his highnes the lord protector, in respect of the scituation of his cuntryes and dominions, lyes most convenient for prosecuting the warre against Spayne; it is agreed, that his sayd highnesse shall, at his owne costs and charges, with his first conveniency, provide and furnish a fleet consisting of shippes, fitted and equipped with all thinges necessary for the warr, and carrying thousand men; and with them shall, as well in the English seas as in the Ocean southward, make course upon the sayd common enemy, and endeavour to destroy his navigation and commerce to the West-Indies, from whence he hath all those supplies of money, wherewith he and the Roman emperor have a longe tyme troubled all Europe.

7. And the better to enable his highnesse to set to sea the said shippes of warre, the settinge whereof will consume incredible quantities of hemp, pitch, tarr, masts, and all other materialls for shippinge, and will require alsoe a supply of copper for makinge good such gunns and artillery, as will be destroyed in such as these are; it is agreed, that the kinge of Sweden shall, every yeare, duringe the continuance of this league in the month of in every yeare, provide, and cause to be delivered unto commissioners appointed by his highnes the lord protector, at the towne or port of Gottenburgh, in Sweden tunn of copper masts of palms barrells of pitch and tarre, and such other materialls for shippinge, as are to be in the aforesayd place, as the sayd lord protector shall signifie to the sayd kinge, 6 months before the said month of he shall stand in need of. And alsoe at Hamborough. tunn of good Riga or Quinsborow hemp, barrells of pitch and tarr, and such other materialls as his highnes shall signifie as aforesaid, and are there usually to be had; the sayd severall comodities to be delivered at such rates as shall be agreed upon in this present treatye.

And that none of the said comodities be sold or carryed to any of the cuntryes of the sayd comon enemy, or their adherents, or any of those who will not joyne in this confederacy, if the English, or those other states who shall joyne therein, will buy it all at the rates aforesaid.

8. That

A.D. 1658. 8. That all those, who shall hereafter come into this confederacy, shall pro rata, and according to their proportion, contribute men, money or ships.

And because the great burden and charge of the warre will probablye lye upon these two confederates, the English at sea, and the Swede at land; that therefore endeavours are to be used to persuade other states, who shall come into this league, to contribute money to either of these confederates towards the carryinge on of this warre. In which case it is agreed, that the kinge of Sweden shall encrease his army at land, and the lord protector his fleet at sea, for their common defence: and also, that the lord protector, if those supplies of money be considerable enough, shall be bound to set a fleet into the Baltique sea if there be need, ibique communi & usque ad sed of the treatye and alsoe landmen in Flanders, by way of diversion, and the better to dissipate the forces and strength of the enemy.

9. Prout in the 9th article.

10. Prout in the 10th article, leaving out the 2 clauses pricked underneath.

12. Prout in the 12th article.

13. Prout in the 13th article.

J. Payne to Nieuport.

MY LORD,

Vol. lviii.
p. 83.

I AM informed they are very busy in unlading the sugar and other goods aboard the prizes stay'd at Plymouth and Dartmouth, although their H. and M. lordships will distaste the said proceedings. I expect by the next post how I shall regulate myself herein. I understand by a letter from East Cowes, that some sugar chests being shipp'd out of the two prizes of captain Zaen into another ship, the said prizes were gone home with captain Souch; but captain Zaen was still lying there. The business of the ship Daniel is to be heard next wednesday in the court of admiralty, where I intend to be to hear what the judges will resolve about it.

Westminster, the 25th March, 1658.

P. S. Mr. Rich, son-in-law to the lord protector, was yesterday carried from Warwick-house in Holborn, in great solemnity, through the city, having a very great number of coaches following of him, being carried into the country to be interred.

Secretary Thurloe to Lockhart ambassador in France.

In the possession of Joseph Radcliffe of the Inner-Temple esq;

MR. Swift is arrived with the treaty; he came here yesterday; and, although I have not time to read it all over, since it came to my hands, yet I see by the account you are pleas'd to give of it in your letter, that there will be no reason to delay the ratification of it a moment; and therefore I shall take care to return it to you inclosed, with all the speed I can; and the performance of it (if the Lord will) shall be as punctually observed on this side: I wish the same be done on the other side. We will hope well, and that they will not do as they did last summer, especially they being now under a penalty, if they do not besiege the place, unless they intend to turn that to their own advantage, and argue that the treaty is fulfilled, if they either do the thing, or submit to the penalty, and then wrangle about the charges we have been at, undervaluing them, or it may be put that demand upon us, and ask the charge of their army for this campaign, upon some imaginary failures, which they will suppose on the other part; but I will not let my thoughts work this way, but expect the issue, hoping it will be good.

I hear nothing yet of any body come about the hay, nor know we where it must be landed, nor to whom it must be delivered, that hath authority to give a discharge to the ships that bring it. These things are absolutely necessary to be known and ascertained; or else we shall be at a stand, or be put to much greater charges. There is 500 loads already bought, and some of it is ready to be put on board. If, when the ships come at Mardike, they be put to demurrage, it will prove very costly; and therefore I intreat your excellency, that we may have timely directions herein, and all necessary orders. His highness is willing, upon the desire of the cardinal, and to express the sincerity of his affection, to give orders to some of his frigates in the Mediterranean sea to accompany the French ships upon their design; and desires to know what is expected from his frigates, and what time that service will require. If a greater quantity of hay cannot be got, (for it is grown excessive dear) I believe oats may be had good cheap, if we have ready money to buy them. I am

Whitehall, ^{March 25} April 4 1651.

Yours, &c.
Mr.

Mr. J. Stapley to the protector.

May it please your HIGHNES,

A.D. 1658.

Vol. xv. p. 412.

YOUR mislead, and unadvised, and now distressed supplicant doth take the boldnes to present his troubled and despicable estate, that he is now brought into, through the deceite and collusion of your and his enemyes, that surprized him, and throw ther delusion infatuated his judgment and reason, that never was inclined to a compliance with yours, this nation's, and his father's enemyes; the consideration of which hath begott a sense of his folly, which doth opresse me sore; the thoughts of my enemies rejoycing, the trouble of my freinds, and above all, to bee clouded from your highnes favore; but confessing and forsaking, with God persons find favore; and I believe your highnes is gided by the influence of his Spirit, that I so doing from the sincerity and simplicity of soul, I trust through your highnes clemency to find the same. And for the future, I doe promise, by the assistance of the Almighty, I will not only live peaceably, but with the uttmost of my indeavours stand by your highnes with life and fortune, to preserve your highnes person, interest and dignity; and if ever Charles Steward should, in my dayes, make any attempt against your present government, I will personally appeare against him, though it be but in the capacity of a privat trooper, if I may not be intrusted by your highnes, or your successers, with better preferment. My lord, I doe humbly begge pardon, that I did not at first declare to your highnes the whol buffines that I was concerned in. I was dashed at your presence, and astonished at the consideration of my sin; for which I have asked pardon of God, and doe ask it of you. My lord, it is the glory of a prince to passe bye an offence. I humbly begge pardon for this presumption, resolving to continue as I am, and ever shall be, devoted and faithfull servant, till death,

Your HIGHNES

J. STAPLEY.

Mr. Downing to secretary Thurloe.

HONOURABLE SIR,

I Have written to you thrice since the last post, once by admiral Opdam's cornet, and Vol. lviij. another time by one Cooke, and yesterday by lieutenant colonell Beedles, an officer in P. 201. Mardike; so that I have very little to add. I have inclosed to you a copy of the answer of the states generall to my second proposition concerning capt. Tyfen; but he is set at liberty by them of Amsterdam, with onely this punishment, that he stay but three dayes there; and the states generall say, that they have noe power in Amsterdam, or any other such town, further then to make an order to the states of Holland; and the states of Holland say, they can onely make an order to the burgoemaster of Amsterdam, in whome (say they) is the sovereignty, which account I thought it my duty to give you; the 7th article of the treaty haveing, by his setting at liberty, been expressely broaken; for the prooffe against him was undenyable. I shall make use of it, when put to it, in the busines of Vandiest and the two Portugal prises. I have this day given in the inclosed memoriall concerning two inland ships, which are now upon their way, through the inland channels, for Ghent, being both loaden onely with greate guns, which are to be sent from thence for Ostend, for what service you may judg; and to prevent any order from hence, though truly the i have no g r e at ne ed to f e ar the m. 468 70 323 395 53 133 41 219 390 279 477 46 40 213 468 100. They dispatch away the vessells as soone as ever the amunition is in them. I have given many ship s bo u n d to Ca di you an accompt, in my former letters, of 374 456 140 241 152 104 32 477 245 267 s, all r e a die to go wi t h the fi r 144, which will 199 be speedily 131 39 11 267 477 314 502 145 60 468 302 132 i t co n v o y; 141 148 254 105 153 112 169; and for such things you know it is impossible to p r e ci f e day. f li bo at, ca l give the 120 139 42 252 141 43 261. There is also a 46 362 241 219, 245 81 l ed the F l e e op, p r o v i f ion for ship in 87 279 468 46 82 41 44 414, in which is 121 443 154 70 141 345 305 456 339 g, bo u n d for Ca d i z, go e with the m: 54, 241 155 108 36 305 245 36 71 174, which will 314 43 500 468 90: there i ta n d s a man with wi n g s in h er f te r n. 143 463 108 34 142 13 372 500 502 107 55 141 339 60 286 144 466 155 108.

VOL. VII.

H

72

A.D. 1658. J a q u e s R i c h a r d s c o r r e s p o n 72 15 126 157 287 441 28 319 134 36 135 is the 254 135 137 287 431 107 d e n t o f J a q u e s l e g o v e r n e u r, l a 32 43 106 146 408 69 14 128 154 287 358 314 155 286 390 134, and he 355
 d e s s h i p m e r c h a n t t o 36 287 no 456 himself alone, but always gets some 379 133 28 63 205 148 477 g o p a r t w i t h h i m; t r o u b l e, o w n e a l l.
 314 422 500 326; and so, in case of 150 443 154 18 358, they 114 160 390 199.
 k. Spayne s h i p p s B i f c a y d e f i g
 The 545 cannot want 456 141 from 237 139 245 171 for any 263 142 71 56 n e i n G a l i c i a. c o n t 390 339 358 362 252 13. I shall informe myself farther concerning the 254 106 147
 r i b u t i o n s c a t h o l i c k e s f o r t h e k. Spayne; 441 242 475 412 139 of the 245 147 328 362 27 76 287 here 305 468 545;
 m i c o r r e s p o n d e n t l i v e s, but 381 254 134 131 287 431 107 34 45 110 151 362 156 287, and I may not f e n d t o h i m; 141 282 477 326; but I shall shortly have a fitt oppertunity from him. I shall doe c o u n t W i l i a m;
 what you desire in relation to 258 503 71 202; but I must not, in the begining of his
 f r a n k k i n d n e s s i e, t o o p r e s e n t i n g.
 so 50 438 351 104 32 390 138 144 45, be 477 114 122 132 287 141 139 57.
 l e t t e r t o h i m;
 I pray lett me, with the first safe oppertunity, have a 361 477 326: I know it will doe very much good, and is expected. The king of Hungary had certainly ordered his troupes to fall into Pomerania with those of the king of Poland, and letters to that purpose are intercepted, which is an actuall declareing of the warr; but I doe not finde Mr.
 Aplebom's newes confirmed, which I wrote you by my last, in relation to any formall declaration against the king of Sweden, other then one, which I have seene within these two dayes, printed at Frankford, in relation to the kinge of Hungaryes engaging against him with the king of Poland. The elector of Brandenburg's forces are also upon their march towards Pomerania, though it's still said, that his intention is onely to be upon his guard. Mr. Aplebom presses me earnestly every day, 467 460 241 267 231 305 145 h w i t h f e n t t o h i m; m a t t e r s m u s t b e f 60 500 138 39 104 145 477 326; indeede 371 146 151 286 138 386 231 139 p e e d i l i a f f u r e d b e t w e e n h i m a n d t h e 426 279 72 362 217 143 154 137 279 231 148 161 41 45 109 326 207 468
 k. Swed. for for tie s h i p s o f w a r r e f i t t i n g a p a c e 536; 700 305 475 456 140 408 487 are 302 147 151 339 56 13 121 14 251 a t A m s t e r d. T h e i r i n t e n d m a n t i s a g a i n s t, 219 566. 468 71 134 341 371 105 146 346 certainly 16 310, if any possible opport u n i t y o f f e r i t f e l f; t u n i t y 409 71 149 141 42 82 46; and you will perceive by the inclosed resolution, which I send heerein also for more sureness, that the minde of the states of Holland is to have elucidations upon the treaty of Elbing, and to offer the treaty with those elucida-tions; 207 468 263 139 71 57 390 346 477 140 40 254 107 33 468 89 500
 t h e i r f e l e t; b u t I f e e n o t w h a t t h e i r s h i p s 468 68 132 46 358 289; 244 69 140 41 45 395 147 491 468 69 134 456 142
 c a n d o. l a t e t r e a t i e b e t w e e n t h e k. Swed. and k. Denm.
 247 270. And the 355 466 479 231 148 160 41 44 109 468 536 207 537 will t h e i r w a y k. Swed. will c a r r y be in 468 71 134 483 169; nor doe I see, that the 536 503 245 131 39 much either t h e i r t r e a t i e o r e l u c i d a t i o n s. for 468 71 135 479 416 41 370 252 260 151 345 142. It is sayd, that the lights in Schonen are now lett goe out, which if soe, wee must here come to some speedy agreement with the king of Sweden, who, it's supposed, will not maintaine them for nothing. The 456 140 219 566 have 416 263 133 140 to goe to the 466 163 39
 l a s f a s t a r e r e a d y. t h e k. Swed. b e f i e d g e 81 217 301 as they 213 40 132 42 13 267. If 468 536 231 139 69 279 311
 D a n t z i c k, r e l i e v e i t, 260 104 145 174 67 25 74, they will endeavour to 133 41 362 41 154 42 70 148, a d v a n t a g e f h a l l o f f e r t o o p p o s e t h e and so as any kinde of 15 34 154 205 463 311 141 319 81 87 409 477 415 468
 k. Swed. t h e y h a v e t h e i r e n d s o f h i m.
 536, till they shall judge, that 468 169 323 468 71 135 282 143 408 326. Its no l o o f e R a i t f small matter to 365 113 141 44 the absolute command of the 39 11 139 146 140 e a.
 41 13. I doubt not, but that, according to what I wrote by the last post, you will judge

judge it necessary to order major generall Jephson, on somebody else, forthwith ^{to} 477 ^{A.D. 1658.}
 go e to B ro m f be r g.
 314 41 477 18 443 89 140 231 134 56. We doe now daily expect here Dom Fernando Telles Moneces, count de Barekoes, instead of the count de Pradoe, from Lisbon. I have not yet heard one word neither from major generall Jephson nor Mr. Meadows. They continue still shiping the souldiers from about Amsterdam for Denmark; noe longer agoe than yesterday some we re-shipt. Mr. Aplebom thinkes not ill of it; and the Danish resident tells me, that they had better take them then not; for that the collonels and captaines have received all their money, so that they must either take the men or nothing; and if they were not sent that way, means would probably be used to get them into Flanders. I pray let me have the comission for Mr. Zas: he will be very helpful to me; as also, pray lett admirall Opdam's cornet stay as little as possible for the pafs for ten horses. I have herein inclosed to you a copy of a letter from Rotterdam, which you may fully credit; and, I think, what he writes, is considerable for some order to be taken accordingly. Here is much trouble about the inclosed resolution of the states of Zeeland, that they would have the treaty of Elbing confirmed without elucidations. I shall trouble you noe farther at present, but am,

HONOURABLE SIR,

'Your very faythfull humble servant,

Hague, 5th Aprill, 1658. [N. S.]

G. DOWNING.

I pray let my wife have an order for a vessell to bring her over, and a pafs for my goods, and for four horses. The same vessell may convoy back some merchants ships from the Brill.

The resident of Denmarck tells me, that his master and the king of Sweden are now almost exceeding good friends; that he hopes he shall gaine by that friendship; and that he be t t er under f t an di n g be t hopes there will be a 231 145 157 286 519 138 145 205 267 106 55 231 148 w e e n l. prot. and k. Den. he f pe a k es v e ri ill of this f ta te.

 161 42 44 109 534 207 537, and 324 141 426 12 76 287 156 42 441 337 408

469 141 463 466. My lord Craven's majore being dead, and understanding that Sir Francis Macworth, a violent cavileere, and one Tho. Killigrew, late resident for Charles Stuart at Venis, and one captaine Read, another greate caliveere here, did employ their utmost endeavour, that some one of themselves might have that place, I did also earnestly interpose, that they might not have it, declaring what kinde of persons they were, and such as could never yet so much disemble as to give me a visite, desiring that the place might be bestowed on captaine Carey, a deserving person, which accordingly the states of Holland have done this morning; for which I intend to give them very hartty thanks.

It's here every daye's news, that Charles Stuart is shiping or shipt souldiers for England.

letter from count Will i am,

Since the writeing hereof I have received another 361 306 250 503 70 202, wherein I f ha l i have what come s to his he assures me, that from time to time 67 138 319 81 87 323 491 255 140 477 327 knowledg; and hee w ri t es as fo l lo w et h.
 354 i 207 324 158 475 150 287 217 304 81 365 158 289 60.

[A translation of the French.

THE king sent severall persons awhile agoe into England, and that of consideration, amongst whome is the marquesse of Ormond, who is lodg'd with some of his freinds hee has yet there, who are a sufficient number to make an insurrection, if it bee possible; the effects whereof we dayly expect with great impatience. The truth is, we may, without ever flattering ourselves, expect a good issue of all these things, especially in the present conjuncture of affayres in England, the parliament being dissolved, that was choosung a whole yeare before, to the end they might do what the protector pleased; which, notwithstanding he could not possiblie bring about. Mr. Marsine goes for that design. The king has also made him knight of the garter. I entreate you to keep this very secret; for there bee but six persons who have cognisance thereof.]

Le ro y en v o y e di v er f es pe r f on 358 443 168 205 152 111 168 39 267 152 286 138 287 426 131 138 412 n es e n Angleterre i l y a de s i a q u e l q u e 104 287 39 104 547 67 81 168 12 263 140 70 14 126 152 40 82 126 153 41 te m p s, le ma r q u y s 466 90 121 140, et de consideration, parmi lesquels 358 371 131 126 153 170 140
 263

A.D. 1658. de n mo n d am y f q u e le ro y. la 263 107 384 107 38 estaux 202 171 141 128 155 42 358 443 171. A encore 355 et font en affe grand nombre pour les faire 459 154 84 42 155 286, 143 70 85 est possible. L'on attend tousjours les 280 141 avec grande impatience. Sans se flatter beaucoup l'on peut attendre quelque bon effect de tout cela, et principalement en les conjectures, ou les affaires 260 104 53 358 145 286 132 40 font à present; comme ayant 267 140 459 524 358 120 213 358 109 150, lequel y avoyt esté 26 328 346 71 36, un 205 entier, à fin qu'ilz consedassent à ce qu'il vouloit; mais il n'en à peu venir au bout. 384 104 lui a donné les ordres 263 355 308 135 475 286 43. Je vous prie de mesnager bien cecy: 72 85 107 171 14 129 156 44 143 72 167 personnes en ont 254 59 395 346
 205 251 13 156 278 129 157 287 358 443 172. Though I know you had 366 12 314 42 468 354 324 135 408, 171 289 67 thought it fitt to write the same unto you, because it 255 144 306 144 156 29 64 14 426 134 141 412.
 245 120 463 339 483 145 150 444, with 111 390 40 170 40, that brought 510 11 361 306 379, is a most desperate 245 152 199 262 286. He pretended, that his businesse was to my lord 311 416 311 46 358 289 160 112 407; that he had sent for him to come for England, to 323 13 254 100 120 14 393 in 327 132 41 312 380 150 305 554; but 68 303, that he 121 217 144 287 254 106 475 107 157
 199 362 231 150 161 44 45 110 469 and 547. You may learn from my lord 311
 416 311, whether he sent for him on any such account, and probably by him 303 326 418: he is not 170 289 135 289 157 137 107 279 325 150 66 286. I have this 431 140 40 104 145 146 158 110 other 361 144, 267 136 278 151 477 475 384 468 542 30 447 459 207 503 68 202 305 37.

I am, HONOURABLE SIR,

Your most faithfull humble servant,

Hague, April 5. 1658.

G. DOWNING.

Intelligence sent from Holland by Mr. Downing.

Extract of the register of the resolutions of the high and mighty lords the states general of the United Provinces of the Low Countries.

Friday, the 5th of Aprill, 1658. [N. S.]

Vol. lxiii.
P. 295.

HATH been read in this assembly a certain memorial of Mr. Downing, importing, that he was certainly informed, that two ships, commonly called Binneland Vaerdars, (whereof Jean Corneilis and Jean Schute are masters) are laden with cannon, and at present upon the way from Amsterdam to Ghent in Flanders: furthermore, that the said resident was also informed, that oftentimes like boats were laden with all sorts of ammunition, and were sent thither from Amsterdam by the consent of the admiralty. Whereupon having had deliberation, it is thought fit and resolved, that a copy of the above-mentioned memorial shall be sent to the said college of the admiralty at Amsterdam, and also to the college of the admiralty residing at Middleburgh in Zealand, to be informed thereof. The states of Holland being also required to inform themselves, and cause inquiry to be made, touching the matter abovesaid, and to communicate their opinions opinions thereupon to this assembly, with all possible speede, to the end that they may use thereof, according as the matter may require. A.D. 1658.

JACOB VECTH:

It agrees with the register abovementioned.

J. SPRONSON.

9. April, 1658. Resolution of the states of Holland and West-friesland.

HAVING again delivered upon the report of the deputies, who have examined and weighed the reiterated demands made by the agents of France and England to their lordships, to grant a suspension of arms for the time specified in the resolutions of the 16th past; after mature deliberation, it is resolved, that it shall be endeavoured by their lordships, in the assembly of the states general, that the said demands may be courteously considered by their lordships, according to the resolution of the assembly of the 22. Jan. last, and of the 5. Feb. and that they write to the colledge of the admiralties, that it is the good intention and will of the state, that all the resolutions and placards already ordain'd and publish'd concerning the war with Portugal, and especially the placard of the 31. December past, and of the 14. Feb. prohibiting the transportation of forbidden commodities in the said kingdom, and of bringing any Portugal commodities hither, shall be observed and kept according to their contents; adding hereunto, that the said college of the admiralty will cause it to be observed exactly; and, that they will once more, by their affixed publications, in the name of the states general, advertise hereof all the inhabitants of the United Provinces.

March 30. 1658. Resolution of the states general, &c.

THE memorial presented the 28th instant by Mr. Downing, resident of the lord protector, hath been again produced in the assembly, together with a letter from vice-admiral Goodson; and divers examinations concerning three certain ships of Michael Van Dieft, burghers and inhabitant of Rotterdam, taken by the said vice-admiral. Whereupon, after deliberation and examination, it is found, that nothing is therein contained, or can be gathered thence, but that the said ships were designed for Ostend. And since it is a thing allowed, and not at all contrary to the treaty of peace made 1654, between the said lord protector and this state, it is found expedient to require and depute Mr. Huygens, Van Heorn et Van Wyckell, in the name of their lordships, to make their complaints to the said resident, and most earnestly demand the restitution of the said ships, free from all damages or charges; for which purpose, shall be dispatch'd a serious letter to the lord protector.

MERODE, president.

This agrees with the original.

J. SPRONSON.

My memorial to the states general, touching an English ship, brought in to Brouwers haven, in Zealand, by an Ostender.

THE underwritten resident of England, &c. being informed that there is a certain English merchant ship, called the Content of Harwich, laden with Newcastle coals brought into Brouwers Haven, in Zealand, by a man of war, lately quipp'd at Flushing, holds himself obliged to represent the same to their lordships the states general, not doubting but that they will take it into their most serious consideration, and give such orders therein, and take such care for the thorough and speedy execution of them, as shall be agreeable to justice and the treaty between my master and the United Provinces. Given at the Hague this 9th of April, 1658.

4. April, 1658. Resolution of the states general, touching captain Thyssen.

THE deputies of Holland, &c. have exhibited, and caused to be read in the assembly, an authentic extract of a certain letter of the burgo-master's of Amsterdam, address'd to their deputies here at the Hague, dated the 31. past, containing that they had judg'd it necessary, to make known to their deputies what had pass'd in the business of captain Thyssen;

A.D. 1658. Thyfen; which is, that so soon they understood, that a certain Flemish captain levied men in the said town, they presently informed themselves more particularly; and being confirmed in what they had been informed, of their own motion, without the desire of any other, they caused him to be apprehended; and understanding that his name was captain Thyfen, and that he was come hither with a commission of the marquis of Lede, governor of Dunkirk, to raise men, and accordingly he had raised many mariners; that at the same time the said captain was sentenced, fined and banished; also all the seamen, that were hired, were set at liberty, notwithstanding that they had received money in hand for the same purpose, and the said state listed presently for the service of this state. Whereupon, after deliberation, it is found fit, that the agent de Heyde shall declare the whole business to Mr. Downing, resident of the lord protector of England, &c. in answer to the memorials, which he hath presented to their lordships concerning this business; adding thereunto, that their lordships doubt not, but that the said resident will thereby receive perfect satisfaction, as knowing, that in these countries, in these and such-like affairs, nothing shall be administered but justice and right, according to what in conscience ought to be, as hath been done in the case abovesaid touching captain Thyfen, and the said agent shall make report of his conference.

But Thyfen is gone off, which yesterday I complained at the conference, and of the ammunition and ordinance gone from Amsterdam for Flanders; also acquainted you with the farther circumstances concerning Vandiest's ships, which I received in your last, but as to no purpose, it is not, nor will yet be heer; and said, that these things are against the treaty, 'tis only called private mens traffique, which must not be hindered.

De Thou, the French ambassador in Holland, to Bordeaux the French ambassador in England.

MY LORD,

Hague 5th April, 1658. [N. S.]

Vol. lviii.
p. 205.

I Conceive that the sending over the secretary of the lord Nieuport doth not signify much; for I do not hear he hath any power given him to treat, and is only sent to supply the place of him that is recalled, who hath wrote something in prejudice of your government. My lord Nieuport hath been desired to return for England; but he desires to be excused, upon the ill disposition of his father-in-law.

Monsieur Downing and I live still in good intelligence; and he is here in good esteem, and serveth the lord protector with great care and vigilance.

The Portugal agent at Amsterdam hath give me advice, that he hath received letters from Lisbon, which give him assurances, that the Portugal ambassador, intended to this state, was ready to come away; and if the winds had not been contrary, had been here ere now.

The lord ambassador for our king, Monsieur Terlon, writes me word, that he intended to follow the king of Sweden to Gottenburgh.

The election of the emperor is put off till after Easter; and all the states of the empire do intend to give satisfaction to the grievances proposed by France and Sweden, whose last victories do very much favour his interests.

A letter of intelligence to the protector.

Please your HIGHNES,

Vol. lviii.
p. 215.

SIX days after I received your commission, I took my journey towards Merdike; but hard by Canterbere I received a mischance by the fall of my horse, that fell upon mee, and soere brused mee, which turned into a fever. Soe I writt to generall Morgan, and collonell Clarke too, severall letters, while I was at Canterbere, that I had your comission for a company; but before I could be recovered, I was fallen into det, in the house wheare I lay, but could not perswade the man to trust mee till I came to Merdike. Soe I was constrayned to come back with him to my frind at London, to borow some more money to pay him; but at my coming there, I found both mony and letters sent home to mee. The letters held, that I had too months granted mee, by the meanes of some of the states here. Some of my friends had solicited for mee to come and cleare my selfe of the Spanish embasador's and the other's acusation. Soe having received answer from Merdike, that there was noe plase voyd, and having noe meanes alowed from your highnes to mayntayne mee in the meane time, I thought best to goe for the present to the Hauge, to those states, that had bin soe much my frinds in my absence, to seeke to save that smale goods I have heare; and soe by theyre help I have cleared both my plase and goods, which weare in arrest; and soe the states commanded

manded mee to goe to my garison, where I am as yet; but, as sowne as I can but set my A.D. 1658. things in order heere, I shall returne to Meredike, where I make noe dout, if your generall and the French generall wil but take that course, that I have informed collonell Clarke's lestenant-collonell Bedeles of, your highnes may goe far forwards this somer. I did desier him to informe you of divers other things; and several things I had to inform your highnes, when I was there; but could not be admitted to your presence, neyther could speake with master secretary. Your page master Walters tould me, you could not be spoke with. But the God that knows all harts, knowes that mine is as real to serve you, as any man living can be, and ever shal be; for mounser Beadeles knows I am soe much hated heere of a company of base cavelers, that I am in danger to bee murdered by them, if they could but find opertunitie for it. I have writ twoor three times consarning Hull, and have desired mounser Bedeles to informe your highnes what I have informed him, and in what I have hard lately, and the ammunitie that is sent thether within this few weekes by the other partie. I hard from the master that carried it, when I came now into Sealand, the amunitie was in dubbel barreles as marchants goods. I doe asewer your highnes by many things I know, that quarter is not write, and the parti heere hath 20 good shipes to be in redines uppon the same conditions as I writ in November last. There be some persons of qualetie gon for Scotland: I hear the lord Naper is one. There be some men here a rayfing, pretended for the Dane; but there is divers of our English offecers heere to goe with them, which I know would not goe for Denmarke. But as sowne as I shall know the mening of it, I shall acquaint your agent at the Hauge of it, and doe intend to waite uppon him at the Hauge, as sowne as I can get my leave out of my garison. I have sent this letter to him, because I dare not the other way. I have writ to him, and shall not fayle to acquaint with what I know; for, although I am at the Bussie, I doe not want some frinds in Briges, and others, not far from thence. But I am fertayne theyre define is to hinder your proceedings in Flanders, if they can. Soe, with my hartie prayers, that God wil protect you from all your base enemies, (for heere be many of them) I shall never fayle to remayne

Hertogen Bussie, this 26. of March,ould stile, 1658.

Your most humble servant to commaund,
in any thing may serve you,

THOMAS DEATH.

My lord, my one captayne Hoo is as invective a traytor to your highnes person, as any man living; and does what hee can to doe me a mischefe to the states. Still hee hath about 8 or 9 thousand pounds at youse in England. I shall informe where it is at my coming; and I aseure your highnes, I would have bin revenged of him ere this; but I hope a better opertuniti wil shortly fall.

To be presented to his royall highnes.

Indors'd by resident Downing;

The man that sends this letter keeps a greate deale of stirr to have it sent to his highnes. I know not what 'tis about.

G. D.

Secretary Thurloe to Mr. Downing, resident in Holland.

SIR,

I Perceive that Holland is inclined very much to the peace with Portugall, and waits Vol. lxiii. p. 296. only for the coming of an ambassador from that king, to dispose them to a cessation, and yet at the same time proceed with their preparation of 48 shipes of warre. This must needs have some significancy in it, either to us, or Sweden, or both; viz. to hinder us in Flanders, and the Swede in the Baltique sea: and therefore it is to be considered, whether it be not better, as affaires now stand, if the business between them and Portugal stand in a doubtfull condition, then that a cessation of arms were obtained, and every way more for our interest; and you having with affection enough interposed in that business, it is best now in this change of affairs for you a little to forbear, and suffer that affaire to take its own chance, without pressing thinges to a conclusion. It is good, that the peace be neither rendred desperate, nor yet put on to fast: you need not manifest a coolness in it; but certainly, as matters now stand, it is not to be hastened.

I had a letter this day from vice-admirall Goodson, that he is further satisfied by the intelligence he hath from Ostend, that the 2 shipes, which were forced on ground, were for the

A.D. 1658. the service of the king of Spayne, and they are laid up with his owne ships ; and that the captain, that managed the defence of them, was one of the captains of that towne, whose paines therein was rewarded with a gold chaine from the governor of Ostend.

I thinke what you write concerning the elector of Brandenburg is very considerable, in respect of the endeavours of the Dutch to engage him against the Swede ; as also from what Mr. Meadowe writes of the king of Sweden, that he is very much incensed against him, and speakes of revenge : the true interest of the Protestants is to reconcile him, and bring him back again out of Popish hands. I suppose the king of Sweden may be inclined to be reconciled to him, it beinge his true interest to be foe ; and instructions will be sent to Jephson for that end ; and a minister shall be alsoe sent to the elector of Brandenburg to dispose him ; and as affaires stand, it doth not seeme a difficult thinge to accomplish. The example of Denmark will be fresh before you, who hath lost half his kingdom, and all his honour, in taking part with the popish side ; and it must be your part to discourage the Dutch from their intention of irritating Brandenburg against the Swede, which you are fully instructed to doe, but rather that they would use their endeavours to cement them. It is alsoe thought necessary here, to send one to Bromsbergh, and hath been resolved in ever since there was a certainty of that help, for the ends you mention, as also to intend our owne interest.

You make a right judgment about the secret article between the protector and Holland ; and therefore I pray doe not touch at all upon that point ; and signe noe act about trade in the East-sea by noe meanes. They do nothing but countenance and encourage the interest of the house of Austria in all places ; and till they change their counsels in that, matters of trade cannot come into consideration.

I desire you not to spare money for intelligence ; you shall be supplied your charge bills ; and I pray endeavour to lay a correspondence, and a good one, in Flanders, in the Spanish court there ; as also with Charles Stewart's party. I shall be at the charge thereof.

I hope the rumours of our distractions here are confuted by this tyme : I sent you the petition of the city by the last ; since that, the officers of the army have agreed upon an addresse to his highnes, a copy whereof comes herewith, which will at least shewe, that the army is not divided amongst themselves, as to what relates to his highnes, as was falsely reported.

If you can underhand hinder Nieuport's returne hither : he hath said foe ill of his highnes person, that it will be to noe purpose to send him hither. Hath he his present of plate or not ? I rest,

Whitehall, 26th March, 1658.

Your very affectionate and faithfull
friend and servant.

Mr. Aldworth, consul at Marseilles, to secretary Thurloe.

Vol. lviii.
p. 220.

SINCE my last, little hath come to my knowledge worth your notice, only the arrivall of the queene of Sweedland att Thollon about 8 dayes past, where she is yett ; but sudainly imbarks for Rome. She hath but a very slight trayne with her. Att Thollon and thereabouts are at least 8000 soldiers ready to be imbarqued ; they may part in a month at farthest, and generally suposed are to goe to the duke of Modena cardinall Mazarin's nephew. A barke of this place arrived heare yesterday brings advise, that they mett six English frigatts 'twixt Legorne and Thollon, which I suppose to be general Stoaks comming to Thollon. From Smirna I have advice of the 27. February, that thear was theare arrived six Quakers, 3 men and 3 women, who pretended to goe to convert the grand signior ; but the consill at Smirna hindered them ; so they are gone to Venice, pretending to convert the Jewes. Att Thollon 8 dayes past was blowne up one of the king of France's best ships of warr, having 400 men aboard, and 46 brasse gunns. So for present I humbly take leave, and remayne,

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

Your honnor's most faithful servant,

Marseille, 9. Aprill, 1658. [N.S.]

JO. ALDWORTH.

Colonel

Colonel Barkstead, lieutenant of the Tower, to secretary Thurloc.

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

THE inclosed is the true coppie of a letter I intercepted the last night, going from a prisoner here. The out-part of the letter was directed to one Adam Lockett, an apothecary's apprentice in the Old-bayley; and it was to be convey'd by one neare the Tower, in whose letter this inclosed was, with directions to Lockett immediately to deliver it as directed. The apothecary's man I have (his master's name is Mr. James Martyne). In the man's pockett there was a short letter directed from Mayow to him; as alsoe one from the prisoner in the Tower, which is Charles Gifford. I have taken informations and examinations, which, soe soon as perfected, shall give you further account. Gifford confesseth the letter to be his owne. Lockett assures me, he will give me the best intelligence he can to meet with Mayow this night, before he goeth to sea. I am confident this apothecary's man is one of the most active apprentices in towne. His Mrs. confesseth, he is almost continually a wryting, and enquiring much after newes; and that she hath warned and told him, he never would give over till he had brought himself to the gallows. The originall letter, as alsoe some others, I have kept by me, till I can perfect the whole; and then you receive further account. I give you at present noe further trouble, intending to wayte upon you in the afternoone, which is all from

Your Honour's most affectionate frind,

Tower, 29th March, 1658.

and hartly servant,

JO. BARKSTEAD.

An intercepted letter, inclosed in the preceding.

DEAR FRIEND,

I Received your last; and I find by your words, that the party you were with either is scrupulous in declaring what he knows, or that he knows but little of the business. The last I rather believe, by his saying things cannot be so forward, in relation to which we all know the business must be done, whilst the nights are indifferent long and dark, unless he were able to fight the English fleet, which I suppose he is not; so that I conclude it must be speedily, or not this year. And this we know, it concerns the Spaniards, as much as all their whole country is worth, to bring the wars hither this summer; and they have had time enough to consider all this. Wherefore pray take notice of these reasons, and go once more to him, and underminde what correspondence he hath, and when he heard from colonel Price, which I desired in my last, but you forgot. I know you'll have time to do this before your going. Put these questions, and let me know his answer to every particular as soon as you can. Now, for your going, I am not at all against, if you can over quickly; for I know it concerns us much to give an account of our business, and the wind now stands for you, and against them; so that I would have you go with all the speed you can, and pray you be very careful; for our credits doth wholly depend upon your carrying of the business. In the first place, pray you be very careful in not satisfying every person, that shall ask you questions; and if they should ask you concerning commissions being taken, never acknowledge we had any such things. Their carriage will make the business appear much better to the person you are to give an account to, assuring him how careful we were; and that there was not any person in England knew we had any such things; and the person who delivered them did not know what they were, till we were taken, and then he was only told they were papers of concernment; and that he would be careful of them; yet, after two days consideration, he gave them up. And, dear Will. pray thee be my friend now in my absence; and pray assure his majesty in these very words, which you may say you received from my own mouth, that is, from my pen, at your coming away, that all the consideration of danger of life or imprisonment were nothing to that of being disappointed of serving him personally; though you may assure him, if I could have notice, that I should be able to engage a considerable party both in the city and country, which telling also for the confirmation of this, that I am very well beloved of several young gentlemen, who would be very forward to serve his majesty; and that you knew so much of me, that I will not think any thing a hazard, wherein I may be serviceable to his majesty, neither in life nor fortune. This, and what more you may think fit to assure his majesty, of my real desire to serve him; and in doing me this favour, you'll rather advantage yourself than otherwise; for it will much confirm the friendship

A.D. 1658. betwixt us two, which will shew, that there was no disagreeing in the management, which is a main business; and if we do reach in our own behalf, it is the same that hath been practised by all our forefathers, to bring themselves into favour with their masters, or to keep that they had; so that never be scrupulous in speaking at large in our own behalfs. This is all for that, which pray keep with you with the former I sent you; for these are things of consequence to be remembered.

But now suppose we have been abused by false stories to his majesty; if so, pray you stand very highly upon our defence with these reasons, that we went upon our own purses, and by the miscarriage only our own lives concerned; for there was no discovery made of any thing but what concerned ourselves. You may argue it highly, and with a great deal of reason, that upon what account we should betray ourselves, or be negligent in a thing that so much concerned our lives? And for Harry Price, if he argues with you to this purpose, be very round with him, and tell him, that we have reason particularly to take it ill from him, who should have defended us in such a case, and not to be our enemy. But in fine, you may say plainly, that if we had received such sums as many others have, there might have been some ground for such a story; but, going upon our own purses, as we did, there cannot be any ground for it; and if Price and Sparks were known to be our correspondents, I protest it was not through me, nor I suppose you, which you may assure them. You may say this indeed, that the last letter we received was answered from his house, who betrayed us; and coming into the chamber, he might see the directions to Sparks; but for Price, he knew nothing of: but not a word of this, unless there is such occasion as I speak of; and be sure never argue it with any person but his majesty and Price; and with the last, because he knows all the business, I mean Price; and that which makes me a little jealous of this is, because I cannot hear from Price; and I am very well assured, that my letter came safe to his hands. However, be sure not to be daunted. This is all concerning those businesses. For Hosyer, dear Will. I should not deny you a greater courtesy, if it were not to him, who, I assure you, hath used me very ill: but take you no notice of this to him; but you may tell him, you cannot stay the making of a suit: but this I shall do for you, when you come over. Let me now hear speedily from you, and how I may return you a greater sum. I shall not fail to do that; for I expect moneys very shortly. And for Drue Giffard, I can assure you, cannot do you any good in this; for he never traded into these parts: but, I think, Cartwright of the Old Exchange may be a likely man; for, I think, he trades thither; and Hosyer is very well acquainted with him. All you have to do is, to find out an honest skipper, that will take you aboard here at London, and secure you from the searchers. Without doubt that is the best way. I would have you make all the haste in it, that you possibly can; and that person I speak of, is very like to assist in it. Let me hear from you before you go, in answer to my first, and how you go. So I conclude my long epistle from

The Tower this afternoon.

Your ever-faithful friend,

The superscription was,
These for Mr. Mayow, with speed.

CH. G.

Mr. Bradshaw to the protector.

May it please your SERENE HIGHNESS,

BEING lately returned hither, and haveinge duely accompted unto Mr. secretarie Thurloe the strange manner of the great duke of Muscovie his corresponding with your highness, he but trifelinge (as I humbly conceive) with the freindly mediation your highness propounded by me your servant, I now become an humble petitioner unto your highness, for your gracious permission to returne for England with the first opportunity, there to spend a few monethes for the settling of my owne concerns, haveinge suffered much in my estate allready, by reason of my long absence.

Not doubtinge of your highnesse grace herein, prayinge the Almightye to preserve your highnesse person, and to prosper your great affaires, I crave leave to subscribe, as I shall ever approve myfelfe,

Your HIGHNESSE'S

Most humble and faithfull servant,

Hamburgh, 30. March, 1658.

RICHARD BRADSHAW.

Mr.

Mr. Bradshaw to Secretary Thurloe.

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

A.D. 1658:

BEINGE at last returned hither from an uncomfortable and tedious waitinge on the pleasure of the great duke to little purpose, I haste by the first post to give your honour notice thereof. My last of the 9th present from Dantzick occasioned my then resolution to have come thence by sea; but findinge the place unsafe for my longer abode there, I was forced to depart by land, with good convoy all the way, which hath beene verie chargeable to me; but there was a necessity in it, as I shall hereafter accompt unto you. At Stetin in Pomerania, I received a letter from Nassokin, the governour of Cokenhousen, the great duke's frontier garrison, sent after me to Memmel by an expresse, as soone as he knew that I was departed thence, and that he had certayne notice of the king of Sweden's successe in Denmarke. The act beinge written in the Russe language, I could not possibly get them interpreted before I came hither; and heere I have with much adoe found out the substance to be, viz. that the said Nassokin had now received orders from his master, the emperor of Russia, to receive and send me up to Musco, with the usuall respect and accomodation given to ambassadors; and that therefore he expected my comeinge, haveinge for that purpose sent an expresse unto me with his owne passe, to accompany me from Memmel. I wonder why the governour writ to me in Russe, beinge wee have hitherto corresponded in Latin; but I more admire att his confidence, that he should thinke his owne bare word, though clothed with the authority of the emperor, as he saith, without either letter or passe from the great duke, or his chancelor of the legations, should be sufficient security for my proceedinge for Musco, after soe longe and unreasonable waitinge upon their pleasure; or that it is consistent with the honour of his highness my master, to send me now thither upon such invitation, before any answer be given by the great duke, or his chancelor, to my second address in September last. Noe doubt, but as things now stand, they repent, or may doe, their strange trifling with his highness mediation, and would be glad to have it in thire power agayne, if but to steed them in their transactions with the Pole, and the house of Austria; but I presume, that his highness, now the kinge of Swed. hath lesse need of peace with the Muscovite, will first have satisfaction for the affront given; at least, that they shall sutablely answer to my said last addresse, before they be sent unto agayne. But if, notwithstanding their not answeringe, it shall be thought fitt by his highness and the councill, that I proceed for Musco upon this invitation of the governour Nassokin, in reference to the present affaires of the kinge of Sw. who, I believe, by what I understood from his brother prince Adolphus, in my passing at Marienburgh in Prussia, that the K. notwithstanding his successe in Denmark, desired peace with the great duke, and that the first oportunitie for effecting it should be embraced; your honour will then be pleased to take into your consideration the present condition I am in for such a longe and dangerous journey, and to move his highness and the council, that the needfull may be supplied unto me, who shall ever be ready to obey command, if I be but enabled for it, how little soever the employment promise of comfort or security to my selfe. But if there be an end of this negotiation, occasioned by the sleightinge of his highness friendly mediation, I then hope it will please his highness to permitt my returne for England for a few monethes, to looke after and settle my owne concernements, which, I professe, have suffered much by reason of my longe absence. To that end I have inclosed a petition in a letter to his highness, which I pray your honour to present, and to obtayne an answer, directed to the captayne of the convoy, which is shortly expected here with the companys cloth-shippes, to transport me over, with what belongs to me; and that it may be sent me by the first post, least it come too late; at least, that you will please to hast me his highness permission for my returne with the first post. Beinge but lately arrived heere, I have not tyme to informe my selfe of the state of affaires in theese parts, which yet, I presume, you have an account of from major general Jephson here residinge. I shall not further detayne you, but to subscribe my selfe

Your Honour's

Hamburgh, 30th March, 1658.

Verie humble servant,

RICHARD BRADSHAW.

If the bill of 500 l. from Memmel be not yet paid, I pray your honour's favour for the speedy obtayninge of the money; else I shall suffer heere. I inclose copies of a letter received from P. Adolphus, with my answer to it, and my answer to Nassokin; which answers I thought good to dispatch this day unto them, as well to hold up Nassokin with an expectation of my returne, as to serve the interest of the K. of Sw. who, as pr. Adolphus assured me, desires peace with the great duke and the Pole, but with full resolution

A.D. 1658. to exclude the house of Austria; and which, it's thought, both the Pole and Muscovite will doe to have peace with the K. of Sweden.

Mr. Bradshaw to Offanassie Ardin Nashokin.

Vol. lviii.
p. 234.

THE several letters of your excellency, dated the 13th and 17th of February last, I received at Stettin in Pomerania the 20th of the last month, being sorry, that they came not sooner to my hands; which letters being written in the Russ language, and not in Latin, as we have formerly corresponded, I could not have them interpreted, before I came to this city. I cannot but admire, that his imperial majesty of Russia should now give order for my reception and passing to his court at Musco, and not therewith give answer to my address in September last; nor yet that his majesty's chancellor of the legation should vouchsafe to signify the pleasure of his said imperial majesty unto me, who so long expected it in Courland, and at Memmel in Prussia. I being now revoked, and arrived at Hamburgh, I shall from hence remit your excellency's said letters unto his serene highness, my gracious master, whose further commands I shall observe as to my proceeding for Musco, and thereof give your excellency notice as soon as I receive them. In the interim, if his imperial majesty of Russia do now judge it his interest to make peace with his majesty of Sweden, (of whose successes in Denmark, and his league made thereupon with that king, as also that a treaty is shortly to be held in Prussia betwixt the kings of Sweden and Poland; your excellency cannot but have understood) it were convenient, as I conceive, that in order thereunto, and that no more time be lost to the detriment of his imperial majesty of Russia in this juncture of affairs, that a treaty were forthwith appointed in Courland, or some neutral place, betwixt their majesties of Russia and Sweden, for the happy composing of the differences betwixt their said majesties. At which treaty, if his serene highness, my gracious master, shall command me to be present, I shall willingly contribute my best endeavours to render it effectual. Commending your excellency to the protection of Almighty God, I subscribe myself, &c.

P. S. Whereas your excellency mentioned several letters lately sent to me by the conveyance of his excellency the governor of Riga; I do assure you, that no such letters ever came to my hands; and I wonder, why you would send your letters that way, having a more near and ready conveyance by his highness the duke of Courland.

Hamburgh, 30th March, 1658.

For his excellency Offanassie Ardin Nashokin at Cokenhousen.

Mr. Bradshaw to prince Adolphus.

Vol. lviii.
p. 230.

THE letters of your serene highness dated at Marienburgh the 24th Martii, 1658, I received just upon my departure from Stetin the 20th ditto, accompanied with a letter from woidvodo Nashokin in the Russ language, sent by an express to Memmel. It should seem, that the said Nashokin having then understood of my departure from thence, and having some hints forth of Courland of the great success and advance of his majesty of Sweden in Denmark, which, he knew, would influence notably upon the affairs of his master the great duke; as also, that he himself might be called to an account for his unsuitable corresponding with me, whilst I was held up in Courland; thought good to send his servant after me as far as Memmel, to colour his former unwarrantable proceedings; in which letter he invites me to return, and proceed for Mosco, as if it were sufficient security for me to have his bare word for it, without either letter or pass from the great duke, or his chancellor of the legations; or that it were honourable for his serene highness, my gracious master, after my so long and unreasonable waiting on the pleasure of the great duke, to send me to his court, before he answer suitably unto the mediation so amicably propounded. I cannot sufficiently admire at the confidence of the governor. However, I am glad that an express followed me with an invitation to return. The knowledge of it may advantage the affairs of his majesty of Sweden, especially in the treaty with the king of Poland. In the interim I shall fairly hold up Nashokin with expectation of my speedy return, and observe the further commands of his serene highness, my gracious master. Presuming that my letter from Dantzick upon my arrival there, of the 9th Martii, came to your highness's hands, I cease to be further troublesome, professing myself, &c.

Hamburgh, 30 Martii, 1658.

For Pr. Adolphus at Marienburgh.

Major general Jephson to secretary Thurloe.

SIR,

A.D. 1658.

Vol. lviii.
p. 237.

YOU will perceyve by this letter, of how little use my beeing here at present is; for truly had I not now this day receyv'd your letter of the 29th instant, I had not knowne in the world what to have sayd to you worth your trouble; for the newes from the Hamburgh exchange, Mr. Needham hath it as perfectly every weeke, as I can give it you; and since the invitation I receyv'd to goe into Denmarke, I have never receyv'd any one word of awnswer to any of mine, eyther from the king or his secretar ye: onely I have this day receyv'd a letter from the prince of Soulsbacke, that the king is gone to Gottenburgh, where his queene, and some of his senatours, are to meete him, and that from thence hee intends to returne with his queene into Holstein towards the latter end of Aprill. You are pleas'd in your letter to take notice of the receypt of two of mine from Gottorp; in both which I did signifye my intentions of retiring to the sea-syde, to receyve your farther commaunds, because it was impossable for mee to overtake the king, who was then passing into Swede. You doe therein direct mee two thinges, first, to congratulate to his majesty his happy success in the late treatye; next, to informe you, what I conceyve concerning the proceeding of ^{the treat y of peace} 444 461 3 365 398 betwixt ^{and Poland, and to t r} 549 108 579 108 441 12 23 y. K. Swed. d e f i r e s, ^{the protect or} 444 397 366 96 should ^{of fer his m} 365 188 245 5 3. 504 548 9 14 26 25 23 14 45, that ^{r e f u l e i t} 14 28 44 4 12 67 17 19; 108 that 270 584 should 59 29 2 6 26 70 44 12 504 k. Swed. r e f u l e to treat; 548 496 23 70 37 50 26 29 44 461; in both which I shall indeavour to obey your commaunds, as farre as I can here, by adressing mysele to the k. of Swede's resident. To him I shall congratulate in his highnesse name his master's successe in the late peace, and from him endeavour to be informed of the other, and give you the best account I can of it by the next. In the meane time I shall tell you what I heare concerning it: it's reported, ^{greate r p a r t of the Polish n o b i l i t y} that the 233 23 27 36 90 12 365 444 579 19 17 11 100 8 44 54 3 doe incline ^{to peace k. Swed. h. Austria; a treat y is at the} 441 398 with 548, excluding 578; and to that end 4 461 24 275 appointed 110 444 ^{t t fer of M a y, k. Swed. will march that w a y his} 295 12 54 188 185 365 5 4 3, when 'tis 548 503 325 443 13 36 24 with 245 ^{army, as his best m e d i a t o r.} 118, which, I suppose, hee looks upon 109 245 140 5 14 9 44 36 12 17 23. I am very glad to heare affayres are againe in soe good a posture in England. I hope these frequent disturbances will at length invite all parties to a settlement, that our owne dissensions may not deliver us up as a prey to the common enemye. I have sayd soe much concerning my desyre of returning home, as I am asshamed to write aney more; only begg your pardon, that you will give mee leave to minde you, that I have now almost beene 20 monthes absent from my familye, which I should not soe much consider for a while longer, had I not probabilitye of advancing his highnesse's service; for truly the not apointing any body to treat with mee, nor giving any answer to my letters concerning the concept of the treatye soe long since delivered, seemes to mee plainly to imply, that the king is resolved, the buisnesse shall eyther bee done by his ministers in England, or not at all. From Mr. Meadowe you have a packett by this post, and doubt not but Mr. Bradshawe will give you a full account of the occasions of his returne hither. Of divers letters, which Mr. Downing writes, I have receyv'd but two; and of two I have sent him, hee had received none the 26th of this month. I suspect some foull play. I have now sent my letters under a merchant's covert, which, I hope, will come safe. Sir, I humbly kisse your hands, and heartily rejoyce at your perfect recovery, and desyre I may bee esteemed, as really I am,

SIR,

Your very faythfull and affectionate

Hamburgh, 30. March, 1658.

humble servant,

WM. JEPHSON.

Secretary Thurloc to H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland.

A.D. 1658. MY LORD,

In the possession of the right hon. the earl of Shelburn.

I WRITT at large to your excellency by the last, which I shall be scarce able to doe by this, in respect I have but little strength, beinge often ill since my last sicknesse. The state of our present buisines, after it hath beene tossed up and downe amongst comitees of severall sorts, is at last come to the councell, where severall debates have beene upon it. The matter in question was, what advice should be given his highnesse at this tyme, consideringe the present difficulties and daungers the nation was in from the popish and cavalersh party, who were ready to goe into armes; and consideringe alsoe the disposition and temper of that enemye, who reteyneinge still his old principles and affections, would alwayes be giveinge us new troubles and disquietments; and wheither wee were alwayes to be at this passe with them. The councell is yet come to noe resolution upon the whole, save that the major part (though sensible enough of the daunger, and that some effectual course ought to be taken) are wholly averse to use any illegal course of themselves, as to lay any tax upon their estates, or the like; but have advised his highnes to secure such of them for the present as are dangerous, to prevent present riseinge; and as for what is future, to hinder the growth and encrease of that interest. They inclyne to a parliament, if they can agree what to aske the parliament, and what to submitt unto, that shall be done by them and his highnes. But what my hopes and expectations are either from the one or the other, I will not say, because I see what some persons enclyne to, and what they thinke of a parliament, and of such a way of settlement, as a parliament (if well-minded) may bringe forth. My trust is, that the Lord will doe us good, and save us against our wills and endeavours, and in a way that we dreame not of; and of his workings in this kinde wee have had often experience, and therefore have cause to depend upon him. Major Butler is put in the head of that regiment of his highnes, soe that the two gentlemen you mention cannot be employed there; but I shall be mindfull of Mr. Byard upon any other occasion. Mr. Standish is come, and I have had some discourse with hym, and received some papers from hym, which do clearely demonstrate the condition of your money. The counsell hath referred him unto the committee for Ireland, and noe diligence shall be wantinge to give him the best dispatch our present difficulties will afford.

There is nothinge considerable since my last from forreine parts, and therefore will not trouble your excellency further, save to assure your excellency, that I am

YOUR EXCELLENCY'S

Whitehall, 30. March, 1658.

Most obliged and faithfull servant,

JO. THURLOE.

Charles Stewart's design cooles: our fleet before Ostend wholly disappointed him, and hath reduced the place to soe great streights, that both their seamen and landmen run away from them, and the people have scarce bread.

Resolution of the states general.

Mercurii, 10th Aprill, 1658. [N. S.]

Vol. lviii.
p. 228.

THERE being debated by resumption upon the request by the respective ministers of France and England made to their H. and M. L. to agree by provision to the crown of Portugal a cessation of arms for a certain short time, mentioned more at large in former resolution; after deliberation had, it is resolved, that the said request, as yet conformable to the foregoing resolution of their H. and M. L. of the 1st of February last, shall be civilly excused to the said lord ambassador de Thou and the lord resident Downing, as the same is hereby excused; and that likewise shall be written to the respective college of the admiralty, that it is the good intention and desire of the state, that all foregoing resolutions and placarts, agreed upon by reason of the war with Portugal, shall be put in execution; and especially the placarts of the 31st December last year, and the 14th of February last, disposing against the carrying of contraband goods to the said kingdom of Portugal, as also against the importing of any wares of the growth of Portugal into these countries, shall be strictly observed, according to the tenor thereof.

H. Crom-

H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland, to secretary Thurloe.

SIR,

31. March, 1658. A.D. 1658.

I CANNOT say much to your last, or of any newes from hence, but that our address, whereof I sent you a copy the last week, is like to be subscribed very largely and unanimously. I hope God may make it, and those other manifestations, which honest men have made of their affections, to be instruments of our peace. Parliaments are so casual, that one would not prophane the use of them by over-frequency; and yet, on the other side, to raise mony without them is a condition, from which I pray God to keep us. I hope the worst of the cavalier design is over, since the southerly wind, which blew the 15th instant, brought us no harme. Really it is a wonder, you can pick so many locks leading into the hearts of wicked men, as you do; and it is a mercy we ought to own, that God has made your labours therein so successfull. I cheerly concurr with your judgment concerning those two men; for their wayes seem so naturally different, as they can never be one but by accident. If any should apply to his highness and the counsell about a grant of Dundalke, be very wary what you do, Galway being already gone for a song. Let us be more carefull hereafter. This Dundalk is the very key of Ulster, naturally very fortifiable, and lyes very convenient for severall sorts of trade. I wish those had it almost for nothing, that would make the very best use of it for the publick; but indeed otherwise it is not to be parted with on any terms. Although I wish Mr. Malyn well, yet I doubt he is super ultra crepidam in the grants he sends us from his highness; for being scarce sufficiently drawn, and sealed but with his highness private seal, I fear those, who have them, may be disappointed in them: wherefore I desire for the future, that better care may be taken for the drawing, sealing and directing them, according, as near as may be, to the practise and form of former times. I remain

Yours, &c.

Lord Fauconberg to H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland.

MY LORD,

MY stay a whole weeke together in the country has render'd me not only a truant in my services to your lordship, but almost necessitated my continuing so, by making me an absolute stranger to all kind of affaires heere; so that haveing very little to say, I was indeed not sorry the last post had slipt mee. But this gentleman of my lord Fleetwood's acquainting me now with his intended repaire to your lordship, I durst not let him part without bringing along some testimony of what I ambition should be evidenced to the whole world, which is, of being, with the greatest affection and zeale imaginable,

MY LORD,

Your lordship's most faithfull humble servant,

Whitehall, March the 31. [1658.]

FAUCONBERG.

Mr. El. Palmer to secretary Thurloe.

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

THE 3 morters were for alderman Tems of London, cast by his order, and are at the Vol. lviii. George inn in the borough of Southwarke, are said to be for the East India. I could not P. 257. meet him at home yesterday. If this be the real case, no doubt he will sue for license to transport them; which if he obtain, may demand them again; but, without such license, shal be bold to keep them in safety, according to your honour's comands.

Your Honour's

Office of orders, 31. March, 1658.

Most humble servant,

ELIA. PALMER.

Kent ff. The information of Richard Davey, of the parish of Shorehām in the said county, taken upon oath, by captain John Browne, one of the justices of the peace for the said county, at Orpington, 23^d Feb. 1657.

A.D. 1658.

Vol. lviii.
p. 262.

WHO faith, That about a week after that captain Browne's soldiers searched the houses in the said parish of Shoreham for arms, (which was about the beginning of the month of January last) he, this informant, having been up in the woods (that Thomas Bigg alias Beech hireth the coneyes thereof) in the said parish, and by the said Bigg's desire and appointment, he came by the house of Henry Spillsted, alehouse-keeper in the said parish, and went in and drank a pot of beer, where there were come together, and did come, whilst he was there, Mr. Thomas Pettly, John Round senior, William Hartnupp, Robert Hills, and Simon Crittenden, all of the said parish, who were very busy in their discourse concerning the aforesaid Thomas Bigg alias Beech, how they had ordered him; and that captain Browne had left him, being ashamed of what he had done for him. Whereupon the said Spillsted went up to them, and presently they were very whist; and so this informant came away. But about two hours after, which was about 9 or 10 of the clock at night, he, this informant, went down thither again (and took with him one Thomas Mills) to see if they were gone; but they were all there, and talked so loud, that they might have been heard plainly half-way the street over; and amongst other discourse they had, they said Mr. Pettly said, that his cousin Seylyard could raise more men for all this, than Browne could do. Another of them presently speaking, (which he doth verily believe was Robert Hill) said, that although their arms were taken away, they would fetch them away again; and that they for a need could yet find arms to arm one hundred men presently. After, they concluded to meet the next day at the house of the said Robert Hill, to confer further of their business; and for the space of a week together, and more, they did, with other company, meet at one house or other in the said parish, and this informant doth verily believe, for no good.

A true copy.
JOHN BROWNE.

The mark of [R.] RICHARD DAVEY.

Kent ff. The information of the said Richard Davey taken upon oath the primo March 1657.

WHO faith, That that night, that Mr. Pettly and his company were together at Spillsted's, mentioned in his former information, he saw the said Mr. Pettly have a sheet of paper, wherein was somewhat written, to which he did see all the said company set to their marks; and the said Mr. Pettley set to their names; and it was agreed by them, that the said Mr. Pettly and John Round should carry it out for other hands. And this informant hath since been informed by others, that they had some design in hand, that was not good; and faith, that he doth also believe no less, because at that time he heard the said John Round say, that they had powder enough among themselves, and that he the said Round had bullets sufficient to let every man 300 each, and some spare; but he had a greater quantity, and laid them aside, not thinking that they ever should have had any occasion again for them; but he would now look them up. Further this informant faith, that he hath been informed by others, that they the said company were seldom asunder, and have their meeting very often at the said Spillsted's, and other places; and that they do not now meet so much upon Thomas Biggs alias Beech's business, as upon some other design, that is not good.

A true copy.
JOHN BROWNE.

The mark of [R.] RICHARD DAVEY.

Kent ff. The information of Thomas Mills, of the said parish of Shoreham in the said county, cooper, taken upon oath by the before said captain Browne, at Orpington, 13th March, 1657.

WHO faith, That in the month of January last (presently after that captain Browne had disarmed the inhabitants of the above-said parish of Shoreham) one Richard Davey, of the said parish of Shoreham, cooper, came one evening about 9 or 10 of the clock to this informant, and told him, that there was some company at Spillsted's the alehouse-keeper, and he did suppose, their meeting was for no good; and desired this informant to go down with him thither, to harken what they were about, who did go down to the said alehouse with him, but went not in, only they stood near the window, where he saw saw Mr. Thomas Pettly, William Hartnupp, John Round, Robert Hill, and Symon A.D. 1658. Crittenden, all of the said parish of Shoreham, who were very high in their discourse, and amongst other passages they said, that although their arms were taken away by Browne, yet they would fetch them suddenly again, and for a need yet they had arms left for to arm about 100 men. Then the said John Round said, that he had bullets for every one of them present, for three hundred each, and more, if need were; and that he had lead enough to make more, if he had not sufficient, and that he would look them up. Mr. Pettly presently said, that he was sure his cousin Seylyard could raise three times as many men as Browne and Palmer could; whereupon a large sheet of paper was drawn out by Mr. Pettly, who wrote something in it, and then the rest set to their mark; and they concluded, that Mr. Pettly and John Round should carry it out the next morning, and that they would all meet the next day at the above-said Robert Hill's. Further this informant saith, that he staid there a little longer than the said Richard Davey, and heard them conclude about horses; and that Mr. Pettley said, he would furnish out four, and the said Round, Hartnupp, and Hill, would furnish out two apiece. The said Hartnupp also told them, that because he was old, he would not go himself, yet he would help to carry on the design, although it cost him half his estate.

A true copy.

JOHN BROWNE.

The mark of [X.] THOMAS MILLS.

Kent. ff. The information of Edward Duke, minister of the parishes of Ottford and Shoreham, in the said county, taken upon oath by the aforesaid captain Browne at Orpington, the 26th April, 1658.

WHO saith, that on Easter-eve last, the 10th present, being at Mr. Thomas Pettley's house, a woman called Elizabeth Herrott, the wife of Edmond Herrot, of the said parish of Shoreham (who had been a servant in the house formerly) came into the room where this informant was (being as he supposed then come from Sevenoak market) and said aloud, oh master! you are to be captain; and espying this informant, she was very whist, and said no more. Further this informant saith, that he hath heard the said Mr. Petty say, that the other party, that opposed the king of Scots, must expect no quarter; and therefore, wish'd captain Browne would be more favourable to his neighbours.

A true copy.

JOHN BROWNE.

EDWARD DUKE.

Suff. ff. Certain informations taken before colonel Humphry Brewster, esquire, one of the justices of the peace for the said county, and one of the militia officers, relating to a certain plot or insurrection, now in hand, or suddenly to be acted against his highnes the lord protector, and the peace of these nations.

March 30^h, 1658.

NICHOLAS Murton of Beccles, in the county aforesaid, saith, that on sabbath-day last past, being to go to certain sick persons in Shading-field in the said county, he went to the Cross-bow in the said town (one Soane being the keeper of the said house) where there was one Brock, that was sick, that had a desire to speak with the informant; and he going to him, and after they had discoursed about his sickness, they fell occasionally to discourse about the times; and the said Brock told this informant, that he suspected, that there would be a rising in these parts suddenly; and that divers gentlemen hereabouts were to repair to the rendezvous suddenly; and he supposed it would be within a few days. And the said Brock said, that he had a brother, that should go into that design and service; and said his brother's wife had wrote a letter to him about it, which letter the said Brock shewed this informant, which was to this effect, to desire her said brother Brock to stop her said husband's cloaths and boots; and, if he would go, let him go naked without clothes. The said brother told the informant, that his brother was a servant to Mr. Cooke of Thorneton, and was to go with one of Mr. Cooke's sons; and assured this informant, that there would be a rising of above thirty thousand beyond London. The said Brock said, he would see this informant again suddenly; and that that night he was to go towards Beccles. Further he saith.

Subscribed by NICHOLAS MURTON.

HU. BREWSTER.

VOL. VII.

M

March

March 30th, aforesaid.

A.D. 1658. JOSEPH Brock of Beccles in the county aforesaid, carpenter, being examined before me upon oath, informeth and saith, that on saturday last, being at his brother's John Brock of Wenhaston in this county lathryver, his said brother told him, that he expected there would be a rising or insurrection beyond London; and saith, he was invited to go by Mr. Robert Cooke, son to Mr. Cooke of Thornton; and, that his master, the said Mr. Robert Cooke, told him, he would find him a horse; and said, that more gentlemen would go, but told him not their names. This informant being sick of the ague, he could not listen to this story so much as he would else have done; and this informant's brother told this informant, that they they were to go on sunday at night; and the letter that this informant had was from his sister, to secure the said John Brock's things till the monday, to prevent his going; and, that another of Mr. Cooke's brother's sons, one that is called mad Cooke, went to go with them; and further (being sick of an ague) he saith nothing.

Subscribed by JOSEPH BROOK.

J. BISCOE.

JOHN Brock of Wenhaston in the county aforesaid lathryver, being apprehended and brought before, but would not confess any thing; he was therefore sent to Yarmouth to be secured, where he hath since made his confession.

HU. BREWSTER.

Downing the English resident in Holland, to Lockhart, ambassador in France.

In the possession of Joseph Radcliffe, of the Inner-Temple esq;

I Thank your lordship heartily for the kindness in the particular concerning Mr. de Thou, which will also turn to good account, in relation to his highness service. I pray, if it may not be too much, tender my most humble service to his eminency, with thanks for his remembrance of me; and that I shall always remain sensible of the civilities received, when I was at La fere. I have also, and shall again, at my next visit, present the respects to Mr. de Thou. The states of Holland are at last resolved, that they will have no cessation with Portugal, till an ambassador shall come. The preparations for the fleet go on apace. De Ruyter is now at Texell with 27 sail. We have no news out of Denmark; but for ought we hear, the election at Franckfort is like to be put off for some time; and I hope the minister, which is to go from his highness to Berlin, may do some good. I shall, by the first safe occasion, send a cypher to you by the way of England, which, when it is arrived with you, please to let me have notice thereof; and then I hope I may with a little more safety, communicate with you. My very hearty thanks to my lady. It is here said, that she is speedily for England, from whence I hope shortly to see my wife, and am

Yours, &c.

Hague, April 11th, 1658. [N. S.]

Mr. Swyft, Lockhart's secretary, to Lockhart.

In the possession of Joseph Radcliffe of the Inner-Temple esq;

I Have delivered all the letters (which I received in one packet two days since) according to their several directions, except that to general Disbrowe, to whose present lodging his servants in the Spring-garden could not direct me. His lordship was married on monday last and hath ever since continued at his lady's house.

There is a report about Whitehall, as if his highness had an intention suddenly to call a new parliament; but I am not assured of the certainty thereof.

I was this day and yesterday at Mr. secretary's lodging, moving for my dispatches. His lordship hath promised to give a speedy answer to the papers I brought hither. As soon as I have my orders, I shall diligently and carefully return to my duty.

This day I met with Sir James Whitelock, who came but yesterday to town, and goes to morrow in the country. He hath promised me to make his own excuse unto your excellency by this post for all faults. I have not any thing more to importune your excellency with, but to beseech you to continue me in the esteem of

Your, &c.

London, April $\frac{1}{11}$, 1658.

Great Yarmouth.

A. D. 1658

The examination of John Brocke, of Wenistone, in the county of Suffolk, Leith-rigurs taken before collonel Humphrey Brewster and major William Burton, justices of the peace, of the county of Suffolk, April 1st, 1658.

WHO saith, that about fourteen days since he went to Mr. Robert Cooke, son of Henry Cooke of Thorenton Hall, in the said county, Esq; being sent for by the said Robert Cooke, who asked this informant whether he would go with him; he should have a good horse and furniture. He asked upon what design? and the said Cooke reply'd, he should know when he called him. But this informant came presently away with his brother to Beccles; but about eight days after, the said Robert Cooke came twice to this informant's house to speak with him, but he was not at home; and about three days after he came again, and then he was not at home; but the next day being friday the said Cooke came again, and found this informant at home; and being together, he asked him to go along with him; whereupon this informant told him, that he had no money; but he said he should not want to pay for what he called for. This informant then asked him, where they should have horses; he answered that there was a great many horse and foot coming over, and to land on those coasts with a French commander, but they would not come yet, because there was no grasse; and that there was a great many gentlemen of the said county, which were to join with them when they came over; and he further saith, that there is one Robert Cooke of Braynfield, gentleman, in the said county, cousin to the said Robert Cooke of Thorenton, is very much accustomed to keep company together; and he saith it is likely, that he may be one of the same party, which he mentioned above; and further saith not.

The mark of [] JOHN BROCKE.

A letter of intelligence from the Hague.

Samedi le 6 d'Avril, 1658. [N. S.]

LE conseil d'estat a avisé que l'abbe de Cloosterraet est obligé de porter lui mem les depens de sa captivité et arrest.

Vol. lviij.
p. 278.

A l'ambassadeur de Spaigne, est accordé passeports pour des chevaux. Le resident de Pologne a requis l'envoy des ambassadeurs pour la médiation de la paix en Pologne.

Le resident du duc de Holstén-Gottorp pleint, qu'a Harling on a arresté certaine quantité de musquets, qu'il avoit envoye d'Amsterdam vers Gottorp, sur quoy sera escrit.

L'Admirauté d'Amsterdam pleint, que le concurs de matelots pour armer la flotte ne soit pas fort grande.

Le sieur Lampsius ayant ci-devant en la guerre entre le feu roy et le parlement fourni au parlement des armes pour bien 180,000 Livr. requiert le payement et lettres intercessionales de cest estat au protecteur.

Des merchands d'Amsterdam ont requis et obtenu derechef lettres de recommandation au roi de Spaigne et au duc de Medina-Celli.

Lundi le 8 Dito.

Il y a eu lettre de l'admiralte en Frise, notifiant, qu'ils n'equppent rien en la flotte, parce que les estats de icelle province n'ont encore rien consenti du subside.

Il y a eu continuation du rapport du sieur Ommeren et autres ayant este a Bergen op Zoom, qui contiendrait beaucoup de licence de ceux de la religion Romaine et du clergé, et en quel nombre il sont dans la bourgeoisie et en la milice.

Les deputes de Munster ont par le sieur president requis expedition; Ceux de Hollande ont promis de tenir conference sur cela.

Le Hollande a une excellente besoigne sur la redresse de la milice, pour oster des abus, specialement dans le patentes, amplifier la milice, garnir les frontieres, pourvoir aux defauts des frontieres.

L'on est mal satisfait, que de Dennemarck l'on ne reçoit pas la copie du traité de paix en Dennemarck, car quoi que ce roi a mal fait de traiter sans cest estat, si ne devoit il pas refuser la communication du traité.

Mardij

Mardi le 9 dito.

A.D. 1658. Il y a eu plainte, que des soldats desguisés (qu'on croit estre Condeiens) ont depouillé un chariot allant a Liege, Liant et gorottant les passagers.

Le resident Downing a fait plainte, qu'un navire de Zeelande a pillé un Anglois ; demande justice.

Le Hollande aura desja exhibé un estat pour monstrez, qu'elle a satisfait a la quote dans l'equipage en la guerre Angloies.

La Hollande a proposé, qu'on devroit faire un interdiction generale es toutes les provinces, pour ne plus vendre des charges militaires ; mais cela n'est prins, que pour notification : et le depute de Groningue reprocheoit a ceux de Hollande qu' a le sieur de Merode voulant vendre la compagnie de cheveux (il y a 3 ou 4 ans) la Hollande favorisoit, et se monstroit faschée, que la Groningue la lui osta sans satisfaction. La principale redresse de la milice n'est pas encore proposée, ni rapportée.

La Hollande a fait quelque rapport touchant la besoigne de Hermeeting avec le sieur Resewinge.

La sieur Ommeren, &c. ont achevé leur rapport ; entre autres une grande crimination du magistrat de Bergen opzoom, contre le drosard Brochum, que ci devant il y a vendu les charges :

Mecredi le 10 dito.

Il y a eu des memoires de l'ambassadeur de Spaigne, sur lesquels le sur Huygens est requis de faire ou tenir conference.

Ceux de Hollande ont produit leur advis provincial, dans lequel le Hollande declare, qu'elle excuse la suspension d'armes pour 6 mois proposée par la France et l'Angleterre, & cependant ils permettent a Amsterdam la navigation publiquement et avec passeport vers Lisbonne et Portugall. Le secret est, que leurs capers ne feront nulle molestation aux navires, soit Hollandoises, soit estrangeres, qui d'ici et avec passeport naviguent en Portugal, mais rencontrants en mer des neutraux, n'ayants points de passeports Hollandois, ils les molesteront, voire les emporteront pour en incommoder la navigation et commerce des neutraux.

Il y a eu une lettre de creance de l'evesque de Munster sur le sieur Hessing ; mais il n'a pas encore audience.

L'on a conclu quelque accord touchant l'y kinge ou remensuration (hermeeting) des navires en Norvege.

Jeudi le 11 dito.

Le resident d'Angleterre a esté en conference avec le sieur Huygens, van Hoorn, et Wyckel touchant ce qu'on a fait ou capitain Tyssen a Amsterdam, qu'on a banni. Item a ce van Diest a Rotterdam ; mais il n'a prins nul contentement en cela.

L'ambassadeur de Spaigne a requis expedition et réponse touchant les consuls : Item plainte contre les collectes de Til. Cela est mis es mains de commissaires.

Les deputes l'admiraulté ont remis jusque au 1 de juin l'affaire de la liquidation de l'equipage fait durant la guerre d'Angleterre, demandant le consentement du subside du millian et quelque fournissement.

Le Zeelande, Frise, & Northollande n'ont encore renequipée. Rotterdam n'a que caleuté.

Le sieur Lampsius aura une recommandation au protecteur, pour sa pretension. Tel vande Heemel de Middebourg aura semblable recommandation.

La Hollande propose de faire prohibition de levée de mariniers pour estrangers. Il y aura besoigne pour l'employ de la flotte.

Vendredi le 12 dito.

L'assemblée des estats de Hollande s'est separée sur reces jusque au 30. Avril. Cependant n'est encore resolu rien de final touchant l'employ de la flotte, dont le dessien exterieur est encore de mettre l'estat en bonne posture, pour avoir l'oeil la ou il sera le plus besoin. Amsterdam est la plus active : le reste ne se haste pas.

Il y a eu une lettre de l'evesque de Munster contredisant fort les sollicitations de la ville ; et qu'on veuille les renvoyer. L'on a ordonné de faire translater la lettre de l'Allemand.

La Hollande aura consenty en admission de la ville de Munster ; mais selon la resolution ou 2 Mars ; a condition que les villes de Lubeck, Breemen, et Hamburgh y consentent ; ce qu'elles feront lentement.

Il y a eu grand debat ; si on recevra le receveur Tins en l'appell, estant condamné par le conseil d'estat en bien 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ tonnes d'or, h. e. sily a appell du conseil d'estat : cela sera mis es mains de haut conseil pour avoir.

A letter

A letter of intelligence from the Hague.

A.D. 1658.

MONSIEUR,

Resident Cromwell

SANS doute escrira le 125 de 130 meme du peu de satisfaction, qu'il recoit ici, et com- Vol. lviii.
 ment on s'en mocque; car n'est ce pas une raillerie de dire, que transporter des contre- p. 275.
 bandes par terre ou par des petites barques par les canaux du Sas et Escluse, ne soit pas contre le traité de paix; ains que la paix defend le transport par mer es havres, que 130 tient bloquees.
 Voila une subtilité, qui vaut bien toutes celles de Scaliger; et en effect, les 105 n'ont jamais eu la pensée de quitter ce commerce, meme des contrebandes; qui est un des plus riches, et d'autant plus, qu'en cette conjuncture 105 plustost le donneroient en don a 139, que de le laisser en peril; car ils sont plus pour 139, 143, 175, que jamais, et font grande jactance; soi tenant bien ascertenés, que 130 ne fera rien pour 141: quand bien 105 l'attaquent par 134; mais 130 se peut bien assurer, que 105, gagnant advantage sur 141, monstrent par apres leur info-lence, tant plus contre 130, car ils soit animes contre 130 plus que jamais; ce qui est une grande ingratitude, car l'on sçait bien, que le 180 vient de 105, et si 130 relacheroit le 180, cela embarrasseroit les 105 merveilleusement. Il est bien croyable, que 105 par les 134 ne feront pas 154 a 130 directement; mais la ou ils pourront opprimer les amis de 130, ils ne tar-derent pas un heure. Je puis bien assurer, que 141 donnera a 166 non seulement 171, mais toute chose raisonnable, si 166 le veut; mais 105 font tout ce qu'ils peuvent, a fin que 166 ne prenne pas 171; or si 130 voudra en cela plus secunder les 105, que le 141, je doute; car 105 par apres se mocqueroient de 130, qui est fort abusé, s'il ne croit fermement, que 105 feront secretment pour 138 et 139 tout ce qui est imaginable. Je reste,

MONSIEUR,

Votre tres humble serviteur.

Le 12 April, 1658. [N. S.]

Hague, 12 Aprill, 1658. [N. S.]

De Thou the French ambassador in Holland, to Bordeaux the French ambassador in England.

MY LORD,

MESSIEURS de Grandmont and Lionne are still at Franckfort, where they have no few businesses to decide about the contest, title, place, precedency, now that the ambassadors of Spain are come there, supported by the presence of the king of Hungary, archduke Leopold, and all their adherents. There is great hopes of the peace of Poland, which securing the city of Dantzick will also quiet the minds of this nation here, and will free them from a great deal of jealousy, which they have in themselves, and what is suggested into them on the side of Spain for this cause against the king of Sweden.

The prince's royal and her son arrived here a few days since; they have been absent this five months. There is no good to be expected from Hesdin: it is the greatest and most insolent treachery that ever was undertaken.

This state is making what haste they can in setting out their fleet, which will be divided into three squadrons, one for the Narrow, another for the Mediterranean, and the third for the coast of Portugal. They forbear to resolve any thing about a suspension of arms with Portugal.

A.D. 1658.

Boreel the Dutch ambassador in France, to the States General.

H. and M. LORDS,

Vol. lviii.
p. 283.

I HAVE received the king's letter to the marshal of Grancey, governor of Thionville, to the end the lord of Wyckraet and the Neder Hemert may be freed henceforward in his royalties from all excursions of the French garrisons, and that his subjects formerly taken prisoners and detained at Thionville be presently released.

I have also received the king's order to the Duke of Ebeuf, governor of Montreue, to facilitate the restitution of the goods and lading of two Netherland ships, not long since stranded upon the coast of Picardy; partly plundered by the inhabitants, and partly seized upon by the said duke, and applied to his own use; which I have strongly opposed, as having no right to them. I have also received his majesty's letter to his lord ambassador, the lord de Cominges at Lisbon, wherein his lordship doth absolutely order the restitution of the Netherland ship, called the Elephant, formerly taken on the coast of Spain, by the treachery of one Justo de Bills, and brought to Lisbon. A well known person of quality here told me, that all preparations were making to begin the campaign early this year; and that the armies of France and England joined together on this side of the sea will consist at least of 40000 men, whereof 10000 are to be English, which are to be transported out of England and Scotland. For the exemption of the foreigners taxes for the Netherlanders, who are here in this kingdom, your high and mighty Lordships subjects, I have been hitherto only able to obtain a provisional decree of the 14th of March last for the space of six months. They do still scruple to grant me a general decree for the time to come, after the expiration of the said time, whereof I thought good to give your high and mighty lordship's advice. It is reported here, as if the king and cardinal did intend to go over suddenly for Normandy, in regard of the affairs in that province are in no very good condition. The renewing of the treaty for the campaign concerning this kingdom and England is said to be perfected, and there are daily and continual communications held between them.

Your high and mighty lordships having ordered me in your last to inform myself about what was reported concerning the erecting of a whale-fish-company in France, whose octroy should contain prohibition to all others whatever not to import any train-oil, or any thing that proceedeth from the whale into this company, which is directly contrary to all the treaties made between France and your high and mighty lordships, since the year 1596 till this time; I have done all that I could to inform myself particularly about it, and I do find in effect, that there is such a design on foot at court; that the same is drawn up into an edict; and that several great persons have a share in it; that the said edict is sent to the parliament at Rouen to be verified and registered there amongst many others; but that that parliament doth as yet refuse to do it. I have addressed myself to the count De Brienne about it, and signified to him in conformity to your high and mighty lordships order, that if the said edict of whale-fishing be not suspended, and the intended prohibition annulled, that I had order to demand audience of the king and his eminency.

Paris, 12 April, 1658. [N. S.]

W. BOREELL.

Capt. H. Smith to the protector.

May it please you HIGHNES,

Vol. lviii.
p. 287.

I N pursueance of your highnes former instructions concerning sir Henry Slingsby's treasonable designe against your highnes person and government, by endeavouring to seduce and corrupt your highnes and to betray this garrison into the hands of Charles Stewart; there hath been nothing wanting tending to the effectuall thereof. Sir Henry since his being confined to the castle hath tried by many arguments to ingage capt. Overton in his wicked and malicious plott, by promising him preferment and a summe of money to revolt with the castle from your highnes to Charles Stewart, and did the same night promise capt. Overton hee would take course by some friends he had in the country to have provisions sent in for the victualing the castle, and that hee would helpe the capt. to some men for defence of the place, and told him, that Charles Stewart had a bank of money in England of five thousand pounds to gratifye such, as should doe him service; but would not confes where it was; and did promise the capt. that he would give him twenty pounds to raise forty men. This evening sir Henry delivered the inclosed commission to major Water-house in the presence of capt. Overton, whom the major caused immediately to read it. I doe humbly conceive there is now sufficient evidence against him concerning the whole busynes; and therefore I humbly

humbly desire to receive your highnes commands concerning him, which shall by God's A.D. 1658. assistance be faithfully observed by

Your HIGHNES

Most humble and faithfull servant,

Hull, April 2, 1658.

HEN. SMITH.

Capt. H. Smith to secretary Thurloc.

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

THIS evening major Waterhouse hath received a commission from sir Henry Slingsby Vol. lviii. under the hand and seale of Charles Stewart, which I have sent inclosed in this letter to p. 289. his highnes intreating you to deliver it to him. Sir Henry hath endeavoured to engage capt. Overton in his treasonable designe, promising him, that if he would revolt with the castle from his highnes to his king, that hee should neither want preferment nor money, and more particularly told him, that he would give him for his present supply twenty pounds to raise forty men, and that he would take course to have provision brought in for the victualling of the castle from some freinds he had in the country. He did also informe major Waterhouse and capt. Overton this evening, that hee had severall freinds in the country, who had promised to raise men for his king, whom I will endeavour to apprehend as their names and places of abode are discovered to me. I suppose now there will bee full and convictive evidence against Slingsby, and therefore if his highnes shall think fitt, I will speedily send him up to London by a party of my troope with the major and capt. Overton; but at the present Overton is not able to goe out of his house being very lame and ill. Sir, according to your instructions major Waterhouse hath endeavoured to get what he could out of sir Henry, concerning the party mentioned in your letter: hee told the major, he did believe sir Marmaduke Langdale was not in England, and did seeme not to know of that busynes; I very believe, but that hee and the rest of that party, especially such as are actors in the designe, have bound themselves by an oath of secrefey not to discover each other uppon any account whatsoever (which hee would have put uppon major Waterhouse.) Hee told the major, that the false names alwayes began with the first letter of their owne name, and that hee had a list of three hundred counterfeit names, which the major will endeavour to gett alight of. Sir, I have agents abroad att Newcastle, and elsewhere in pursuance of that busynes; but have not received any account from them, but expect it every houre, and as soone as I can understand any thing, it shall bee speedily sent to you by

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

Your most faithfull servant,

Hull, Aprill 2, 1658.

HEN. SMITH.

Westminster, April 12, 1658, N. S.]

To Nieuport the Dutch ambassador.

I Sollicited this week severall lords of the council, and the lord secretary of state, about Vol. lviii. the releasing of the two Portugal prizes; but in regard the said lords have been very p. 285. busy about their domestick affairs, the lord secretary of state told me this morning, that he would do what he could to get ready an answer to their high and mighty lordships upon that subject. Their high and mighty lordships letter to the lord protector, of the 30th of March last, concerning the three ships sent by Michael Diest, Merchant at Rotterdam, to Dunkirk, and taken by some English frigots upon the coast of Flanders, I received yesterday; and delivered the same to day to the lord secretary of state, who told me, that it did very much trouble him, that the said three ships were claimed by subjects of their high and mighty lordships, in regard they were certainly informed out of Holland and Flanders itself, that the same in effect belonged to Spaniards; that the other two ships, which run on shore, and were afterwards gott off by some Flandrians, were carried into Ostend; and that the captain of the said Flemmings was presented by Don John, with a golden chain for his pains. His lordship said, that he would deliver their high and mighty lordships letter to his Highness.

Mr.

A.D. 1658.

Mr. Fr. Cheynell to secretary Thurloc.

SIR,

Vol. lviii.
p. 291.

I Desired Mr. Stapley to procure a list of the gentlemen engaged for Charles Stuart, not only in Suffex, but in other countyes also; and likewise to enquire, when and where the gentlemen did meet to consult; and whether they had not some private meetings in the night in small companyes, in order to a generall rendezvous; and he promised to give mee a faithfull accompt upon the 5th of April at the farthest. I desire punctuall orders concerning any commission or patent tendred to him, whether it be his highnesse pleasure, that he shall receive it in case he transmit it to the commander in chief in Suffex, to be immediately presented to his highnes. Sir, I presume to give you this trouble, that I may receive the more punctuall directions, and make the quicker dispatch for the service and satisfaction of his highnesse. Be pleased to signifye his highnesse pleasure therein to

Your affectionate servant,

April 2, 1658.

T. CHEYNELL.

The examination of Robert Cooke, son of Henry Cooke, of Thorenton, Esq; in Suff. taken before us coll. John Biscoe, lieut. coll. William Style, major William Burton, capt. Isaac Preston, April 2, 1658.

Vol. lviii.
p. 266.

WHO faith, that he knoweth not of any insurrection to be in England to be intended, neither did ever he hear of any foreign army under the command of a Frenchman to be landed on these coasts; and he denieth all his whole charge; and further faith not

ROBERT COOKE.

J. BISCOE.

WILLIAM STYLES.

WILLIAM BURTON.

ISAAC PRESTON.

A letter of information.

SIR,

Vol. xxi.
p. 330.

THE cavaliers seeme to be transported with joye, for they saye their last messenger is now come, assuring them, that their master was ready to putt on board 7000 foot and 600 of Marfins horse; and that he hath provided for him five months provision to bring with him, because he will incampe as soone as he is landed, and will not remove any whether, but wheresoever he rests againe, he will strongly entrench; so that he will not be forced to fight, unlesse they assault him in his campe; and if he should be besieged in his campe, it must be with all the forces that can be made; and then his friends will have liberty to try their strength, when there will be noe army to oppose them: yet they saye they have orders to rise as soone as they can (before he lands) in the west, that forces may be drawne off from hence, that he may land with lesse resistance, and that the citizens may the more securely rise; and of that they boast much beyond my believe. They say they have made every of their agents for every ward to cast up, how many may be depended upon to appeare at the first rendezvous; and in the whole they amount to 10000: and yet they say they have not settled their buisnesse in the Tower-Hamlets, but they are at this instant working about it, tasting mens affections, and giving out onely good words, trying how many may be expected from thence, as soone as they can raise a hubbub. They boast that some of the most considerable men of estates in the city are engaged; (but I cannot beleieve it) yet they saye they have bene able within this month to send over 10000l. to their master, that the Spaniard might see he had freinds here ready to assist him. I dare not inquire into the names of these great citizens, lest I should make them jealous; and I find that they are under much secrecy about the naming any body, especially to one, that does not enter enter into their confederacy ; and I cannot imagine a pretence that's fayre of any good reason, of my being inquisitive after names. A.D. 1658.

They say that Staple in Suffex hath, within these three weekes, layd out 4 or 500 l. upon his owne account, for ammunition and warlike provisions, against the time.

And they saye, that there is a man in the west, who hath always been for the parliament, that will rayse them 5000 men ; and they saye he hath 3000 armes in his house, which were left there at the ending of the first warres.

They say theyr messenger assures them, that they shall have an expresse, when their master is at sea ; and then they are to begin their work every-where in the west. I am

Yours.

Secretary Thurloe to Mr. Downing, resident in Holland.

I pray uncipher this with your owne hand.

I Received yours of the first instant by an expresse from Yarmouth upon tuesday last ; Vol. lviii. yours by the post, of the fifth, yesterday ; and that by lieutenant-colonel Bedles of the P. 177. 4th, just now ; as also another dispatch with some paper, and a letter to your lady ; but I do not yet heare any thing of the admirall's cornett ; when I doe, your desires shall be comply'd with : and I doe not observe, that there is much in any of those letters, which require new directions, my former haveing lett you know his highnesses fence upon most of the particulars you mention, unlesse there be any thing in cyphers in the letters brought by Bedles, which I shall not have tyme to open before the post goes ; if there be, I must deferre the answere thereto till the next oppertunitye. The more I think of the business of Portugall, the better I am satisfied with what I writ you by the last upon that subject ; for seeing the Dutch designe soe much to the eastward, wee have no reason to be over-jealous to accomodate their affairs for them at Portugall, which certainly a peace there will very much doe, or a cessation of arms, and you are to steere yourself accordingly in your negotiation about that buisnesse, as I writ more fully by my last.

It's resolved to send Mr. Meadows to the treaty between the kings of Sweden and Poland, and accordingly he is directed to hasten to Hamborough, where instructions shall meet him. M.G. Jephson, at his most earnest request, is to returne home ; but we cannot here resolve so soone, to send one to the elector of Brandenburg ; nor doe the Sweadish ministers here speak of it at all. I pray, mention not that Mr. Meadows is the man to be sent to the treaty aforesaid. It is very considerable, that the lights in the Sound are in the power of the Swedes. I pray beinformed what the Dutch intend to doe about it.

My meaneinge was not, that you should presse too much upon Port-William, but only to cherish the correspondence, and that too with as little obstination as is possible ; but a letter to him I cannot yet send you for divers very considerable reasons ; however, doe not put them out of the hopes of one, but rather that they may expect it. I will be sure to keep this correspondence with you as a great secret. I much wonder, that the soldiers are still sent for Denmarke. I cannot imagine what the Dane should doe with them. I shall not need to desire you to be very vigilant about the designe of their fleete, and of the just time when they will be ready. I pray returne all kindnesse to the resident of Denmarke, and assure him, that his highnes desires not only a good correspondence with him, but a further intimacy ; and that he may expect from him whatever he expected from the nearest ally. I writ to you twice or thrice about caryinge a considerable correspondence in Flanders, both with the Spaniards and Charles Stuart, thinking you might have an oppertunitye for it where you are. I shall not stand for any sume of mony, if it be sure and good. I earnestly intreat you to bestow some of your thought and pains about it. It seemes the great noise of the confusions and troubles are not yet over. I trust there is lesse ground for them every day then other. I sent you by the last a cotype of the petition from the officers here to his highness, and all the army in Scotland here addresse by single regiments, in as affectionate terms as can be well thought of. Herewith comes a cotype of an address from the army in Ireland. By all this sure it is evident, that the armyes are not disatisfied with his highnesses conduct, or in any danger to desert him ; and all this was most voluntary, arising ex mero motu ; and this will confute the doctrine, which Nieuport distills so industriously, and somewhat lessen the credit of his correspondence. I knowe whom he conversed with there, and they are discontented people, and such as were for Charles Stuart, or Levellers, and he understood nothing from any good hands ; and this you may assure them, with whom you have any confident communication ; and that whatever they build upon his information, they will be deceived in. If you could get a considerable person of the cavalier party to engage in a corepondence, that now is or may come into Holland, the better to colour it, wee might demand him of the states, in pursuance of the treatyes.

A.D. 1658. Besides these particulars from the army, a great part of England, and all Ireland, desire to make the same addresses; so that if the cavalier will returne, I suppose they will finde enough about his ears, and most of all, if Charles comes from Ostend, which I believe they have now little heart to doe, our shippes have kept them in so longe, that their seamen run away, and many of their foot; besides, their campe drawes soe near, and the 3000 men expected from Biscay not being come, that the Spaniard will scarce be in a condition to spare his infantry.

Our men at Mardike are in a very good condition, and long to be in action. The treaty is renewed betweene us and the French for the next campaign. I pray enquire with all diligence, whether the Dutch will meddle in the business of Flanders, yea or not. I am informed that there has been a treaty betweene the Dutch and Charles Stuart about transporting his men into England with their fleete; and that Charles Stuart hath offered them Jutland in some of the Scotch islands for that service. Whether the treaty was with any of the states generall, or Amsterdam, I know not; but it was, as I believe, with some of them. I pray enquire into it by such secret means as you can.

I perceive you give Hesdin for lost to the Spaniard; I think it in very great danger; but our last letters say, that there was some hopes of it still. The wife and children of the governor are made close prisoners in Paris, which is noe very good signe; but yet 'tis said, that soe much is obteyned from the governor, that Hocquincourt shall not be received into it upon his returne from Brussels. This designe was layd much further then this: some other townes and whole provinces should have revolted, and a generall insurrection was designed, as in England by the influence of Swed and the Spaniard; but it is defeated, and the deserted party reconciled. This I assure you is very true; so that if Flanders was to be saved this yeare by these designs, I suppose it may be in some danger. Mr. Crooke delivered me a letter from the states general to H. H. demanding the ships of Vand'est to be restored without delay, whereat I was somewhat surpris'd, considering what you have represented to them in that business. I shall remember to prepare something in answer thereto, by the next, to be sent to you.

The answer they gave you about Tyfen is a very s lovingly one, and makes it an impossible thing for any state, with whom they were in amity, to expect performance of any treaty from them.

I shall not faile to have a ship ready for your lady, and to doe her all the service I am able for her accomodation in her journey to you; and this is all I have to trouble you with, and rest,

Your most humble and faithful servant.

Whitehall, 2. Aprill, 1658.

If you charge your bills upon Mr. Noell for money, they will be answered.

Lockhart, embassador in France, to secretary Thurloe.

May it please your LORDSHIPP,

Vol. lviii.
p. 292.

THE confusione of that scribble sent by the last will beare witness for me, that at wryting of it I was under very great indisposition and paine; and tho' I have cause to blesse God for my being restored to my health, yett I have reasone to be ashamed, that having undertaken in two or three of my last to cleare your lordshipp in some perticulars, I find myself as little able to performe my promise concerning them, as when first I ingadged myself. I hope your lordshipp will have the charity for me to believe, that I have used the best of my endeavors in it. If vexatione for my ill success and disappoyntments could excuse me, I should have much to say for myself; but it being to little purpose to trouble you with storys of that nature, I shall only tell your lordshipp, that I am promised an audience this evening, and satisfaction to all my demands. By an expresse, which I shall send to-morrow morning to Calais, your lordshipp shall know what shall passe at this evening's audience: if it come not to your lordshipp so soone as this, it will not be long behind it. The court is reddey to part from this so soone as they have done the devotions they are accustomed too in the ensuing holy weeke. Hesdin is lost, and all things else here are in the same posture they were formerly. I am,

May it please your LORDSHIPP,

Paris, Aprill $\frac{4}{14}$. 1658.

Your most humble, faithfull and obedient servant,

WILL. LOCKHART.

Secretary

Secretary Thurloe to Lockhart, ambassador in France.

A.D. 1658.

I Have had none from your excellency this day, which is the usual time for the French mail to arrive here; nor had I time to give you the trouble of mine by the two last posts, which went from hence. And indeed I did defer all I had to say (which was not much) until Mr. Swift's return, who is yet here, and stays only for the ratification of the treaty. All that we have to do by the treaty is in hand, viz. the recruit of our fleet, and the provision of hay, wherein we hope to answer our agreement very exactly; and so we hope will those on your side, especially now that Hesdin is over, the news whereof M. G. Morgan sends us this day. It is necessary, that we know the precise day for our fleet to be upon the coast. The being early in the field will very much facilitate the next year's work, whereof I know your excellency will make them sensible. I hear the enemy is yet in their quarter, except it be 2 or 3000 men, who (as Morgan writes) are busying themselves in slighting Link, and building a fort upon the Colm between Bery and Dunkirk, which is but a mere trifle to prevent a siege. I perceive they think the prices of corn high: I do assure you it will not be had lower here, corn being much risen of late. I do not hear, that any body is come yet to receive the hay at Mardike. It is necessary, that I know his name, that so the hay may be consigned to him. Some of it is on board, and will be there very shortly. I remain

Whitehall, $\frac{5}{17}$. April, 1658.

Yours.

Secretary Thurloe to Lockhart, ambassador in France.

YOUR excellency is sufficiently informed concerning the business to which this inclosed relates, which is only his highness's sense therein, concerning what money is or shall be paid into your excellency's hands upon that account, which you are desired to pay unto doctor Coladon, or to Jaques Bordier his substitute. I shall not need therefore to detain your excellency further, than while I assure you, that I am

Whitehall, April $\frac{5}{17}$. 1658.

Yours.

I was by very great instances constrained to write this letter; but though I do not understand the business so well as to know perfectly whether I do well in it; and therefore, if it crosses my rule of justice, or his highness's interests, I hope your excellency will use your wonted prudence in it notwithstanding this.

Lockhart to secretary Thurloe.

May it please your LORDSHIPP,

Paris, Apryll $\frac{5}{17}$. 1658.

AT my audience yesternight, I had opportunity to speake fully to all particulars. This day the whole rest of the levy-money will be payd in, and by the wedensday's post bills shall be sent for it. I returned one half of that rest of levy-money last weeke; but did not turne it over, expecting to heare either from your lordshipp or Mr. Noell, that you had come to some agreement about it. One of Mr. Noell's to me, at least a fortnight agoe, gave me hopes, that he would make some such bargaine with your lordshipp; but having heard nothing farther touching it, I dare delay the turning over of the mony no longer. I could not perswade his eminence to disburse any more mony for hay; so that your lordshipp must send just as much hay, as the mony turned over upon that account will amount to. The cardinal promised me to send an expresse to England to-morrow, who shall see the hay shipp'd, and will bring a list of such other provisions, as they will need, and bills of exchange upon London to pay for them: but that must not be trusted too; for the court being ready to depart, he is so press'd with multiplicity of businesse, as seldom he remembers any thing, save just in the moment he is spoake too; so that if this expresse do not come, I must beseech your lordshipp to take care, that the hay be at Mardick by the 1st of May, new styl; and I must beg the same thing for the recruits. Mr. Tallon, who is at Calais, will be sent to Mardick for the relieving of both. Discontents here are exceeding high, and universall: they are founded upon these two particulars; first, because the overture for peace meets with soe cold a reception. 2dly, Because the cardinal suffers the enemies to post themselves at Hesdin, from whence they have a free passage into France; and instead of employing his majestie's forces for the recovery of so important a place, he intendeth, as they give out, to imploy them against Dunkirke and Graveling, and is to deliver these places, purchased by the blood and treasure of France, into

A.D. 1658. into the hands of the English, their old and most dangerous enemies, which, they say, is not only against the interest of France in particular, but against the whole catholick interest in generall. To allay the heat of theise seditious and factious spirits, the cardinal is forced to give it out, that he intends to reduce Hesdin before all other actione; and that his designe against Dunkirke, or any other place, shall be defer'd until the latter end of this campaigne, or the beginning of the next; and that the drawing together of the English body at Mardick is but to amuse the enemies, to the end he may recover Hesdin upon easier terms; and least the enemy should beseege Mardick, when the king's army is before Hesdin, he provydeth it with a quantity of hay and oatts, sufficient to maintayn 800 horse, which he intends to leave at the foresaid place all this summer, for its better defence. He desyres your lordshipp may cawse some such story fly abroad in England; and that you will take notice of it to 467, and expresse some disatisfactione, because the French seem to be as uncertain in their resolutions this year, as they were the last; and except treatties be punctually kept, it's to noe purpose to make them. I have this day writ to major generall Morgan, that I have some fears the resolutions touching Gravelinns and Dunkirke will not be executed so soone as once I expected; and that the reduction of Hesdin is ane actione, that so much imports France, as probably it will be preferred to all other interests.

The court moves from this this day fennight, and goeth directly to Amiens, and from thence to Abbeville, so as the seege of 497 is form'd, and the lynes closed, it will advance further. The forces begin to draw together from all quarters. Their generall rendezvous is appointed to be upon the first of May, N. S. betwixt Amiens and Perron. Mr. la Ferte's armie drawes out of its quarters at the same tyme, and gives jealousy to Theonville and Luxenburgh. Mr. Turenne was with me last night; and when I discours'd with him the strength of the army, I find the estimatt he makes of it will be at least 3000 men short of that number the cardinal gives it. If the Alsatiene forces, that are under the duke of Wirtemberge and Mr. Balthasar's command, were come up, there is no doubt but they will be strong enuff; but I feare they cannot come up to the beginning of the seege. Mr. Turenne told me, he had spoake with the cardinal in the morning, and had proposed severall difficulties in the busines, which, he sayd, he had done for no other end, but that they might be so forseen and provyded against, as the enterprize might not miscarry in his hand. He insists still upon the loan of two his highness's old regiments of foot for three weeks tyme. He told me plainly, that without such a second, he durst not answer for the successe of the businesse (I found, by what past at my audience yesternight, he had sayd as much to the cardinal). But I durst give him no hopes, that his desires would be granted. He spoke to me also about the marquisse of Mompillian's businesse. I find he resents much the delays it meets with, which maks me importune your lordshipp with my humble desyre for its being brought to some issue.
Dunkirk

When his eminence spoake to me concerning the borrowing of two old regiments for the tyme aforesaid, he urged the granting of his desyre upon no other account, then that of the great need would be of them. I took the freedome to tell him, that his argument from necessity was framed by himselfe; for if the French army were in the condition it ought to be in, there would then be noe such need of them. He answered, that his levyes in Alsatia had been retarded by some accidents; and whereas he had expected them by 1. of May, it would be towards the end of it before they cowld come up; besydes, they protested, that if the French officers had made their recruitts according to the money allowed them, there would have been noe need of his borrowing any of his highness's forces; and tho' he made it his very humble and earnest sute to his highness, that he would spare two regiments for three weeks tyme, yett he assured me, that a refusal of it should not hynder the going on of the desygne, tho' it would render the successe of it very doubtfull; for Mr. Turenne had informed him, that they must come before the place in three bodys, which, by reason of the channells, would be so seperated from on another, as they cowld not, till the bridges were made up, relieve any of the three bodys, in case the enemy should be strong enuff to attempt any one of them; and that their beating any one of them would not only be the looseing of the place, but of the army, and whole campaigne. He prayed his highness to take into his consideration, what the consequences might prove both to England and France, if any such misfortune should fall owt. I towld his eminence, that I feared the present posture of affairs in England would not give way to such a condescension; and to the end he might not rely upon any such thing, I rendered all hopes of it as desperate as I cowld; but tho' I am abundantly sensible, that they, by their ill measures, have involved both themselves and us into very great difficulties, yett since the danger seems to threaten us as much as them, I know not whether the leaving of that businesse to its hazard, or the endeavoring to secure it by the meane of the desyred aide, be more advysable. The pinch will lye heare, if the lynes of circumvallation were once closed, the camps fortified, and the communication secured by the bridges, I think then there would be noe great need of any old regiments; but, till that be, I feare there there may be too much. Your lordshipp will not need to write an answer to this, because, A.D. 1658. if it please God, I intend to begin my journey towards Calais on Monday next. I must beg the favour of a frigott to transport my wife to Dover, and must desyre the frigott to be in Calais road on the $\frac{16}{26}$ th instant. If your lordshipp have any commands for me, lett your letters be directed to the post-master of Calais, with order to him to keep them till I call for them. I have much to say concerning affaires at Frankford; but dare not venture upon giving your lordshipp an account of them till I come to Calais. Your lordshipp may assure his highness, that the election of the emperor will be deferred for a considerable tyme, and that it is probable those of the electors, that are of the French syde, will be hard enuff for those of the house of Austria, and the pope, out of whose hands they are lyke to take the mediation for the generall peace, and are lyke to have better successe in their endeavors for it then they cowlde have had. I find in some mens resolutions here towching peace greater alterations then perhaps your lordshipp will believe. They seem neverthelesse, and, I believe, are really constant to their resolutions of fullfilling their treaty with England in the first place, and look upon it as a means to oblydge the other party to take what conditions they will give. By the next I shall send the cardinal's answer to his highness's letter concerning Mr. de Bourdeaux businesse; and I doe not make haste to send it, because I knowe the reading what I have to say, will be as little satisfactory to your lordshipp, as the writeing of it will be to,

May it please your LORDSHIPP,

Your most humble and obedient servant,

WILL. LOCKHART.

General Monck to secretary Thurloe.

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

THERE is a little thinge in Ireland, wherein I may bee accidentallie heerafter much concern'd, which I must desire his highnesse favour in; and in order therunto, I have entreated my brother Clarges to acquaint you with the particulars of the businesse, and to request your kindnesse and assistance in itt; which will adde much to the many obligations you have conferr'd uppon

In the possession of the right hon. Philip lord Hardwicke, lord high chancellor of Great Britain.

Your most affectionate humble servant,

Dalkeith, 5^o April, 1658.

GEORGE MONCK.

Mr. Bradshaw to secretary Thurloc.

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

MY last of the 30th March gave your honour notice of my arrival here, and inclosed Vol. lvi. translatts of two Russe letters from Nashokin, invitinge me to returne; as also a P. 297. copie of my answer to him, which I sent to prince Adolphus, under a flying seale, to send it forward, or returne it me, as he should judge it convenient, in reference to the present affaires of his majestie of Sweden. In the interim I here waite the further pleasure of his highness and the councill, that, if it be thought fitt, I returne upon those letters from Nashokin, without further security or assurance from the great duke of his accepting the mediation, who neither by his chancelor, nor any other, vouchsafes answer to my addresse in September last, except he would have his order for my coming to Musco to be understood an approbation of the mediation, that then suteable supplies of money may be appointed me by letters of creditt from Mr. Upton as formerly, or upon some sponable merchant here, where it will be most suteable for me, there being losse by drawing money from Elbing heether; and I shall be ready to observe command. Your honour sees by the letters of Nashokin, under what character the great duke hath ordered to receive me, he understanding my credentialls (as I ever thought he would); and accordingly if I proceed, I must appear before him, which will require, that I be suteably accompanied with a minister, a phisition, and a competent number of servants. Since my last I have received letters also from count Magnus de la Grand, signifying his being upon his way to the treaty with the Pole. He is of the same opinion with prince Adolphus, that his majestie of Swede, notwithstanding his successe in Denmarke, and league with that kinge, desyres a peace with the Muscovite; but if his highnes judge it not honourable to send againe to him, as I presume he will, having been so long slighted, I shall not then doubt,

VOL. VII.

P

but

A.D. 1658. but that it will please his highnesse to permitt my returne for England in a few months, to looke after and settle my owne concernments there, wherein truely I have suffered much, by reason of my long absence. I am glad to understand by your honour's letter received by the last post, that the officers of the army, as well as the citie, have professed their fidelity to his highnesse. I hope God will appeare as formerly against your enemies, and direct your counsell for the settling of the nation. If it should be resolved, that I proceed for Musco, pray let Mr. Waynewright know it, that he may send me by the company's ships such persons and things, as I have writt to him for. Referring your honour to the inclosed paper, which is all the present offerres, I cease your further trouble, and remayne,

YOUR HONOUR'S

Hamb. 6th April, 1658.

Most humble servant,

RICHARD BRADSHAW.

P. S. Sir, My secretary Straus is goinge for England, with a commission of agencie from the duke of Courland, which because it gives occasion to the Swedish ministers (if not to the kinge himself) to suspect, that the duke, whom they thinke hath beene a backfreind to the mediation his highnesse propounded by me, notwithstanding his noble enterayneinge of me, hath secured his ends by him; and that my secretary, to ingratiate himselfe with the duke, he hath not been so faithfull to me as he ought; I thought good therefore to give your honour the inclosed true relation of the businesse, submitinge it to your judgment, desiringe that Straus may enjoy his employment, if it be not found, that he hath used indirect means to obtayne it.

Inclosed in the preceeding.

Vol. lviii.
p. 299.

NOT long after my comeing into Courland, it was observed, that the duke sent after for my secretary Straus, and had long and private discourse with him thereupon. Questioning my secretary about it, he told me, that indeed the duke had sayd to him, that, if I proceeded not to Musco, he would give him employment for England in the roome of one that was lately there; which I wondering at, that the duke should offer my secretary employment, without first acquainting me with it, I charged Straus, that he should by no means engage himself to the duke whilst I was upon the negotiation; but if I proceeded not for Musco, then, at my returne to Hamburgh, he should be at liberty to entertayne what preferment the duke would give him; which he promised to observe. A little before my departure out of Courland, the Swedish agent there came to me, accompanied with the gentleman, that had beene lately the duke's agent in England, informing me, that he had understood, that my secretary had offered his service to the duke; and that he doubted, that to engratiate himselfe with the duke, he might do evil offices, requesting me not to permitt him to serve the duke, whom he had reason to believe was no friend to the mediation my master propounded by me. Upon which I agayne questioned my secretary about it, who then protested, that the duke first offered to employ him, before ever he tendred his service to the duke, assuring me, that he had not, nor would not, engage himself to the duke, until I either returned from Musco, or was returned to Hamburgh, if the negotiation took not effect. At my comeing to Memmel, Straus desired leave to goe to the duke, to see what conditions he would give him, being (as he sayd) I was not like to proceed for Musco; and then requested my letter of recommendation to the duke on his behalf: to which I gave him this answer, that being the negotiation was not ended, but that, for aught I knew, I might yet proceed, it was not answerable in me to recomend my secretary, acquainted with all passages, to a foreign prince, suspected by the K. of S. especially being the duke had not acquainted me with his desire to employ him, wishing him, and requireinge him, that at no hand he should engage himself before my returne to Hamburgh; for that if the state of England came to understand of it, they would not receive him; and then I gave way only for him to go to the duke, to see what conditions he might have of him, after my returne to Hamburgh, notwithstanding at that time he absolutely engaged himself to the duke by oath, which after I understood, I employed him no further, but tooke on another secretary. This is the truth of what hath passed in that businesse; and truely I doe not believe, that my secretary was false to me in either revelinge to the duke of Courland my transactions with the great duke, or in suppressing the great duke's answer, as was suggested by the Swedish ministers; but only being desirous to secure the employment to himself, he was more forward therein then did become him, which hath indeed (together with some passionate expressions of his, when I refused to give him a letter of recommendation to the duke, saying, that if I hindred this preferment of his, he would seek revenge) tyed up my hand from recommendinge him to his his highness and your honour, as otherwise I might have done, it beinge my desire, that such as have lived with me, should advance in the world. A.D. 1658.

Mr. Downing, the English resident in Holland, to vice-admiral Goodson.

SIR,

THE king of Sweden is at present giving order for the better fortifying of several places in Schonen, and is shortly expected on the other side of the water. The election at Frankfort is not like to be till after Easter. They are here about a capitulation to bind the emperor that shall be. Mynheer Lambson, one of the states general for Zealand, shewed me on Saturday last the letter, which he had received from his correspondent at Cadiz, wherein he writes him word, that there was lately arrived there a petach from the West Indies, with news, that 500 Spaniards, which had entered the island of Jamaica, are cut off every man by the English. The Muscovites having besieged the fort Jahino with about 4000 men, the governor of Narva, on the 21st of February at 10 at night, marched with horse and foot, and four pieces of cannon, and fell upon the quarter of the Muscovites, killed about 100 of them, released about 200 prisoners, which they had taken of the country, victualled the place, and returned safe back, with very small loss. It is written hither from Flanders, that the Spaniards are stirring, and that they are assembling about Cambray; but it is likely their design may lie lower, and that that is done only to amuse us. If you please hereafter to send your letters to Mr. John Gill the elder at Flushing, they will come safe to my hands. I pray send the inclosed by the first opportunity for England. I am,

SIR,

Your very ready and affectionate servant,

Hague, 16. April, 1658. [N.S.]

G. DOWNING.

Lockhart, ambassador in France, to secretary Thurloe.

May it please your LORDSHIPP,

NO letters hath come from England by these two last posts, which gives our enemies here new occasion to spread abroad their lyes. The court will not faile to remove from this the beginning of next weeke, and goe directly to Amiens. I am in some paine concerning Mr. Swift, tho', if he have followed my advyce, in landing either at St. Valeries or Deipp, he can meet with no danger. This being the holy weeke, I had much difficultie to gett any bills of exchange. The whole rest of the levy-money was pay'd into Mr. Wildegoes yesternight. There is 6000 crownes turned over by him this day, that being all this exchange would afford. The particulars of it, with bills for the remainder, shall come by the next post. By major Willobie, whome I sent expresse to Calais upon monday last, I gave your lordshipp an account of what past at my last audience. I have been all this morning with severall of the counsell, to adjust some of their arrests and reports, which relate to a redresse of the grivances of divers English merchants; so that I have no more tyme left me then to subscribe myself,

May it please your LORDSHIPP,

Your most humble and obedient servant,

Paris, April 17th, 1658. [N.S.]

WILL. LOCKHART.

Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland, to secretary Thurloe.

SIR,

I AM sorry for your want of strength: the Lord continue it. I hope God will keep you always from doing any thing as to the securing of the cavalleers, or raising of moneys illegally. 'Tweere better to cross som, or rather not to comply with them, then to put all into a flame. I am glad, that at last Mr. Standish could expound our accompts, which wee thought had been cleare enough before to any, but those that would not see; and our present feare is, that the complement of approveing them is intended for our payment. But on my word that will not doe. Wee have cause to bless God, that the designs about Ostend are so well over. Meethinkes another parliament should, by good lawes, quite kill the remaning venome of the cavalleer. Here came to me Inchiquyne's son, without any thing like pass or permission: he hath been three weekes landed in Munster,

A.D. 1658. Munster, conversing there with his father's friends and interest. He is a young man nevertheless I would not be too secure, seeing it would cost nothing to be secure. Indeed I will not imprison him; but only bid him not return without notice given me. In the mean time let me have your advice concerning him. I hope there is no great matter in the thing, yet I think fit to discourage presumptions of this kinde.

Harry Ingoldestby being made a barronet, has begott an inconvenient alteration in Sir Hardress Waller's family, which to rectifye I designe, that by a letter from his highnes I may have order to conferr the same title upon Maurice Fenton, Sir William Fenton's son, one whom my lord Broghill verry well knowes, who married Harry Ingoldestby's wive's eldest sister, and that it be done with speed. My lord Broghill will, I thinke, call upon you for it. Our addresse goes smoothly on; though some dissenters there are, but not upon uniform grounds, but each man upon his own perticular peck and humour; the most considerable of whom is Low, Cooper's major. I desire your advise how to carry it towards them; for I will doe nothing with noise, nor by way of spleen, or heat, nor suddainly, but as things shall offer in due season. This week my lord Broghill has surprised me with an intimation of his intentions to retire into Ireland. That which he presses is the inconsistency of his present way of liveing with his distemper of the gout, though I cannot see the difference between the means of help for that disease to be had in Ireland above what may be had in England, should be a sufficient reason for such a change. Hee sayth, that neither the disgust of his owne usage, nor of the present government, hath occasioned these desins, but meerly the interest of his health; that he will stay till the dangers now imminent are over; but in the mean time sent away his family, and will, if his health permitt, return againe after a year's vacation. I have likewise received letters from generall Monke, propounding his being commissary in Ireland. Now, how to interpret all these enigmaes, is the busines. In the first place, I cannot thinke any wise man would place so much upon the difference of gout remedies aforementioned; but I imagine, that either he is not consulted well enough in England, or that such as doe not like him are more, or that his highnes is averse from making use of, though not from hearing his advise, or that some present fit of melancholy has seized him, or that a providence concerning his estate in Ireland, which being the perpetuall concernment of himself and posteritie, he had rather cultivate, then the temporary interest of employments, or that he desires the commissary's place, I conceive may be the reasons of this motion. I have not witt enough to enumerate the hidden causes, which move men to act or say; but wishing him well, I would be glad to finde out the pin that prickes him; and mee thinkes the amity, that has been between us, should have carryed him to be more open to me, then that I should need thus puzzell myself with untying these knotts, and with winding out the hartes of his intentions. I perceive his resolutions have taken opium from H. H. and therefore, during their slumber, I would have you finde out the true causes of this impulse, that wee may both administer such helps as are necessary. I have nothing more, but to tell you I am really

Your most affectionate freind,

April 7th, 58.

and most faithfull servant,

H. CROMWELL.

H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland, to the lord Broghill.

My dear LORD,

In the possession of
Will. Cromwell esq;

MR. secretary, I perceive, is not yet quite well, which troubles me; but your lordship has abundantly supplied his shortness, for which I heartily thank you. I have again and again (as I use to doe) read over your lordship's advices, and would return much in answer to each particular, but shall not; for that all, which needs be said, is wrapt up in this, viz. that I am glad C. sees the condition of his family, enclines to a parliament, hopes he can regulate the army; will not let such as Disb. affront my brother R, that the illegal proposalls of E. Disb. against the cavaliers and for raising money without a parliament, are discouraged. All which put together (as the world now goes) is good news: but I now come to what is worse, and that which amazes me, viz. that your lordship should apprehend so much difference between the air of England and Ireland as to your distemper; or that Ireland should afford more and better exercises and diversions than England; so as that mean difference should be the reason, why your lordship should throw up all, grieve his highness, desert your friend Mr. secr. and Phi. Jones, leaving them alone to tug at all manner of difficulties; I might add, and leave me too, to see with one eye (viz. G. alone) and to want all those other helps your lordship's being with his highness does afford mee.

Methinks,

Methinks, that as Ireland can furnish more of the above particulars, which England cannot; so on the other hand, that England had many other helps, which Ireland has not. Why then should your lordship, in this jealous world, give his highness ground to think you are weary of helping him? Why should you sett all men, both here and in England, a musing, and a framing of dangerous conjectures, what should be the reason? for that the difference of helps for the gout in one place above the other is the true cause, they will never believe, tho' your lordship should swear it.

Do you not think others will creep in during your lordship's absence? And why, now you see his highness so well enclined, should you let him cool? And why do I thus patiently endure your absence, but for the greater end, which I think your lordship may effect in England? and for that I know not what there is in Ireland, which may deserve you? I hoped your lordship had, upon your last conference at Kilkenny, got the mastery over this humour; and that you would not have put me to untye these knots and hartes, but would have told me more openly the causes of this surprizing impulse. I will deal plainly with your lordship, that your lordship may deal plainly with me. Your lordship calls your life dull. Now, I cannot tell what life is more active, than to be always as your lordship, contriving helps for sudden difficulties and emergencies. 'Tis the not being enough conversant with these things, which makes a life dull, though perhaps more happy. Wherefore, and for that I find things mend so slowly, I am apt to think your lordship is not enough employed in these matters; and that you may regret the miscarriage of affaires by the intrusion of worse counsels upon his highness, than what I am sure your lordship is able to give him. As for the state of publick affairs, 'tis true 'tis bad, but I believe it mends. And why should your lordship, whose courage and faith has been always eminent, now faint in the way, and dye like Moses upon mount Nebo, before you enter into the land of Canaan? My lord, I will not trouble my head any longer to unriddle this mystery. I do indeed expect, by the protestations of freindship, which have past between us, that your lordship may be more plain with me herein; and thus, therefore, break off abruptly as to this matter, till I hear further.

I like your lordship's counsel about speeding away the l. 30000; wherefore let it be executed; half a loaf is better than no bread. Our address here goes on very smoothly, though some humourously, and upon different frivolous reasons, dissent, amongst which is your old friend my captain lieutenant Sheeres, and some others. I wish you would advise a word or two, how we ought to carry it towards them, viz. in order to security; for I would hurt no man, otherwise than to tie his hands from hurting the publick. My conscience bears me witness, and I think the world will too, that such men, as I have at any time laid aside, are all like to be advantaged thereby as to their profit; insomuch, as when I myself fall, I wish it may be on as soft a place, as those do, whom I throw down.

My lord Inchequin's son came hither, without any thing by way of pass or permission from any authority whatsoever. I will be as civil as I may be to him, and to all men else. But he shall not return into Munster, till I receive better satisfaction from him, and advice from England what to do, which I pray send me.

Henry Ingoldsbey being made a baronet begets an uncooth alteration as to his wife's sister Fenton, who wants no sense of any diminution of her place and merit. I see no reason but honest Maurice Fenton should have the same dignity conferred upon him. Wherefore I do particularly recommend it to your lordship to get a letter of direction from his highness to me for that purpose; which I hope will be easily and of course done. I pray mind it effectually, and send it with speed, that Mrs. Fenton's place do not close up, before she can get into it again. I have written to Mr. secretary to assist you in the thing, as there shall be occasion. I remain

Yours, &c.

H. C.

Dublin, 7. April, 5^o.

A letter of information, concerning Mr. Feake, preacher among the Fifth-monarchy-men.

SIR,

UPON the Lord's-day last, hearing a great voice att the church, near the 3 Cranes in Thames-street, I inquired, who preached. I was told, Mr. Feake, whom I found expounding these words, Heb. the 11th, and the 24th, By faith Moses, after, &c. and he observed, that this refusal of his was after he came to yeares of discretion, soe not to be imputed to poor-spirittnesse or narrow principles, (a phrase now much in request) but to the fear of the Lord, and that he would have the Lord to be theyr King and God. 2^{ly}, that Pharoah was the most opulent and richest prince, that then was in the world; soe that nothing but faith could be the cause of his refusall, it being the most probable way to preferment, Pharaoh's daughter having noe other child; with much enlargements and repetition; and to conclude this particular, that preaching of faith was not preaching of treason.

In the possession of the Rt. hon. Philip lord Hardwicke, lord high chancellor of Great Britain.

VOL. VII.

Q

But

A.D. 1658. But it may be objected, that this is but a singular example, and soe doth not bind, &c. Let us go on, and we shal meet with Gideon, who was a very great general, and God appeared to him in that miraculous way, as is not to be parraled in these our dayes. Let us see what he did, after he had destroyed the enemyes of the Lord and Israel; the army and people desired him to be theyr ruler (observe that the army and people did this); yet this good man, a valiant general, replied, I wil not rule over you, neither shall my son rule over you; but the Lord shall rule over you. From whence did this proceed? Surely from the Spirit of God. But we are now told, that Gideon was a poor man, and threshed wheat, and hid it from the Midianites, and one that did not understand government; els he never would have refused a kingdome for himself and posterity, &c. with many excursions. Let us proceed to Nehemiah, a courtier and cup-bearer to a great king, and at that time the chief prince that was att Jerusalem. This man was theyr governour for many yeares; yet he eat not the bread of government, and refused the 40 shekels of silver, a very small sume, not to be named with 90000 per mensem, because he feared the Lord. And you may observe, that the magistrate in a free estate, where the fear of the Lord was, never layd tax upon the people; but they, unasked for, gave him what they thought he had need of. Now, from all these 3 valiant and good men, you may observe, that the fear of the Lord was still before theyr eyes, and that they had had noe other designe, but to deliver the people, and make them to be governed by the Lord God, &c. This was the constant method of all God's generalls; and they that tell you otherwise, would doe well to take away our Bible, and give us another; for we Fifth-monarchy-men cannot justify the present proceedings out of this Bible; and we must professe, that as long as we believe this to be the word of God, we must allow of noe other goverment, than the goverment of our Lord God, and Jesus Christ.

He concluded his discourse of those words; and told them, that by the providence of God he lately was in the tower of London, and they were 3 jaylers in this towne, the first the common jayler, and he belongs to the ordinary prisons; the second is the gentleman jayler, the secretary of state; and the third, the chief or jayler paramount, the lieutenant of the Tower. I was under the custody of the last and worst; for I could not believe, that any Christian could use one another soe as he useth his prisoners. They are all locked up att night, and the keyes of each prison carried to the chief jayler's chamber; and let the necessities of a poor and innocent Christian be never soe great, he may perish before any relief can come to him. I inquired, how they learned soe soon these artificial and exquisite wayes of torturing poor Christians. The wayters or under-jaylers told me, that they went according to the old form, that was used by our former kings; and I assure you, that if they be any reformation, it tends to severity, &c. But God be thanked I am now at liberty to preach the gospel; and he then made a comparison betweene the angels of the churches of Smyrna, Pergamus, &c. and the gentleman jayler, the chief jayler, and himself; and sometimes he did suppose the lieutenant of the Tower to be of a Christian church, and himself of another; but it was not like the gospel proceedings, nor ever heard of, that a Christian of one congregation should imprison the decon or bishop of another congregation, (and suffer the poor people under his charge to famish for want of spiritual food) by an order from the gentleman jayler, the secretary of state, that was of noe congregation. This is not according to the practice of the angel of the churches of Smyrna or Pergamus, &c. Sometime he did suppose, that neither the gentleman jayler, nor the chief jaylor, were of any congregation, but meer infidells, as did appeare by theyr imprisoning of the people of God, for preaching up the goverment of Jesus Christ.

He then pulled out a letter from some imprisoned bretheren, that were taken in seeking of God, on the fift day of the last weeke, in Coleman-street, by the lord mayor and his bretheren the shrifes, with halberts and other warlike weapons, and caryed to severall prisons, only for reading the word of God, as if they had been malefactours. He observed, that Paul found more favour from that good and just heathen, that would not send him without his accusers with him, it being against the law of God and nations, that any man should be molested in his calling, or imprisoned, unless the cause of his imprisonment was certified in the certificate of his comittment; that the major could alleage noe cause, but he hard, that they did use to preach or speake against his highnesse (as they call him); and let him expect to be dayly more preached against, if he employs his instrument to imprison men for only reading the word of God; for the Fifth-monarchy-men are resolved to read God's word, and to declare, that the Lord Christ was and is theyr king and governer. The officers, that were employed, are since very sorry for what they had done, and desired theyr prayers; and he doth verily believe, that many of them wil loose all, rather than be instrumentall in the saints imprisonment; for God daley adds to the church such as shal be saved; that they are 8 of them in owne roome to the damage of theyre health; that he doth not desire the congregation to rise up in armes, to deliver these poor soules, nor to send them money; but pray for them, that God would make up the number of his elect; that divers poor people ware in severall other prisons; and that theyr wife and

and children knew not what was become of them; and some that came casually to that A.D. 1658: meeting in Coleman-street, at which words I left him, (before he concluded his discourse) conceiving the wisdom of prevention to be easier than that of remedy; but that which was most observable was, the vehemence of expression, and the emphasis he set upon divers words and phrases. So att the present this is as much as now comes to my memory; and I am very confident, that Mr. Feake hath receiv'd no injustice by the relation of,

April the 7th, 1658.

SIR,

Your humble servant.

Intelligence.

HONOURED SIR,

Amsterdam, the 18th Aprill, 1658. [N. S.]

I Did receive yours without cover; and you need not doubt of any letters coming to my Vol. lviii. hand, if my name stand on it, except some should take it up, which I seldom have P. 307. found. For the fleet, I have sent one to the Texell, to see in what posture they were; but these northern winds have kept them from going over the Flats; so that at present there are no more than the commander De Ruyter in the Great Genoesse, captain Brocks in the Little Genoesse, and Jeam. Tedious in ship Amks, and the commander De Weild in the Leopard, and captain Van Howen in the House of Sweeten. They have about 20 more, that be in the river, but cannot get out, till there be a fresh westerly wind. For what you have about the soldiers going to Flanders, I do believe nothing of it; for I have spoken with a good friend, that came lately out of the fleet, and then your soldiers were most on board ships riding at anchor in the fleet. This being all, I being ready to go a little out of town.

General Monck to secretary Thurloe.

HONOURABLE SIR,

IN pursuance of the instructions given by his highness to his councill heere, they have laboured to give and send upp an accompt concerning the state of the revenue of his highnes in this country, and how the same may be legally improved; which haveing now humbly offered to his highnes and councill, they have thought fitt to give you perticular intimation thereof; and to acquaint you, that least some things conteyned in those papers should seeme obscure, or bee scrupled above, they have appointed this bearer, Mr. William Purvis, clerke of his highnes exchequer heere, to carry upp those dispatches, and to attend those that shall have them under consideration there, to resolve any doubt, and cleere any thing that may seeme obscure in those papers, which hee is very well able to doe, haveing made it his busines to understand, and being thoroughly knoweing in the affaires of his highnes revenue heere. And they doubt not, but as hee hath already don good service in those affaires, soe hee is able and very willing to doe more, which hath induced the said councill to recomend him to your notice and countenance for his dispatch.

Edinburgh, the 8th of Aprill, 1658.

Signed in the name and by order of the councill,

GEORGE MONCK.

Mr. Samuel Disbrowe, one of the council of Scotland, to secretary Thurloe.

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

IN my last, I gave an accompt of an intention of the councill here, to offer some proposition to the consideration of his highness and councill, for the just improvement of the revenue belonging to the crowne of Scotland, a cotype of which I have (inclosed) presented you with. What is therein contained, I am assured is agreeable to the laws of this nation; and although, I beleve it would hav bin don mor speedily and effectually, had it bin by a comission to the judges of the exchequer, according as it was in all times preceeding 44; yet, considering that this way of tryall will be before the judge ordinary in all civill causes, and so without all exception, I do the rather chuse it: though it be the furthest way about, yet possibly it may prove the nearest way to attayne one end, viz. a legall repossessing of the crowne of its antient patrimony.

The

A.D. 1658. The bearer hereof, Mr. William Purveys, is able to answer any doubts may arise herein; as also to give you any information relating to the said renew, being much versed therein, and hath done us much service in many respects, which hath brought much odium upon him from his countrymen. If you shall please to spend an hour with him to discourse of any relating to this nation, either former or later, concerning persons or things, I believe it will not be time lost. I shall not inlarge, but to subscribe myselfe,

SIR,

Edinburgh, the 8th Aprill, (58). Your most ingaged faythfull humble servant,

SA. DISBROWE.

Secretary Thurloe to Lockhart, ambassador in France.

In the possession of Joseph Radcliffe, of the Inner Temple, esq;

I Have received yours of the 10th instant, [N.S.] and hoped to have sent an answer to it by Mr. Swyft, whom I intended to have dispatched before now; but the writing over the ratification proves a longer work than it seemed to be. However, I hope he may begin his journey upon monday, and by him I will trouble your excellency with my thoughts upon some parts of your letters, which are of consequence.

I shall observe your directions about sending the hay; it is shipping now, and will be soone at Mardyke, if the wind will give leave; but unless somebody be there, to whom it may be delivered, and who may have authority from the cardinal to give discharge, it will be a confused business and dilatory, which might easily be prevented. The ships are contracted with to attend 8 days for their unlading; and if they stay above that time, they are to have 3 l. a day each ship for demorage, which will be very chargeable. Effectual orders are also given for the recruits, and they will be there in time. Your excellency gives me some hopes in yours, that we shall have the honour and happiness to see you here very shortly; and therefore, I shall defer further discourse about many particulars to that time; and in the mean time I rest,

Whitehall, $\frac{8}{18}$. April, 1658.

Yours, &c.

I am sorry to find by yours of the $\frac{4}{14}$. received this day, that Hesdin is lost. Major general Morgan writt to me, 3 or 4 days since, that Mr. Fallon assured him, that business was compounded, and that it was delivered to the French.

An intercepted letter of Sir Robert Honeywood to Sir W. Vane.

Hague, 19th April, 1658. [N.S.]

Vol. lviii.
p. 313.

SINCE my last of this day 8 days there is not any thing of importance, save that, as it is reported by some, that Hesdin is not yet Spanish; so others produce authority to the contrary. Monsieur Somersdyke hath letters, that the Spaniards offered 100000 crowns; and the cardinal was agreed with the lieutenant du roy for 500000 livres; and thereupon the Spaniards in the counterescarp and suburbs were sent away. Letters 2 days old from Brussels say the positive contrary. The last from France tell us, that the cardinal and Lockhart were agreed for this campaign; and that England was to furnish 10000 foot. Whether Ormond hath been in England or no, I cannot rightly inform myself. There are circumstances may persuade me to believe it, tho' his party deny it sincerely. The jealousy raised on Falconberg is of a strange nature, if true. The princess royal, and the French ambassador, have a great demeslee, for she having admitted the Spanish to a visit in the interim, that he had asked audience, and was appointed at 6 at night; the Spanish coming without asking, and because the French would have her make an excuse, she saith, she hath done no fault; and so he came not at this time, and forbears to see her. There is a report, that the ships of this place are to transport 4000 Spaniards round about Scotland, either to Goeree or Flushing, to be sent thence in smaller boats for Sluce, and so into the Spanish territory, which I am told the resident of the protector hath complained of this day.

A letter

A letter of intelligence from the Hague.

MONSIEUR,

A.D. 1658.

Vol. lviii.
p. 309.

IL pourra bien, que la prochaine fois je seray absent. A la princesse royale revenue de Breda l'ambassadeur de France fit aussy-tost demander l'heure pour la voir, laquelle elle luy donna ou assigna pour les six heures du soir. L'ambassadeur de Spagne, (sans doute ayant sceu cela) pour le prevenir, alla incontinent apres diner, sans demander audience, et sans ceremonie, voir la dite princesse royale : celui de France oyant cela, n'a pas voulu venir la voir, fasché, que la princesse l'a admis devant luy ; et desire, que pour satisfaction elle declare, qu' elle tient cette visite de l' Espagnol pour nulle ou pour une non-visite. La princesse royale recuse cela ; et dit, qu'à elle il faut satisfaction, d' autant que l' ambassadeur de France n'a pas gardé l'heure, et l'a ludifié. L' ambassadeur de Spagne a fait le meme chose auparavant chez la princesse douariere, qui pour son indisposition avoit fait excuse d'une visite, que l' ambassadeur de France demandoit ; & neantmoins

l' ambassadeur de Spagne en meme temps la vint voir sans demander. Le 124 en effect a des certains façons et maximes asses particulieres ; car il flatte ou craint merueilleusement les estats d' Hollande ;

105 ; et par ce moyen il affoiblit soymeme ou 104, et ce qui en depend, et se fait mes-priser la ; ou au contraire le 125 de 30 se comporte avec une grande equanimité, sans flatter et sans offenser les 105, mais en leur disant avec une genereuse candeur et sincere affection la verité, et comme il convient entre amis ; et par ce moyen je sçay de bonne part, que ledit 125 de 130 est estimé et veneré, et que 130 est dans 105 plus redoute que jamais. Mais de 140 aussy bien que de son 124 ils se mocquent, et les mesprisent, et à mesure qu'il veut faire ces puntualities contre ceux de 139, on le hait. Aussy l'est ridicule, qu'il veut estre si punctuel et ceremonieux environs les dames, veu qu'il va voir presque tous les jours les filles d'un mercier, qui luy chantent et jouent des instrumens ;

aussy il ne se tient pas si magnifique en train et livrée, comme celuy de 139. Quant à 134 de 124 pour encore ce n'est pas grande chose, et tout ce qui pourra estre prest, fera pour la mer Mediterranée, et ces endroits purement defensif. 108 vint de consentir au subside 600000 l. au lieu du million ; et avec cette clause, que la flotte ne servira pas contre le Portugall, ny ne fera sur le Doggerflant, comme l' année passé, quand 12 navires furent mis sur le Doggerflant comme pour avoir l' œil sur le Sont. Le dessein de 141 n'est que pour obliger 166 à embrasser la neutralité : et elle voudroit l' avoir fait il y a long temps : et au reste 105 ont un tres grand ombrage, que 130, 141, 142 feront une ligue de 179 à l'exclusion de 105, quoy qu'ils sçavent bien, que 130 leur aye promis, qu'il ne stipulera nul avantage de commerce pour soy ; mais ils croient, que tout le monde est comme eux, se mocquants de leur parole. Je suis,

MONSIEUR,

Decem. 19. Avril, 1658. [N. S.]

Vostre tres humble serviteur.

*To the lord ambassador Nicuport.*Westminster, 19th April, 1658. [N. S.]

ON saturday last Sir William Compton, brother of the earl of Northampton, was sent to the Tower. It is said, that several persons, which were engaged in the last design, and thereupon apprehended and examined, to save and free themselves have accused and discovered several others ; and that thereupon several great persons of quality are yet to be apprehended.

They write from Mardike, that upon the 10th instant, in the night, monsieur Schomberg, governor of Bourbourgh, with 100 foot soldiers, and strengthened with 50 horse and 400 foot by major-general Morgan from Mardike, fell upon two Spanish redoubts, which

A.D. 1658. the Spaniard had made, about Gravelin, and made themselves masters of them, which they afterwards slighted, and brought away those prisoners, that they took in them. The said letters also advise, that the Spaniards are building a fort-royal between Bergen St. Wynox and Dunkirk. The lord protector hath earnestly recommended to all the inhabitants of this nation a collection for the benefit of the exil'd protestants churches out of Poland, and of 20 protestant families driven from the border of Bohemia. Two days since Mr. Nathan Wyeh being ordered to go president at Suratt for the East-india company here, went from hence for the Downs, where he is to embarke himself, there lying 3 ships of the said company sail-ready, only waiting for a wind.

Secretary Thurloc to Mr. Downing, the English resident in Holland.

I pray uncypher this yourself.

SIR,

In the possession of the right hon. Philip lord Hardwicke, lord high chancellor of Great-Britain.

I See by yours of the $\frac{1}{2}$. of April, received this post, that the Dutch are angrie about Portugall prizes; as alsoe, what answere they give to your demaunds of justice upon Van-diest and Thyssen; and that they doe in every thinge carrye themselves, as if they sought an occasion of quarrell. As for the prizes, I am sure we have done nothinge yet in that bussines, either against the treaty, or the lawes of nations. The ships were arrested by our owne people, and the question was, wheither the justice of their demaund should be tryed in the admiraltie court here, or in that of Holland; and our lawyers say, unquestionably here, and offer to defend it; and this is the bottom of this controversy, and there is noe more in it. Their helpinge the Spanyard, as they doe upon all occasions, is of greater consequence by farre; and the answeres they give are worse than the things, which shewes, that they will neither doe right in what is past, nor give hope of redresse for the future. And truly, I hope that their great fleets shall not either make us satisfied with what they doe injuriously towards us, nor extort from us what is unreasonable. They shall, by the next, have the positive answere of his highnesse to the Portugall prizes, which will be just and friendly; and then let them take what measures they please.

Major-general Jephson hath orders in his returne to goe to Berlyn, upon the points you mention; and this day instructions goes by an expresse to Mr. Meadows to repaire to Bromeburgh; and I desire you to informe yourselfe, how that treaty proceedes, which you will have opportunity to doe from the Polish agent at the Hague, who, I perceive, hath visited you; and it's good to mainteyne a faire correspondence with hym. Mr. Meadows hath a letter credentiall to the kinge, and orders to offer his highnesse mediation to him betweene him and Sweden. And some doubt hath beene made here, wheither the kinge of Poland may not put some affront upon Meadows, there haveinge past severall letters betweene him and Charles Stewart, by the name of kinge of Great-Brittaine. It would be well to feele the resident about it; as alsoe, wheither it be likelie, that the mediation will be accepted. There is a very good correspondence betweene France and Poland, and the French ambassador may be of use to you therein; and, as you can understand any thinge certayne, I desire you to communicate it, not only to me, but to Mr. Meadows, who, I suppose, is now or will shortly be at Hamborough.

The enclosed letter came by chance to my hand. It was intended for Hide at Brussells. It's probable he, that writes it, may be heard of at the Hague; and that you may finde meanes to understand more of it, and what isle it is he makes mention of. And you may alsoe possiblye learne many other thinges from hym, he beinge one, it seemes, that they correspond with, and his sonne one of their agents here.

I desire you againe to trye the layinge a good correspondence in Flanders. I would give some 1000 l. soe that it were neare and intimate.

I pray informe yourselfe what strength de Ruyter's ships are of, wheither they are bound, and when the rest of their fleet will be ready, and what their number and strength will certainly be. They say 48 sayle will be all, and that they will be divided into 3 squadrons, one for the Mediterranean, one for the coast of Portugall, and another for the channell. I wonder that none should be designed for the Baltique sea. It is good to cherish a good understandinge with Zealand; and for their sakes all shall be done, which is possible in your bussines of the prizes.

I pray be a little curious, to knowe what the fleet bound for Spayne carries, both the merchant-men and their convoy.

I know not what to say to you about Neiuport's present. You must doe therein, as you finde it necessary upon the place. It is best to give it him, if he will receive it.

I heare nothinge yet of the lord Opdam's trumpeter, nor of the letter you gave hym to bringe to me.

I doe

I doe beleeeve our enemyes in Flanders did designe upon Yarmouth; but I thinke they A.D. 1658. are under some discouragement for the present, and by agreement together have put of their attempt untill September, and soe they have their insurrection here; but however their partye here, those of them that are considerable, shall be all secured, and it is now under consideration what shall be done with that whole partye; for we must not alwayes be at this pass with them. It hath pleased God to give us great light into their affaires and designs, both as to persons and thinges. One doctor Hewett, a great man for them, and one that influenced very much the royall party in the citty by his preachinge at St. Gregorye's, was yesterday sent to the Tower, and the evidence against him is most cleare.

I doe not yet heare of your ladye's goeing. When shee desires, shee shall not want a ship, nor ought else, that I can furnish her with for her accomodation. I rest Whitehall, 9th Aprill, 1658.

Your most affectionate friend,

and faithfull servant,

JO. THURLOE.

Secretary Thurloe to major-general Jephson.

SIR,

I Shall be very shortt by this, because I intend to send an expresse to Hamborough, by Vol. lviii.
the convoy of the cloth-ships, which only staves for a wynde, and by him I shall be P. 315.
more large and particuler; only I shall add this to what I sayd about your goinge to the elector of Brandenburg, that it is of absolute necessity you goe with what speed it is possible, and in particular to deale with him about the election of the emperor, giving him those reasons, which are very obvious, how dangerous it will be for the protestant interest, for him to give his voice for the kinge of Hungary, and to endeavour to bringe him of from any resolutions of that kinde.

The enemye, by our fleet's lyinge upon the coast of Flanders, is much discouraged in their intended invasion, and by consequence their friends here, in their insurrections, and are now changinge their counsells, as to another tyme. I hope wee shall be able to doe somthinge in the meane time, which may be significant towards the preventinge thereof.
Wee have noe newes at all. I rest

Whitehall, 9. Apr. 1658.

Your most humble and faithfull servant.

I have received yours of the 30th of March.

Instructions to Philip Meadows, our envoy extraordinary to his majesty of Sweden.

WE having had experience of your fidelity and sufficiency, as in other affairs, so in the Vol. lviii.
late mediation between Sweden and Denmark; being willing further to manifest the P. 385.
trust which we repose in you, and having recalled you from your late employment so happily concluded, and directed you to come to Hamburg, where you might attend further pleasure, and the necessary dispatches, have resolved to send you to the king of Sweden, and from thence to the intended treaty at Braunsberg.

1. You are therefore, upon the receipt of these, with your best opportunity, to repair to the king of Sweden, to reside with him in the quality of envoy extraordinary, major-general Jephson being remanded.

2. And being arrived with him, you are to deliver your credentials, and perform the usual offers of civility and nearest correspondence from us, upon the same foundations, and in the same foot-steps, which have been gone upon hitherto; and so from thenceforth to act in your trust, according to the orders, which you shall from time to time receive from hence, and conformably to the emergencies in those parts.

3. And forasmuch as we understand, that there is a treaty of peace between Sweden and Poland, to be held at Braunsberg in Prussia, and moreover, that the French and states general are received, or probably to be so, for mediators therein; you are therefore timely to inform yourself concerning it.

4. And

A.D. 1658. 4. And in case that treaty hold, you are then to deliver the other letter to the king of Sweden, which concerns that peace, and not otherwise; and to communicate with him in confidence thereupon, letting him know, that as well his affairs, as those which relate to the common interest of the protestants, moved us thereunto; and that your instructions are to square yourself in this negotiation, according to his advice.

5. Besides these considerations, which we lay much to heart, the interest of commerce and navigation, in reference to this state, would in no case suffer us to let pass so notable a meeting without some of our public ministers there; and we can never interpose therein with greater dignity than in the way of mediation.

6. And to the said purpose you are to let the king of Sweden know also that we will in this mediation manifest ourself a firm, and true, and faithful ally to him. And as to his retaining of Prussia, you are very well to understand the mind of the king of Sweden; and in case you find him fixed thereupon, you shall then endeavour in the treaty, (yet with that circumspection and prudence, that becomes a mediator) that Prussia may be quitted to him by the king of Poland; and to that purpose to endeavour, with all befitting warmth, to incline the ministers of the states general thereunto, who are most likely to oppose it upon the interest of trade, to satisfy them, you may procure such assurance from the king of Sweden in that of trade, in reference to him and that state, as may remove that difficulty.

7. Having obtained the king of Sweden's answer and acceptance of this mediation, you are thence to repair to the king of Poland, proffering the same office to him.

8. But in case you understand, before you come to him, that they will punctiliate with you, denying those respects, which have been formerly rendered to this nation in their ministers, or that you find it so upon the place, you are then to forbear, unless they yield and accommodate themselves.

9. And in case the said mediation be accepted by both the said kings, you are then to repair to Braunsburgh, or any other place, where that treaty shall be; and use your endeavours to accommodate and bring to effect the treaty upon the grounds laid down in these instructions.

10. But in case the king of Poland should not accept our mediation, you are then to advise upon the place, how to behave yourself, whether to be upon the place or not; however, you are to give all the countenance you can to the affairs of Sweden, and to the cementing him with the Protestant interest; and to take care, that nothing be negotiated between the said two kings to the prejudice and disadvantage of this state, either in honour, trade or commerce, but that on the contrary they be provided for.

11. To the marquis of Brandenburg you are next to address yourself, either in person, or by his ministers, as your business, time, or the place will bear it; and to offer to him all good offices for his interest in this treaty; and you shall use your best endeavours above all things, to reunite the king of Sweden and the elector of Brandenburg.

12. To the prince of Transylvania, whose ministers will doubtless be there, you are to send our letter, and correspond with his ministers, and with whomsoever else, for his establishment and security.

13. If there be any from the duke of Muscovia, you are to take your measures from the king of Sweden.

14. With the French ministers, and those of the states general, to hold up all good intelligence and correspondence.

15. With those of Dantzick, to move according to the greater interest.

16. And as to the matter of commerce, you are not to be wanting there, to inform yourself therein; and to provide for the same, and the interest of the state therein, as far as you shall have opportunity.

17. One thing you are both with the king of Sweden, if it were needful, and with the king of Poland, to insist especially upon, that is, upon the exclusion of the house of Austria wholly out of this treaty; and joining yourself with those, which are of the same sense in that particular, to make your party as strong as may be, using therein such mediums as are most proper, and least observable, unless you find a public owning thereof to be necessary and most effectual.

18. Concerning all the proceedings of your negotiation herein, and all other occurrences of state incident into your observation, you are to give, from time to time, the most exact account to ourself, or our principal secretary of state, from whom you shall receive our further pleasure.

9th April, 1658.

Mr.

Mr. Downing, resident in Holland, to secretary Thurloe.

A.D. 1568.

SIR,

I Received yours of the 9th instant old stile, I suppose, with the inclosed intelligence concerning the Spanish soldiers bound for Flanders their being at sea. Yesterday the French ambassador gave in a memorial of the States General, giving them notice, that he had advice from Paris, that the king of Spain had raised levies in Galicia to send for Flanders, and that they intended to land in some part of the United Provinces; and to the same purpose I gave in a memorial this day. We do verily believe, that their intention is to land in some part of the United Provinces, and without asking leave I thought fit to give notice of that: accordingly you may, so far as in you lies, dispose to meet them; and I think 4 or 3 frigates at this time upon this coast may do very well to wait for them, and for preventing of picharoons, which here this week brought in 3 more English vessels into the Brill laden with coals; and if there were a couple of ketches, the one to lye before the Brill, and the other before the Maeze, it would break this trade; for they would fetch them or their prizes; or if they do bring in any, a couple of the said ketches men might be put on board any such prizes to see they unload them not, and that will make them weary of this trade, if they could not unload, nor yet carry out their prizes. I have here inclosed to you an answer in what forwardness the fleet is at Amsterdam, and Rotterdam, and Zealand; their men of warre are in like forwardness.

I am, SIR,

Your very ready faithful servant,

Hague, April 20. 1658. [N. S.]

G. DOWNING.

Captain H. Smith to the protector.

May it please your HIGHNES,

I Have received your highnes letter of the 6th instant, and will persue your highnes instructions therein. I am in some hopes, I may yet discover somethinge more of that business, but I feare I shall not lay hold of Gardner. I cannot heare hee is in these parts: He was lately in Flanders as I am informed; if he comes into this country, I doe thinke I shall bee sure of him. Captain Overton being very lame, and not able to goe abroad, he lately sent mee this inclosed paper, which I have, according to my duty, taken the boldnes to present to your highnes. Mr. Stapleton was here about the beginning of this moneth with his unckle Sir Henry Slingsby. He told mee his business was about settling of some estate upon Sir Hen.'s eldest sonn, who is in election to bee marryed ere long. I am sorry any pretending to religion and to good men should give your highnes most malicious enemys such cause of rejoycing, as I perceave the words mentioned in the inclosed paper hath done. I shall not give your highnes any further trouble at present, but to subscribe my self

Your HIGHNES most humble servant

Hull. April 10. 58.

HEN. SMITH.

The information of John Stapeley, of Patcham, in the county of Suffex, Esq; taken upon oath the 10th day of April 1658, before William lord Goffe, and Henry Scobell Esq; justices of the peace for the city and liberty of Westminster.

THIS informant saith, that he hath been acquainted with Dr. Hewett, who usually preacheth at Gregory's near Pauls, about three years, and became acquainted with him at the lady Campion's, his grandmother; and that about a year since Dr. Hewett took occasion to tell this informant, that he wished him very well, and believed him to be a person, whom he might trust and communicate to what was in design; and hereupon told him, that there was a design to bring the King (meaning Charles Stuart into England) he being the right heir of this crown, or words to that effect; and that many persons both in the se-

A.D. 1568. veral counties and in the city were engaged therein; and thereupon asked this informant, whether he were inclined to engage also in the design, insinuating, that if he did not, he was a lost man, this informant's father having been on the other side, and had sat as a judge upon the late king's death; to which this informant answered not much, but made a difficulty to meddle in a matter of so great consequence: and saith, that his discourse was at the lodging of the said Dr. Hewett near Paul's; upon occasion, of a visit, which this informant made him; and saith it was when the parliament was sitting, before the debate of kingship was on foot. And this informant further saith, that there was several meetings between the said Hewett and this examinee, which were usually at his the said Hewett's lodgings, where they had further discourse about this business; and the said Hewett opened to him more particularly the said design, acquainting him that the king himself, meaning Charles Stuart, would come from Flanders with men and arms; and that an insurrection would be at the same time here, being many engaged in several counties, and in particular that many in the county of Suffex, where this informant lived, were engaged, and did persuade this informant to take a commission from Charles Stuart to raise that county; and thereupon some discourse there was about the nature of the commission, what it would be, and in what quality this informant should serve; whereupon the said Hewett replied, that he could procure any commission that should be desired from Charles Stuart, but said he did usually give no commission but for single regiments, to avoid competition and divisions amongst gentlemen, who were willing to serve him, and that he would have no general but himself. Then this informant, before he declared himself about the acceptance of a commission, desired to know from him, what persons were in particular engaged in this design, either in the country or in the city, and by what authority he the said Hewett did negotiate in these affairs; whereupon he said, that for his authority there was a committee of several persons in the city, who did by order of Charles Stuart manage the whole affair, and send messengers and agents to and fro between Flanders and England, two whereof he said were Sir Humphrey Bennet and himself, but refused to tell the names of any of the rest, being obliged (as he said) to the contrary; and said it was not material for this informant to know it. And as to the persons engaged, he made great difficulty therein also, but said that he knew for certain, that major general Browne was to command for Charles Stuart in the city, and that he would have with him about 8000 men, and that there were 1000 horse in the hands of private persons, which were all ready and would appear at a night's warning, and that there was a bank of money in the city for the managing of this business; and said there were very many considerable persons in the city, that would appear, but always said it would be of no use to this informant to discover their names to him; only he, this informant, hath heard the said Hewett speak of alderman Adams as a very honest man. And as to the manner of managing their business in the city, he would discourse, that the protector's forces would be necessitated to draw away, when the foreigners arms were landed in the several counties, and then the city would shut up their gates and rise to arms. And as to those persons, who were engaged in his design, in the several counties, he put off that as a thing not properly belonging to him, his peculiar business lying in the city, and his part was to be plaid there; but said they had good assurance of the lord Fairfax, lord Lambert, and sir William Walker; as also of sir Francis Vincent and Adam Browne for Surry; and as for Suffex, he said that sir Humphrey Bennet knew all the business of Suffex, and who they were who were engaged in that business; and said that he kept correspondence with major Smith, colonel Bishop, and colonel Gunter of Suffex, by whom this informant might know from time to time all matters which related to that county, and especially colonel Bishop and Gunter, who have managed all the affairs of Charles Stuart for that county ever since Worcester fight. And Major Smith told this informant, that Gunter did lodge Charles Stuart in his flight from Worcester one night, and conveyed him away from Brixthamsted. And this informant further saith, that this, which is before said, is the effect of several discourses, which were between the said Dr. Hewett and this informant, in most of which the said Hewett pressed this informant to take a commission from Charles Stuart, telling him, he had particular directions from Charles Stuart to offer him a Commission; and saith, that at last he agreed to take a commission, which was delivered to him by the said Dr. Hewett at Grinstead in Suffex, where this informant and the said Dr. Hewett met upon the desire of the said Hewett, signified to him in a letter, which as he remembers was about Michaelmas last, and the said commission was signed with the name Charles R. and sealed with the seal, with which the kings of England used to seal, which is called the privy seal, as he believes; and was for this informant's raising of a regiment of 500 horse in his the said Charles Stuart's Service; and that at the same time he the said Dr. Hewett delivered to this informant three other blank commissions signed and sealed, as aforesaid. One of them was for a regiment of horse, another for a regiment of foot, and the other for the commanding of a garrison; but the garrison was left blank also, and left it to this informant to dispose of those commissions as he himself thought fit; and saith, that these commissions were delivered to supply the want of a commission, for a general officer, the intent being that this

this informant should command in chief in Suffex, and to that purpose this commission A.D. 1658. was of the eldest date; and so by consequence the other colonels, who were to have the other commissions, were to be under his command; but this informant saith, that he was very unwilling to meddle with the said other commissions, alledging that he knew not on whom to be bestow them; but the said Dr. Hewett pressed him thereunto, desiring him to give them to whom he should think fit for his master's service, or words to that effect. And being asked, whether they had any discourse about persons, who might be fit for those charges, saith, that he doth remember the said Dr. Hewett spake of colonel Gunter as a very fit man, and one that was true to his master, meaning Charles Steuart; colonel Bishop, and major Smith were also named; and he doth not remember any other. And being further asked, what garrison they thought upon to be taken and kept, he saith, there was a discourse of Chichester and Arundell, and chiefly of Chichester; that if it could be surprized, the person might have that commission, who could be thought fit to keep it; and he this informant further saith, that he hath not disposed of any of the said commissions, but hath them all by him, for which the said Dr. Hewett seemed much displeased at him. Sometimes, when they have met together this informant further saith, that he doth well remember, that before the meeting of Grinstead, the said Dr. Hewett (they being together at the lodging of the said Dr.) shewed to him a letter signed Charles R. or C. R. which was written to the said Dr. Hewett by Charles Stuart, whom he called the king, (as he said) which letter the said Dr. Hewett read to him; and was to this effect: That he desired his friends to be mindful of his business, hoping himself to be with them in some convenient time, and wished him to assure them, that he would not forget the zeal they had for his service, and affections they should manifest to him, or words to that effect; and that the said Hewett told him, that he had received several other messages by word of mouth from him he called the king, by trusty messengers, who were employ'd between England and Flanders, who brought nothing in writing for fear of miscarriage. And this informant further saith, that he hath had several discourses with the said major Smith, to whom he was directed as aforesaid by Hewett, to be further informed about the persons who were engaged in Suffex, and what he and Gunter had done for the interest of Charles Stuart in those parts; and told the said Smith, that he had received a commission for a regiment of horse for the service of Charles Stuart, and intended him for one of his officers, and asked him, what men he had prepared and engaged to join with him? who assured him, that there were several men, both gentlemen and others, who were already engaged; that he for his part was sure of forty or fifty men, who would follow him; that Mr. Colt would bring in a very considerable number; so would Mr. Hutchinson and Mr. Lewkenor. Mr. Garrët Kempe, Mr. Caryll, Mr. May, Mr. Woodcock, Colonel Bishop, young Mr. Paine of Petworth; and that Binsted the inn-keeper who was an active man; all which he said colonel Gunter had spoke with, and had assurance of, and said, that if this judgment would rise, many would rise with him, who would not follow the king's party. These were in the West; and that also Dr. Burton was engaged and assisted much in council. There were others in the east, as Denny, Ashburnham, Mr. Wilson of Bourne, and Mr. Alexander Farmer, who (Smith said) were all engaged; and also colonel Apsey. But this informant saith, that he spake himself with none of these but Mr. Woodcock, who was to have been one of this informant's officers, and with one Henry Mallory, who was to be another of his officers, and also with Mr. Hutchinson. He saith also, that Mr. Smith told him, that he believed, that Foster and Gildridge were at the command of Wilson in his business; but that he had not spoke with them, nor had he, as he said, either spoke with Mr. Goring of Highdowne but believed him to be an honest man: Nor doth he know the mind of sir Henry Goring, of Burton; but in case he be engaged, he believes it is done by colonel Bishop. Mr. Hutchinson undertook also to have colonel Herbert Morley tried what he would do, because he appeared to be much discontented: And this informant further saith, that there was an intention to surprize Chichester; and this business was to be done by colonel Gunter. Mr. Ray, and major Smith (the relation whereof he had from Smith) and the way was, for Gunter and May to have procured some men in town, who should have seized the soldiers and their horses in the inns, and also to have surprized the gate, if there had not been too many of the soldiers present upon the guards; and if they had carried it, they would have gathered their friends together unto that place, and formed a strength fit to have marched with. And this informant being asked, what further preparations were made for their insurrection in Suffex, he said, that Smith told him, he had been many times with sir Humphry Bennet about those affairs, and had also spoke with colonel Gunter, who had also conferred with sir Humphry Bennet; and that it was thought most adviseable for them to rendezvous upon Beeding-hill, about the middle of Suffex; and that if there were but 200 horse appeared, they would ride up and down to gather their friends together; and if they were not surprized at first, they did not doubt but to double their number presently; and that those, who would not rise with them, they would seize upon, and secure; and that

Smith

A.D. 1658. Smith and Mr. Covet would take care to secure captain Freeman; and as for armies Smith said, that they in the East should be put to it to arm themselves, but that he knew the gentlemen in the West of Suffex had arms for themselves and their servants. And as to the time of their insurrection, no certain time was prefix'd; but sir Humphry Bennet bid Smith to acquaint all the gentlemen, that they should get themselves in readiness; and that Charles Stuart would be sure to give them a fortnight's warning before he came; but that they were not to stir till London begun. This informant likewise saith, that he spake with Mr. Hutchinson about a month since at Cuckfield, where Hutchinson lives; who coming to this informant at his lodgings at Mr. Henley's, began to spake to him of the intended insurrection; and told him, that major Smith and he had often spoke about this informant; whereupon this informant asking him, what he knew of that business, he said he was engaged therein, and had received a commission from the king, meaning Charles Stuart; and that he doubted not, but to bring in 20 or 30 horse, and said he spake with Mr. Covet, and colonel Bishop, and they were engaged, and believed the same of Wilton, and Ashburnham, and Farmer. And being asked what correspondence they in Suffex had with other counties, he saith, he doth not know of any, save that Smith told him, that he heard that Mr. Cotton, of Hampshire, and Mr. Hooke of Brunshot, of the same county, were also engaged in this insurrection, but knew not the certainty thereof. And this informant further saith, that he being in London many times this winter, he hath had often discourse with Dr. Hewett about Charles Stuart's coming over; and that Dr. Hewett did assure him, that he would certainly come with between 7 and 8000 men, which he said were ready upon the sea-coast, and were to be commanded by Marcine, or some such name; and with them they would bring good store of arms for arming their friends here, and 12000 pallisado's to fortify the place they should land upon, which he said was to be Yarmouth; and there were 20 ships and upwards, which were ready to take the men on board; some whereof were ships of store, and others of burthen. That the time of their coming was not certain; but that there should be a fortnight's warning. He also saith, that the said Hewett acquainted him, that the marquis of Ormond had been here in London, and his business was to treat with several parties about the king's coming over; and in particular, to satisfy them in matters of religion: and that although the government of the church should be episcopacy, as it had been exercised in England, that yet others as presbyterians, &c. should be tolerated; and that to this purpose Ormond had spoke with some of all sorts. And he further saith, that Hewett told him, that sir William Waller would appear in Kent in this action, as also the lord Winchester, whom he hears is since gone beyond-sea: and that which makes this informant believe that sir William is engaged in this account is, for that Mr. John Mordaunt, son of the countess of Peterborough, did about Christmas was twelve-month, in some discourse they had at the lodging of this informant, at Foster's in Fleet-street, or at the said countess's house, ask him, whether he, this informant, did not hear of an insurrection intended to be through this nation, on the behalf of Charles Stuart, whom he called the king; to which this informant answered, he did not. Then (said he, the said Mr. Mordaunt) hoping you will do me no prejudice, being my friend, I will tell you, that there is a design to bring in the said king; and would know of this informant, whether he would engage in that design yea or not; to which he answered, that he would not; and asked the said Mordaunt whether he were engaged therein, who answering he was not, being no man of the sword, nor had a body for it, or words to that effect; whereto this examinant reply'd, why then would you engage me? Who said, he had spoke with sir William Waller therein, and that he had wished him to come to this informant about it, saying that they did nothing, if they did not engage that gentleman, meaning the informant for Suffex; who was, as he said, a moderate man; and many would rise with him, who would not follow the cavaliers. The said Mordaunt told this examinee at the same time, that sir Francis Vincent, and Mr. Adam Browne, were engaged in the same business; and this informant speaking with the said Mordaunt some time since of the said matters, and inquiring of him, what became of the rising he spake of formerly, the said Mordaunt told him the same things he had spoken before, but did not acquaint him with any further particulars.

And being asked, what he knoweth further of those matters, this informant saith, that about a month since there came to him here in London one Barham, directed to him by Smith and Gunter; who, with colonel Bishop had sent him into Flanders to Charles Stewart; and that he had come from thence about a month before, and now come the informant to give him an account, how things stood there; which he said was to this purpose, that Charles Stuart was in a good condition; and was preparing to come over into England; and gave him the same account, or much to that purpose of his strength, which Dr. Hewett had given before; and said that the just time of his coming was fixed, but all his friends should have a fortnight's warning; and this informant saith, that the said

Barham

Barham is a Western man, which made the informant ask him of the state of affairs there; A.D. 1658. to which the said Barham answered, that there were parties there also; but was not willing to tell this informant the names of any persons. And this informant further saith, that the said Dr. Hewett told this informant, that they had great hopes, that Windsor castle would be delivered to them, or words to that effect.

J. STAPLEY.

Taken and acknowledged before us.

WILL. GOFFE.

HEN. SCOBET.

Lockhart, ambassador in France, to secretary Thurloe.

May it please your LORDSHIPP,

THE last post brought me two from your lordshipp, and one from Mr. Marvell, Vol. lviii. with a letter inclosed to his eminency, which I delivered upon friday last. I had, P. 325. before my receipt of his highnes letter to his eminency, obtained all satisfaction to the officers, who had been absent in England this winter; which I signified to them by adjutant general Willoby, whom I dispatched to Calais on monday last, with a pacquett to your lordshipp, which I hope come safe to your hands. Your lordshipp's letter relating to Cesi's businesse, commanded me to observe an order that was inclosed in it, which neither was fined by his highnes, nor your lordshipp. I have given to Mr. Bourdier, the procureur of the interresses, the copy of such an order as will be requisitt in that buisness. So scone as that is returned to me signed, the money shall be paid upon sight; at least, so much of it as is received, which is 20000 crowns lying in Mr. Wildegoe's hands. Your lordship's writ by your owne hand takes notice, that Mr. Swift was not then dispatched with the ratification. If he arryve not heare with it before I leave this place, which I doe uppon tuesday morning next, I shall leave him an order for the delivery of it, and will receive theirs upon my promise to cownt Brienne, that yours shall be delivered to him by Mr. Swift. I cannot conjecture what ma. gen. Morgan hath sayd concerning Hesden; it seems by your lordshipp's, that you looke upon that businesse to be soe over as it will no more prove a hinderance to any other designe the French may have; the contraire is so well knowne heare, as it is not doubted but it will prove a very sharpe thorn in the fyds of France. The cardinal continues firme in his resolutions touching 497. If the lord vowchafe his blessing upon endeavors, I hope to see a good end put to that businesse. Affairs at Franckfor goe on not so well as they did, though there is yet good hopes; and there is still no small propension to that treaty of peace, which the electors offer to mediate for. The king of Sweden hath, since his treaty with the Dane, earnestly pressed France to a vigorous prosecution of their quarrell with the house of Austria. Though his minister here, who is a catholick, hath not given me a visit this winter; yet I am not made so great a stranger to his negociations, as perhaps he imagines; and with regrait I see, that his master's propositions, which are very generous and worthy of himself, meet with a colder reception then I could wish. I endeavor to do him all the good offices I can; but I find there is a jealousy, that if at this tyme any extraordinary assistance should be given him from hence, the fiercenesse of his naturall inclinations to warr is such, that their is no hopes to manage him so as to secure his consent to a peace upon reasonable terms. I shall entertaine your lordshipp more fully of this when I come to Callais, either by waiting upon you, or wryting to you. The Spaniard doe still presse the Hollanders for passage to their forces, which are now in a considerable number at St. Sebastiane; they endeavour to brybe their consent by offering them theise two advantages; in one of which Spaine will finds its count more then Holland, tho' certainly Holland will have great advantage by it. The first is, Holland hath a trade in the Indies (which I doe not fully understand, but some of our English merchants can give your lordshipp certaine information concerning it) for the carying on of which trade, they are necessitate to cary to the vallew of 3 or 4 millions in species; which summe the Spanyards offer to pay upon the place for bills upon Amsterdam, payable 8 months after their receipt of it, without any consideration of the interest of the money during the time of its advantage: the second is, they offer to the Hollanders free libertye to transporte from Punta St. Araya, what proportion of salt they think fit; the salt is their naturally, and so much better then that of Rochelle, by how much the influence of the sunne is stronger their, then at the aforesaid Rochell. This last cession is offered with a proviso, that it shall last no longer then the warre continues betwixt England and Spayne. If the Hollanders cannot be hook'd by either of the two

Dunkirk

A.D. 1658. aforefaid baits, then they resolve to venture the landing of their forces (now at St. Sebastiane) in Flanders upon all hazards, it being better for them to loose them in such an attempt, than to maintaine them idle at St. Sebastiane; and theirfore it will be fitt to renew your instructions to your commanders at sea, to observe the coast of Flanders with a watchfull eye. His eminency returns his humble thanks to his highnes for his condescensione to lend him the company of some of his frigates in the Mediteranian; he beggs that 5 or 6 of his highnes's frigats be at or near Toullon by the 1 of June, the tyme he intreats their company is 6 weeks; all the pryfes they take shall be their owne; and their admirall shall carry his highnes's flag on his maine topp. If they come to fight with the Spanyard, he shall choose either the right or left wing; and at their meeting with the French fleet, the French admirall shall salute him, first with his cannon, as an allie that cometh to his assistance, and shall so live with him, as there shall be no cause of quarrell; only its desyered that for the rout they are to faile, and in all things that concerne remooving from one place to another, that the commander of your Squadron follow the opinion of the French generall, who is the duke Mercure, his eminency's nephew; or the French admirall, in case of the foresaid duke's absence or sicknesse. I send your lordshipp with this his eminency's answer to his highnes demands concerning Mr. de Bourdeaux. I have all the faire promises that can be given, that Mr. de Bourdeaux shall have the president de mortier's place, (but I dare not engage for their performance,) when the first president's shall be disposed of, which will not be till the returne of the court from this campagne; the interest being at present to keep a great many persons quyet, in hopes they may be preferred to it. I got his eminency to send for old Mr. de Bourdeaux yesterday morning, and to speak very oblydgingly to him. There is great brigues heare for the ambaffader of England: the persons of the greatest interest under the cardinall are ingadged in them; I have been spoke too in it by some of them indirectly, and by others directly; but I hope I shall be able to prevent all their designs. It will not be fitt, that Mr. de Bourdeaux know any thing of this last. The cardinal desyers, that the two great mortar-pieces, which were at Mardick road last year, and were brought from Scotland, may be sent over againe with their granads, and all things futable; and able men that are best knowen in the way of managing of them, they will so much contribute to the successe of businesse, as it will be his highnes interest to send them, and 3 or 4 more if they can be spared. I hope your lordshipp will be mindfull of giving order, that a frigatt be at Calais for the transporting of my wyfe; and I humbly pray, that I may find there your lordshipp's orders to me, which shall be punctually obeyed by

Your most humble, faithfull,

and obedient servant,

Paris, Apryl $\frac{11}{21}$ 1658.

WILL. LOCKHART.

I shall not faile to serve the minister (whom your lordshipp did me the honor to recommend to me) with all possible zeale. Mr. St. Johns parted from me this last weeke by my advice: his stay here would have beene unsafe after the remoovall of the court. I procured him his majesty's letter in ample forme to all magistrats civill, and officers military, to assist him, protect him, and doe him all offices of favor, as one, whom he hath taken into his royall protection, and for whom he had a particular esteeme. The French at Mardick complaine much against the insolency of the English soldiers at Mardick: in a late quarrell they have killed some of the king's guards, and the actors are neither punished nor apprehended, as the captains of his guards alledge, and have writ to ma: ge: Morgan about it; and have fully held forth the ill consequences may follow upon it.

Mr. Gill to vice-admiral Goodson.

In Flushing, April the $\frac{12}{2}$ 1658.

Vol. lviii.
p. 330.

WOrshipful vice-admiral salutes: having conference with our vice-admiral of Zealand, Sir John Evertson wondered, that your worship took no course for the preventing of small pickeroons, that daily went in and out close on board this shore of ——— that if your worship ordered two small men of war, that daily ply'd about Schoon a while, where is better riding then before Ostend, should seldom miss of these pickeroons going out or coming in; either in taking them, or putting them on shore; and if putting them on shore, to batter them, till they are not able to get them of; and in so doing, your worship will do many

many a poor man of our nation a courtesy, and prevent these godless villains of doing great A.D. 1658. spoil upon the North coast; and if this business be put on foot, we shall not have any of them to frequent our harbour, neither here nor at Camphire. I am certain our state should be very glad; and am of opinion, vice-admiral sir John Evertson is commanded to make report to these gentlemen, who can inform your lordship in particular, better than I can write. I have no more at present to enlarge.

Your worshipful friend to command,

JOHN GILL.

General Fleetwood to H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland.

DEAR BROTHER,

WE sticke still how to sende you ready cash. There is but one way best, if we can effect it; which is to be out of the exchequer money, which this halfe year last past are to be paid, our excise and other revenues coming in so slowly, that we are much disappointed in our affayres. If we can get this, it is as much as at present we can have hopes of; but I hope very suddenly we shall have such a way, as will deliver you and us out of such intricacies. We have had very notable discoveryes of the malignant designs, which I hope will convince all men, that we have not pretended one; but that the thing was real. Suddenly the justice upon some of them will cleare it up. In this Mr. secretary's account to you will give a more full satisfaction. Certainly such providences are very signally teaching. The lord give us hearts rightly to improve the same, and to let us see how deceitfull a thing, it is to put a confidency in any outward arm of flesh, but to make him our strength and confydence, who never slumbers nor sleeps; but even then when we are most secure and nearest danger, then is his wakefull eye of providence over us; a present experience whereof I am sure we have had in the prevention and discovery of this design; which, now through mercy, hath proved so abortive. The lord give us hearts to own him in this, which that we may, is the desire of

Your most affectionate brother,

And humble servant,

April 13. 1658.

CHA. FLEETWOOD.

P. S. Very affectionate and humble services to your deare lady.

H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland, to secretary Thurloe.

April. 14. 1658.

SIR,

I THANK God for the seasonable discoveryes you mention. I need not repeat them. In the possession of William Cromwell, Esq; Our address is now so forward, that we can own it. 95 of 107 companies and all our horse to about two troops are returned within the small time allowed them. The rest we expect daily. The papers themselves, which we shall send you, will shew, who have actually signed; but we do withal take private notice, who necessarily and who voluntarily were absent, when it was first offered; who signed with reluctancy, who with scruples and promises, who by invitation, and who out of slavish fear; and on the other side, who were active (I mean of such as we doubted) and expressed utmost affections to the thing, and who did but flatter us and deceive themselves in their hot seeming forwardness and profession. So that although the thing was not originally intended for a test, yet it pleaseth God, that it hath proved such, and that to good purpose. The dissenters are not considerable in number, not exceeding 12, and less considerable in place (the chief being major Low, one captain of foot, and one captain lieutenant) but least of all considerable for their unanimity, scarce two giving the same reason of their refusal. Whereupon I pronounce there are no effective dissenters at all, because of no power to do harm. So that although I never doubted of giving a tolerable account of the army's obedience upon all occasions, yet through God's blessing I could never presume more upon their unity than now. I say the address is so forward and confirmed, that if you see occasion you may publish it; which if you do, let care be taken in the printing. We are now thinking of sending the whole in an handsome manner, and by fit messengers. I remain &c.

H. Cromwell

A.D. 1658.

H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland, to general Fleetwood.

[April 14. 1658.]

DEAR BROTHER,

In the possession of William Cromwell, Esq;

Hunger will break through stone-walls; and really if our wants were not great, we could scarce endure to hear such a proposal as you mentioned, viz. that we pay our quit-rents forthwith, because our assessments are easier now than when the indulgence for 5 years respitt was granted. To which I say the assessment is above $\frac{1}{4}$ as much as all England and Wales, that is 10 times more than in due proportion they ought to be. 2. The people of Ireland pay incomparably more other publick charges than any other of the 3 nations, viz. for repairing churches, courts, goales, bridges, highways, &c. 3. The greatness of the contribution, when that respit was granted, was a barbarous and prejudicial exaction, and the mention of it ought to be abhorred. 4. The disorder about coins hath left this nation very bare of money; and were it not for the supplies from England in specie, which that proposal would cut off, all trade must cease here, and consequently all planting, so as we must by this cessation of industry become as brutish as the Irish themselves, and by degrees degenerate into all their manners and practices, whereby for not sparing us a little at first, you may hasten the labour and charge of reducing this nation again.

As for your proposal of a recruit of 500 old soldiers from hence, I persist much in what I last writ about it. Nevertheless if there be occasion actually to send them abroad, and that we may have the bodies of as many Englishmen sent us hither in lieu of them, and that the charge being not put upon our scanty allowance, I shall not resist what you conceive fit for the publick good and safety; for if there be no other remedy, if you will send us Englishmen, we will use our best industry to make them soldiers here, altho' as you said, those we have already do better understand the work we have been doing. It is a mercy the plots of our enemys are so far discovered. I hope the Lord will in due time laugh them to scorn. I remain

Your &c.

H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland, to lord Broghill.

14 April 58.

MY DEAR LORD,

In the possession of William Cromwell, Esq;

HIS highness's enemies find him no fool. I wish he were equally distant from both his childhoods; but am glad to hear he will not be cozened again. Whilst our address was but words, and the carcass of the army's affections, I would not send it your lordship; but now it is animated with unanimous subscriptions, 'twill shortly go itself. There are not 12 dissenters, nor 3 upon the same or like grounds; some of these private soldiers, all underlings, none higher than major Lowe. I did not intend this as a test, yet it has proved the spectacles, through which I have seen more and better things than I expected in the army. I am thinking how to deal with the dissenters. They are men of no merit in any kind, some of them having acted out of singularity, others out of meer folly and mistake, others out of meer particular discontent upon other occasions. My life would be very dull, were it not for your lordship's communications. I hope you will mind and consider what I wrote in my last in answer to your terrifying propofall for retirement. I hope his highness brave resolutions not to be cozened again will beget a serenity in your lordship's intentions. I say, pray mind what I wrote last hereupon, and what I desired concerning honest Maurice Fenton. I remain &c.

H. Cromwell

H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland, to the lord Falconberg.

MY LORD,

14. April 1658.

WE have nothing here fitt, wherewith to interrupt your lordships repose; but if you can endure to hear us talk of ourselves and our successes, I can tell you our address (whereof I herewith send you a copy) is now unanimously subscribed, as well by every particular soldier as the officers. The dissatisfactions are ridiculous and but few, and those all different from each other; insomuch, as I dare say, they are all effectually nothing. I hope the unanimity of our poor unpaid army, and their couragious patience under all manner of tryalls for his highness sake, will make this place a Zoar against the seditious pride of some. I pray God confirm your lordship's health, and preserve our few friends, among whom I presume to reckon your lordship, being full of like affection towards your lordship, desiring to approve myself

Your &c.

H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland, to commissary generall Whalley.

SIR,

[14. April 1658.]

MY lord Lockhart's confirmation of my opinion concerning your son doth likewise beget in me a good opinion of myself; for, till I heard myself seconded, I was afraid my affections towards you and him had misguided my reason in the character I formerly conceived of him. Truly if I had not perceived so good fundamentalls in him, I should neither have advised him to the superstructure of a foreign education, nor have exposed the weakness of so near a relation to the derision of strangers. But I saw there was matter, and that it was fitt to be wrought and formed. I am of opinion, that we want such men for our foreign negotiations, as my cousin, your son, is like to be. I give him my leave to stay for his further improvement or other benefit, being the least return I can make for that affection I have always observed in you towards me, and our whole family. You see better than myself what times we live in: let me beg to be studious of the publick peace, and to take heed of new shuffles, not one of 1000 succeeding well. For my own part, I wish I may be contented and prepared to be undermost of the pack, and with ease to submit to the providence of God. I remain &c.

Mr. Thomas Herbert, clerk of the council of Ireland, to secretary Thurloc.

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

A Report being made to his excellency the lord deputy and council by the commissioners for his highness revenue, treasury, and stores in this nation sitting in Dublin, it appeares, that amongst several papers of discoveries lately brought unto the said commissioners, Mr. Thomas Buckridge offered the discovery of two plowlands, called Ballinacur, in the barony of Barrimore, in the county of Cork, containing seaven hundred and seaventy acres; and understanding likewise, that the said lands are lately decreed here for the earle of Barrymore, Buckridge by his petition suggesting, that the said earle is endeavouring to to passe a patent in England for the lands so decreed, and praying that the state of this case may be represented to his highnes, whereby the said patent may be suspended, untill his highness title be determined by due course of law: I am commanded by their lordships to acquaint your honour therewith, to the end you may be pleased to take such care therein, as in your honour's wisdom may be found meet.

I humbly take leave to remaine

Your Honour's

Most humble and faithfull servant,

Council Chamber, Dublin,
Aprill 14. 1658.

THO. HERBERT.

The information of Henry Mallory, of Preston, in the county of Suffex; taken upon oath the 14th day of April, 1658, before William lord Goffe, and Henry Scobell, Esq; two of his highness's justices of the peace for the city of Westminster, and liberties thereof.

A.D. 1658.

Vol. lviii.

P. 331.

THE informant saith, that about Michaelmas last, John Stapley, Esq; acquainted this informant, that he had a commission signed by Charles R. with a seal, as he thinketh, wherein the said Stapley was writ baronet, which was for raising a regiment of horse, as he believeth; and offered this informant a command in that regiment as major; and this informant saith, that he did accept of a command in that regiment, and saith, that the said Stapley asked this informant, what he would do towards the raising of the said regiment? to which the informant answered, that he would do nothing; and saith, that he and Mr. Stapley have had many discourses together about this business; and saith, that at a meeting of Mr. Stapley, major Smith, and this informant, upon the Downs near Hanghton-race, they did discourse of this business, whether Charles Stuart would come over, and with what force; and saith, that in his hearing Mr. Stapley was speaking of a place of rendezvous, which was said should be at Divil's-dike, or Beeding-hill; and there was then some speech about seizing of Chichester and Lewes, or any of them; Smith's opinion being, that Chichester was easy enough to be surpris'd; and that there were some persons mentioned in Chichester to secure the horses that lay in the town; and that Binsteed was a person named, which was discoursed of between Smith and Stapley; and this informant saith, that on the wednesday before, Mr. Stapley, Hutchinson, and this informant had a meeting together, where there was a discourse about this business, and Hutchinson promised to bring some horse, but the number he doth not remember; and that Mr. Stapley said he had about a hundred arms in his house; and saith, that there was a discourse about the lieutenant colonel's place to Mr. Stapley's regiment for this informant himself, and saith, for captains there were named Smith and Hutchinson, but doth not remember that Woodcock was named for one; but saith, it was left till the business came into the field, that it might appear what force would come, and then the commands should be disposed of; and saith, that he thinks he hath heard Mr. Stapley speak of one Baron as an agent here from Charles Stuart, but this informant never saw him; and he saith, that he hath been four times, as he remembers, at Dr. Hewett's with Mr. Stapley, and once or twice as he remembers he went to see him alone, which was all about Michaelmas and Candlemas terms, where Dr. Hewett asked Mr. Stapley what forces he could make for Charles Stuart in the county of Suffex, and the said Hewett did also ask this informant what power Mr. Stapley had in the country; and this informant answered the said Dr. that he had looked upon him the said Stapley, as the only interested man in the country; and Mr. Stapley mentioned as if there might be 500 horse brought in, but this informant did not believe that he could bring so many; but he perceived Mr. Stapley had given some assurance to the said Dr. that he would bring 500 into the field, with which Dr. Hewett was well pleased; and this informant did find by Dr. Hewett, that he was not so free toward this informant, which he supposeth was on some suspicion, as if this informant were not true to his first principles for the king. And being asked also, who were also present at any time with Dr. Hewett besides Mr. Stapley when this informant was there, he saith that there was never any present but one Mr. Trelawny, who was once there when Mr. Stapley was present; and this informant asked him about the affairs abroad, and he gave but a slender account; and saith, this informant was in the chamber with Dr. Hewett before Trelawny came in, and that before he came, Dr. Hewett told this informant, that there would come a person hither, who had some imploy to and from Charles Stuart, and that he was a very honest man as to his business; and at this meeting the said Dr. Hewett did speak with this informant about Stapley's interest in Suffex, to raise men for Charles Stuart; to which he gave him such answer as is before-mentioned in this examination, and believeth it was so discoursed to the end the said Trelawny might give an account thereof to Charles Stuart; and thought this informant did know him, and that then Mr. Trelawny came in, whom this informant did know; and that the said Trelawny did relate to this informant, that the king, meaning Charles Stuart, would come over; and there were preparations beyond sea towards it, and mentioned about seven or eight thousand men; and Dr. Hewett said, he did hope the business would go on, and succeed well here; and saith there was no other person present but the said Dr. Hewett, the said Trelawny, Mr. Stapley, and this informant, which was the first time he met with the said Trelawny at Dr. Hewett's, being about Michaelmas term last; and saith, that at that time the said Trelawny said he was to go over again to the king, to give an account of affairs here; and saith, that a second time he met the said Trelawny at Dr. Hewett's Chamber in Candlemas term last, when he said he had been with the king, and seem to flag in the relation that went here about the king's affairs, and and being asked, whether he this informant were sent at any time to Dr. Hewett's, he saith, that after this discourse with Trelawny, Mr. Stapley told this informant, that Dr. Hewett would see or speak with this informant, who went to him, and the said Dr. asked him what news of the king's affairs here? and this informant answered him, that he did not know, for he perceived persons were shy of him. To which Dr. Hewett answered, he wondered at that, since the informant had been so faithful to the king's party. And being asked what account Dr. Hewett gave this informant, he saith, that the said Dr. told him, it was probable the business would go on well, but saith, he did not mention any particulars.

Taken and acknowledged before us,

HEN. MALLORY.

W. GOFFE,

HEN. SCOBELL.

Earl of Rothes to secretary Thurloe.

Castle of Edinburo, Aprill 5, 1658.

MY LORD,

THOUGH my tedious imprisonment has brought much trouble and many inconveniences to myself and fortune, yeett I could with a greatt deall of patience have indured all this much longere, if I did not apprehend my too longe silence might speake me guiltie in the worlds eyes. And though all this tyme of my committment nothing hes bene shewed me for what I suffere; nor while I look upon myne own inocencie, is it possible for me to make the least conjecture of it, yett least those, who hes hade so undeserved mallice at me (to move his highnes to withdrawe his former favor from me) may load me with unjust aspersions, whilst I am now rendered uncapable to vindicatt myself, I have therfor presumed to make my adresse to your lordship, who hes declared yourself unto the world a persone full of honnore and justice, that undere the sheltere of thes two, I may finde protectione from the unjust malice of myne enemies, (whos poure and neire acsatione to his highnes may shoone prevaill against me unhard) and allso way may be maid thorough youre lordships intercesione whereby I may be permitted to windicat myselfe from all the unjust accusations can be brought unto his highnes eares against me, ther beinge no way imaginable, which may sute with a christian and a gentillman, which I shall not willingly imbrace, wherby I may bringe myselfe from out all thes cloudes I nowe seime to lye undere; and make it apeare to all the world, how strickt my deportment hes bene, since first I tasted of his highnes favors, and that some speedie oppertunitie (by your lordships mediatione with his highnes) may be offered me for my vindication of whatever I may be taxed with, and that I may have my libertie upon sufficient baille givene in to my lord generall Monck, is now the humble sute and serious desire of,

MY LORD,

Your lordships most humble servant,

ROTHES.

Capt. Stoakes to secretary Thurloc.

SIR,

THE inclosed is a copy of my last by way of Livorne, which was opened by those people; and so are all letters that goes or comes, under pretence to air them from infection. A notable trick they have got to pry into all men's secrets, and to debar any from writing that way, more than what he would have every man to know! The impertinences of the great duke of and his ministers in this busines (they call pratique) its impossible to relate by letter: the former experience I had of them, being with general Blake, caused me to walk with all imaginable caution, but in requital have found nothing but incivilities, and since are growing so publick, that his highness must of necessary be concerned in them. Your honour will, I hope, pardon me, if I borrow one quarter of an hour from your more serious affairs, to make the relation of my proceedings from the first to the last. My first arrival at Livorne being the first of January, I saluted the towne with nine guns, and after four or five hours I was answered with three, and four chambers. The next day the great duke came to the town, and Mr. Longland told me all the ships in the road would salute him, and he conceived the like would be expected from me, which I accordingly did, shooting fifteen guns, the Tredagh nine, and all the fourth rate frigats five a-piece. This being done, I sent

A.D. 1568. I sent captain Young with two gentlemen more to deliver his highness letter, upon which the duke used many great compliments, and being in the height of them (according to my instructions) they requested the freedom of his port of Farara, upon which he demurred, and asked time to consider; and after two days, answer was returned, that he could not do it; for that the king of Spain would take offence at it. All this time I had only pratique for two or three men of a ship. On the 15th the great duke and dutchess came out of the Mould with two gallies, some said to take the air, others to look upon our ships, whom I had ordered to salute him, as he came under their sterns; but not daring to come near us, he rowed to the windward of all our squadron, so that I only saluted him with eleven guns. The next day the Guinea frigate came to me from captain Whetstone, and brought me intelligence of his taking a Dutchman with corn, bound from Callery to Valentia, which being known a-shore, that small pratique I had was taken from me, without any reason given me, or other notice, than stopping my men, and hindering Mr. Longland to come on board. Your honour may please to take notice, my boats crew never had pratique, by which means, every time they went for water they must take a guard from the Boca, which must go along with them, and be paid for his pains; and not being suffered to enter the town, were carried on the back-side to a private man's water, which was drawn up with a horse; and although they paid for it by the boat, yet if they would have any dispatch, must pay the servant that kept the place, to put the horse into the mill to draw it up, by which means we drank our water as fast as we could fetch it; which being complained of, they gave us very good words, but no redress. This unsufferable carriage of theirs detained me nineteen days to no purpose. On the 23d I weighed with intention to depart, but wind and weather not permitting, I came to an anchor about two leagues from the town; having notice that the Majorcans had several small vessels, in which they had done our merchants some spoil. Two such vessels coming in (which after appeared to be French) I shot at them to come and speak with me, which they not doing, several of the frigates let fly at them: the same time one of the duke's own ships came in, and past by me without the least molestation or visiting; nor did I do it to any other all the time I was in his road. Two day after I sailed for Tunis. This is a perfect relation of my deportment at my first being in his road. My second arrival was on the 26th of March at night: the next day I saluted the town with nine guns, and sent a letter to the governor, desiring that two men from my ship might be admitted a-shore, to look after my business, whereby I might the sooner dispatch. He answered he could do nothing until he had acquainted the great duke; and to that end he had dispatched to Florence, whence I might expect an answer; which after three days came, that if I pleased, myself and servant might come ashore changing cloaths, none else in twenty days. I took this no less than a geer; for that they knew I never desired to go ashore. The next day happened what is related in the duplicate. Sending ashore to procure my boat and men, I was delayed in expectation of an answer from Florence four days. Knowing the duke would make use of his pen as he did the time before, to relate how civil he hath been to the fleet, I requested three or four of the nation to go with Mr. Longland, and demand my boat and men with benefit of pratique, and to certify his answer under their hands, which they had done; but was not suffered to deliver it, only told them (I sent to the wall-side) and unless I would deliver up the prize, I should neither have boat, men, nor benefit of the shore: so I was forced to depart, leaving behind me provisions for two thousand men for fourteen days, being paid for; and without a penny of money, had not an English merchant bound for Lisbon stole it on board his ship, and conveyed it to me. I can impute this late rigour to nothing more than his affection to the Spaniards, or to a rumour, which had its rise from Florence, that my lord was stabbed, and his son shot in the head of an army. I hope in God his highness will live to see such enemies fall before him, As long as the English factory is so great in Livorne, the duke cares not what affronts he puts upon us. Did my lord but threat to remove it to Genoa, where it will be altogether as convenient (they being willing to grant any privilege can be required) then would the duke come upon his knees, they being his greatest subsistence. Its worthy our honour's notice, that when the Dutch fought with our ships close under his mould (forced out by him) he writ the Parliament, and told the merchants the same, that his guns would command none further than the head of the mould: this letter of his, I am told, remains upon record, Mr. Longland being able to inform your honour more fully in this business.

I hope your honour will pardon this prolixity, I conceiving it very material to prevent misinformation. I shall request the next commands may come by way of Marseilles, whether I shall (God willing) send a frigate in expectation; and if the victuals be not come out before this, be pleased to order them to call at Tetuan, and if no direction there, then to proceed to Marseilles. I am upon the way to Furmentera, being the rendezvous, where I hear captain Whetstone is, whom I have not seen these three months. This is all that offers at present remaining. Sir being now come to our rendezvous at Furmentera, where I find all the fleet except the Fairfax, which hope may see on the morrow. It hath been judged most convenient with those with me to range the Spanish coast from Alicant to Cadiz, where possibly possibly we may meet with something which may lessen my lord's charge (the which God A.D. 1568. grant!). The Guinea carries this to Marseilles, and there will clean; in which time hopes she may receive an answer of this: she carries bills of exchange for fifteen hundred pounds sterling, in favour of Mr. John Aldworth, which he is to lay out in provisions and necessaries for the fleet. I hope your honour will give orders, that the treasury of the navy shall pay it, it being part of the eleven thousand four hundred and eighty dollars, I advised your honour had taken up of Mr. Lydcott, which was hindred by the incivility at Le-vorne. The Yarmouth shall this day send to Algeir to procure there some beef and other necessaries, lest missing with the victuallers your honour advised me of, we might not famish in the sea. I have nothing else to trouble your honour, I remain

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

Your honour's most faithful servant,

On board the Lyme off Furmentera,
April the 15. 1652.

JOHN STOAKES.

The information of George Hutchinson of Cuckfield in the county of Suffex, taken upon oath the 16th day of April, 1658, before William lord Goffe and Henry Scobell esquire, justices of the city of Westminster, and liberties thereof.

THIS informant saith, that about shrove-tide was twelve months, colonel Gunter, ma- Vol. lviii.
jor Smith, and this informant, met at Chichester; and having heard from the king p. 336.
(meaning Charles Stuart) by a messenger sent to colonel Gunter, that he did intend to land an army (which he then expected should have been before the lady-day following; and being assured by the said colonel Gunter, that we should have news of it certain days before, and in the mean time to be quiet); the said colonel Gunter, major Smith, and this informant, did there consult about raising the county as far as they could, to join with him: and saith, that this meeting at Chichester was occasioned by intelligence received from Charles Stuart by Gunter, as he conceives, by means of Sir Edward Hyde, brother-in-law to the said Gunter; at which time it was agreed between the persons then present, that they should rise under the command of colonel Gunter, and that they should speak with their friends, meaning those that had been of the king's party, but at that time no particular persons were pitched upon; and this informant saith, that at this meeting there were two private troopers, that had been, as he conceives, under Gunter's command; but they did not hear all the discourse, neither did this informant; for major Smith and Gunter had private discourse by themselves; the name of one of the said soldiers was Crosewill, a dancing-master in Chichester; but the name of the other this informant knoweth not, but having orders from Charles Stuart (as abovesaid) to sit still till further order, there was nothing done, that this informant knoweth of, till November following, about which time major Smith brought this informant acquainted at Croyden with one Baron of Croyden, whom (as he said) he had informed of him, at which meeting there was only a general discourse of things. And this informant saith, that upon notice sent from Baron, this informant came to London on the first day of November last, and met with Baron at the White-horse-tavern in the Strand, and from thence he the said Baron led this informant to an apothecary's house, but in what street he knoweth not, and brought him into an upper room, and left him there in the dark for about half an hour, and then brought a person to him, which he said was the general agent for all England, (who was, as this informant saith, an ancient man middle-sized) and with him came one Hopton a young man, who said that he came very lately from the king, meaning Charles Stuart; and then he, who was called the general agent of all England, told this informant, that there would be a general rising of all the king's (meaning Charles Stuart's) party in London and all over England; whereupon this informant asked him how long it would be ere it would be put in execution, to which he gave a short answer, saying, I cannot tell you that, but this I will tell you, that I wait here, and dare not walk out of the town an hour for any recreation. And then proceeding to discourse, how the business should be contrived, this informant was asked, what forces they in Suffex could bring into the field the first night; to which this informant replied, if they had sufficient warning, and something more than probabilities, as if London were ours, (as Baron had promised) or the king landed with a sufficient force to make a stand, those in Suffex would bring into the field 200 horse the first night. But (saith the said general agent) what if that fail? To which the informant said, that then he doubted they should not bring in ten horse, or words to that effect; whereto the said general agent said, that would not be worthy thanks; but further asked this informant, what they would do with the two hundred horse;

A.D. 1658. to which the informant answered, it would be best to seize upon Lewes, there to arm themselves, and then it would be as easy to make those 200 two thousand, as it was to raise the 200. Then this informant asked, who should be the commander in chief in Suffex, they being no soldiers; to which the agent answered, as he thought it would be Sir Nicolas or Sir Robert Byron, in the nature of a major general; and then asked this informant, whether the Suffex people would rather march to the edge of Hampshire or Surry to meet the forces that would be there, or into Kent; to which the informant replied, he thought they would rather go into Kent, because they were neighbours, and were wont to deal in a way of trade together; whereas he replied, he thought they might go which way they had most mind. Then this informant asked, what persons were engaged in other countries; to which the said Baron answered, You must be content to remain ignorant of all but your own countries: but all that party (meaning Charles Stuart's party) are generally engaged all England over. And further added, that Windsor-castle would surely be delivered to them, with the arms, ammunition, and artillery, of which the lord protector had laid in great store; which is the sum of all the discourse they had at that time, save that Hopton said he was immediately to go over to the king, (meaning Charles Stuart) and to return again very shortly; and this informant told them, that major Smith (who should have been at this meeting) told him at Croyden, when Baron and he met there, that captain Woodcock told the said Smith, he did not question but John Stapley would appear in the head of a regiment, at which the agent, by his gesture, seemed to intimate, that he knew that before; and this informant saith, that the next day, being the 6th of November, he and the said Baron went to Croyden, where at the George-inn the said Baron delivered unto this informant five blank commissions under the hand and seal of Charles Stuart, three of which were for colonels of horse, and two for colonels of foot, with authority to give commissions to their under-officers in their own names, one of which commissions for the horse, this informant saith, he had orders to send to major Smith, with directions for Baron to put in his name, having formerly denied to take such a commission in his own name; and about a week after, he this informant met the said major Smith according to an appointment between them at an inn at Handcrosse, within a mile of Slaffam in Suffex, where he took the commission, saying, if he did not put in his own name, he would put in another's; and as to the other former commissions, it was left to this informant to dispose of them as he should think fit. And this informant further saith, that about the first of March last the said Baron sent him a letter signed H. Baron, which came, as he conceives, inclosed in one to major Smith, and was brought to this informant by one who came from the said Smith, being the servant of Mr. Gawens of Redhill, the effect of which letter, as he understood it, was, that the king, meaning Charles Stuart, would land with his forces within twenty days at farthest; and in that letter desired this informant to send him one of those commissions of foot to Croyden, (from whence, as he remembers, his letter was dated) for that he did very much want one, and knew not where at present to get it; and that he this informant might safely send by the bearer the said Mr. Gawens's servant, which accordingly he did, inclosed in a letter of the said Baron.

And this informant saith, that on the first of January last, he was invited to Mr. Covert's of Slaffam, (who had been a colonel in the late king's army) and there he proposed it to him the said Covert, whether he would engage for the king, if he saw more than probabilities; and that if he would accept of it, he this informant had a commission for a regiment of horse; and informed him in general, what he knew of Charles Stuart's affairs; and he then seemed to accept of the commission, but would have this informant keep it for some time, saying, that he thought it as safe in this informant's hands as his own. And further this informant saith, that about the beginning of March last, upon the receipt of the letter above-mentioned from Baron touching the speedy landing of the forces from Flanders, he this informant went over to colonel Covert's house; but not finding him at home, desired his wife to send some trusty man over to him the monday following (that being friday); but he the said Covert, (as this informant conceives) mistrusting the business, sent him word by his servant, that he would have nothing to do with the commission, which message the said servant delivered by word of mouth. And this informant saith, that the three remaining commissions are yet undisposed of, and now remain at his this informant's house at Cuckfield. And this informant saith, he spake with Mr. John Stapley at Mr. Henley's at Cuckfield in the garden, where they discoursed of all that affair, and especially of the particulars received from Baron concerning the present intended invasion; and that he the said Mr. Stapley told this informant, he had engaged his brother Antony Stapley of Lewes, Mr. Nutt, Sir Thomas Parker's son-in-law, and captain Mallory; and that he intended to meet with major Smith upon the Downs, to discourse upon this business; and the said Mr. Stapley did likewise tell this informant, that he had received a commission for himself from the king, meaning the said Charles Stuart; and another blank commission, as he remembers; and that he, the informant, told the said Stapley, that he had some blank commissions for regiments of horse and foot; and then the said Stapley did appoint this informant to meet A.D. 1658. him on the Downs the wednesday next, promising to send to major Smith to meet them, which he, this informant, accordingly did on the Downs, near Brighthempstead; but major Smith came not, only Mr. Stapley and captain Mallory; at which meeting this informant promised to bring him the said Mr. Stapley about thirty or forty horse, and that he thought major Smith would bring an hundred; and this informant said, he would leave the place of rendezvous unto him the said Mr. Stapley to appoint; but he thought Devil's-dike would be a good place; but Mr. Stapley inclined rather to Beedinghill: and he the said Mr. Stapley said, he had two hundred arms, which should be at their service, and that they should take them at his house, and that he would be there in his own person. And at the said meeting this informant asked the said Mr. Stapley, whether colonel Herbert Morley could be engaged; to which the said Mr. Stapley replied, No, by no means; for that he was excepted from pardon; which, this informant saith, he doth not believe; for that Baron did read unto him the copy of a declaration from Charles Stuart, when this informant was at Croyden; and told him, there would come out with it a proclamation of a general pardon. And further this informant saith, that he hath, at several times, spoken with Mr. Luxford of Okeley, and Mr. Free of Wivellsfield, and John Edsaw of Linfield; but they replied, they could wish the thing could be; but were very cold in the business.

And this informant further saith, that major Smith told him, that one Young, an attorney at Midhurst, had promised him to bring in twenty gentlemen, that lived thereabouts, which this informant believes were of the Popish party, but doth not certainly know.

And further this informant saith, that when he, and the said Mr. Stapley, and captain Mallory, were upon the Downs at Brighthempstead, this informant told them the said Mr. Stapley and Mallory, that Smith had opposed the seizing of Chichester the same time when the rising should begin, which the said Smith was of opinion would be easily done; for he had made sure of three inns, that would seize the soldiers horses, that should be there; namely, Binstead's, at the Dolphin; Pennicott's, at the White-horse; and Dunstall's; but what sign that is, this informant knoweth not: and that he, the said Smith, doubted not, but that such as he should make of his party, in and about the town, should master the rest; but this informant thought it would not be possible to seize both Chichester and Lewes in one night; and the said Mr. Stapley, and captain Mallory, were of the same opinion. And further, at that meeting, this informant saith, that the said Mr. Stapley told them, he did not know what Mr. Henry Goring, of Highdowne, would do, but he had sent his brother Antony that day to know what he would do, but hath not heard what effect that message had upon Mr. Goring. Some discourse likewise was about Mr. Henry Goring; but none of the three could tell any thing concerning him. And further Mr. Stapley said, that he would fain have Mr. John Pelham engaged; but there had been a quarrel between them two, and therefore wished, that somebody else would undertake him, but no way was agreed on that time; but he the said Stapley said, that he had kept fourteen horses in the stable all this winter.

And further this informant saith, that Baron told him, at a third meeting at Croyden, at his own house, in March last, that there was a considerable garison to be delivered to the king, meaning Charles Stuart, for which he was to give ten thousand pounds; but he would not tell the informant, what garison it was; but he supposed it to be Hull or Lynn, because those towns lie towards Flanders. And Baron further told the informant, that Charles Stuart himself would be general, and that monsieur Marfin (who he said was a brave soldier, and lieutenant-general to the prince of Condé) should command all the foreign forces, which he said would be, as he remembers, ten thousand foot, and a thousand horse; and that Marfin was lately made a knight of the garter in order to his undertaking this service. And the said Baron further said, that Ormond lately had been in the city, and that he had spoken with some of the chief citizens to engage them for the king, meaning Charles Stuart.

And this informant further saith that he the said Baron, was very shy in speaking of what chief persons were engaged; but would sometimes speak of Sir William Waller, and sometimes of the lord Fairfax, but very doubtfully, fearing they would not be thorough in the business. And further this informant saith, that the said major Smith, as he remembers, told him, about November last, that Sir Humphry Bennett would be at the edge of Hampshire with some forces, together with major Malbranck, (formerly major of dragoons to colonel John Apsley, and quarter-master to Sir Edward Ford) which he supposeth were to join with the Surrey party in the surprising of Windsor.

And this informant saith, he heard by Smith himself, that the said Smith and Gunter had one meeting more, but doth not know where it was, nor when; and saith, that Smith told him, he found Gunter pettish, but thinks it was, because at the former meeting Smith engaged to serve under Gunter, but then, as he believes, was engaged to Mr. Stapley; and saith, that Smith told him, he believed, that Sir Humphry Bennett was engaged

A.D. 1658. engaged in this business; and he saith, that upon conference with Woodcock, about eight weeks since, the said Mr. Woodcock said, that Mr. Stapley was engaged, and very hearty in this business; and saith, that Baron, as he conceives, told this informant, that Mr. Denzil Hollis, and Sir William Waller, were also engaged. And further this informant saith, that about the beginning of March last, he was with the said Baron at Croyden, where he the said Baron told him, that there was one Mordaunt, second son to the countess of Peterborough, engaged; and likewise, that Mr. Popham, a great man in the west, was engaged; and that he the said Popham had three thousand arms, and had promised to bring some thousands into the field, which were to be, as he conceived, for the service of the said Charles Stuart. And further this informant saith not.

Taken and acknowledged, before us,
this 16th of April, 1658.

W. GOFFE.

HEN. SCOBELL.

GEO. HUTCHINSON.

The examination of William Smith of Steyning, in the county of Suffex, taken by me William Goffe, one of his highness's justices of the peace, the 16th of April, 1658.

Vol. lviii.
P. 342.

THIS examine saith, that about two years since colonel Henry Bishop acquainted him, that major Wildman and others of the Levelling party had a correspondence with Charles Stuart, in order to the making an insurrection in the nation. In order thereunto, he the said colonel Bishop told this examine, he was confident they should draw a great part of his highness the lord protector's army to them; and that the royal party should not need to appear, till they the said Levellers had gotten into arms, and set forth their declarations upon specious pretences of being for the laws of the land, and the liberty of the subjects against tyranny, as judging that the most probable way to seduce the army, and others, to whom Charles Stuart's interest could not be so well relished, or words to that effect; and that they would have books printed to draw away the affections of the people from his highness, which design the said colonel Bishop did, from time to time, bear this examine in hand with, as if it were ready to break forth; and that it would be very shortly a time for the royal party to shew themselves. And this examine further saith, that about Shrove-tide last was twelve-month he the said colonel Bishop told him, that the Levelling party found themselves not able to do so great a work, but did require 1500 horse to join with them, which the said Bishop said would be raised about the city of London, whereupon there would be some action suddenly. And this examine further saith, that soon after this discourse, by advice with the said Bishop, he the said examine, and Dr. Hutchinson of Cuckfield, did agree to go to Chichester to acquaint colonel Gunter with these affairs, which they accordingly did about the middle of March was twelve-month, and met at the house of Henry Binsted, at the Dolphin in Chichester, which place he the said colonel Gunter, Dr. Hutchinson, the said Binsted, and this examine, with one Thomas Crosswill of Chichester, had discourse to the effect following; the examinant and Dr. Hutchinson did communicate to Gunter, and the rest, what Bishop had informed them of, concerning the conjunction of the levelling and royal party, but the said Gunter did by no means approve thereof, fearing the Levellers were but decoys to draw the royal party in; and that he the said Gunter could assure the company there present, that he had lately received intelligence from Sir Edward Hide, that the king, meaning Charles Stuart, hopes very shortly to land considerable force in some part of England; and that at the same time, to his knowledge, there would be a good account given of Portsmouth, meaning it would be surrendered to Charles Stuart, of which the said Gunter said he had so good an assurance, that he had communicated the same to the king, meaning Charles Stuart.

And further, this examine saith, that the result of that meeting was, that they would sit still, and not act any thing, until they should receive further orders from the said Charles Stuart, which this examine said he did assure the company they should have, by the means of one Baron, (who liveth in or about Croyden) with whom the examinant had spoken not long before; and by whom, he was assured, that there would be an insurrection and invasion very shortly.

Further this informant saith, that about the month of June following, Dr. Hutchinson came to the house of this examine, and told him, that one Thomas Geere of Offenden had been with him from Mr. John Stapley, to let him know, that he the said Mr. John Stapley was willing to serve the king, meaning Charles Stuart, if he the said Hutchinson could procure him a pardon and commission. Whereupon this examine, and the said Hutchinson, went on purpose to Croyden, to speak with the said Baron to procure a pardon don and commission for the said Mr. Stapley, which the said Baron undertook to do; A.D. 1658.

 but before return could be made, the said Mr. Stapley received a commission from another hand, as this examine was informed. This examine further saith, that about a month after, he and the said Hutchinson went again to Croyden, and spoke with the said Baron, at the George in Croyden, to know how affairs went; and were then assured, that Charles Stuart's affairs were in a very good condition.

That in Michaelmas term last this examine came up to London about some private business of his own, at which time he met with colonel Bishop, the said Baron, Henry Binsted, and one Francis Mansell, at the Ship-tavern on the back side of St. Clements in the Strand, where they consulted what gentlemen, of the county of Sussex, were fit persons to be nominated to be put into a commission, to manage the militia of the county for the said Charles Stuart; which commission the said Baron said he would procure against their next meeting, which they then agreed should be the day following, at the same place; where and when accordingly they did meet; and the said Baron did produce a blank commission, signed Charles R. and sealed with the usual seal; the effect whereof was to raise forces, both of horse and foot, and to preserve the peace of the county, and for the service of the said Charles Stuart; but the said commission was not to be put in execution till the said Charles should be landed, and to that purpose was put into the hands of the said Henry Binsted, who received the same, after the names of Sir William Morley, Mr. Lewkner of Wednesden, Mr. Adrian May, Mr. Garaway, and Sir John Pellham were put in, to fill up the blanks, with directions to communicate it to the gentlemen, when the king, meaning Charles Stuart, should be landed; and then to communicate it with all speed, which the said Binsted promised to do accordingly. And this examine further saith, that about a day or two after the said meeting, he went to visit Sir Humphry Bennett, having heard that he was not well, and having been formerly acquainted with him the late king's army, he having been of that brigade, which he the said Bennett commanded, with whom this examine had some discourse about Charles Stuart's affairs; and this examine saith, he did communicate to the said Sir Humphry Bennett the effect of what passed at the two last-mentioned meetings at the Ship-tavern, and what else he had heard concerning the intention of Charles Stuart's invasion; to which the said Sir Humphry Bennett did reply, that he did believe the king, meaning Charles Stuart, was in a very good forwardness to come over; and demanded of this examine, what number of horse he conceived might be raised in Sussex; for he had been informed there would be 3000 horse raised in that county; but this examine replied, that he would venture all he had, that there would not be 300.

And further this examine saith, that the said Sir Humphry Bennett told him, that major Malbanke, in or near Midhurst, had assured him the said Bennett, that he had listed 200 horse in Sussex and Hampshire, for him the said Bennett for the said Charles Stuart's service; and that he did intend to go down himself to speak with Malbanke, to be ascertained of the listing of the said horse, and that he would send for this examine; but this examine saith, he did never send for him, nor came not into the country, that he hath heard of. And further this examine saith, that the next day he gave Sir Humphry Bennett another visit, and that Henry Binsted went with him this examine to the said Bennett's lodging; for that this examine had told the said Binsted, what a great number of horse the said Bennett had heard would be raised in Sussex; and he the said Binsted being of the same opinion with this examine, that no such number could be raised, they agreed to go together to convince him the said Sir Humphry Bennett of that their opinion, and to shew him the commission they had received from Baron, at the Ship-tavern, which accordingly they did; and that as to the commission, he the said Bennett only read it over, and gave it back to Binsted, saying little to it; and as to the other business of the horse, he remained in his own opinion, he having, as he said, met with a gentleman, that had confirmed him therein, who knew the state of Sussex, as well as they; unto which this examine replied, that if any did inform the king, meaning Charles Stuart, at that rate, and that he had the like account from other counties, he would be much disappointed of his expectation; and further the examine saith, that the said Sir Humphry told him, that when the king, meaning Charles Stuart, was landed, he was assured that Windsor-castle would be delivered to their party for the use of Charles Stuart.

This examine further saith, that about July last the said Hutchinson having received some blank commissions for regiments of horse and foot, he told this examine, that he had order to give him a blank commission for a regiment of horse, which he this examine did receive of him the said Hutchinson, signed Charles R. and sealed with the prince's signet, which blank commission he this examine kept by him till about the first of February last; and then being at Midhurst, in the house of Mr. Matthew Younge an attorney, he told the said Younge, that he had receiv'd such a commission; and after he had discoursed with him upon the whole business of Charles Stuart's affairs, he this

A.D. 1658. examine was contented to let his own name be put into the said blank commission, which accordingly was done by the hand of the said Matthew Younge, who was also desired by this examine to keep the said commission for him, which he the said Younge accepted of, and hath it by him till this time, for aught he knoweth; and further this examine saith, that he the said Younge did desire him to have a commission in his regiment; and he this examine promised him he should be his lieutenant-colonel; whereupon he the said Younge promised to raise what men he could, and doubted not but he should be able 18 or 20 horse to the first rendezvous.

And further this examine saith, that about a month since, one Samuel Rose of Lewes, formerly, as he said, a lieutenant in the late king's army, came to this examine's house, and told him, that he did desire to have a commission in his regiment; unto which this examine replied, if he could raise a troop of horse, he should.

And further, that the said Rose did tell this examine of one Ralph, a Kentish man, who he said would likewise raise good store of men, and did desire to receive a commission; but this examine saith, he did not promise him the said Ralph any command; and withal told the said Rose, that this examine did intend to waive his commission, and to take a command in Mr. Stapley's regiment; and further told the said Rose, that he did believe captain Woodcock would make him his quarter-master; for he had heard him the said Woodcock say, that the said Rose would make a very good quarter-master.

This examine further saith, that about the beginning of Candlemas term he, and the said Baron, and the said Binsted, and the said Mansell, and the said Younge, met at Guilford at the Red-lion, the meeting being appointed by the said Baron, at which time the said Baron informed him and the rest of the company then present, that the king, meaning Charles Stuart, was in a very good readiness to come over, having shipped his ammunition, and palisadoes, and other preparations for invasion and intrenchments; and that there were with him, the said Charles Stuart, ready to be shipped, 9000 foot, and 1000 horse; and that he did believe they would be very shortly landed in England; which this examine saith was all that passed at that meeting, the chief end of it being to inform this examine and the said Binsted of the said intelligence from Charles Stuart.

And further this examine saith, that about the beginning of March last he had a letter from the said captain Woodcock, to meet him the said Woodcock and another gentleman at the great furzy field near BRIGHTHELMSTON in SUFFEX; and accordingly he this examine went the next day towards the said place, and by the way met the said Woodcock, who told him, that Mr. John Stapley had received a commission or two from Charles Stuart, to raise horse and foot for his service in England; and that he had a title of honour conferred on him the said Stapley (what it was, this examine doth not remember); and further the said Woodcock told this examine, that the said Mr. Stapley, having not been much experienced in martial affairs, did desire to speak with this examine; and that immediately after, this examine and the said Woodcock did meet with the said Mr. Stapley in the fields; and that then the said Mr. Stapley did inform this examine, that he had received a commission from the king, meaning Charles Stuart, and that he did design to speak with him about it; for he had not yet engaged any, but was desirous, that this examine would accept of a command under him, which this examine told the said Stapley he would consider of, and he should be ready for that service, though it was but to march as a corporal in his regiment; and that this discourse was all in the hearing of the said captain Woodcock. And further this examine saith, that ten or fifteen days after, this examine met the said Mr. Stapley and captain Henry Mallory at Hangleton race, where the said Mr. Stapley told this examine, that he had been at London with his highness, who gave him the said Stapley a severe look at the first (or words to that effect); but after he had conversed a while with his highness, he gave him good satisfaction, and they parted upon good terms; and further told this examine, that he now came to consult with this examine and captain Mallory about the election of officers for his regiment, and particularly pressed this examine to take a commission for a troop, which he accepted of. He would have had the examine have been major to his regiment, but he refused it, and told him, the said Stapley, that that would be fitter for the said Mallory. And further the said Stapley said, that captain Woodcock had accepted to be his captain-lieutenant; and further this examine doth not remember what passed at this meeting, save only that the said Mr. Stapley, and captain Mallory, and this examine, did agree to meet the next wednesday, at the lady Allford's at Offington, and this examine was to send to the said Henry Binsted to meet at the same time and place. And further this examine saith, that according to the said appointment the said Stapley, Mallory, Binsted, and this examine, did meet at the said lady Allford's at Offington; and that the principal end of that meeting was to meet with the said Binsted, to confer with him, to know what horse lay in Chichester, and how they might be surpris'd; and that the said Binsted did inform them, that there was not above forty of the lord protector's horse in the said city, and that they lay lay six or seven in a house, easy enough to be surpris'd; and the said Binsted informed A.D. 1658. them, that the best time to do it would be at seven o'clock in the morning, after they had been upon the guard; but nothing was to be put in execution, till Charles Stuart should be landed, and the city of London in an uproar.

And further this examine saith, that he the said Stapley, in the hearing of the said captain Mallory, told him, that Jack Mordaunt was a person much employed in Charles Stuart's affairs, and that he expected every day to receive orders from him the said Mordaunt; and this examine further saith, that he hath often heard the said Baron speak of the said Mr. Mordaunt, as a person much entrusted and employed by the king, meaning Charles Stuart.

This examine further saith, that about the 28th of March last, he meeting with the said Matthew Younge at Ashurst, at one Widow Badmering's, this examine told the said Younge, that he had accepted a command in Mr. Stapley's regiment, and that he intended to wave the commission, that he had left in his hands; whereupon the said Younge desired, that he might have a commission for a troop in Mr. Stapley's regiment, which he this examine promised to procure for him.

This examine further saith, that at the last meeting with Mr. Stapley and captain Mallory there was some discourse about the place of rendezvous; but that was not resolv'd upon, but left to a farther debate; as likewise, how they might upon their horse rising secure the lord protector's horse, that are quartered at Lewes, and secure the town with the arms that are therein, for the service of Charles Stuart.

The examine further saith, that in Candlemas term last, meeting with Mr. Edward Blaker the new sheriff of Suffex, at Mestum, in his inn, the said Mr. Blaker said to this examine, that he wondered, that Charles Stuart should be so ill beloved; for he could not hear, that any body loved him. To which this examine replied, it was strange to him, which was all the answer he returned at that time; but that about a month since, being at the said Mr. Blaker's house, this examine told the said Mr. Blaker, that he thought the king, meaning Charles Stuart, was in a very good posture, and had an army, which he thought would land very shortly, unto which he the said Mr. Blaker replied, he did not believe it; for he could not conceive how he should be able to do it, or words to that effect.

WILL. GOFFE.

WILL. SMITH.

The protector to the duke of Venice.

SERENISSIME princeps, illustrissime senatus, Richardus Holdipp nuper in exercitu nostro tribunus militum, nunc vero consul societatis mercatorum nostrorum in Peloponneso negotiantium, literis hisce nostris ad serenitatem vestram ornari petiit, quum gratiam vestram summo sibi ornamento et praesidio fore in muneris sui administratione, nostram autem commendationem non mediocris ad eum momenti futuram existimaret; quod quidem nos haud gravatim ei concessimus, utpote de nobis optime merito, et de humanitate vestra multis experimentis cognita nobis et testata nihil dubitantes. Serenitatem igitur vestram rogamus, ut ille in negotiis suis, prout res feret, mutuæ inter respublicas amicitiae et hujus nostrae commendationis fructus quam uberrimos possit percipere, sicuti et nos cuicunque civi vestro praestare gaudebimus: quam erga serenissimam vestram rempublicam benevolentiam merito profitemur. Adeoque serenissimae vestrae reipublicae perpetuam gloriam et prudentissimorum consiliorum felicissimos exitus comprecamur. Dab. e palatio nostro.

Westmonasterii, 20. Aprilis, anno 1658.

SERENITATIS VESTRAE

Bonus amicus.

Serenissimo principi Venetiarum duci, illustrissimoque senatui Veneto.

Secretary Thurloc to H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland.

MY LORD,

I Was necessitated, through my bodily distempers, to omit writeinge by the last; and for want of matter, I might alsoe have eased your lordship of that trouble by this. The whole tyme here hath beene taken in makeing forth those discoveries, which I gave your excellencye the notice of by my former; and truly I can say in that perticuler, the tyme and payne spent therein have beene to very good purpose, wee beinge now able to make the intentions of the enemye, both as to their invadeing us from Flaunders, and their

In the possession of the right hon. the earl of Shelburne.

A.D. 1658. their insurrections here, as evident and demonstrable, as if they had actually done both. Besides what the cavaleirs were to doe there, there was a third partye, who never were engaged for C. Stewart, that were most of all depended upon, as Sir William Waller, Harlow, John Mordaunt, both the sonns of old colonel Stapley of Suffex, with many others; and the head of these should have beene the L. F. whom I cannot say they had engaged, but promised themselves much from his discontents. They were alsoe sure of the erle of Oxford. Wee here can scarce beleieve, but that wee see it with our owne eyes, that some men should hanker this way, who seeme to be too farre engaged. It will teach every body here to be very wary whom they trust, these discoveries beinge soe manifest; and also the danger to the whole nation hath engaged his highnes and the counsell to secure the heades and cheife of all the malignant partye, and intend to keepe them secured, untill there can be some effectuall provision made against their attempts for the future, that wee may not be continually at this passe with them every yeare; and this must be by parlament; to which purpose, I think, a parlament will be summoned very shortlye, where this, and other matters, are to be treated on.

Mr. Standish hath done his part with great diligence, as to the shewing the want you have of money. I wish the counsell could doe their parte as well, for the supplyeing of it; but how that will be done, I protest, I knowe not, without the help of a parlament. Wee are soe out at the heeles here, that I knowe not what wee shall doe for money. The counsell will give some answere to Mr. Standish; but I feare they will be necessitated to referre the sumes in arreare to be supplied in parlament. If the answere be better, it will be soe much the more welcome; and I am sure your excellencye hath some servants there, that will leave noe stone unturned, that may be for your service in this particular.

I had the honour to receive from your excellencye the draught of the addresse of the armye in Ireland, which is a very good one; and I am very glad it is soe unanimously signed. I beleieve the dissenters have gayned nothinge by their refusall, but the oppinion of beinge scarce true and faithfull to the trust they are in; and love of all men is to be considered in it. I yet never could see good come of any man, that had served the contrary partie, as I heare he hath; from the pollution whereof, it's to be feared, he is not washed: an outward washinge will not doe it. I thinke it not convenient to have this addresse printed, untill it be actually delivered, and their names printed, hopeinge it will now be with us very shortly.

There is not any thinge from beyond sea very considerable. The French court is come towards Hesdin, which is revolted to the Spaniard, to endeavour the reducement thereof. I feare this may retard the seige of Dunkirk, which is, by agreement with the French, to be besieged before the 20th of May; and in order thereunto wee are sendinge over 3000 foot, as recruits to the foot there already. The kinge of Sweden is yet in the new conquests in Schonen; soe that we heare nothinge of action in Prussia, or those parts. There is like to be an election of an emperor very shortly; and I doe not see what can hinder the kinge of Hungary from being the man, who is like to be a great scourge to the protestant partye in that part of the world. I remeyne

Whitehall, 20. Apr. 1658.

Your excellencye's most humble servant,

JO. THURLOE.

Lord Fauconberg to H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland.

MY LORD,

Aprill the 20th, [1658.]

In the possession of the right hon. the earl of Shelburne.

WE cannot justly boast of any advantage had of Ireland, while it affords such a treasure as your lordshipp now discovers in that armyes addresse to his highnes; and I make no doubt, but the hearts of all good men will be as much cheared att the news, as the troblers of our quiet have cause to be discouraged: they may rage for a time, but shall not prevaile. And the same God, who has made you there all of one heart, will (I trust) not only keepe you so, but stirrs up others here, by your example, to tread in those paths, which lead unto their peace. They are still securing cavaliers in all counties of England: other matters remayne statu quo, I meane, as to the army, there being no considerable officers remooved, but those of his highnes owne regiment, w h o h a v e n o w, m o f t t h i n k, a s o d a f e l l o w a t 26 43, 22 26 34 39 39 14 19 27 18, 3 34 26 6 3 10 11 23 23 26 43 3 39
t h e h e a d o f t h e m, a s P a c k e r w a s.
39 14 11 14 11 3 6 26 10 39 14 11 22, 3 34 31 3 7 18 11 35 43 3 34.

Colonell

Collonel 23 19 23 2 38 35 27 19 34 3 39 14 26 22 11 3 22 3 23 7 26 27
 t e n t, b e c a u s M o n k h a s c h a n g d 39 11 27 39, 2 11 7 3 38 34 general 22 26 27 18 14 3 34 7 14 3 27 15 6
 f o m o f h i s o f f i c e r s, h i s c o 34 26 22 26 10 14 19 34 26 10 10 19 7 11 35 34, yet keepes 14 19 34 7 26 m m i f f i o n c o m m i f f 22 22 19 34 34 19 26 27 notwithstanding. G. and B. their 7 26 22 22 19 34 34
 i o n s o f f i 19 26 27 34 are still in limbo, and like to continue so; though O. his 26 10 10 19 c e r s m i g h t c o m a n d t h e m.
 7 11 35 34 petitioned, that B. 22 19 15 14 39 7 26 22 3 27 6 39 14 11 22.
 o n;

K. is resolv'd 26 27; but when, uncertain. I have twice this weeke begg'd leave of his highness, that I might wait upon A. but cannot obtaine it; for what reason I know not, other than a punishment to

YOUR LORDSHIP'S

Most affectionate brother,

And truly faithful humble servant,

FAUCONBERG.

My lord of Warwick dyed sodainely yesterday morning.

The examination of Antony Stapley esq; taken the 20th of April, 1658. before major-general William Goffe, and Henry Scobell, esqrs; two of his highness's justices of the peace for the city of Westminster, and liberties thereof.

THIS examine saith, that about the beginning of December last, his brother, John Stapley esq; being at this examine's house in Lewes, the said John Stapley told him, that there was like to be very great troubles in the country; for that the king, meaning Charles Stuart, was preparing forces beyond the seas to invade the nation; and that there would be a general insurrection for the said Charles Stuart: and that he the said John Stapley had received a commission from the said Charles Stuart, to raise forces for that service, and to command in chief for the county of Suffex; and that he told the examine of it, to the end he might have an opportunity to serve himself, and to prevent the evil, that otherwise might come upon him. And this examine further saith, that another time, when the said John Stapley was discoursing about disposing of commissions, he asked the said John Stapley, how he did intend to dispose of him (this examine)? Unto which the said John Stapley replied, he did intend he should have a captain's place in his regiment of horse; but the examine saith, there was nothing agreed upon: for the said John Stapley further said, that when the other commissions came to be disposed of, and other regiments raised, the examine might have his choice of a better command, there being no better place in his regiment for the present, the lieutenant-colonel's and major's places being disposed of to captain Henry Mallory and major Smith, which this examine saith he was contented with. That about two months since, this examine saith, that he the said John Stapley, John Mordaunt, captain Thomas Woodcock, and himself, were in the Half-moon-tavern, over-against the New Exchange, at dinner; but at that meeting he doth not remember, that there was any discourse of the present design concerning Charles Stuart. This examine further saith, that soon after the said meeting at the Half-moon-tavern, the said John Mordaunt came to this examine's lodgings in Long-acre, and began to discourse of the times, complaining they were very bad, and asking his opinion of them; to which the examine replied, he did agree with the said Mordaunt in that opinion, or words to that effect, expressing some discontent; and asked the said Mordaunt, how these things could be helped? Whereupon the said Mordaunt told this examine, that there was a way to redress the present grievances; for the king, meaning Charles Stuart, was intending to come over with a considerable force, and that there would be a considerable appearance here in England ready to join with him at his landing; and that there would be thereby a fair opportunity given to gentlemen to right themselves; which is all that the examine remembers did pass at that meeting. But the examine further saith, that not long after, going to visit the said Mr. Mordaunt at his chambers in Berkshire-house, the said Mordaunt asked him, how affairs went in Suffex, and in what forwardness they were there, meaning how the intended insurrection to join with the said Charles Stuart at his landing: to which the examine made answer, he did not know, for he had not been there of late, and did believe, that things would

A.D. 1658. not be according to his the said Mordaunt's expectation; that he was informed by the said John Stapley, that there would be four or five hundred horses ready in the said county, for the service of the said Charles Stuart, or words to that effect. And further this examine saith, that at the same time the said Mordaunt did further assure him, that there was a considerable party in Surrey ready to join with those in Suffex, for the carrying on of the said design; and that he the said Mordaunt had given out four commissions, three for horse, and one for foot; but the examine doth not know, to whom the said commissions were given, being unwilling to ask him, and he was not so free of himself as to tell him: but the examine doth remember, that the said Mordaunt did then speak of Sir Francis Vincent, and Mr. Browne, in that manner that he this examine did then, and still doth believe, that he the said Vincent, and Browne, were engaged in the said design. This examine further saith, that about five weeks since, the said Mordaunt, and the said Henry Mallory, and this examine, met all at the Half-moon-tavern over-against the New Exchange, where the said Mordaunt told them, that now the king, meaning Charles Stuart, was in a great readiness to come over; or words to that effect; and therefore desired the examine, and the said Mallory, to tell him, what posture those, who were engaged in Suffex, were in: to which the said examine and the said Mallory replied, that they were in as good a forwardness as could be expected in so short a time: but for his the said Mordaunt's further satisfaction, at his desire, it was agreed, that some person in Suffex should give him the said Mordaunt a meeting about a week after at Crawley; and accordingly this examine, and the said Mallory, meeting with the said Mr. John Stapley at his house in Patchum, about three or four days after, the said Mr. John Stapley, and the said Mallory, did agree to meet the said Mordaunt at Crawley the tuesday following; but the said Stapley being sent for by his highness the lord protector to come and speak with him at Whitehall, that meeting was prevented; which is all this said examine can say of the said Mr. Mordaunt, not having seen him the said Mordaunt since that time.

And this examine further saith, that about the 22^d or 23^d of March he went to Sir Henry Goring's of Burton, to visit that family, being just then about to break up house-keeping, and to remove to London, where this examine continued two nights; and then, in his way back to Mr. Blaker's, the high-sheriff of Suffex, he this examine called in at Mr. Henry Goring's of Highdowne, with whom this examine had some discourse about the present design; wherein this examine asked the said Mr. Goring, if he had heard of the landing of king Charles, and of the troubles, that were like to be in the county thereupon? Whereunto the said Goring replied, he had heard of some such thing; and desired him the examine to tell him, whether he was in earnest; to which this examine replied, that he was, and that he had it from very good hands; and further the examine told him the said Goring, that he knew he had a very good interest in the country, and was well beloved, and desired to know what he could do for his party; but he was very wary and shy in his answer, saying, he thought his neighbours did love him, but did not know what he could do in such a case; but desired this examine to meet him another time, which this examine promised to do on the monday following; and accordingly he did on the said monday set forth from his house at Lewes towards the said Mr. Goring's at Highdowne: but this examine saith, that by the way meeting with his brother the said Mr. John Stapley, he the said Mr. John Stapley asked him, whither he was going; to which the examine answered, he was going to Mr. Goring's of Highdowne; but the said Mr. John Stapley did then advise him not to go, for fear of any inconveniencies might ensue thereon. Whereupon the examine did return; and since that time he hath not seen the said Mr. Goring, nor heard from him.

This examine further saith, that in his journey from Battaile to London, about the beginning of April, he came through Tunbridge, and there met with Mr. Edward Rivers, of Fish-hall, where the examine told him the said Mr. Rivers, that he had a good horse, and he would take it as a favour, if he would let him have it at a reasonable rate; for that there were likely to be some troubles in the country; and so told him the said Rivers, that Charles Stuart was to land shortly, and that there would be an insurrection for his assistance, of which this examine did believe the said Rivers was not ignorant; whereupon he the said Rivers confessed, that he had heard of it, and did say, that he should engage as far in the business as this examine; but would not tell this examine the names of any persons, that were engaged in Kent, pretending he did not know them; but by his whole discourse, this examine saith, he perceiveth, and verily believeth, he the said Mr. Rivers was a well-wisher to those proceedings. This examine further saith, that he hath often had discourse with captain Thomas Woodcock about the said design, and that the said Woodcock doth know thereof.

And this examine further saith, that meeting with one Mr. William Dike of Fant esq; (one of the justices of the peace for the county of Suffex) in Fleet-street, he desired the said Mr. Dike to walk into Clifford's-inn, where this examine told him the said

Mr. Dike, that there was an intent of rising to assist Charles Stuart, when he should land; and that he this examine was told of it, and made to believe, that it was in favour to him, that he might have timely notice thereof; unto which the said Mr. Dike replied, Well, chamber-fellow, if I had been told this from any other but yourself, I should not have believed it, nor given any heed to it; but have a care what you do, and look that you go upon good grounds; for I shall rely upon you, and shall be ruled by you, to do as you will have me.

And further this examine saith, that the said Mr. Dike was present with this examine and the said Mr. Rivers at Tunbridge, and heard all the discourse above-mentioned between the examine and the said Mr. Rivers. And further this examine saith not.

Taken and acknowledged, this 20th day of April, 1658. before us,
W. GOFFE,
HEN. SCOBELL.

ANT. STAPLEY.

H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland, to secretary Thurloe.

SIR,

21. April, 1658.

YOUR silence this post, and the length of my lord Broghill's letter urging much his retirement, and other unpleasant matters, will make this trouble of yours the less. I wish I could be but satisfied you are in health; for thereby I shall be the better able to bear the sickness of other things, which, I doubt, God only must cure. The addresses we wanted, are now come in; of all which, and of the several letters sent up with them, we have taken such a view, as will, I hope, teach us the true temper of the army, and what stress is to be laid upon them upon every sort of occasion. I remain

Your, &c.

H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland, to lord Falconberg.

[21. April, 1658.]

THESE are only to thank your lordship for the promise of continuing your favours, and to assure your lordship, that your conversation, this dim and imperfect way of letters, is a refreshment to me. Wherefore I shall earnestly desire God to restore your lordship to your perfect health, the public and your friends being much concerned therein, but more particularly myself, who am

Your, &c.

H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland, to lord Broghill.

MY DEAR LORD,

21. April, 1658:

I Cannot write a word till I have given your lordship satisfaction to what you complained of, as if I had taxt you in my last for not having dealt plainly with me. To which I say, that I did not think your pains had been continuall, (as to my grief you say they are) but that a months or six weeks retirement, about spring and fall, might have sufficed. Besides, I feared, that things went at that pass, as to discourage any sober man from meddling with them; and withall, that you were too tender of me, to disquiet me with too plain a relation of the unpleasant truths you mention in your last.

But things being as they are, I shall only conjure you not to take up new resolutions at the time when your body and mind are in more than ordinary pain; but that you would review and examine them in your intervalls of ease; which having done, and craved a blessing from heaven, which I shall also beg in your behalf, I will labour to be content with as much of you as I can; hoping, that when God shall please to lessen our helps, he will also abate our difficulties. I am not free to enlarge much hereupon. Mr. secretary has writ nothing this week, which fills me with fears. My dear lord, pardon the discomposure of

Your, &c.

The

The further information of captain Henry Mallory, taken upon oath the 21st day of April, 1658. before major-general William Goffe, and Henry Scobell esqs; two of his highness's justices of the peace for the city of Westminster.

A.D. 1658.

Vol. lviii.
P. 353.

THE informant saith, that he was once at doctor Hewett's chamber, in Michaelmas term last, when Mr. John Stapley, and the said doctor, were discoursing about the affairs of Charles Stuart; and doth well remember, that the said John Stapley did sign a letter to the said Charles Stuart, which was then written, wherein was inserted, that the said Mr. Stapley did not doubt but he should engage some hundred horse in the county of Suffex, for the said Charles Stuart's service; which letter the said doctor received from the said Stapley, and promised to send it for him to the king, meaning Charles Stuart. The informant further saith, that the said Stapley, about a month or three weeks since, desired the informant to go with him to Offington, to the lady Allford's, where he was to meet with major Smith and Henry Binsted of Chichester, to be informed from them how things were in the West; and that he accordingly went, and that there did meet, at the said lady Allford's, the said Mr. Stapley, major Smith, Henry Binsted, Marmaduke Wyvell, and this informant; but doth not remember, what in particular was discoursed of at that time, the most of the discourse being between the said Mr. Stapley and Henry Binsted in private; but the informant remembereth, that the said Stapley told him, as they were riding home, that the said Binsted said, the soldiers at Chichester had neither powder nor bullets.

The informant further saith, that about the beginning of March last, captain Antony Stapley and himself being in the Half-moon-tavern, John Mordaunt esq; being upon the Exchange, was sent to by the said Stapley; whereupon the said Mordaunt came to them the said Stapley and this informant. And then the said Stapley presented the informant to him as a gentleman, that was interested in Charles Stuart's design with his the said Stapley's brother, meaning John Stapley esq; Whereupon the said Mordaunt demanded of this informant, what readiness the horse, that was to be raised in Suffex, were in? To which the informant replied, that they were not in so good a forwardness as he did believe Mr. Stapley had represented to him, but doubted it would fall much short, which he said the said Mordaunt much wondered at; and told them, that the king, meaning Charles Stuart, was in a very good posture, and that there was a daily expectation of his coming over with his forces. And then the said Mordaunt desired, that there might be a meeting, at some convenient place, between himself and Mr. John Stapley, and such others as he should think fit, of the county of Suffex, that they might confer together, and understand how the affairs stood in reference to the counties of Suffex and Surrey, that they might the better assist each other in the intended insurrection; and accordingly it was agreed, that the meeting should be at Crawley, on the tuesday following; in order whereunto this informant, and the said Antony Stapley, did speak with Mr. John Stapley, at his house in Patchum, about three or four days after; and it was then agreed, that the said Mr. John Stapley, and this informant, should meet the said Mr. Mordaunt, at Crawley, the tuesday following; but in the mean time the said Mr. John Stapley being sent for to Whitehall, that meeting was prevented. And further this informant saith not.

Taken and acknowledged, the 21st
of April, 1658. before us,

W. GOFFE,
HEN. SCOBELL.

HEN. MALLORY.

The further information of John Stapley esq; taken upon oath the 22^d day of April, 1658. before major-general William Goffe, and Henry Scobell esq; two of his highness's justices of the peace for the city of Westminster.

Vol. lviii.
P. 355.

THIS informant saith, that John Mordaunt esq; did, about the beginning of September last, in discourse with this informant, tell him, that he was entrusted by the king, meaning Charles Stuart, in the managing of his present design to engage people to appear for him in England, against the said Charles Stuart should be ready to invade these nations with forces from beyond seas, which the said John Mordaunt hath often said would be with about eight thousand men; and that he the said John Mordaunt, Mr. Adam Browne, and Sir Francis Vincent of Surrey, (who, he said, had commissions from Charles Stuart) should, he doubted not, be able to get together a considerable body of horse in that county; and that if those, that were in Suffex, who were willing to engage in this business, should not be able of themselves to rise, he the said Mordaunt, and others in Surrey, would would come into Suffex for their assistance. By all which, and other like arguments, he A.D. 1658. did very often press upon this informant, to encourage him in this unlawful design, wherein he hath been so unhappily engaged.

And this informant further saith, that captain Woodcock of Lewes was several times with the said Mordaunt, when he hath been discoursing with this informant about the matters above-mentioned. And this informant further saith, that about the latter end of Michaelmas term last (as near as he can remember) doctor Hewett meeting this informant at the lady Campion's, the said doctor was very importunate with him to come to his chambers, promising he should meet with one Mr. Trelawney, whom he had often employed to Charles Stuart, and was, as he said, within a few days, to go over again to him the said Charles Stuart, from himself, and others, that were entrusted with his affairs here; and was very earnest with this informant, and captain Henry Mallory, to go with him immediately, which accordingly they did, and met with the said Trelawney at the said doctor's chamber. And the said informant further saith, that the said doctor did then inform him and the said Henry Mallory, that the said Trelawney was very shortly going over to Charles Stuart, and pressed him the informant, that he would sign a letter to the said Charles Stuart, which the said doctor Hewett had prepared; the effect whereof was, that the informant should engage, that he would have three thousand men ready for Charles Stuart's service, whenever he should please to command them; which was so great a number, that he and the said Mallory told him, they could not possibly engage for so many: but the doctor replied, he had been informed by Sir Humphry Bennett, that there would be so many men in Suffex as abovesaid; and pressed the informant earnestly to sign the letter, but he refused; all which, he saith, the said captain Mallory knoweth to be true. And the informant further saith, that the said doctor Hewett, taking him aside into another room, told him, if he did not do this, he would lose himself, and would be thought to deal treacherously with them, or words to that effect: but this informant still refused, saying, he would not engage himself to do impossible things, and to draw foreign forces (upon such a mistaken consideration) into the country: but the said doctor still pressed upon him, saying, he would be forced to write that to Charles Stuart, which would be much to his prejudice, if he did not do something; saying again, that the king (meaning Charles Stuart) would be sensible of his backwardness; and being very suddenly to come over, it might be his ruin: and with many such kind of persuasive and almost threatening arguments he was prevailed upon by the said doctor Hewett to sign a short letter drawn up by the said doctor Hewett to Charles Stuart, wherein this informant did tell him, that he did believe there would be five hundred horse raised in Suffex for his service; which letter was signed and delivered to doctor Hewett, in the presence of the said captain Mallory. This informant further saith, that when he received his commission from Charles Stuart, at East Greensted, he saw the said doctor Hewett, with his own hands, insert into the blank space of the said commission these following words, Sir John Stapley baronet; which words he the said Hewett said he had orders to put into the said commission; for he said, he had power to put in that title, or any other. And further this informant saith, the said doctor Hewett asked him, in what temper colonel Herbert Morley was in? to which this informant replied, that he thought he was very much discontented, and he did not know but that some of them might have engaged him in this present design; unto which the said Hewett replied, nay, that was contrary to their order; for he said, this man, meaning Charles Stuart, would not give a commission to any, that had been formerly excepted from pardon by his father; which, as this informant remembers, he did not afterwards tell unto doctor Hutchinson, when he was speaking to him of his resolution, to try whether the said colonel Morley would be engaged to join with them in this design.

This informant further saith, that about the middle of December last Mr. Thomas Nutt, being at his house in Lewes, told him, that he knew this informant could not be ignorant of those things, that were now in hand, for the bringing in the king, meaning Charles Stuart; and desired this informant to tell him something of it; whereupon he asked the said Nutt, what he knew of it; unto which he replied, that he did know something of it; and heard by one Mr. Mills, minister of Ason, that many persons were engaged in it; particularly mentioned major Smith: and the said Mills told him, that there were divers gentlemen in the east of Suffex, that were engaged to give their assistance in the business, and that he, for his own part, should be very ready to shew himself, when there should be occasion; and that he was confident his brother-in-law Mr. George Parker, Mr. Foster, Mr. Gildridg, and Mr. Wilson, would do the like. This informant further saith, that about a month since, major Smith of Steyning did desire him and captain Mallory to meet him at the lady Allford's, at Offington, and that he would send to Henry Binsted of Chichester to meet them there, who should give an account how things were in the west of Suffex, and how the horse, that lie at Chichester, might be surpris'd; and that accordingly this informant, the said Mallory, the said Smith, the

A.D. 1658. said Binsted, and one Mr. Marmaduke Wyvell, (who lived at the lady Allford's) did meet at the said place, and had conference together about the whole affair that related to Charles Stuart's coming over, and the insurrection thereof: and that the said Binsted told them, that colonel Gunter and himself, with such others of their party as they should gather together in the west, would in a morning betimes, newly after the soldiers were come off from their guard, seize upon their horses and arms; which being done, they should easily master the soldiers, and possess the gates of the city: and some other discourse there was for the seizing of the troop in Lewes, and the arms that should be found in the hands of the inhabitants of that town; the particulars whereof this examine doth not well remember.

Taken and acknowledged, the 22^d
of April, 1658. before us,
W. GOFFE,
HEN. SCOBELL.

J. STAPLEY.

A letter of intelligence from the Hague.

MONSIEUR,

Vol. lviii.
P. 377.

LES ministres des ^{estats generaux Denmark} 104 en 142 ne font que continuellement inciter les ^{estats generaux} 104 contre ^{Dennemark;} 142; ce qui procede en partie de la passion de ces ministres, et en partie de la ^{Denmark,} malice de 142, qui ayant si malheureusement guerroyé contre 141, voudroit bien planter aussi partie de sa misere sur ses meilleurs amys: mais comme l'annee passée ils ont tousjours mal avisé et mal jugé des affaires de 141, aussi à present ils jugent mal de 104 et ^{Sweden,} 105: car (hormis peu) les 105 monstrent fort petit appetit à present pour la guerre contre ^{estats generaux} 141, au moins jusques à tant qu'ils le voyent en la presente posture. On a fait si grand bruit de l'equipage des 48 navires; mais je vous assure, que hormis Amsterdam ledit equipage ne s'avance rien. Aussi les provinces en effect n'ont encore rien consenty du million petitionné, et sans cela il n'y a point de moyen de l'entretenir; car le commerce, principalement vers l'Oost, qui est le principal, est fort mortifié. Et plusieurs de 105 sont bien ^{Hollande} plus moderes que 112, qui pour quelque sien particulier interest voudroit engager les autres; qui se sentent fort peu interessés dans ce 179. Bref, je pense que 105 sera fort chambre mypartie, et ne courra pas si viste, ains au lieu de la peau du lyon se serviront ^{Cromwell France} maintenant de celle du renard; et voudront planter de la jalousie entre 130 et 140 contre 141; mais tous cela ne font que des pratiques pueriles, pour nuire aussi bien à ^{procteur, France. Sweden} 130, qu'à 140. Si 141 pretend quelque chose du peage au Sond, cela ne prejugea point à ^{estats generaux, Denmark;} 104, ains à 142; car la portion, que se payera à 141, ne se payera pas à 142; et ainsi se fera tout un, si 104 payé à 141, ou à 142. Ce n'est qu'une pure avarice et concupiscence de 105, qui veulent avoir tout, et ne laisser rien à 130, ou aux autres, comme l'est assés veu es Indes orientales; mais chaque tour a un retour. Je suis,

MONSIEUR,

le 3. May, 1658. [N. S.]

Vostre tres humble serviteur.

Intelligence sent from Holland by Mr. Downing.

Resolution of the states general, 3. May, 1658. [N. S.]

Vol. lviii.
P. 398.

MR. Huygens, and other deputies of their lordships for the affairs of the company of the East-Indies, have reported, that they have (in virtue of their lordships resolution of the 27. March) framed an answer, to give Mr. resident Downing, to the memorial which he presented their lordships the 21st of the said month, with certain attestations touching the damage and wrongs, that the ships and subjects of the commonwealth of England have suffered, in and about the Indies, by the subjects of the United Provinces; which answer hath been read in the assembly. Whereupon, after deliberation, their lordships lordships have thanked the deputies for pains therein, and ordered, that by Mr. Huygens' A.D. 1658. and Mr. Newport it shall be given to Mr. resident Downing.

J. SCHULENBORCH.

Agrees with the originall,

N. RUYCH.

Resolution of the states of Holland West-Friesland, 9. May, 1658. [N. S.] touching the dukes of York and Gloucester.

SYNDE ter vergaderinge bekend gemacht dat binnen dese provincie aengecomen ende haer jegenwoordich alhier in Sgravenhage onthoudende Waeren de hortogen van York ende van Gloucester meteenigen van haer gevolg is, naer ovorgaende deliberatie goet gevonden ende verstaen dat den heere van Heenvliet als surintendant van de Hoffhoudinge vande vrowe princeesse royale douariere vanden laetstoverleden heere prince van Oraigne gelaft sal Werden, gelyck desolve gelaft wert by desen de hochgemelte princeesse oyt de naeme ende van Wegen haer Ed. Gr. Mo. bekend to maecken derselver intentie ende resolutie le wesen dat de hochgemelte Heeren Hertogen van York ende van Gloucester met alle haer gevolg haer aenstouts wederom vervoegen buyten per ressort ende, gesach van haer Ed. Gr. Mo. ook haer daerinne niet wederomme en begeven doende ropport ende bericht van syn wedervaerm.

Resolution of the states general.

THE states general of the United Provinces of the Low Countries, having seen and maturely examined a certain memorial of Mr. Downing, resident of the lord protector of the commonwealth of England, Scotland, and Ireland, &c. as also the papers delivered with the same the 21st of March last, containing the complaints of divers English merchants trading in the East-Indies, upon the ill usage, that they say they have received in those parts from ships and officers in the service of the East-India company of this country, have found good to let the said resident know, that the directors of the said East-India company have made up a peace by several authentic pieces, and by the very letters of their agent, Mr. Frederick Skinner, and others residing at Bantam, in behalf of the said English merchants; that the Javan in Bantam (being Moors, and great enemies to the Christians) have perfidiously and totally broke the peace lately solemnly renewed; and also, that in an hostile manner falling upon the country about Batavia, they have burnt and ruined wholly, by their soldiers, all the houses, sugar-mills, and all the grain in the fields; so that the governor-general, and the counsellors of the said East-India company of this country, have been also constrained to take arms, and to block up this city and river of Bantam with their ships of war, their barges, and other boats; and have used so much civility towards the English merchants then at Bantam, that they did, by an express, forewarn them of their design before the departure of their ships designed for the blocking, to the end that they might have time to provide themselves against the inconveniences of this war, and prevent the danger thereof; offering them to assist them to the utmost of their power, and as far as reason required. And the firm ground of a war (whereunto there was a necessity) being laid, the law and customs of nations are such, that a bare hindrance of the ships of allies to enter into havens block'd up, ought not to be qualified in such odious terms expressed in the foresaid writings. The directors of the said East-India company of this state have also made appear to their lordships, that they of the ship Endymion accuse them wrongfully to have hindered them from lading rice, arrack, and water of Bantam, for their return into England; insomuch as they not only had permission to provide themselves at Batavia, but also of all other necessaries; as also those of the ship called the Care did sufficiently doe. The said directors have also amply shewn, that of what complaint was made to his highness the lord protector in the said papers, that the trees in Pouleron were cut down and spoiled, and the fort blown up, is a calumny found false; for that the governor and council of Banda write expressly, by a letter of April, 1656. that they would there regulate themselves precisely according to the agreements of the commissioners on both sides, and by consequence would deliver the said isle immediately (in the same condition that it was then) to those, that should come to demand the same, according to the advertisement of the said directors. What is mentioned in the said papers is not less repugnant to truth, that is, that the East-India company of this state should have offered 30000 pieces of eight, that they only might have the trade of pepper, and the English excluded; and that they should hinder the ship called the Olivebranch, to go to the Bantam, Sillabar and Indenpour; and that they endeavour to take away the pepper out of the ship called Golden Cock; and finally, that they hinder the English to go to Macassar, because those of the East-India company of this state were in war

A.D. 1658. war with those of that kingdom. As for the complaint of what happened to the ship Fellowship at sea, in his return from the East-Indies in April, last year, by a ship of the East-India company of this state, called the Orange, going thither, and that about two hundred leagues south of Cape Bona Speranza, according to the saying of some affairs of the said ship Fellowship, the said directors of the East-India company of this state have informed their lordships, and declared, that it is a thing, which, for their parts, they cannot believe nor accept for a truth, that the said Orange should so use the said Fellowship, as is held forth in the said papers, because he that commanded then the Orange, in all occasions hath carried himself so prudently and discreetly, that none could expect such proceedings and doings from him; and the less, that having been some days before at the said Cape Bona Speranza, there to visit the residents and situation of the East-India company of this state, according to a special commission, he gave a charge, and instructions in writing, to the government and council of this said place, that they should civilly and discreetly use the English ships, that touch there. The said directors have nevertheless assured their lordships, that if the said commander was guilty of the said complaints, that they will be ready to punish him severely for it, according to the exigence of the matter, and the excesses committed by him shall require; declaring moreover, that they would write again to the governor-general, and counsellors of the judges, that they would take care therein, and take such effectual orders, as well by themselves as their officers, that the treaty of peace, union and confederation, made 1654. between the lord protector and this state, in all and every article, may be punctually and specially observed, without doing or suffering the least violation thereof, their lordships not doubting, that the said lord protector considering, accordingly to his great wisdom, the true and veritable relation here made, will conceive, that the complaints of the said English merchants trading in the East-Indies are altogether groundless and false. But if the said English merchants will not rest herewith content, their lordships promise them, that they laying their action, which they pretend to have, in this country, and before the ordinary judge of the said East-India company of this country, according to the 24th article of the said treaty of peace, that good right and justice shall be administered unto them. Given in the assembly of the said states general at the Hague, the 3^d of May, 1658.

De Thou the French ambassador in Holland, to Bordeaux the French ambassador in England.

MY LORD,

Hague 3. May, 1658. [N. S.]

Vol. lviii.
p. 378.

I Did always believe, that the great doings in Flanders, for some design upon England, were not altogether without ground; but I also observe, that through the prudence and conduct of the council of England all the said designs are prevented.

Monsieur de Lombres writes to me from Posna, that he meeteth with many difficulties to get the commissioners together for the peace of Poland, being hindered through the artifices of the house of Austria, with whom the duke of Brandenburg hath made a treaty, which seemeth to engage him; but as yet it is not rectified; and he seemeth to delay it, and with good reason; for thereby he might draw the war upon his own countries, from which the house of Austria would be as little able to free him, as he did the king of Denmark in this last war. The states of Holland are not yet met; when they do meet, they will resolve about the employment of their fleet, and the sending over the lord ambassador Nieuport.

The examination of William Dyke of Faunt in the county of Suffex esquire, taken this 23d day of April, 1658. before William lord Goffe, and Henry Scobell esquire, two of his highness's justices of the peace for the city of Westminster and the liberties thereof.

Vol. lviii.
p. 360.

WHO saith, that about a month since, this examine being in Clifford's-inn-walks with captain Antony Stapley, the said Stapley told this examine, that there was a design for Charles Stuart's coming into England, and propounded to this examine, whether he would be of that party, or words to that effect; to which this examine answered, that he did not believe he could come in; and thereupon the said captain Stapley said, that he did know, that Charles Stuart had a great party for him, or words to that purpose, which was the substance of all the discourse that was between them at that time.

And this examine further saith, that, about a fortnight after this discourse, captain Stapley came to this examine's house at Faunt on a Saturday at night, and staid there until until wednesday, on which same day at night the same captain Stapley told this examinee, that it would not be long until Charles Stuart would attempt to land; and that the said captain Stapley thought the said Charles Stuart had a great party in England, and asked this examinee, what horses he this informant had; who answered, he had two geldings: and he likewise asked him, what arms he had; to which this examinee answered, that he had none. And the said Stapley said, that there were divers persons in the country who were engaged for Charles Stuart, and one person, whom this examinee might guess at, which this examinee did suppose to be his brother, but said he would name no persons. And this informant saith, that on wednesday this examinee went to bring captain Stapley on his way as far as Tunbridge, and there staid to dine together; and he this informant, and captain Stapley, sent a messenger for one Mr. Rivers, who lived about a mile and a half thence, to come over to them, who came accordingly; and captain Stapley taking notice of the horse, upon which the said Mr. Rivers rode, which captain Stapley told this examinee he intended for a charging horse in the intended insurrection; and asked this examinee, whether he thought Mr. Rivers would sell him; and thereupon this examinee asked Mr. Rivers, whether he would part with that horse, and asked his price, who offered him for thirty pounds; and Stapley said, if he would accept of a note under his hand for it, he would give him the price. And this examinee saith, that the said captain Stapley did, in the presence of this examinee, acquaint the said Rivers, that Charles Stuart was shortly to land; and Mr. Rivers was of the same opinion with this examinee, that his attempt would be in vain.

Taken and acknowledged, the 23d
of April, 1658. before us,

WILL. GOFFE,
HEN. SCOBELL.

WILL. DYKE.

The information of John Mills of Alfreson, in the county of Suffex, clerk, taken the 24th of April, 1658. before William lord Goffe, and Henry Scobell, esquire, two of his highness's justices of the peace for the city of Westminster and liberties thereof.

THIS informant saith, that about two years since, one Henry Bishop, late of Parham, Vol. lviii. in the county of Suffex, told this informant, (being then at his the said Bishop's house) P. 370. that there was a design on foot for raising a party for Charles Stuart, and asked this informant whether he would engage in it; to which this informant answered, he would consider of it: after which time this informant, removing his dwelling out of that part of the county, saw him no more in a twelvemonth.

And this informant saith, that major Smith wrote to this informant about a year since, to meet him at Brighthelmsted, which he did accordingly, not knowing of meeting any other person there, but there came thither Mr. Geeres; and then major Smith discoursed concerning a party, that Charles Stuart had raised in Flanders; and that they were modelled into several regiments; and did name the earl of Ormond, and some others, (which this informant doth not now remember) as those who did command them; and did ask, whether this informant thought he could engage any gentlemen in the east part of Suffex and Surry? To which the informant answered, he knew not, because he was but yet a stranger there; but told him, colonel Culpepper lived there, and he did not know but he might engage in it; and he the said Smith thereupon said, he thought colonel Culpepper was engaged already in Kent; and the said Smith said, that for the west part he would endeavour to gain whom he could; which was the effect of the discourse at that time.

And this informant saith, that about Whitsuntide last he met Mr. Geeres casually at Lewes; and the said informant asked him, when he heard of major Smith? who said, not long since, and that he had been in the west; and not long after, this informant met Mr. Hutchinson, who told this informant, that major Smith and he had lately heard from the king, meaning Charles Stuart, that they should procure what parties they could ready; and asked this informant, what he had done; who told him, this informant had not made any mention to any person; but said, that he would try what Mr. Nutt would do, and also Mr. George Parker.

And this informant saith, that one Mr. Corker, who lived at Bourne, meeting this informant at Jeffington, (whither the said Corker sent for this informant to come to meet him) told him, that he had been with Charles Stuart, who had an army, and thought to be in England within a little time, and advised this informant to engage whom he could on the behalf of the said Charles Stuart: to which this informant answered, he had little or no acquaintance in that country, so as he could not tell how to do much in that:

A.D. 1658. and that the informant returning again in the west parts, to the place where he formerly lived, he found major Smith had been there, and had endeavoured to engage some, as one Bransden, and one Booker of Poulsborough, who told this informant as much; and this informant conceives, that Mr. Bishop did engage John Monck of Hursttown; for the said Monck told this informant, that Mr. Bishop had engaged him, which was about six weeks before Christmas last. And this informant saith, that about that time he met Mr. Bishop at Hursttowne, at Mr. Beard's; and walking in the orchard, he inquired of this informant in what forwardness the business were in those parts on the behalf of the king, meaning Charles Stuart; to which this informant giving no answer suitable to his expectation, they had not any further discourse about this business, as this informant remembers. And this informant saith, that about twelve months since this informant acquainted Mr. Nutt with this business, and asked him, whether he would engage and go personally in the force for Charles Stuart, if any rising should be? to which Mr. Nutt replied, he would not; but if they did take away his horses, he could not help that; and that the informant did also, upon occasion of discoursing with Mr. George Parker, asked him the said Parker, whether, if there were a rising for Charles Stuart, he would engage in it; to which he answered, he meant to sleep in a whole skin, if he could. And this informant saith, that having once or twice before spoken with the said Mr. George Parker about this business, received no other answer but as aforesaid, or to that effect. And this informant saith, that if there were any other person engaged thereabouts, it is likely the said Corker did engage them, who was very active in it, and told this informant, that he had been a captain in the north, and was employed to Charles Stuart, and for him.

Taken and acknowledged, the 24th of April, 1658. before us,
W. GOFFE,
HEN. SCOBELL.

Jo. MILLS.

Mr. Claypoole to H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland.

MY LORD,

In the possession of the right hon. the earl of Shelburne.

I WAS very proud to receive your commands, and shall be at any time, but am unhappy in that I can be no more usefull or serviceable to you. I confesse we are all under very strickt laws and rules, and yet in great disorder (I may say) both in private respects and in publique; the reflections and consequences whereof, I am sure, reaches Ireland, and brings great troubles and burthens upon you, of which I hope I shall ever have a very great sense and sympathy. Yet we must all confesse, that God hath so qualified, so prepared, and so calculated, your spirit and genius for what you have done and suffered, that I am confident all hath bene advantageous to you, and hath brought you great honour and reputation (and will ever continue, I hope); for the which should I not congratulate, and be heartily joyfull, as for the concerns of my owne life, I were very unworthy to live. My lord, I cannot tell how to mention your kindnesse and favours to my brothers and sisters, and to my selfe, upon all occasions; for the great store of obligations that lies upon me, as well on their behalf as also my owne, I confesse neither I nor they can plead any desert, although my poore sister is very good, yet not so good. I wish my brother Wingfeild hath not too much presumed upon your goodnesse by his long absence. I think he did wayte upon some simple affaires (as they proved) with confidence of my wive's powerfull intercession for him. Should I request any thing at this time besides your pardon for him, it is, that you would please to reprove him sometimes, as also my other brother, who I feare will need it too much. My wife and myself have strong resolutions to waite upon you and my lady this summer, if their highnesses will give leave; but I say no more of it now, for fear of frightening you with the thoughts of such a trouble; I meane not, as to the seeing my wife. My lord, I must beg my humble service to my lady, (I hope my deare freind still) and must begg your pardon for my freedome, because I am,

MY LORD,

April the 26. 1658.

Your humble servant,

J. CLAYPOOLE.

The examination of Ralfe Croutchen of Midhurst, taken before the commissioners entrusted with the safety of the county of Suffex, taken the 26th day of April, 1658.

A.D. 1658.

WHO saith, he was at the house of Mr. Matthew Young, at Midhurst, in the county of Suffex, this last winter, about February last past; and saith, the said Mr. Young asked him this examine, whether he would not take upon him a corporal's employment, and fight again. To whom this examine said, Yes, he would, if he the said Mr. Young would fight. To that Mr. Young answered, he would fight; and then he this examine said to the said Mr. Young, If he would go forth and fight, he this examine would go forth and fight. He further saith, he thought the said Mr. Young, though he spake often to him this examine of fighting, he did but speak in jest; but at the third time saith, the said Mr. Young said he did not speak in jest, but was in earnest; and then the said Mr. Young did shew him this examine a buff coat, a gantlet, a head-piece, and two cases of pistols, and said he had spoken with several persons to go with him, by name, his brother, Mr. William Young, Thomas Wright, William Tate, and others he would speak to, to go along with him; and saith, the said Mr. Young asked him this examine, if he had a horse: to whom he this examine said, he had a horse; and then the said Mr. Young bid him this examine to provide him a sword, and said he would speak to the two Mr. Goldhams to go along with him the said Mr. Young; and further saith, the said Mr. Matthew Young said he was to be a lieutenant-colonel, and that he would speak to Mr. Francis Lewkno to be his lieutenant, and his brother William Young to be his quarter-master; and saith, the said Mr. Matthew Young said they were to seize on the county troops, and all the other troops that were in the several towns; and saith, these several discourses with the said Mr. Young were one time in the hall of the said Mr. Young's dwelling-house; but saith, the main of their discourse was in the study of the said Mr. Young's house, where the said Mr. Young did shew him this examine the arms, that are before expressed in this his examination. He further saith, the said Mr. Young said he would speak to Mr. Peter Betsworth, the younger, of Elsted, and to Henry Courtney, Mr. Buckland's man, and to Mr. Young's son, of Ambersham, and to other gentlemen of the county, but did not make mention of their names; and saith, he believes Mr. Matthew Young did bid him this examine to keep this discourse private; and saith, the said Mr. Young said he would do all this for the king of Scots; and saith, this rising should be just when the king and his forces should land; and that they should hear from the duke of Ormond, who would be, or was at London, when the king would come in.

Taken before us,

RI. MANNING,

C. DUCKETT.

JO. BARTHOLMEW,

The examination of George Gawen of Redhill, in the county of Suffex, taken the 26th of April, 1658. before William lord Goffe, and Henry Scobell esq; two of his highness's justices of peace for the city of Westminster, and liberty thereof.

THIS examine saith, that, about Michaelmas last was twelve-months, this examine came first acquainted with one Baron, by means of Charles Bickerstaf, who brought the said Baron to one Copley's a recusant, at Redhill; and the said Mr. Copley brought the said Baron to this examine's house; since which time this examine, and his wife, and Mr. Copley, were at the said Bickerstaf's house, where the said Baron was; but this examine did not know, that the said Baron was agent for Charles Stuart, nor did he ever communicate the same to this examine. And this examine saith, that about February last this examine coming to Croyden with a tax for the army, whereof this examine was collector, he met there with the said Baron, who asked this examine, if he knew how he the said Baron might convey a letter to major Smith, this examine's tenate: to which this examine answered, he was to send a man to Dr. Hutchinson for oats, which was not far from major Smith's; and thereupon the said Baron desired this examine, that his man might carry the same; and thereupon the said Baron delivered to this examine two letters, one directed to Mr. Hutchinson, and the other to major Smith; and the said Baron being desirous to inclose the letter to Smith in another letter, but wanting paper, the said Baron desired this examine to inclose the said letter to major Smith in a letter, and to write to him from the said Baron, that his the said Smith's adversaries

A.D. 1658. adversaries would come to a trial within three weeks; which letter this examine did accordingly write, and in it sent the said Baron's letter to major Smith by his this examine's servant, called John Hokum, who carried the same to Dr. Hutchinson's house, and from thence went with the letter to major Smith, and returned back to Dr. Hutchinson with a letter, as this examine believeth; and the said Hokum brought back a letter from Smith to this examine, wherein he wrote, that he the said major Smith could not meet the said Baron, for that here was an order for restraining all persons, who had been of the late king's party, from travelling above five miles from their home; but before this examine could send word thereof to Baron, he the said Hutchinson came to this examine's house, and took his letter, which he the said Hutchinson had sent by the said Hokum, and carried it to the said Baron. And this examine saith, that the said Hutchinson desired his money of the examine for the oats he had of him; but this examine having it not then ready, the said Hutchinson said, he would send for it; and this examine going so far as Croyden with Mr. Levet, his brother-in-law, who was going towards London, Mr. Hutchinson went with them; and alighting together at the Sun, found Baron there; and after some discourse between Baron and Hutchinson, the said Hutchinson desired this examine to pay five pounds of the money due for the oats unto the said Baron, which this examine promised to do; and hereupon the said Hutchinson told the said Baron so much in this examine's hearing; but this examine doth not know, for what the 5 l. was paid to Baron. And this examine saith, that, after the said Levet was gone towards London, this examine staying behind the said Baron, invited this examine, and the said Hutchinson, to dine with him the said Baron at his house, which they did accordingly, and there met with divers citizens and their wives; and after dinner this examine departed home. And this examine saith, that some time before this the said Baron having told this examine, that he should meet with major Smith shortly after, and this examine having desired him to let him know when it was, that this examine might also speak with him about his rent, the said Baron sent a note to this examine, that he was on a day therein appointed to meet the said Smith at Guilford, and desired this examine to meet him the said Baron at Letherhed, in the way thither, which this examine did; and they rode from thence to Guilford, and alighted at the Red Lion there, where, not long after, there came to them the said Smith, and one Francis Mansell, and Binsteed the innkeeper of Chichester, and Mr. Young. And this examine saith, that the said Smith, Mansell, and Binsteed, went out several times severally with Baron, and talked privately, but did not speak of any business in the presence of this examine and the said Young, who continued there from two of the clock that day till the next morning; and this examine saith, that Marmaduke Wyvell about Michaelmas term last came to the house of this examine, and said, he came from London, and was very inquisitive about Baron, and desired much to speak with him; and the said Wyvell staid two nights at this examine's house, but did not communicate any business to him. And this examine saith, that riding to the last assizes for Suffex, two men overtook this examine, and asked him, whether he did not hear any news; who answered, No; and thereupon they told him, they came from London, and that the city was much discontented with the present government; and that they would block up the Tower, and resolved to make a great business: but this examine saith, that they being both strangers to him, they had little discourse besides. And this examine, hurrying to the assizes, met there with Mr. Young; and going to dinner together, Mr. Young asked this examine, what news he heard; and thereupon this examine related what those strangers told him on the way.

Taken and acknowledged, this 26th

of April, 1658. before us,

W. GOFFE,

HEN. SCOBELL.

GEORGE GAWEN.

The examination of Duke Wyvell of Offington, in the county of Suffex, gent. taken this 26th of April, 1658. before William lord Goffe, and Henry Scobell esq; two of his highness's justices of the peace for the city of Westminster and liberty thereof.

Vol. lviii.
p. 375.

THIS examine saith, he was some times a captain in the late king's army, in Sir Bernard Astley's regiment; and above a year since he being at the house of major Smith at Steaning in Suffex, and asking the said Smith, what news, the said Smith answered, that he hoped they would be better times, or words to that effect; for that the king, meaning Charles Stuart, was getting an army, or promised some forces; and that in the last Michaelmas term this examine speaking with the said Smith upon the road, as they were were going to Mr. Gawen's, he the said Smith spake of a report, that there was to be ^{A.D. 1658.} 3000 men raised in Suffex for Charles Stuart; but said, that if 500 did appear, it would be well. And this informant saith, that coming up towards London in Michaelmas term last, at the George at Croydon, he met with colonel Bishop, Mr. Hutchinson, Hargill Baron, and a minister, whom this examine knoweth not; and after they parted from that inn, this examine asked the said Baron, what news? The said Baron answered, there was expected a messenger from the other side of the water, and then he would be able to inform him. And this examine saith, that he came up to London; and being at one Ireland a taylor's in White-fryars, Sir Humphry Bennett came in there; and this examine saith, there were no words between them about this business. And this examine saith, that about a month since the lady Alford having invited major Smith and his wife to dinner, he the said major Smith came thither; and as this examine believes, major Smith had appointed Mr. John Stapley and capt. Mallory to come thither; and being all together in a room, and the question being asked, what news? Mr. Stapley said, If any thing were to be done (which this examine understood of a rising) in that county, he should have a messenger from London; and this examine inquiring, which was the fittest place for their rendezvous, Mr. Stapley answered, that he thought Beeding-hill; and this examine saith, that he promised to come with two horses, one for himself, and another for his man; and said, that his horse was too little for him, but colonel Morley had one that would fit him; but he was doubtful, lest, if he should attempt to buy him, he should be suspected; and that after dinner the said major Smith asked this examine, whether he would take a troop of horse? to which this examine answered, that this examine had particular respect for the earl of Newcastle; and if he came over for the king, (meaning Charles Stuart) he would reserve himself to go to the said earl. And this examine saith, that on the tuesday following, he this examine went to Mrs. Middleton's at Hangleton, where Mr. Stapley and capt. Mallory had appointed to meet this examine; and there hearing, that Mr. Stapley was sent for to London, he this examine sent for capt. Mallory to inquire the cause of it; and capt. Mallory thereupon told this examine, that he feared the whole design was discovered.

Taken and acknowledged this 26th of April, 1658. before us,

W. GOFFE,
HEN. SCOBELL.

DUKE WYVELL.

The further examination of the said Wyvell, taken upon oath the 27th of April 1658. before major-general William Goffe, one of his highness's justices, &c.

THE informant further saith, that about two months since, being at the house of major Smith in Steyning, the said Smith told this examine, that he was informed, that the forces, that were to come over with Charles Stuart, were to be commanded by one Marfin, who he said was a brave soldier, and that the prince of Condé was also to come with them; and being asked, from whom else he had heard, that Marfin was to command, the examine saith, that it hath been since that time the general talk of the country; and that he himself did openly, either at the table, or by the fire, speak of it himself at the house of Mr. Goring of Highdown, in the hearing of the said Mr. Goring, which he saith was occasioned by the discourse, that then was amongst them, of the great army, that Charles Stuart had about Ostend on the coasts of Flanders.

April the 27th,
Taken and acknowledged before me,
W. GOFFE.

DUKE WYVELL.

Mr. Hanchett's information against Mr. Clayton.

SIR,

DISCOURSING with my nephew, he hath assured me, that Clayton knowes the ^{Vol. lviii.} depth and all the secrettes of this horid designe, and all the parties of consequence ^{p. 390.} therein engaged; for Clayton told my nephew, when he was in London last with him, that he knew the generall agent in this plott, and was with him, from whom he had all his orders. Heereupon my advice is, that, yf Mr. secretary is not fully satisfied in the depthe of this discoverie, that my nephew, being already discovered to that partie, as mentioned at large in the two paperes lately sent you, that he may appeare face to face with Clayton before Mr. secretary, soe fully to accuse him upon perticulers, as probablie may make him confes much more then yet he hath done. This, in my judgment, uppon

VOL. VII.

C c

hoopes

A.D. 1658. hoopes of mercie, may make him acknowledge the truth, which may be much to the vantage of his highness service.

Sir, yf you have occasion to write any letter to my nephew, Mr. Charles Wheeler, let your man leave it with sonne Charles Hanchett, whoe is a clarke in the registere's office in Chancery-lane, and constantly there every day; and thus it will come safe and speedily to our hands.

Youres,

26. Ap. 1658.

THO. HANCHETT.

Captain H. Smith to Secretary Thurloc.

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

Vol. lviii.
p. 393.

I HAVE enclosed sent you the lists, which were found in Sir Henry Slingsby's chamber. The bearer, major Waterhouse, will give your honour an account of the whole busyness. I may truly say both for him and capt. Overton, that they have acted the busyness very prudently, and have discovered much affection and faithfullnes to his highness. And I am very confident, they will with much freeness hazard their lives to doe his highness service. Sir, major Waterhouse can informe you, how far Sir Henry Slingsby did proceede with his lieutenant, who hath not carryed the busyness well; but intend to send him up to London ere long, and shall then give you a better account; which is all the trouble I shall give you at this time, but to subscribe myselfe,

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

Hull, Aprill 27. 58.

Your humble and faithfull servant,

HEN. SMITH.

The further information of George Hutchinson, taken upon oath the 27th of April 1658, before major-general William Goffe, one of his highness's justices of the peace for the city of Westminster and the liberty thereof.

Vol. lviii.
p. 391.

FURTHER this informant saith, that near three years ago Mr. Henry Bishop brought a gentleman to this informant's house, (then in Cockfield town) and desired this informant, that he might be conveyed over sea; this deponent asking his name, Mr. Bishop told him, he had none; whereupon the deponent answered it was sufficient to him, if he were his friend. The next day Mr. Bishop, the gentleman, and this informant, met at Thomas Greene's house; from which place, being near the sea side, he was conveyed, together with his servant, over sea; but this deponent could never get the name of him from Mr. Bishop; but this informant, and Tho. Green since, upon some circumstances, imagine him to be colonel Saxby; and the said Mr. Bishop told this informant, that he the said Mr. Bishop, Mr. John Weston, and Christopher Gardiner, had a commission from Charles Stuart to treat with the Levelling party, as he called them, in the army, and instanced in lieutenant-general Overton, Ludlow, Okey, major Wildman, who is his great familiar, colonel Mathews, Alured; and said, that they had great influence upon the army; but being demanded by major Smith, and this informant, whether he thought they would drive on Charles Stuart's interest? he answered, he could not tell, he thought so; but we could never get any positive answer, he being too subtle for us to deal with. We were very cautious of him, but do verily believe, if there were any design upon his highness's person, it was from this party; and that this informant thinks, by some words Bishop cast forth, that Syndercome and Saxby were both poisoned by this party; and this informant thinks, they would do as much for him, (if they could get at him) they being very near kin (if not the same with the Jesuited party.) And this informant farther saith, that about Shrovetide was twelve-month Mr. Bishop told him at Hendfield, that the marquis Hartford was to be generalissimo of Charles Stuart's party in England; and that his son-in-law, the earl of Winchelsea, was to be general in Kent; and that the general agent's name was Pile, a surgeon, as he conceives, to the late king; which agent this informant afterwards met in London at an apothecary's shop. And further this informant saith, that he did employ one John Pickering to go to capt. Lyndsey to engage him, and that the said Pickering did engage him, and had the promise of horses from counsellor Faulkner, and Mr. Watson, attorney. And further this informant saith, that he hath had discourse with one Peyto, a minister of Bolney, and one Jude of the same parish, and they seemed glad of it, and promised some assistance in it.

And

And further this informant saith, he hath seen Bickerstaff two or three times in A.D. 1658. Baron's company; and Bickerstaff heard their discourse, but replied little; but this informant verily believeth he is engaged, but cannot depose it upon oath; the like he saith for Gawen and Wyvell, having had general discourse of the design with Baron in their hearing. And farther saith, that he did engage one Langridge, an innkeeper in East-Grinstead, who told him, that Mr. Graves was then in the house, and told him, that colonel Moerly was engaged, but of the truth of it this informant doubts.

Also this informant saith, that meeting with Mille, a minister, he told him of one Corker, an agent for the east parts, George Parker, Mr. Graves, Mr. Nutt, two Elficks, and in general all the eastern gent. were engaged, and one John Monke of Hurston, Mille's nephew; but for Beard, it is probable, that he was engaged to his uncle Mille, but this deponent cannot depose it.

And this deponent hath heard, either from Bishop or Baron, that Sir William Waller, Browne, and Holles were engaged; and also colonel Harley, Sir Robert Harley's eldest son.

Also this informant saith, that Mansell was with them at the conference with Gunter about Shrovetide was twelvemonth, and he then came from Charles Stuart; and he believes he came once since from him about Whitsuntide last, but this deponent never saw him since the first conference.

This informant further saith, that Baron told him, that divers principal citizens had accepted commissions from Charles Stuart, but would name none; and this he did about the beginning of March last.

Taken and acknowledged, this 27th of April, 1658. before me,
W. GOFFE.

GEORGE HUTCHINSON.

Secretary Thurloe to H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland.

MY LORD,

I CAN only say, that wee are sensible of your condition in Ireland as to your want of money; but how to supply it for the present, I am not able to say; nor will it be any releife to you to acquaint your excellencye, that our condition is as badd here, though that be very true. The clamours, which wee have both from the sea and land, are such, that they can scarce be borne. At this very instant the councell is in debate of your condition in point of money; and there is not a treasury, which wee have here, but hath been look'd into, though not with all that successe as was desired. However, the matter is againe recommitted, with an injunction to the committee to sitt this afternoone, and to use their utmost endeavours to get some supplie for you, though it be the lesse. One way to raise money spake of is this, that the quitt-rents of the lands of the adventurers and souldiers from the 24th of June last be cal'd for, which, in respect that the tax of Ireland was then brought from 13000*l. per mensem* to 9000*l. per mensem*, and the consideration, why the quitt-rents were remitted was some yeares, was in respect of the greatnes of the tax sett for that tyme. How this will relish in Ireland, I knowe not: it is here thought very cleare and just; and I thinke it were convenient, that your excellencye would consider it, and write somthinge about it, according as you finde your satisfaction. But I beleive the reall suppliees must be by parliament, if wee could but hitt upon the callinge of one, or rather upon the thinges, which are to bee transacted in parliament. If you aske, what are the difficulties of cominge to those resolutions, I answere, I knowe none but the feares in some honest men, that they will settle us upon some foundations; and the doubts of some other, that if those feares still prevayle, and soe disappoint a settlement, that then a parliament will ruine us. These crosse apprehensions keepe things in a stand, to the prejudice of the publique, whatever it will prove to perticular persons; and this is the effect of the considerations, which have beene here for some weekes. In the meane tyme, we have made sure of the cavaliers, haveinge most of them under strickt guards in the severall countryes, and are resolved never to lett them goe, untill the nation be secured against them; judging it very unreasonable, that wee should be alarmed once every year with invasions and insurrections by them. This security from them must be had in parliament; and I doubt not, but wee are able to state their case soe to the parliament, that they will doe reason therein. Wee have a very cleare discovery of a most dangerous plott layd by them of a generall riseinge; and they have enticed many young gentlemen, that were never before of their party. Some examples of justice will be made by the high court of justice, which I suppose may sitt the next week. The persons to be tryed are not yet agreed. I thinke Sir Henry Slingsby, doctor Hewett,

In the possession of the right hon. the earl of Shelburne.

A.D. 1658. Hewett, Mr. Mordaunt, Sir Humphry Benett, John Russell, &c. may be some of them; and it's certeyne Sir William Waller was fully engaged. The people in most countyes, to cleare themselves from the suspision of this designe, are petitioning his highnes, and therein to declare their fidelity and readines to serve him.

For forrein newes, there is none of any great consideration. The Swede is not arrived, as wee heare, from Gottenburgh. Untill he returnes into Prussia, noe great action will be in those parts. The Poles and Austrians threaten him much; but they will not venture upon hym, unles they can keepe the elector of Brandenburg with them, which the Dutch doe endeavour to serve them in, haveinge wholly given themselves over to the interest of Spayne and the Austrian family. The election of an emperor doth not proceed very speedily; but yet little doubt is to be made, but that the kinge of Hungary will carry it. They had first resolved to have agreed the crownes of France and Spayne, before an election had been proceeded to; but it was perceived, that this was a device of France to delay the election, and thereupon that consideration is quitted till after the election.

The French are comeinge into the feild with their army; and although Hesdin is lost to the Spanyard, yet they have resolved to be before Dunkerque by the 10th of May, and hope to make a short worke of it. They will be 10000 foot of their owne, and 6000 English, besides their horse. Wee have alsoe sent them hay for the forrage of their horse, at their charge, which wee beleive the enemye will be in want of; and if the French keepe their day, it will be hard for the enemye to be in the feild soe soone. Marshall d'Aumont came to Mardyke some dayes since, with 600 fresh men; and upon Friday last he embarked 1200 French men, and is gone by sea to Oastend, with a design to surprize Oastend, beinge assured, that it will be delivered to him with very little difficulty, haveinge 3 of their burgers on board him as hostages. They came before it on saturday, but wee heare not yet of his successe. Wee judge it a tickelish thinge for a marshall of France to engage in. Sir William Lockart is now here to settle all thinges about the siege of Dunkirke.

This afternoone the committee mett upon getting money for Ireland. All that yet can be thought upon is to anticipate 3 months tax for you; I meane soe much as is assigned for Ireland, that whereas it will not be payed in the ordinary course till 1st Sept. wee hope to get by the 1st of July. I begge pardon for this longe confused trouble, which is given you by and faithfull and obedient servant,

YOUR EXCELLENCY'S most humble,

Whitehall, 27. Apr. 1658.

JO. THURLOE.

General Fletwood to H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland.

DEARE BROTHER,

In the possession of the right hon. the earl of Shelburne.

I HAVE not much to wright unto you. The counsell this day have had debate about your affayres, and have recommitted it this morning to the Irish committee, to consider which way to supply your occasions, being very sensible of the extremity thereof; and yet that still is answered, Is not England and Scotland in the same condition? That, which will be done, will be the endeavouring to borrow you a some of money. If we can get you 30000 l. by borrowing, it will be with the most. The delays of the parliament's sitting, which must be the way to rayse monyes by, hath disappoynted our occasions, that I know not which way we shall turn to supply our navall and land necessary actions. I am fearfull your condition makes you think we are heare not so mindfull of you as we ought to be; but I think, if you wer heare yourselfe, ther could not be more don, considering what an extremity our affayres are reduced unto through wants of that kinde. Ther is an inclination to secure the arreares upon the fee-farme rente in Irelande; but nothing will be therein positive without your privity and advise, which I doubt hath many intricacyes in it, that it will hardly satisfy. You must now rather consult what we can doe, then what we would doe. The inquiry into the late plott of the cavaliers hath so much taken up the time of his highnes, that some other affayres have not bine so forward in the dispatch, as would have bine; but this mercy is very great, and therefore may give us the more quietnes and satisfaction. Informing you of my lord Lockyer's return, and of other things, will excuse

April 27. [1658.]

Your most affectionate brother and servant.

H. Crom-

H. Cromwell lord deputy of Ireland, to secretary Thurloe.

SIR,

28 Aprill 1658.

OUR address will be forthwith ready, and therewith the picture of the whole army; for ^{A.D. 1658.} we are not content to view the outward appearances of men, but to discern by comparing of observations, what they are inwardly, and what the accidents, to which we are the most liable, may turn them into. ^{In the possession of William Cromwell, Esq;}

You do well to rid yourselves of the anniversary mischiefs, I mean the cavaliers plottings; and to endeavour, that not so much as any credible rumour of new insurrections should keep the well disposed people in continual fears, and foment hopes in others. I am weary of thinking any more of this unpleasant difficulty, money. The Lord keep us from the ill consequences of too great streights. Our ministers (some from all parts) having met at Dublin, about the improvement and regulation of their maintenance, assure me both jointly and severally, that all under their charge are in a good frame. Something is indeed to be abated for the flattering genius, which usually reigns in colonies, such as Ireland is; and yet I think upon the whole matter, that comparatively things here are in a very good posture. I remain &c.

I wrote to you about sending directions for a patent for baronet to be granted Maurice Fenton. I do not remember you gave me any answer to it.

H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland, to lord Broghill.

MY DEAR LORD,

[28 April 1658.]

OUR address had almost been with you, had not the poor major generall's afflictions (who has taken the most pains in it) somewhat retarded it. The lord of Warwick's death and your lordship's accidental distemper trouble me very much; but that other stubborn disease, which threatens the inversion of our whole affair, sticks close to me. I said in my last what I could upon that matter, and will henceforward pray, that God will beyond our expectation find out some expedient, &c. ^{In the possession of William Cromwell, Esq;}

This week about 30 ministers met at Dublin, from all parts of the nation, to contrive the the improvement and regulation of their maintenance. They all speak good things concerning the peaceable and obedient temper of their respective flocks. The lord stay the hand of his destroying angell in England, and prepare us for the worst. I remain

Your &c.

H. Cromwell lord deputy of Ireland, to lord Falconbridge.

MY LORD,

28 April 1658.

OUR address will now be soon on its way; I wish it may be of good example in England, About 30 ministers have met upon my invitation at Dublin, to treat about the regulation and improvement of their maintenance, which hath hitherto been carried in a mongrel way between salary and tythes. ^{In the possession of William Cromwell, Esq;}

They do all assure me of the peaceable disposition of their respective flocks in the countrey. The hypocrisy of men may be deep; but really any indifferent spectator would gather from the seeming unanimity and affection of the people of Ireland, that H. H. interest is irresistible here.

'Tis true, we are but a kind of colony, the inhabitants of which places are commonly more compliant with their present governours, more flexible to changes, more dextrous in the practise of flattery than other men; for their being indigent and continual suitors for some advantage or other, pensioners to the publick, such as have tryed their fortunes in many places before, used to the little tyranny of country governours, and always in expectation of changes in their superiours, makes them such; begetting in them a genius, more ingenious indeed, but less ingenuous than those have, who reside nearer the seat of empire. Nevertheless, due abatements being made for all this dress, I still believe his highness interest in Ireland to be full weight.

'Tis well the commissions, which are but in limbo, are not in hell; for my part I cannot believe, that his highness can yet do what he would. The excuse of Packer for Butler seems to me no great paradox; for I guess his highness intended rather a rebuke to the personal

D d

contumacy

A.D. 1658. contumacy of Packer, than to expresse distast to his whole party; for I doubt some may perfwade his highness he may command those more absolutely, who have been most used to obey him, and to understand the thorough use of such whom he has longest known; which is the reason, as I think, why he chuses to employ such as Butler &c. than others rather of better principles and parts. But I hope these things will in time wear of. I remain &c.

Mr. Ed. Swift to secretary Thurloe.

May it please your Honour,

Vol. lviii.
P. 395.

Findinge it very difficult by (reason of your waighty and multiplicity of affaires) to have accesse unto your honour, I am bold by this paper to signifie unto you, that my lord Fleetwood desireth, that you would please as speedily as you can to peruse your answer here with the inclosed, there being a desire by all the persons concerned in the estate mentioned therein, that a speedy settlement might be made of the same by a decree in chancery. Pardon the daring of him, whoe is

Your Honour's most humble servant,

Wallingford house

April 28: 58:

EDWARD SWIFT.

The examination of John Mordaunt Esq; taken the 28th of April 1658, before major general William Goffe, one of his highness's justices of the peace for the city of Westminster and liberty thereof.

Vol. lviii.
P. 396.

THIS examinant being asked, whether at any time he hath had any conference with Mr. John Stapley about Charles Stuart's invading England, or about any insurrection intended in this land, saith, that he hath been very free with the said Mr. Stapley, but doth not remember, that he hath had any particular discourse with him about any design of the king, meaning Charles Stuart, as to his invading those nations, or of any insurrection intended in this land.

And this examinant being further asked, whether he did at any time tell the said Mr. Stapley, that he was advised by Sir William Walker to engage him in the present design for the bringing in Charles Stuart, he saith, he did never speak of such things to the said Mr. Stapley concerning Sir William Walker, as he can remember.

The examinant being further asked, whether he hath not at any time pressed the said Mr. Stapley to take a commission from Charles Stuart, to serve him as a soldier, saith, that he doth not remember, that he ever had any such discourse with the said Mr. Stapley.

The examinant being further asked, whether at any time he hath had any discourse with Mr. Thomas Woodcock of Lewes about Charles Stuart's invading England, or about any insurrection in this land, he saith, he doth very well know the said Woodcock, but never had any discourse with him of any business of that nature.

The examinant being further asked, whether at any time he hath had any discourse with captain Anthony Stapley about Charles Stuart's invading these nations, or about any insurrection in England, he saith, he did meet the said Stapley at the Half-moon tavern over against the New Exchange, and that it is probable he might discourse of the news of the times, but doth not remember any particulars.

The examinant further saith, that he doth not remember, that he ever had any discourse at any time with any of the Howards concerning the design of Charles Stuart for invading England, or of any insurrection intended in this land.

The examinant being further asked, whether he ever had any discourse with one Hartgill Baron of Croyden, about the said design of Charles Stuart, saith, that he doth not so much as know the said Baron. And being asked, whether he doth not know one Francis Mansell, he saith, he doth not know him.

The examinant being further asked, whether he hath ever had any discourse with one captain Henry Mallory of Preston in Suffex, about Charles Stuart's invading England, or about any insurrection to be made for him in or about London, or any of the adjacent counties, saith, that he doth not know the said Mallory, nor never spake with him that he knoweth of, but saith, it is possible he might speak with him at the Half-moon tavern, where many persons did come into the room, where this examinant was with the said Mr. John Stapley and others that were unknown to him.

The

The examinant further saith, that he doth not remember, that he hath had any discourse at A.D. 1658. Vol. lvi.
any time whatsoever about the design of Charles Stuart's invading England, or of any insurrection intended to be made in or about London, or in any other part of these nations for him the said Charles Stuart.

Taken and acknowledged before me
the 28th of April 1658

J. MORDAUNT.

W. GOFFE.

The second information of Mr. William Dyke.

WHEN I dined at Tunbridge with Mr. Anthony Stapley and Mr. Edward Rivers, Vol. lvi. which was upon the 7th day of April 1658, I do remember there was in our dis- P. 328.
course these following passages:

After Mr. Stapley had communicated to us, that Charles Stuart had a design to invade England, and that there was a great party in this nation (amongst which number he himself was one) engaged for him, he did ask Mr. Rivers if he never had heard of it. Rivers his answer was, that he had not, and that he did not think of all men whatever, that ever he (meaning Stapley) would have acted any thing against my lord protector and this present government. To which Stapley replied, there was many grievances and oppressions, that must be removed. I then asked him, if he did not think there would be many more, if a strange people was brought in amongst us? To which he answered, that most of Charles Stuart's army were English and Scotch, and that he had not of others above 2000, which were German horse; and further he said, that there should be an army of those, that engaged for him in England, kept a-foot to counterpoise those he brought in with him. Then Stapley asked Rivers what gentlemen in Kent were engaged in that plot? To which he answered, that he thought the gentlemen thereabouts durst not trust one another; for he had not heard any one speak of it. Stapley replied, that the plot was laid in Kent, and in all places in the nation; and that in Kent there was a great man to command, as he knew, but named him not to us, as I do remember. After this discourse he told us, that he was first made acquainted with it by a gentleman that lives in London; but I never heard him name him, neither did I ever ask him what he was. After all these passages Mr. Rivers told me, he did believe Stapley had a design to insnare us: to which I answered little. As for my self I do seriously protest, I do not know of any man, that is in the least engaged in this plot. Neither had I ever any intelligence from any man, but from Stapley; and I have been so far from engaging in it, that I never did impart my knowledge in it to any man living.

WILLIAM DYKE.

Suff. ff. The examination of Samuel Rose of Lewes in the county of Suffex sadler, taken before me upon oath at Lewes aforesaid, this 30th of April 1658.

THIS examinant saith, that about the 4th or 5th of march last he was with major William Smyth of Stenninge at Mrs. Epsleys house of Truley in the parish of Abber- Vol. lvi.
ton in Suffex, they being there upon her desire, to appraise her goods, which she was upon P. 399.
the sale of after the death of her husband the said major Smyth. And this examinant having some discourse after supper, and amongst other their discourse the said Smyth told this examinant, that he heard the king of the Scots was coming over with eight or ten thousand men; to this, this said examinant replied, what he would do with so small an army here; the said Smyth answered, the counties would rise, and that this county amongst the rest would for one; and that many gentlemen in the country would engage in it. Upon this, this examinant replied, that he did not believe it; but the aforesaid Smyth replied, yes they would; and told this examinant, that there was one, who would appear in it, whom he little of, which was Mr. John Stapley; and this examinant saying, that he did not think so, the aforesaid Smyth replied, yes he would, and captain Mallory too, with other gentlemen of the country, but named none more. This examinant further saith, that asking the aforesaid Smyth, whether they would rise in Kent also, and he answering they would, and asking this examinant whether he knew any in Kent, that would do any thing in the business; to which he replied, that he had little acquaintance, only there was one Mr. Relph of Cranbrooke, that if there were any acting, he did think he would be in the business; and thereupon the aforesaid Smyth desired this examinant to speak to the said Relph, to know if he would engage therein, and if he would take a commission he would give him one; and this examinant asking the aforesaid Smyth, whether he had any commissions, the said Smyth replied, yes he had. About two

A.D. 1658. two days after, the aforesaid Relph came to this examinant at this town about making up an account between them, which they accordingly did; and in discourse between them, the aforesaid Relph asked this examinant what news in the country; and this examinant told him, there was mad news here, for the king was coming over with eight or ten thousand men; and that the said major Smyth told him, there would be a rising in this country, and also in Kent; and this examinant told the said Relph, that if he would engage in it, he did believe he might have a commission from the aforesaid major Smyth: thereupon the said Relph replied, that he would not meddle with no such business, and if he should do any such thing, he would not do it without a commission.

This examinant being further demanded, whether he did not see the aforesaid Relph since they had this aforesaid discourse, saith, that the said Relph came about the 14th day of this month, to see this examinant, hearing he was not well. And being further asked, whether there had not letters passed betwixt them, since their former discourse, this examinant saith, that there has not any letters passed betwixt them since, and further saith not Taken before me

ROBERT GIBBON.

SAMUEL ROSE.

Suff. ff. The examination of Mary the daughter of William Wadey of Sillington, taken before the commissioners for the safety of the said county the 30th of April 1658.

Vol. lviii.
p. 401.

THE said Mary confesseth she found a book on the ground before the door of one Thomas Hampton of Sillington on saturday last before the date hereof, containing about six leaves printed; wherein was written, that any man or woman, that should resist the king, should be cut as small as herbs to the pot. And that a king came into London in woman's apparel with a man waiting upon him in a grey coat, and was in London a fortnight; and when he went thence, he left behind him two letters; the one in his own bed, the other in his man's bed; and said he left them to pick on. And saith, her mother Elizabeth Wadey heard her read part of that book, and bad her lay it up, and according she laid it into the cupboard. And the monday following the said Mary saith, she gave the book to goodwife Hampton's girl; and that now goodwife Hampton hath him. And she the said Mary further saith, that she saw Mr. Peircy Goring, and two other gentlemen, one in black, and the other in black cloaths, with a grey coat, and rode by the said Hampton's door on the same day she found the book; but she found the book before she saw them ride by.

The examination of Elizabeth the wife of William Wadey before the said commissioners the day abovesaid.

The said Elizabeth saith, her daughter Mary above named told her, that she saw Mr. Peircy Goring and two other ride by in a lane, and she found this book after they rode by; but she, not believing her, did beat her, after she confessed she found it at goodwife Hampton's door. And she saith, before she beat her a girl told her, her daughter Mary found it at goodwife Hampton's door. And she said, she heard her daughter read out of that book, that the king had been in London a fortnight; and when he went away, he left two letters in his bed: but she remembers not she heard any king by name in the book; but she read, that every gentleman, that was for the king, might have one of these books.

The examination of Elizabeth Hampton taken as abovesaid.

The said Elizabeth affirmeth, that she, nor none of her family, to her knowledge, did ever see such a book, nor heard it read. And further she saith, that Jonas Tomson's wife told her, that the said Jonas saw a gentleman on the 29th of April 1658, at the house of William Wadey abovesaid; but who it was he did not know.

The examination of Mary Sewell of Sillington, the day abovesaid, upon her corporal oath.

The said Mary saith, that she having heard of such a book was found by the said Mary Wadey in Chilington lane, that the said Mary told her this deponent, that she met Mr. Peircy Goring (and two other gentlemen rod presently after him) in the said lane, and the said Mary found the said book after they were passed by, as she told this deponent; and this deponent saith, she went to the house of William Wadey, and wished him to acquaint some some with it, otherwise it might bring trouble upon him: and he answered, he cared not, for A.D. 1658. the said book was far enough before that time; which was the Wednesday following the Saturday it was found.

MARY * SEWELL her mark.

A second examination of Mary Wadey within named, taken the within said day, being the 30th of April, 1658; before the commissioners for the safety as follows, viz.

The said Mary affirmeth, that she found the book within named, upon Saturday before the date above written, in Chiltington-lane, after she met Mr. Peirce Goring, and two other gentlemen ride through that lane the same day; and that she told Mary Sewell within named, that she so found it, and she read part of it to her mother, and she bid her lay it up in the cupboard, where it lay until Mr. Peirce Goring came for it himself on Tuesday morning following; and he told her he lost it, and gave her two pence to let him have it again; and that her mother saw Mr. Goring go away from their house, and that she laid up the two pence into the box of the said Mary.

The second examination of Elizabeth the wife of William Wadey, taken the day above-mentioned.

She acknowledgeth that such a book was brought in by her daughter Mary, and she will not speak any thing in it, nor knows not any thing; but saith what her daughter speaks above said, may be true for what she knows,

GEORGE TAYLOR.
RICH. KNOWLES.
THO. BALLARD.

Major-general Jephson to secretary Thurloe.

SIR,

I Arrived here last night, and have had this day my first audience from the duke, and Vol. lix. beene by him very courtesye and civillie entertained in his court; and find nothing P. 403. which should give mee occasion to doubt, but that his highnesses propositions may be well receyvd here, especially 443 501 23 14 8 62 12 29 26 441 548 though even in that I may meete with some opposition. In my journeye hither I soe ordered the matter, that (although I was fayne to ride some Dutch miles out of the way to bring it to passe) I met with count Slippenback, and had three or four houres discourse with him, who hath beene 7 20 44 89 84 301 29 5 27 8 17 3 70 66 135 548 267 4 8 I his treatys to Poland and Branden.

99 245 461 38 26 belonging 441 579 108 596. By him I find that there is a n a l l i a n c e full y a g r e e d by 4 19 36 77 96 100 62 88 55 70 209 3 62 93 23 29 70 66 135 Brand. w i t h and Ho. of Austria, by the K. of Sweden's f u 596 both 13 44 12 20 584 108 578 but whether invited 135 548 26 45 6 c c e f f e s or for what other c a u s e 7 31 70 79 94 29 45 366 204 497 372 7 36 6 26 14 I cannot posi- b u t he at r e f u s e t h the tively say; 11 6 12 253 110 present 23 14 37 50 79 29 12 46 444 ratifi- of that a g r e e m e n t; cation 365 443 36 42 23 29 70 33 89 19 12 and I find it generally believed that 443 315 comming 326 possiblye 27 23 70 50 89 19 103 245 190 62 f f e n t i n g to it

26 45 89 88 103 269 441 274. The prince electour seemed very kindly to embrace the assurance of his highnesses friendship, and told me, he would presently give order to some of his counsell to receive my propositions, in which, since I perceive his highness seems to be so much concerned, I shall give them in with as much strength as argument, as I am capable of; and I doubt not, give reasons (not very easy to be answered) that it can neither stand with 23 29 49 44 18 67 17 19 354 245 7 67 6 i l i n t e r e f t for him to join K. of Sweden's e 44 8 67 88 54 70 23 29 94 103 204 244 441 264 with 548 26 29 n e m i e s, or to give his v o i c e to H. of Austria for 19 29 5 100 70 26 366 441 230 245 50 40 67 7 89 441 578 204

A.D. 1658. the e m p i r e. Brand. make s against K. of S.
 444 29 33 52 67 90 89. I find that the greatest scruple 596 319 45 117 548 is his against the r e f o r m e d the p r o 271 245 severitye 117 444 23 29 37 17 90 81 14 9 religion 444 27 23 40
 f e f f o r s of it and d e of the m 63 89 79 94 57 90 45 365 274 108 328 9 29 incapable 365 444 5
 o f t o f f i c e s in his 40 26 12 15 113 17 2 37 67 55 70 79 267 245 dominions, wherein if to K. of S. or a his highnesse be pleased to give me orders, eyther by a particular letter 441 548 366 4 n y other 19 3 372 waye, it may put an end to severall differences, which now obstruct 4 more 406 u n i o n
 6 30 67 40 30. In the mean while I shall doe what lyes in my power to prevent any inconvenience, that may arise thereby. Sir, I know not whether you expect it, or whether your other ministers send you all their speeches and propositions verbatim: whatsoever I have judged fittest for your knowledge, I have sent; and constantly the substance of all my transactions: but trulye, sir, to send you all the papers, whereof a great many are but matters of forme, I have thought to be too great a trouble for you, and would looke but too like formality in mee; but if I knew that it were your pleasure it should be done, I should not fayle obey you. But so much I dare promise, that if it shall please God to bringe mee safe to you againe with my papers, I shall give you a very punctuall account of all things I have acted in pursuance of your commands, since I left England. This afternoone I receyv'd one of the 16th Instant from Mr. Morland, which gave mee the unwelcome newes of your indisposition, which I hope had no long continuance. I hope to dispatch your commands here in ten or twelve dayes at the most, and then to returne directly to the king of Sweden, there likewise to put your orders in execution; and then to have the happinesse not long after to kisse your hands in England, where I shall endeavour to manifest to you how sensible I am of your continued favours in my absence, and how much I think myselfe obliged for ever to bee,

SIR,

Your most faythfull, and affectionate humble servant,

Berlin, the 30th of April, 1658.

WM. JEPHSON.

H. Cromwell. lord deputy of Ireland, to lord Falconberg.

MY LORD,

† April 31. 1658.

In the possession of William Crom-
well, Esq;

WHEN your lordship is weary of the trouble of this unequal correspondence, you must find some better evasion, than that of calling what you write follies, which indeed is not otherwise than as all things are such and vanity. Although there be nothing new under the sun, yet to us novices, for want of years and conversation all things seem such.
 Besides, my lord, I cannot but esteem whatever your lordshipp writes but to be newes, because we worthily admire it: for although we may contemplate and ponder upon all things, yet we can properly admire but only such as are new. Wherefore I say, your lordshipp cannot but write newes, since we cannot but admire what you write. I thank your lordshipp for the articles between the Dane and Swede. I perceive the Swedes conditions are not full, nor so glorious, as was noised; neither is he properly more master of the Sound than he was before; otherwise than as the Dane is become less able to keep it, when the Swede shall think fitt to take it from him. The best news here is, that there is none; and next to that, that the address from our army goes on very smoothly, men being free and unanimous in their subscriptions of it.

I have obeyed your commands in troubling your lordship with a character, but shall never make use of it, when I declare myself

Your &c.

† There seems to be a mistake of the month in this and the following letter: it is probable, that it should be March.

H. Cromwell

H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland, to lord Broghill.

MY LORD,

YOUR lordship not using your character, leaves the understanding of all affairs (as to A.D. 1568. me) in cyphers, your lordship being the only key whereby I read them. Our address runs very smoothly. I hoped we needed not the copy of that from England to draw ours by. I hope we mean as well as they, tho' we use not the word principles and engagements so freely as they do; which, altho' in themselves they are very honest expressions, yet I have observed a sedulous disposition in them, who delight much to cant in them. I beleive the army of England use them in that sense, rather from a custom their tongues have got, than from any Triplo-heath-habit of their affections. Really I can only pray for a happy issue of what is under consideration. Your lordship will be please to impute this brevity to want of matter, rather than to any wearying to converse with your lordship any way whatsoever; for I am unalterably

Your &c.

A letter of intelligence.

Bruges

111 this 22^d of Aprill, 1658. N. S.

Ch.St.D. John D. York D. Glouc. Conde a n d Marcine i s i n Bruxels. Ch.St. f o l Vol. lviij. P. 359.
 104 105 106 123 131 1 52 14 132 35 73 36 53 112. 104 and his 23 56 44
 l o w e r s v e r y p o o r e. D. York h i s d o 45 57 86 18 69 74 is 81 19 70 94 61 57 58 71 20 106 and 31 37 75 15 59
 r a n t o u t h i g h l y; w o r d i s n o w 72 2 54 77 it 60 82 78 33 38 27 34 46 95; the 87 56 69 15 39 76 54 57 88 t h e f e i l d s. g i v e o v e r altogether for 78 34 21 24 22 35 47 16 76. Most 28 36 83 18 56 84 19 70 the h o p e s g o i n g f o r E n g l a n d; 31 58 62 20 73 of 29 59 36 55 30 25 60 70 21 52 27 44 3 55 14; and indeed
 f e w f h i p s t h a t l i e
 I see noe probabilitie, onely theise 25 18 89 76 31 36 64 73 79 32 4 80 44 37 18
 s a t O f t e n d. Garrardi s f e n t t o A m f t e r 74 5 77 57 75 18 19 52 14. 121 35 75 76 20 52 79 80 56 1 48 75 78 18 72
 d a m; c l o s c a r r y f e a r 17 2 49 for as 10 47 56 74 as they 11 2 69 70 96 it, the most of my 26 18 5 71
 e f r o m t h e n c, f h i p s. Conde i s n 19 is 23 69 57 50 77 31 20 52 12 I mean for 73 32 37 61 74 131 36 74 53
 o w r a i f i n g w h a t f o r c c a n, g i 57 86 69 1 37 74 38 54 27 88 32 3 80 26 58 70 12 hee 13 5 55, and 30 39
 v e s e a c h m a n f i x c r o w n e s c o t
 81 18 76 18 1 11 31 51 2 52 74 36 90 11 69 58 89 53 19 73 and 12 60 80
 e: f a y e t h t o m y h e e r i n g, 20: hee alwayes 75 3 97 20 77 34 77 60 51 97 33 21 22 71 36 52 30 that he b o n e t i n E n g l a n d. will leave his 7 58 55 20 76 39 52 18 53 27 44 1 54 14. I dare not presume to t h i n g o f m y o p i n i o n f fay or give any 78 31 37 55 28 56 26 57 94 58 61 39 52 35 59 53 untill I 73
 e e t h e a r m y d r a w e n t o g e t h e r, 18 19 78 32 20 4 70 48 96 14 71 5 88 21 54 80 60 29 22 77 34 12 72, p e o p l e c a m e f r o m B which now will be shortly. The 62 18 56 63 44 70 that 10 1 53 21 23 69 57 48 8 u r b o u r g M a r d y k r u n s h e n 81 70 9 72 82 29 33 and 48 1 72 16 94 40 69 85 52 73 away from 34 18 54
 c f a f t e r t h e y c a m e 11 26 4 14 77 20 70 then ever 78 32 21 95 12 5 49 22 to it. The Deanes levie Middleton i s
 goeth still on in Holland, and draweth away many of our foldiers from hence. 119 36 76
 c o m t o Bruxels. Ormond i s n o t r e t u r n e d f r o 13 56 49 78 57 112. 113 37 76 52 58 79 70 18 80 81 72 53 19 14 23 71 60
 m y o u r p a r t e s D a n i e l n e a l e a n 49 96 56 81 71 63 1 72 20 77 76 17 2 52 35 21 44 O 53 22 4 45 18 5 54
 d N i e k A r m o r e r w i t h h i m t o 14 55 36 11 42 1 72 50 56 69 18 70 is 86 37 78 83 34 38 51 ther is 78 56
 w g o n f i n c o n e P a l d i n g w a i k f 86 27 57 55 76 38 52 12 58 53 20 64 4 47 15 35 52 30 of 88 1 38 43 23
 e i l d f q u i r e l b u r g h B o r r
 18 39 44 16 and 73 65 82 36 69 19 A 45 6 84 71 30 31 neere 8 58 71 72
 59

A.D. 1658.

o w B r i g g s i n Y o r k f h e i r e t 59 89 9 69 39 27 28 76 35 52 94 60 70 41 73 31 18 37 71 19 All that 77
 h a t b e e l o n g s t o Ch. St. g o o d s f e r
 34 1 77 7 18 19 44 56 54 27 73 78 57 104 28 58 59 16 74 and 75 20 69
 v a n t s g o n 81 2 55 80 76 is 30 66 52 this day from hence ther is but few left onely wee that d e b t

are in 17 20 8 79. Noble Sir, I am alwayes fearfull that myne doe miscary, or that you are offended, for I have not had the honor to heere from you but once this six moneths. If I knew any fayled, I should strive to fynd another way. Sir, when you think fitt, I humbly beg your commands. I am weary of this place: if you think fitt, you may direct yours hither. I am forced to trouble you so farr, as to tell you, that I have bin sicke this fortnight, and indeed in want: but sir, bee confident what is above sayed is all: so craving pardon for this bouldness, I rest,

SIR,

Your most obedient

and humble servant,

MARGRAT SMITH.

Responsum nomine suæ serenitatis electoralis Brandenburgicæ, domini nostri clementissimi.

Ad capita

Nomine serenissimi, et celsissimi domini protectoris Angliæ, Scotiæ, & Hyberniciæ, per illustrem ejus ablegatum proposita.

Die ii. mensis Maij anno salutis, 1658.

datum.

Vol. lix.
 p. 214.

AMICITIAM, quam cum serenissimo regæ Sueciæ pro communi salute protestantium, jussu domini sui primo loco suadet dominus ablegatus, vel antequam summa rei Suecicæ regis suæ majestati delata esset, magni æstimavit, imo ambivit sua serenitas electoralis, nihilq; ejus gratia in se desiderari passa est, quod a fido amico bonoq; vicino jure meritoq; expectari potuit. Apprimeq; constabunt ejusdem utrinq; rationes, usq; quo infestis sua majestas Poloniam aggressa est armis. Exinde autem reipsa compertum est, adeo connexas esse suæ serenitatis electoralis status cum regni Poloniæ statu rationes, ut hic concuti nequeat, quin sua serenitas electoralis collidatur: et equidem, quæcunq; tandem inita fuerit via modusq; neutiquam evitari potuit, quin tam superioribus quam moderno Suecico in Prussia Poloniaq; gesto bello, præcipua in suæ serenitatis electoralis domum redundarint incommoda. Proinde unica hæc expediendæ salutis astringendorumq; insolubilis amicitiae naxum superesse videtur ratio, ut quam primum pax inter utraq; regna reducatur, cujus gratia si auctoritatem suam interposuerit, serenissimumq; regem Sueciæ ad certæ pacis conditionis, præ speratis ex bello commodis, amplexandas induxerit serenissimus dominus protector, non tantum magnis discriminibus suam serenitatem electoralem liberaverit, verum de orbe Christiano, quem a barbaris et infidelibus tot seculis tegit propugnatq; Polonia, plurimum merebitur. Hoc dum aget sua celsitudo, serenissimus elector suo loco dabit operam, ut serenissimus rex Sueciæ a Polonis, modo æquam voluerit, honorificam duraturamq; obtineat pacem.

Quod ad secundum attinet, optandum quidem esset, tale caput legi posse orbi Christiano, quod ob communia sacra advocatum religionis suæ haberent protestantes; verum cum non unius hæc res sit arbitrii, et nisi totam imperii compagem solvere velit sua serenitas elector, secundum leges fundamentales et instituta majorum id pro rite legitimeq; concluso necesse est habeat, quod major pars electorum, quam catholici constituunt, in rem communem censuerit, pro moderno Europæ statu, vel ipsorummet protestantium interesse reputat, tuta potius quam speciosa sequi consilia, nec ultra niti, quàm ut pactis jureq; jurando religionis indemnitati caveatur.

Ultimum ad conservandam sacri imperii quietem tranquillitatemq; pertinens caput, summo opere sibi commendatum habet sua serenitas electoralis, eoq; sine suis ad conventum Francofurtensem inprimis mandatum dedit legatis, ut omnes ineant rationes, quo pactis Monasteriensibus sua constet firmitas, regi; Christianissimo nihil denegetur, quod ex præscripto eorundem postulare potuerit.

Cæterum sua serenitas electoralis domino ablegato gratiam et benevolentiam suam propenso desert affectu, et fausta quæq; exoptat.

Subscriptum et signatum.

FREDERICUS WILHELMUS, ELECT.

Vice-

Vice-admiral Goodsonn to Secretary Thurloe.

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

UPON my last writing on the 24th of April to the commissioners of the Admiralty, Vol. lix.

I humbly desired, that their honours wou'd ... to yourself what might be of use in mine; p. 1.
for at that  have written to your honour the arrival of marshall D'Aumont, with (as they say) about 12 or 1300 officers and soldiers * pleased himselfe and about 20 of his officers to take up  me these eight daies, but as yet is not pleased to give me  designe. I have according to my abilities treated him civilly, and shall continue so doing, whilst he is with mee; and so much the rather, because he hath told mee, that his highnes and the commonwealth of England have an adventure embarked with him, to which (when I shall further know) I shall give all ready and chearful assistance. I have received advice by one that came from Ostend, that they are in a very great fear there; and have kept their gates shutt these ten daies, suffering none to pass out without ticket. Two of six shippes bound from Ostend (mentioned in my last to the commissioners of the Admiralty as aforesaid) I understand are again hauled in and dismounted. I formerly gave account of the Dartmouth's lying between the Maze and Welings. The said frigate come in yesterday with 3 prizes retaken from the enemy, as in the inclosed. I have sent the Assistance and a ketch to supply her room; but judge that coast would require more shipping, if they could be spared. Here are only 5 shippes, and the two gallies upon this station. I remaine

YOUR HONOUR'S

Very humble servant,

Speaker off Ostend,
the 1st of May, 1658.

WILLIAM GOODSONN.

The information of Henry Bensted, of Chichester, in the county of Suffex, inn-keeper, taken upon oath, this first day of May, 1658, before William lord Goffe, and Henry Scobell, Esq; two of the justices of the peace for the city of Westminster, and liberties thereof.

THIS informant saith, that on this day was three years, one Francis Mansell, a merchant, Vol. lix.
came to this informant's house, and pretending that there was a parcel of wine to be p. 3.

bought at Shoreham, and that this informant might have a pennyworth in it, drew this examinant to go with him unto colonel Gunter's, where they staid that night; and the next morning, the said Mansell told this examinant, that a person, that was then in the house with colonel Gunter, whom he called Mr. Watkins, had an interest in the wine, and would go with them; and as they were upon the way this examinant observing, that they went not the direct way, and the said Mansell desiring this informant to ride before, and see whether there were not any house in the way, this informant began to suspect there was something more in it, and desired the said Mr. Mansell to tell him the reason of it, and who that was that was in his company, who seemed rather like a butcher than a merchant; whereupon he said, Mansell told that informant, it was the lord Wilmot. And this informant being much troubled, that he should be so drawn into a dangerous business, the said Mansell told him, this informant, that he was now ingaged, and must go through; and thereupon this informant went with the said Mansell and the lord Wilmot, to major Smith's house at Steyning, where they lay, and from thence went to Geere's, and so got a boat to go to sea; but this examinant came back from them; and the next day the said major Smith sent for his informant to come to them, the lord Wilmot being come back by reason of a leak in the boat, and intending to go for London; but this informant sent word he would not come to them, being sorry that he had gone so far. And this informant saith, he doth believe, it was the lord Wilmot; for that he did tell the informant, that he had made several escapes.

And this informant saith, that about a year and a half since, he was going to see a brother he had, and called in by the way at major Smith's, and there saw one Baron, and Bickerstaffe, and colonel Bishop, (which were all strangers to this informant, save that he had once seen Bickerstaffe at this informant's house with Mr. John Butler, his brother-in-law) and they were privately whispering together; and this informant asking what news, and who these persons were, the said Smith told this informant, that Baron was an active man for the king; and the said Baron in discourse said, that the king, meaning Charles Stuart, was preparing an army to come over; and that about shrovetide was twelve months, there met at this informant's house at Chichester, the said major Smith and colonel Gunter, and one Ames, and Crosfield, and the said Mansell, who was then lately come back from the king, meaning Charles Stuart, with whom he had been; and the said Mansell made a relation of the condition of the said Charles Stuart and his army.

A.D. 1658. And this informant saith, that he coming to his house in Michaelmas term last, he accidentally met with the said major Smith, who asked this informant, whether he would not go to Sir John Leeds; and this informant thereupon went to the lodging of Sir John Leeds, but there was nothing spoken of any business there. And from hence this informant went with the said Smith to the Lamb tavern beyond Clements, where there came the said Baron and Matthew Young; and the said Baron did there speak of his brother, that was an agent for the king, meaning Charles Stuart; and that colonel Bishop was one of the best friends the said king had, in dividing the army here, and some other general things. And that about two days after this informant met the said Baron, and they went to the same tavern, where came to them colonel Bishop; and the said Baron did there procure a blank commission from Charles Stuart for raising of forces, and did there consult of some names to be inserted; and they did insert the names of Sir John Pelham, Sir Henry Goring, then Henry Goring, Adrian May, William Garroway, Mr. Lukener, and Sir William Morley; and delivered this informant the commission to communicate the same to those present; but this informant, after he had considered of it, did dislike it; and that the said Smith brought this informant to Sir Humfry Bennet, at his lodging in Milford-lane, and had there some private discourse; and the said Sir Humfry Bennet did desire to see the commission, which this informant did shew him; and that Sir Humfry Bennet saying, that there might be three thousand raised in Sussex, that this informant did tell him, that there were hardly two hundred to be expected, and that Sir Humfry Bennet was speaking of the place of rendezvous. And this informant further saith, that when upon the delivering of the said commission to this informant, this informant said, he did believe none of those gentlemen would meddle in it, he the said Baron bid him tell them for their encouragement, that they should not act in this business, until they did see London up in arms, the army together by the ears, the king, meaning Charles Stuart, landed; and for the lord protector, he was an old man, and might die; and that three of them would come to pass, they might be sure: by which words this informant did conjecture, that they intended to destroy the lord protector, which made this informant very fearful; and thereupon when he came home, he soon after burnt the said commission, and never shewed the same to any of the said persons named in it, nor to any other person to this informant's remembrance. And this informant further saith, that in Hilary-term last the said Baron wrote a letter to this informant, to give him a meeting at Guilford, whither this informant came, together with Mr. Matthew Young; and there were then present the said Baron, Mansell, and Smith, and one Gawen; and Baron did there acquaint the company, that the king, meaning Charles Stuart, was coming over, and had 9000 foot, and 1000 horse, and was so ready, as that his provisions were shipped; and that London would be in a readiness, and the army together by the ears; and that the said Baron asked this informant, what he had done with that commission; and this informant saith, that he had not shewed it to any of the said gentlemen, because he was confident they would not have any thing to do in it. And that the said Young, about two months since, wrote a letter to this informant, to write to major Smith to give him a meeting; and the said Smith sent word to this informant, that he would give him a meeting at one Mr. Seston's, whither this informant also went, and met them; and then the said Young asked this informant, how things were in Sussex, and what preparations there were; and said, that it was expected every hour, when the king, meaning Charles Stuart, would come over; and said, he had a great army of 9000 foot, and 1000 horse, and provision of arms; and that the Dutch had agreed to transport them. And this informant saith, that about a month since, this major Smith sent a letter to this informant to come to the lady Alford's to meet with Mr. Stapley, whither this informant came; and Mr. Stapley took this informant aside to the window, (there being in the room Mr. Stapley, and captain Mallory, and Mr. Wyvell) and asked this informant, whether the gentlemen in the West of Sussex were in any readiness; and this informant answered, that he did not know, that any gentlemen there were engaged, unless colonel Gunter were; but if he were, he kept it private, and it was unknown to this informant. And the said Smith asked this informant afterwards, what Mr. Stapley said; and this informant acquainted him therewith. And this informant saith, that the said Mr. Stapley told this informant, that he had 150 arms. And this informant saith, that Smith told him, that one Mr. Woodcock, Mr. Mallory, and Hutchinson were engaged in this business. And the said Baron told this informant, that there was a considerable garrison to be delivered up for the use of Charles Stuart; and saith, that Thomas Crosfield, John Ames, and major Cradock, did at several times tell this informant, that the king, meaning Charles Stuart, was shortly to land, and that he had an army.

Taken and acknowledged before us
the 1st of May, 1658.

WILL. GOFFE.
HEN. SCOBEL.

HENRY BENSTED.

The

The examination of Walter Tomlinson, clerk, of Trotton, in the county of Suffex; taken this 1st of May 1658.

THIS examinant faith, that he, this examinant, did never hear of any design of any ^{A.D. 1658.}
insurrection to be had, until the news-books did communicate it; and that neither ^{Vol. lix.}
Mr. Young or any other person did ever communicate any such thing to this examinant ^{P. 5.} before that time; and he faith, that he did not only always detest any such design, in respect of the wickedness of it, but for the unreasonableness of it; and hath often testified as much.

Taken and acknowledged before us,
the 1st of May, 1658.

W. GOFFE,
HEN. SCOBELL.

WALTER TOMLINSON.

The examination of Edward Choune, of Kingston-bows, in the county of Suffex, Gent. taken before us upon oath at Lewes, in the county of Suffex aforesaid, the 3^d of May, 1658.

WHO faith, that in or about easter-week was a twelvemonth, Mr. Thomas Ayenscombe, ^{Vol. lix.}
late of Mavell, in the county of Suffex, did inform this examinant, that he under- ^{P. 9.} stood, that there was ready received, or to be received, commissions from king Charles, or some of his agents; which said commissions were in the hands, or to be in the hands of John Stapley, of Patcham, in the aforesaid county, Esq; to assist the said king against the present government here, when an opportunity should serve; or words to this effect: and that the said Thomas Ayenscombe was ready to be the said Mr. Stapley's servant, in aiding and assisting him in such a design, or to that effect: and further faith, that the said Mr. Ayenscombe did acquaint this examinant by the way of secrecy; and that he understood the said Ayenscombe had the aforesaid passages from the said Mr. Stapley himself. And this examinant further faith, that he never heard any else speak of it since, nor before that time, until he heard the said Mr. Stapley was secured. And being demanded whether or no this examinant had not spoken to any of it, faith no; for as much as he looked upon the said Ayenscombe as an inconsiderable person, and not worthy to be trusted with a business of such high concernment; but until after the said Mr. Stapley was secured, this examinant faith, he spoke of it to his brother Mr. Henry Choune, and to Mr. Blacker, now high sheriff, they both wondering at the said Stapley's restraint; but this examinant faith, he was fearful it was true, by reason of the aforesaid relation from the said Ayenscombe to him. And the said Ayenscombe did give this examinant, that he did think his uncle Goringe of Hyde, and his cousin Goringe of Cobden, and some others, whose names he doth not now remember, would be assisting in the said design. And this examinant being demanded, whether he had not received any letters concerning the premises from the said Ayenscombe, or any person, he said no; and further faith not.

Taken before us the day and year within specified.

EDWARD CHOUNE.

ROBERT GIBBON.
ANTH. SHIRLEY.
NAT. STUDLEY.
THOM. JENNER.
RICH. BURDETT.
THO. NEWINGTON.

The examination of Gawen Pollard, of Selby, in the county of York; taken at Hull the 3^d of May, 1658.

THIS examinant faith, that about easter last, William Smith of Cawood, formerly ^{Vol. lix.}
lieutenant in the late king's army, did inform this examinant, that Sir Henry Slingsby ^{P. 11.}
did desire him to send him in a man or two to Hull to be listed as soldiers; and the said Smith told him, this examinant, he would come himself, and did desire this examinant to repair to Hull to Sir Henry Slingsby; and told this examinant, that Sir Henry would prefer him there to some office.

This examinant faith, that he did according to Smith's desire come to Hull, and sent for Sir Henry Slingsby's man, John Jefferson, who immediately came to him; and this examinant

A.D. 1658. Uminant desired the said Jefferson to let Sir Henry Slingsby know, that he was come according to his desire to wait upon him. And this examinant further saith, that Sir Henry Slingsby sent him ten shillings by the said Jefferson the next day, to bear his charges; and within a little time after, sent him ten shillings more by Jefferson; and this examinant saith, that he was with Sir Henry in his chamber at the castle, and that Sir Henry told him the king was in a very good condition, and did desire this examinant to carry himself civilly, and further saith not.

GAWEN P POLLARD.

The examination of Thomas Sanderson, of Moor-Mountain, in the county of York, servant to Thomas Slingsby, Esq; taken May 3. 1658.

Vol. lix.
p. 13.

THIS examinant saith, that about the 18th of April last, Mr. Robert Stapleton came to Mr. Thomas Slingsby's lodgings, at the house of one Mr. Consett, in Gifford's-buildings, in Holborne. The said Mr. Stapleton understanding, that this examinant was to be sent down to Hull to Sir Henry Slingsby, the said Mr. Stapleton desired this examinant to let Sir Henry Slingsby know, that he heard that there was a commission delivered by Sir Henry Slingsby to some at Hull, which he thought might be his prejudice; and that he did believe Sir Henry Slingsby would be sent for to London shortly, and did therefore desire this examinant to let Sir Henry Slingsby know, that he desired him to endeavour his escape, if he could.

This examinant further saith, that his master, 'Squire Slingsby, Mr. Robert Stapleton, and his mistress, being all together at that time, did all of them desire him to make all the haste down to Sir Henry Slingsby at Hull he could possibly, with the above-mention'd message; which this examinant saith he did accordingly do, and further saith not.

THOMAS SANDERSON.

The examination of John Jefferson, of Scriven, servant to Sir Henry Slingsby, taken at Hull the 3d of May, 1658.

Vol. lix.
p. 17.

THIS examinant saith, that Sir Henry Slingsby sent him in March last to Cawood, to one William Smith, an inhabitant there, who was formerly a lieutenant in the late king's army; and that the said Sir Henry gave this examinant orders to speak to the said Smith, to send him two men that he might trust to be listed as soldiers in Hull, which would be a means to help him to his liberty; and when the king came, they might do him good service. And this examinant saith, that he did, according to Sir Henry's order, speak with the said Smith, who promised him he would do what he could to send in two men to Sir Henry, according to his desire. And this examinant further saith, that the afore-mentioned William Smith did accordingly send over to Hull one Gawen Pollard, who was formerly in the late king's army. And this examinant saith, that the said Gawen was with Sir Henry Slingsby in his chamber at the castle, where Sir Henry and the said Gawen had some private discourse; but this examinant could not hear what their discourse tended to. And within a little time after, the said Sir Henry did send twenty shillings at twice by this examinant to the said Gawen, to maintain him in his quarters, as this examinant doth believe.

This examinant further saith, that about the latter end of March, or the beginning of April, he did see lieutenant Thompson three or four several times in company with his master Sir Henry Slingsby, in his chamber at the castle, and that they had private discourse together; but this examinant could not hear what their discourse was.

This examinant further saith, that his master, Sir Henry Slingsby, did demand of him, whether he knew any, that would take up arms for the king, or stir if occasion should serve.

This examinant further saith, that he hath seen Mr. Horner, Mr. Topham, and Mr. Summerscales of Hull, several times with his master, Sir Henry Slingsby, at his chamber in the castle, but did not know of what concernment their discourse was: and further saith not.

JOHN JEFFERSON.

The examination of lieut. George Thompson, taken the 4th of May, 1658.

WHO saith, that he being in company with Sir Henry Slingsby at the Castle, Sir A.D. 1568.
Henry told him, that he had a very great confidence in him, in respect of his civil deportment; and that he should therefore freely declare his mind to him. Vol. lix.

The said lieutenant further saith, that Sir Henry told him, there was a design P. 21.
in agitation at this time for the bringing in the king with a considerable army; and that it was imparted here to those who were his friends.

The said lieutenant saith further, that Sir Henry Slingsby did desire him to serve the king; and promised him, that whatever was in his power to do for him, the lieutenant should be sure of it; and told the lieutenant he did not know the prefixt time of the king's coming in; but when he did know, he would be sure to give the lieutenant notice thereof.
And Sir Henry did further say to the lieutenant, that the king had sent over a proclamation, wherein he did declare, that he would pardon all officers, soldiers, and others whatsoever, except the lord protector, and the lord Bradshaw.

The said lieutenant further saith, that Sir Henry Slingsby did desire him, that he would not discover what he had imparted to him.

The said lieutenant saith, that he being in company with Sir Henry Slingsby's son, Mr. Henry Slingsby, he the said Mr. Slingsby told him, that the king was expected to come over into England with a considerable army e'er long, but said he did not directly know the prefixt; and further saith not.

GEORGE THOMPSON.

Vice-admiral Godsonn to secretary Thurloc.

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

MY last was on the 1st instant, wherein I gave account of marshall D'Aumont's being Vol. lix.
here with about 12 or 1300 officers and soldiers; the next day at evening he was P. 27.
pleased by an instrument of his to give me to understand his designe, that it was first by a party provided on shoar, and then with the forces here with him to have surprized Ostend.
They pretended to have within the town 250 or 300 resolved men for their purpose, who (as we were informed by a messenger that came out there about five this morning) seized upon the guards about two of the clock the last night, and were masters of the towne; whereof to give us notice by a signe, they made fires upon the workes, and had till near 9 or 10 in the morning the French colours upon the bulwarks, at which time, by virtue of the intelligence by the aforesaid messenger of the place being wholly subdued, marshall D'Aumont desired all possible aide to get his men on shoar, for which I readily granted him the assistance of my boates and men, and soe much the rather with cheerfulness understanding the towne to be subdued to the French; but the marshall (with whom is also the intendant) noe sooner got within the fort in a French frigate, in company with 3 French vessels more, and a shipp of Dover, but wee observed them from the towne, to ply upon them with great guns and small shott; and also observed, that for the space of two houres there was great store of small shott plyed within the town. The master of the shipp aforesaid of Dover, (who escaped out in a small boat with 4 men) gives us an account, that the French are wholly defeated, and in their assistance we have from this and other frigats (either killed or prisoners) near 100 men in 4 or 5 boates. If I have herein transgressed, I humbly beg pardon. What might putt me upon their assistance, I did in part give your honour an account in my last; and truly the consideration of my last yeares imploy, wherein I received commands from the generall to act in the like nature for assisting the French in the busines of Flanders, and being given to understand, that the sea-port townes were to be delivered up to his highnes hands, made me at this time the more ready in what I did. The number of officers and souldiers (I conceive) that went on shoar with the marshall are near 700, and pretended to be as able souldiers as the king of France hath any. The particulars of this transaction more at large I shall give an account of soe soon as obtained. I have understood, that the enemy are gone towards Graveling with a great convoy to neer 300 waggons of corne. I formerly wrote to the commissioners of admiralty for some provisions, which we believe to have bin obstructed by the easterly winds; and it hath bin soe long, that all our provisions are almost expended; which is all the present affords from

Your Honour's very humble servant,

Speaker of Ostend,
the 4th of May, 1658.

WILL. GOODSONN.

H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland, to secretary Thurloc.

SIR,

5th of May 1658.

A.D. 1658.

In the possession of William Cromwell, Esq;

THE two ways you propound for our relief, will neither of them do; viz. the 3 months anticipation will at six months end leave us where we now are; nor will it advance enough to fit us for a new establishment: wherefore let nature work till a parliament. The anticipation of quit-rents upon the adventurers and soldiers will not (though it could be executed according to the most perfect idea) afford 2000*l. per mensem*. But the soldier is not yet so formally settled, nor are the records so perfectly returned, nor the species of the acre so clearly determined, as whereby we can tell how to charge or levy this duty. And as for the adventurers, they are in a condition more confused than their first chaos; what they have done as to distribution being better, if it were all undone again. Inasmuch, as I have thought fitt to send over Petty, who by conference may shew them their unsettlement, and try, whether they will endure to receive a remedy. But suppose all this were done: the tax of Ireland is now 9000*l. per mensem*, and was but 10000*l.* when the quit-rents were respited; though afterwards 13 in course. Moreover the reason of the tax in Ireland settled upon other grounds, viz. that it might bear a proportion with England and Scotland; in which consideration Ireland's paying 9 to England's 35, is certainly over-burthened, that is, pays 6 for England's one. Now whether the lowness of the tax in Ireland considered with the generall wastes, or great and daily losses by base coin, the debt our army owes to the poor countrey, is a reason to torment us before the time, judge you: we believe here, that you cannot do it by law: wherefore, rather than to be cast upon such troublesome, irregular, and insufficient shifts, all for but a seeming relief, we will stay a little longer, and see what a parliament will do for us.

In the mean time the army every 3 months must run back one; and because we cannot reduce, you must hereafter pay 50 per cent. interest for what would have once paid your principal. I did foresee what you write concerning the causes of the parliament's backwardness. 'Tis unhandsome, if we knew how to help it, that the concernments of these 3 nations should serve but to make rattles for, &c. The lord prosper your endeavours concerning Dunkirk, securing the cavaliers, &c. I am the briefer this week, because myself and wife (who has been very ill) have been under some distemper, which indeed has seized us generally in this countrey; and because Petty (who, with some others, is to attend the address) will tell you my sense upon several matters here, whom I pray hear when he comes. I remain &c.

H. Cromwell lord deputy of Ireland, to general Fleetwood.

DEAR BROTHER,

May the 5th 1658.

In the possession of William Cromwell, Esq;

I Perceive by all letters, that our supplies must depend upon the parliament's meeting; and that the chief effect of Mr. Standish's negotiation will be to shew you, that we did not complain without cause. As for placing the security of our arrears upon the quit-rents, I doubt will prove a broken staff; for when you can legally demand them, (which will not these 12 months) they will be no property applicable to the growing charge. Besides you will meet with many difficulties, before they can be effectually levied; wherefore they are very unfit for extraordinary uses.

Through the unheard of intemperance of the weather, myself and wife have been ill; and indeed scarce 3 of 4 have continued well. The lord teach us by these dispensations to live but as sojourners here; and that we may prepare for a more abiding home. Dr. Petty with others is coming over with the addresses, and to see whether any conclusion can be made with the adventurers, with whom we are daily troubled. I shall only say this for him, that he has in all the late transactions shewed himself an honest man, and I assure you with a constant respect and affection to you and my sister, as shall always.

Yours &c.

H. Crom-

H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland, to lord Broghill.

MY DEAR LORD,

I Am glad that no part of what put your lordship upon retirement is his highnes dispro-portionable esteem of your merit. I say I am glad of that, for I that know your lordship's deservings, would be secured, that his highnes do not undervalue them. I said in my last, that I hoped God would find out an expedient. I hope his highnes's expressions, not only of his value for your lordship's particular, but his promises that he will ratify and prepare the army for due compliance &c. and that he will also give assurance of those other things you mention, are ingredients of that medicine, which will cure your lordship's depraved appetite of retirement. Well, if it be possible, my lord, follow this blow. Your accommodation at Hampton-court, and his highnes promise, that your attendance upon business shall not be strained beyond your health, should be near as good for your bodily distemper, as any retirement in Ireland, where the news of such miscarriages, as your lordship's presence might have prevented, will afflict you more than you are aware of. I say again, the lord direct you. But &c.

A.D. 1658.

In the possession of William Crom-
well, Esq;

Our address now is now almost moving. Wallis has not yet subscribed: we fear although he do, 'twill scarce be hearty. We are sending with it colonel Abbott, lieutenant colonel Nelson, major general's son, he being going for Holland, and Petty; the last whereof will acquaint your lordship with my sense upon several things, and is one, unto whom your lordship may safely communicate such things, as your leisure and indisposition will not permit you to write yourself. We find by Mr. Standish (whose concerns I shall mind) that our hopes of supply grow very faint. I see we must have patience till a parliament. I remain &c.

Marigny to Stouppé.

Francort, May the 16th 1658. [N. S.]

ALTHOUGH it be long since I writ to you, yet I will not doubt but that you have still some friendship for me, as I have a great ambition to serve you; and this belief maketh me to take the liberty to trouble you at present, and to give you a small commission, which I believe you will very well perform. Having had my watch stole from me, I pray bespeak me another at Monsieur Bouquet's, and let it be of the same bigness of that which I had of him. Our electors here labour hard about the capitulation; there be already several of the articles regulated, and in all probability the election will be at the end of this month. We say here, that the English and French will devour all Flanders this summer; be not so cruel, leave some one corner for others to breath in. I am

Wholly your's.

Lockhart to secretary Thurloc.

MY LORD,

Mardick, May 16th 1658.

AT my coming a shoare this morning I mett with a sad account of Marshall d'Aumonts misfortune before Ostende. I know not whether he ought to be the more or lesse pittied, because by all circumstances its evident, that he hath fallen into a pitt, which he hath digged for himself. I cannot give your lordship a particular account of that business: I find that the losse of men is not so considerable as that of reputation, tho' that of men is too greatt; and I heare our English seamen have shared to deep in it, and think it strange, that they shoud have ventored so much upon a design that his highnesse was not acquainted with. A drum, that came this day from Dunkerk, assures, that the mareshall is not wounded as was at first reported: the vice-admiralls account of all other particulars will be more full then myne can be.

I find that our officers and soldiers heare are a little amazed at the businessse, and the French yett more. I have told both, that they must put on resolutions of seeking a just revenge. I heare the cowrt is come to Abbeville, and the army is in readynesse to march; and therefore must begg that all things be hastened over so soone as is possible; and if his highnesse would be pleased to command over these two half-regiments they would be of great use and encouragement. The vice-admirall will certainly have so much pressed his fleets being recruited with boatts, as I shall not need to urge it. I have sent a list of the number

A D. 1658. number of the recruits come; they do not exceed 2079 men, and most of them are raw men. I have advysed the officers to beginn the exercysing of them to-morrow.

I hope your lordshipp hath sent order to your shippes in the straits to joyne with the French fleet, and will order major generall Morgann's comming over so soone as is possible; for I feare it will be necessary, that I make haste to court. It will also concerne his highnes to choose the commander in chiefe of theise forces; the French will be much discouraged, if it be any longer delayed. If my lord Falconberge be sent over, he must have some tyme to provyde a futable equipage; and their is not much tyme to spare him. The tents, mortar-pieces, and their granados are, I hope, aboard the vessels appointed to transport them before this. I shall during my stay heare omitt nothing that I can think will be of advantage to his highnes service. I have writt to the cardinal concerning his losse at Ostend, and have encowraged him to seek his revenge. I gott heare before any of the officers, that took leave last weeke. Sir John Cockram is just now arryved, and colonel Clerk is expected to-morrow. I am,

MY LORD,

Your most humble

and fathfull servant,

WILL. LOCKHART.

The examination of John Watson, of West-Hoadly, in the county of Suffex, Gent. taken the 6th of May, 1658, before major generall William Goffe, one of his highness's justices of the peace for the city of Westminster, and liberties thereof.

Vol. lix.
P. 30.

THIS examinant confesseth and saith, that about the middle of March last, Mr. John Pickering of Cookefeeld, meeting with this examinant, asked him, if he heard the news of the king's, meaning Charles Stuart, coming with great forces very shortly; and asked this examinant, if the said Charles Stuart should come, what was to be done? unto which this examinant answered, he would for his part do nothing, nor could if he would; for he was old and lame. And then the said Pickering said, though the examinant could do nothing in person, yet it would be expected he should in contribution; but he saith he did deny to meddle any way, and wished him, the said Pickering, to do the like.

And further this examinant saith, he was told by the said Pickering, that Mr. Stapley and Mr. Hutchinson had commissions from the king, meaning Charles Stuart; and that he feared severity would be used against those, that did not in some measure assist. Unto which this examinant reply'd, he did believe all Charles Stuart's designs were known, and would be prevented.

And the examinant further saith, that he asking the said Pickering, whether Mr. Burrell of Cookefeeld, or any other Gentleman thereabouts, were acquainted with it; he answered, none that he knew; and that Burrell, as he had heard, was so wise as to procure himself to be nominated as one to be questioned by the state as an actor for Charles Stuart, colourably that he might be the better excused, if the king, meaning Charles Stuart, should come, for not acting for him really. And further this examinant saith not.

Taken and acknowledged before me
the day above written.

JOHN WATSON.

W. GOFFE.

The examination of captain Richard Lyndsey † of Bexted in Suffex, taken the 6th of May 1658: taken before major general William Goffe, one of his highness's justices of the peace for the city of Westminster, and the liberties thereof.

Vol. lix.
P. 31.

THIS examinant saith, that about the 20th of March last, one Mr. John Pickering of Cookefeeld in the county of Suffex, sent a messenger to this examinant to meet him at Marsfeeld (a mile off Buxted, the place where the examinant liveth) about some law businesse; and accordingly this examinant did immediately meet the said Pickering at the sign of the Chequer in Marsfeeld, where being drinking of a pint of wine together, the said Pickering told this examinant, that he was afraid we should have troublesome times, and had some other strange confused discourse about the public affairs, which the examinant saith, he gave no great heed to, but well remembers that he replied, let come what will come, he was was resolved to live under this government of his highness the lord protector; for he had suffered much, and was in years, and was resolved to live peaceably: and thereupon they fell to other discourse concerning their private affairs. And being asked whether he had any discourse with the said Pickering at any other time about Charles Stuart's invading this nation, or any insurrection to be made thereupon in Suffex, or any of the adjacent countries, he saith, he never had any such discourse with the said Pickering, but what is abovementioned; and further this examinant saith not.

† A counsellor of the Inner-Temple.

W. GOFFE.

RICHARD LYNDSEY.

The examination of John Pickering of Cookefeeld, in the county of Suffex, Gent. taken the 6th of May, 1658.

THIS examinant saith, that about the beginning of March last, Dr. Hutchinson of Cookefeeld came to this examinant's house in the said parish, and after he had done his private business, told the examinant, that Charles Stuart was purposed to come into the nation with eight thousand men, or some such number; unto which this examinant reply'd, he did not believe it, which is all the discourse, to this examinant's remembrance, that there passed between him and the said Hutchinson, about Charles Stuart's affairs, save only that since the discovery of the design, he told the said Hutchinson, that now he hoped he himself would be of his opinion, that it would not be possible for Charles Stuart to come into this nation, or words to that effect; and further saith not.

W. GOFFE.

JOHN PICKERING.

The examination of Justinian Barrow, taken upon oath the 6th of May, 1658, before major-general William Goffe, one of his highness's justices of the peace for the city of Westminster, and the liberties thereof.

THIS informant saith, that about two months since, he was solicited by one Robert Baxter, to engage in a party for the king (meaning Charles Stuart) who, he said, intended to come into England with forces from beyond the seas; and that the lord of Ormond was come over as an agent from the said Charles Stuart, and had been in London, and was come away again safely; which he said was told to him the said Baxter by one Mr. Kettleby of Hornescourt, in the County of Surrey. And that the said Kettleby had further told the said Baxter, that he would endeavour to help him to some command, as an officer among the forces, to be raised for the service of the said Charles Stuart; and did press the informant very earnestly to engage, saying, he would undertake to help him to be an officer, or what advance he could among that party. But the informant utterly refusing to engage, the said Baxter told him, that if he would come over into Surrey, he should see what entertainment he had; but the informant still refused. And further this informant saith, that being one time drinking in a house in Carter-lane, without Blackfriars-gate, the said Baxter shewed him the said Kettleby, and one Mr. Taylor, and one Basset, and said they were all agents for the king (meaning Charles Stuart) and would have had him have spoken with them; but the informant refused to speak with them at that time, but promised the said Baxter to make a journey to see him in Surrey, intending to make some further discovery of the business; but the informant being soon after arrested for debt, he hath not heard any thing more of these affairs; and further saith not.

W. GOFFE.

JUSTINIAN BARROW.

South. The information of William Edmunds of Farneborow in this county, butcher, taken upon oath before John Cole of Odiham in this county Esq; one of his highness's justice for the peace, the 6th day of May 1658.

THIS informant saith, that the 5th of this instant, May, he this deponent coming to the house of Mr. Finch, an inholder in the parish of Farneborow, that he there came into company to a stranger to him then unknown, but as this deponent hath heard, that he was one of the purveyors for the late king, and his name to be Mr. Hene.

That after some time the said Hene and this deponent had kept company together, he this deponent falling into discourse of the late intended insurrection, and particularly dis-

H h

coursing

A.D. 1658. courting with the said Hene of some persons engaged therein, as he had heard, who lived at a place called Compton in Southray, by name one Mr. Francis Mansel a merchant, who upon a search made for him by the soldiers, had made an escape from them: that hereupon the said Hene replied to this deponent, that they were honest men, that were to rise in that party to let in the king, in opposition to my lord protector; and that they that did oppose the said party were knaves; and that their cause, who were to rise, was right, and the others wrong, and contrary to law.

That there was for some time in this deponent's company, one William Browne of Frinley, and his son William Browne living in Farneborow; but knoweth not certainly whether they were in the room at the time of this discourse; for that the said Brownes, both father and son, came above an hour after he this deponent had been in company with the said Hene alone; and that the aforesaid Finch, master of the said inn, was not at home when this discourse was.

And this deponent further saith, that in the presence of the said William Browne junior, he this deponent told the said Hene, that had talked so much on the behalf of the said parties, that sure he had something about him that concerned them; and the occasion why he said so to him was, because he this deponent having formerly seen papers in his hands with the queen's name at the upper end of one of the said papers; whereupon the said Hene pulled out more papers, which this deponent desired he might see, but was denied it by the said Hene; and the said William Browne being then there, he the said Browne had sight of one of the papers, which he read, and said to the said Hene, you rogue, this is enough to hang you. And the said Browne tore the said paper in several pieces, and would not suffer this deponent to see it; that hereupon this deponent went and called the officer to apprehend the said Hene, and was reviled at by the said Browne, and called knave.

WILLIAM EDMUNDS.

The information of William Browne of Farneborow in this county, taken before me the 6th day of May 1658.

WHO saith, that this informant was in company with one Mr. Thomas Hene, and one William Edmunds; and this informant was also there upon the 5th of this instant, May, at the house of one John Finch in Farneborow; but saith, that all the time that he was in their company, there was not any discourse, nor one word spoken concerning the late insurrection, nor tending thereunto. But saith, that there were some papers pulled out by the said Thomas Hene in this informant's presence; and that he read some of the papers, one of them being a copy of verses written to the queen. That for the other papers he knows not what they were, nor can relate no part thereof; and confesseth, that he tore one of the said papers: but denies that he used any words at all unto the said Hene or any other, upon the tearing of the said papers; but says, that he called the said Edmund busy knave, when he caused the said Hene to be apprehended.

WILLIAM BROWNE.

The examination of Thomas Hene of Erith in the county of Kent Gent. taken before me at Odiham the 6th of May 1658.

THAT this examinant being sent for from the place of his abode, to come to London by my lady Victoria Uvedall, he this examinant came thither upon the 26th of April last past: that he this examinant was sent by the lady Uvedall after he came to London to the master of the rolles, and was by both of them employed to go to Wickam in this county; and that his business there was to make search with Mr. Jonathan Clark for an acquittance of 1500 l. or thereabouts, given by Sir John Heyden to Sir William Uvedall deceased, in discharge of so much money paid by Sir William for the king's use when he was treasurer. And this examinant saith, that he went out of London upon the 29th of April; that in his way back towards London, he came upon the 3d day of May at night to Farneborow, and lodged in the house of one John Finch. That he this examinant being fore with riding, he staid at the said Finch's Tuesday and Wednesday following. That upon Wednesday last, being the 5th of this instant, May, there came into the examinant's company a stranger, who, as this examinant now hears, is called by the name of Edmunds. Saith that he had no discourse with the said Edmunds, concerning any intended insurrection, or any persons lately apprehended, or to be apprehended by any directions from his highness and his council; and that he never heard of any thing that concerned that business. Denies that he this examinant ever shewed the said Edmunds or any other person any papers whatsoever: saith that this examinant was never any ****

Mr.

Mr. Downing, the English resident in Holland, to secretary Thurloc.

HONOURABLE SIR,

I Received yours by the last post, and have very little this weeke to returne you. The A.D. 1658.
 queene of Portugall did say the same to the French ambassador at Lisbon, to witt, that she knew that the last yeares Holland fleet was made by the Spaniard; but neither the French Vol. lix.
 ambassador nor myself can finde any reall ground for that report, though we have en- p. 49.
 deavoured theis 4 or 5 weekes to finde out the bottom of it. I doe verily beleeeve it to be a mistake; as concerning the report about my lord Falconberg. I doe beleeeve they had a designe upon him, and upon whomesoever, or what thing soever they have a designe, it is their custome presently to take the thing for effected, and thereupon to ground reports, with which they please themselves for a time. By the last post I gave you an account of a letter from the admiralty of Amsterdam to the States of Holland, concerning the condition of the Portugall prise at Plymouth to the Portugeises, which, what credit it found, and with what effect, the inclosed resolution of the States of Holland will shew you. I could wish, with all my heart, that that busines were made an end of; and I hope by the next post, according to what is hinted to me in your last, to receive something from you to that end. I shall say no more of it, haveing formerly hinted my thoughts thereabout; but it will be an advantage to his highness, as well as reflexion elsewhere, to ground resolutions of state, and especially of such a nature upon untruths; for so far as I perceive by yours, the said prise is not rendered to the Portugais. De Witt cunningly to divert the debate 263 158 67 155 259 104 393 105 52 362 477 267 152 286 146 468 263 227 466 in the assembly of the States of Holland, concerning the present sending of their fleet 120 132 287 39 106 147 140 282 339 55
 408 468 70 133 46 358 289 477 551, put the 532 upon the 121 134 287 41 106
 Memorial; Holland,
 147 339 55 the inclosed 379 384 441 199; for as they of 557 have very little war with Portugall, De Witt so little minde to the 487 500 551 so 263 502 150 hath very little minde, that 459 362 a fleet left at home; 147 150 358 15 48 358 289 should be 358 50 148 219 328 379 which yet must that warr very jealous eye upon you; be, if 467 487 should be prosecuted with vigour: they have a 152 41 441 69 40
 I Nieuport's
 12 365 524 41 169 42 523 510, yet I am confident, 71 had kept off 27 142 going for England, Portugal prizes.
 314 339 55 305 547, had it not been for those 551 121 441 174 287. The States of Holland separated upon Thursday night last, and are gone to their severall houses, to advise about the employ of their fleet. Amsterdam would 477 13 32 152 67 140 40 182 468 41 89 120 365 170 408 468 71 132 48 not have it go to Portugal, little part 358 289 566 501 395 147 323 70 147 314 477 551 or at most but a 362 147 of them; that eye is more upon England and Sweden: and they 358 422 408 468 101 468 71 132 42 171 43 366 384 135 43 523 547 207 talk of making ready more ships.
 554 207 268 171 463 83 77 408 371 352 133 41 14 267 384 135 44 456
 United Provinces,
 142 and there is a commission dispatht towards those parts of the 154 393 149 which are next Westphalia to 279 122 443 155 339 28 287 493 213 42 391 160 287 148 121 319 362 16 visit those garrisons, to 154 71 142 73 466 148 328 143 44 308 135 393 459 108 142 and to encrease them; K. Sweden 44 108 29 135 44 16 144 40 468 101 for that it is said, that 536 hath demanded passage thro' that country, 122 217 143 15 311 472 467 254 155 109 151 135 44 171 though I believe their state not the truth thereof, but such a report is enough. It's pittie to allarum 469 142 but when to the purpose. Their militia is a miserable one, 463 466 244 492 477 468 122 154 133 431 142 40 468 72 137 381 362 most divided.
 475 13 346 14 381 140 286 179 111 390 and 385 267 154 336 279.
 The resident of Brandenburg tells me, that his master hath refused the Poles and Austrians passage over the river Oder, whereby they might fall into Pomerania, so that now all the talke is of falling upon the Swedes garrisons in Prusia, unless they they can otherwise incline that elector. The king of Hungary insists vehemently against the mediation

A.D. 1658 diation of France, betweene the kings of Sweden and Poland; so that the king of Sweden is at a hard push, not knowing well how to refuse the mediation of France, which was accepted by him, both before the treaty between him and the king of Hungary, and since; nor ^{d ar es he} 33 213 287 324 goe directly against the service of that king, with whome are therein joyned the ecclesiastiques of Poland. Monsieur Appleboom is not yet recovered of a feaverish cold, the general disease of the time; so that I cannot by this post give you the result of any advice with him touching that affaire; ^{but} 244 certainly the lord protector is much concerned in

251 133 463 339 362 534 346 89 152 25 60 254 105 251 133 106 279 that affayre; ^{prejudice to him, if}

339 467 192 298 170 133 41; and it might be of greate ^{that peace should be concluded without him.} 121 132 42 70 154

267 251 477 326 70 49 467 427 141 328 82 33 231 254 106 26 370 34 ^{interest, if possible, to divide Poland from}

279 500 418 326 and must it not undoubtedly be his ^{House of Austria, and to turn} 339 466 134 287 149 70 the

48 431 141 144 334 358 477 267 155 71 263 553 306 468 544 207 477 150 ^{let} the K. Sweden rather into Germany,

155 123 390 468 536 437 468 135 339 477 55 286 371 393 then to 360 him be engaged against Dantzick,

326 231 42 106 308 311 32 14 310 260 104 145 174 335 75, which must ^{hazard} ^{this state;}

also necessarily 319 174 213 33 the engaging 469 141 463 466: and its certaine, ^{laicks of Poland} ^{peace.}

that the 355 335 76 287 408 553 have a very greate minde to 427 It is said, ^{Dantzick} ^{lord protector.}

that one from 260 110 151 174 73 31 80 will be speedily with 534 Upon reading the letter from this states-resident at Madrid in the States of Holland, wherein was declared the king of Spain's readyness to comply with their desire of liberty of fetching salt at Ponte Del Ree, but withall that he desired joyntly to carry on a treaty for a more strict allyance with this state, the States of Holland did order that justice be continued for obteyning the aforesaid liberty without makeing any reflexion, or taking any resolution concerning the states allyance. The election at Franckford meetes yet with difficulties and rubbs. It's said, that the elector of Saxony is sending for his princess thither; so that indeed never was a ^{fairer occasion} ^{for great action in Flanders.} 298 68 133 286 406 305 54 131 275 145 The French embass.

184 146 345 339 47 355 104 263 132 139 468 532 sayth, that he knowes not ^{nor} ^{what counsels will be taken, but} in what condition Hesden is, 395 132 consequently 491 254 153 107 251 82 140 ^{that he will write}

503 231 464 106 244 467 324 503 159 441 466 as I desired. The prince of Conde's forces are held to be 7 or 8 thousand, and they are indeed the considerablest body they have in Flanders, or like to have this yeare, the leavyes of the ecclesiastiques going not forward; and it's said that there are some forces drawne into Antwerp by those of that citty, and very greate and universall are the discontents at the present government. The cavalry of Courtrey and Lisle are marcht, as also its beleevd that the rest will be speedily in the feild, to hinder their enemies as much as in them lyes. They of Antwerp are making up all the chaines in their streets, to be in readyness in case of danger. Heere is many, that talk very high against me for what I did the last weeke in relation to the two dukes, who are now upon record, and many wonder I could get such a resolution past against them, which was sent after them to Hounslor Dike, from whence they went upon Monday last. And its looked upon as a very great prejudice, both to Charles Stuart and the Spaniards, that such a flurr should have been put upon them. Charles Stuart hath about 12 or 13 hundred men and not more. It's said, that he intends Franckford to the Dyet, being invited thither by some princes of Germany. I am sorry, that you did not before give me notice of your minde,

^{I sent into Flanders should write directly to England;} that these that 69 141 42 106 147 339 477 48 355 106 34 286 138 140 328 ^{two of them}

83 35 160 441 466 267 134 278 150 362 339 477 547 for that 150 160 111 ^{are gone,} ^{how to send to them,}

408 468 102 213 41 314 390, and I know not 328 162 477 142 42 107 35 ^{would not} ^{consent; that I should write}

477 468 101 for that they 161 116 155 85 35 395 150 254 108 138 43 109 ^{to them;} ^{one of them}

149 467 72 142 328 85 36 161 441 466 477 468 102 but 114 390 408 468 100

got before the receipt of yours, hath order to 100, who was not 316 233 468 134 278, 41 70 121 147 408 511 142 322 416 A.D. 1658: write to Mr. Lucas Luce.

35 286 47 161 441 466 477. Mr. 370 245 141 370 252 and I shall, as soon as order for the rest, possible, take the like 416 35 286, 305 468 133 287 148; and I shall, by the first two or three ciphers.

occasion of shipping, send you 148 161 117 416. 148 63 135 43 252 122 63 286
 Sir Marmaduke Langdale was also in England;

142. It is said, that 141 72 136 371 136 371 273 355 106 54 260; 358 483 141 201 339 547; but this I have only by report; but for what I wrote you by my concerning O Neale,

last, 254 107 251, 134 107 339 54 115 390 199 42, it is very certaine; and I doe that hee is yet returned.

not yet heare, 467 324 346 171 289. 135 289 155 136 107 279. It shall be my settle you a good and sure intelligence in constant endeavour, by little and little, to 142 289 358 510 15 314 407 207 144 F I and er s.

157 136 45 339 466 83 362 311 108 251 339 50 82 207 286 142. I forgott; in my last, to give you an accompt, that Mynhere Beverning giveing me a visite, did earnestly desire a true picture of his highness, which he said he would take as a great favour: and since giveing him a visite, he tooke occasion to repeate the same discourse; ading, that notwithstanding the oath he had taken when he went into England, he thought he might dispence with the taking such a thing as that is. I have again tendered the lord Nieupert his present; hee sayd hee would speake with his friends about it, before 71 323 11 309 466 106

35 286 279 527; 327 122 133 287 41 104 146 324 450, 34 324 161 112 153 hee would take it. De Witt is the 82 33 141 426 197 500 327 47 441 282 143 182: 72 149 324. 161 114 155 only man against it.

82 36 464 71. 147 263 159 68 146 346 461 412 362 372 16 310 73 151. I finde nothing in your last concerning the conference betweene me and some of the deputies of the states generall, concerning the poore Protestants of Piedmont. I think it were not amiss, that as what they said to me was by word of mouth, so by word of mouth to lett them know something of his highness's readyness to do good to that people.

The expressions in yours concerning myselfe, are as much beyond my desert as my expectation. It shall be my endeavour to serve his highnesse and yourselfe, so far as in me lyes, and for my expences it's as I then wrote; and indeed my wife herselfe knows not what I have spent since my coming hither, I having returned hither moneys of my owne, which she knowes not of, nor thinke I it fitt to let her know. I am contented, and 1100 l.
per annum is an honourable mayntenance. I am quite out of money; and am,

HONOURABLE SIR,

Your very humble faithfull servant,

Hague, May 17. 58. [N. S.]

G. DOWNING.

*The information of John Overton, captain of the garison of Hull, commanding the castle, taken the 7th of May, 1658. upon oath, before Henry Scobell esq;
 one of his highness's justices of the peace for the county of Middlesex.*

THIS informant faith, that upon the 18th of February, 1657. Sir Henry Slingsby Vol. lix. p. 39. being then prisoner in the castle at Hull, under the custody of this informant, and this informant being in the said Sir Henry's chamber, the said Sir Henry Slingsby said to this informant, that he this informant might very much befriend him, and desired he would do so. He further said, that colonel Overton was engaged to bring six regiments to the king, (meaning Charles Stuart, as this informant understood him) and had engaged to enjoy what he had, and a pardon for what was done or by-past. And hereupon this informant asked him, if he were sure of it? to which he answered, that some, that were acting there, were both told and assured, that it was so; but colonel Overton failing, or being discovered, gave over: and he the said Sir Henry asked this informant, if this informant's men would stand by him, and particularized one Clerke, who this informant answered was right. And this informant further faith, that the said Sir Henry asked him this informant, what he thought of one hundred pounds to engage them to him? whereto this informant answered, they were never used to any such great gratuity: he further said, that he feared this informant would let in no men into the garison-side; but if he stayed in his command, he the said Sir Henry would say more.

A.D. 1658. And this informant further saith, that on the last of February, 1658. he being in the said Sir Henry Slingsby's company, he the said Sir Henry asked this informant, where the Sally-port was? This informant told him, about 20 yards north from the castle wall; whereupon the said Sir Henry said, that some prisoners privately intended to make their escape that way, but that this informant prevented them; and asked which way, or whereabouts, it enters into the castle; and asked him, if he could let forty men into the castle? and then he said it would be well, and that this informant should not want any money; and asked, how this informant knew the soldiers would stand by him? who replied, they were engaged to this informant by his supplying of their wants. To which the said Sir Henry said, he was glad of it; and asked which way, or how, he this informant could victual the castle. And further said, the king kept this design very close or secret, and that it was not known, whether he would land at Hull, Scarborough, or Portsmouth; and that so soon as he knew any thing, he would tell this informant, or let him know. And further saith, that duke Darcy inquired at Brussels, in what condition Hull and Scarborough were in.

And this informant further saith, that on the 3^d day of March, 1657. the said Sir Henry Slingsby asked this informant, whether he continued to command this company? who answered, he knew nothing to the contrary; to which the said Sir Henry replied, he was glad of it. And this informant telling the said Sir Henry Slingsby, that he wondered the said Sir Henry Slingsby would appear at Heflam-moore with so inconsiderable a party, unless many fail to appear, who were engaged; to which he answered, duke Darcy was coming with a good party, but stay'd so long, that all the rest were gone, and that we had then eleven troops in the country. And he said Sir Henry further said, he was glad he was here, (meaning the castle) and glad, that he was quit of his bonds; and asked, when the guns came from London.

And further this informant saith, that on the 6th of March, 1657. the said Sir Henry asked this informant, what news? and said, that Ned Chapman told his son Harry, that the townsmen were able at any time to deal with the soldiers, and invited his said son that day to dinner, and came over to the garison side with him, assuring his son, that the town was too strong for the garison; and that the said Sir Henry wondered much at the said Chapman's saying. And further he said, that the three block-houses could command the town, and that Sir John Hotham had no soldiers, when the town overpowered him; asking, how this informant could know any thing of a party in the town; and that he verily thought the said Ned Chapman was not for the soldiers: and then further said, he feared the troop would very much command the town.

* The northern word for ready.

And this informant saith, that on the 14th of March aforesaid, the said Sir Henry Slingsby being walking upon the top of the castle, this informant told him, that he heard Charles Stuart, his old master, was * fit to take sail with seven or eight thousand men, and wanted nothing but wind to fly with. He the said Sir Henry answered, the king kept his design more private than to have any know of it; and said, if it was so, he hoped this informant would make ready for him; and asked, if this informant were sure, that his men would stand by him? saying, there were some of them fellows, as Rose, and three or four more, that might hinder the rest, and that this informant might well stand upon his own guard for pay, and that the king must promise fair to all, that would assist him, and perform too; and if he should come that assize week, it would make a mighty stir and uproar all the country over; but for any thing he knew, he must go for Scotland.

And this informant also saith, that on the 23^d of March aforesaid, the said Sir Henry Slingsby being in this informant's chamber, he drew his chair near to him this informant, and said, that now this informant had a fit opportunity to entertain such men as would be right for him; to which this informant answered, he thought he could not get half his number. Whereupon Sir Henry said, he thought Mr. Watkinson would help him this informant to some, and that he might get John Horner to write to him; but this informant told him, there were few men in Holdernefs to be spared. He answered, that he the said Sir Henry would be glad, that he this informant would serve the king; this informant should not want any thing he could do for him, though he had no positive order to agree for any sum; but he had assurance, that any that assisted the king, when he first came to kiss his mother's earth, he would give them four or five thousand pounds, and that he had so much in bank ready, and that this informant deserved it as well as any other. And this informant asked, if he the said Sir Henry would give his own engagement for it? to which he answered, he had no order to be positive, but he would write for an order, if this informant would accept of it; and told this informant, that he desired him to go no further than major Waterhouse; and this informant asked the said Sir Henry, whether he would assure this informant, upon his honour, that he had engaged major Waterhouse to serve the king; to which he answered, he would not tell this informant that absolutely, but he would not desire this informant to go one jot further than the major, and said he would would furnish this informant with moneys to raise men withal; and if the king should land at Headon, Fetty, or within two or three miles, that this informant would not shoot any great bullets at his men, as they landed, to gall them. And the said Sir Henry said, he would give this informant twenty pounds for raising forty men; which was as much as Sir William Vavasour did give. A.D. 1658.

And also this informant saith, that on the 1st day of April, 1658. the said Sir Henry Slingsby being in his own chamber, where this informant was, drew the chair, wherein he sat, near to this informant, and asked him, if he this informant did continue his resolution? whereupon this informant asked him, what resolution he the said Sir Henry desired this informant to take? whereto the said Sir Henry replied, to serve the king; and told this informant, that if he would accept of a commission, or a deputation for this command, he this informant should have it. And this informant would accept of a deputation for the command of the castle, if he would the next day give major Waterhouse a commission from the king to be governor of the castle and two block-houses; by virtue of which, Sir Henry would draw out a deputation for this informant to command the castle; and that this informant should not want money to engage the men to him; and that he had 100l. at Mr. Topham's, that he could command.

And this informant saith, that upon the 2^d of April last, the said Sir Henry Slingsby said before major Waterhouse and this informant, that he the said Sir Henry had a commission for the government of Hull, and that he was in great hopes the governor (meaning colonel Smith) would accept of it; and being asked, upon what grounds he thought so, he replied, upon some reasons best known to himself. And on the same day this informant saw the said Sir Henry Slingsby deliver a commission, written in parchment, to major Waterhouse, which these were herein written, and the arms of the last king of England herein and thereto prefixed.

CHARLES R.

CHARLES, by the grace of God, king of England, Scotland, Ireland, defender of the faith, &c. To our trusty and well-beloved major Ralph Waterhouse. We do by these presents constitute and appoint you to be governor of the castle and two block-houses near Hull, and to put such a garison of horse and foot therein, as you judge necessary for the preservation of the said places. Given at Bruges, 12th of March, 1657. And saith, that the commission now shewed him is the same commission which he saw the said Sir Henry deliver to the said major.

And this informant also saith, that the same night he this informant saw and heard the said Sir Henry Slingsby read a letter, which the said Sir Henry said was the king's own hand, and was from the said king to him the said Sir Henry Slingsby, containing some words of compliment, and desiring him to assist the bearer in taking up such commodities as would yield him the best profit; and that he did not doubt, ere long, to be in a condition to pay all his debts.

Taken and acknowledged, the 7th of May, 1658. before me,
HEN. SCOBELL.

JO. OVERTON.

The information of major Ralph Waterhouse, taken upon oath this 7th day of May, 1658. before Henry Scobell esq; one of his highness's justices of the peace for the county of Middlesex.

THIS informant saith, that about December last Sir Henry Slingsby sent unto this informant, by one of his sons, a note written in a leaf of a table-book, containing these words; Put this out with your finger, and then tell me, if Robin Gardiner spoke not to you to assist the king in the place you are in; tell me this, and I will tell you strange things. My son hath engaged not to look into this, going or coming. I will be faithful to you. Upon the receipt of which note, this informant, according to his duty, did acquaint colonel Smith therewith, who commanded this informant immediately to go to Sir Henry Slingsby, and to make what discovery he could of any design the cavalier party were carrying on against his highness and garison of Hull. And accordingly this informant went to the said Sir Henry, and as soon as this informant came into the room, he said, Sir Henry demanded, whether Mr. Gardiner had not endeavoured lately to engage this informant to serve the king in the place he this informant was in? to which this informant answered, that he had heard Gardiner say something in a ranting manner, but not to much purpose; and then the said Sir Henry said, that it was much taken notice of, that he had been much slighted by the party, that he this informant served; but told this informant,

A.D. 1651. informant, that however others might disesteem him, they knew not a person more fit and able to serve them than this informant, in all respects; telling this informant, he heard this informant's soldiers were very much his servants, and very obedient to him, and that he this informant might do what he pleased with them; and that if he this informant would secure the south-house for the king, (meaning Charles Stuart) they would send this informant fifty or an hundred men, or thereabouts, which should lie as it were about Paul's, and should come in to this informant's assistance in a dark night: and in case this informant did comply, he did not doubt but they should shortly be masters of the town. To which this informant replied, that he thought it would be to little purpose to attempt the thing, unless they had a greater force; whereto Sir Henry answered, that they were assured of a very considerable force in a very short time, that would be able to besiege the town, had they any place of security to retire unto; telling this informant, if they had but this garison, (meaning Hull) they should think a great part of their work done. And the said Sir Henry likewise told this informant, that they had a very considerable bank of money for the carrying on of their work, out of which there might be a considerable sum taken, and not missed; and that within a little while this informant should know more: to which this informant answered, that formerly a little money might do, but now that could not be, there being a vigilant person in the place: whereunto the said Sir Henry replied, But that opportunity was missed or lost; and used many other expressions of confidence of having a greater force for their king; and so at that present the discourse broke off.

And this informant saith, that about a week after, he the said Sir Henry Slingsby sent another note by his son, written in the same manner, and in these words, viz. If the match go on, the gentleman will give a portion suitable to his estate, though it be three hundred a year at sixteen years purchase. Trust not him that was here, nor any such. And that immediately after this informant received this note, he acquainted colonel Smith with it, who gave him the said order as before; upon which this informant repaired to Sir Henry Slingsby, and discoursing upon the former business of the south-house, he the said Sir Henry told this informant, they would supply him this informant with men from sea; and that in case this garison were in the king's hands, it would put the whole country into such a distraction, that they should thereby accomplish their ends; and did at that time promise this informant, in consideration of his securing the south-house for the king, that he this informant should have five thousand pounds to be secured him by land, or paid in money here or elsewhere. And this informant replying, it was not money he look'd for, or words to that effect; at that time they ended their discourse, and parted.

And this informant further saith, that about ten days after, Sir Henry Slingsby sent this informant another note by his son, written as the former, in these words, If the governor send for me, I will give bond for my peaceable living. Give me a piece, and I will give you twenty for it, if I do not procure you a commission for the government of the south block-house, under hand and seal, from beyond the seas, and in fourteen days, upon receipt of the note. And this informant applying himself to colonel Smith, he gave him this informant the same order as formerly. And thereupon this informant went to Sir Henry Slingsby, who after some other discourse said to this informant, would he give him five pounds, he would give this informant one hundred, if he had not a commission for this informant in fourteen days after the post-day, that he should name or appoint. And this informant demanding of him the said Sir Henry, from whence those forces he had mentioned should come, he the said Sir Henry answered, that the king of Spain would furnish the king with men, had they any town or fort, or place of security to land them at, but thought it not safe otherwise to land them in an open country: and further said, that the duke of York, in the head of seven or eight thousand men, had told this informant, they would supply him with men, for enabling him this informant to carry on what they had debated on before; and at that time they parted.

And this informant further saith, that being with the said Sir Henry Slingsby, on the 3^d day of February last, by order of colonel Smith, to make what further discovery he could of this business; he the said Sir Henry told this informant, that this informant should have a commission, and that nothing should be acted concerning any of their affairs, but that he this informant should have first knowledge of it. And this informant telling him, that he this informant desired to be commanded by him the said Sir Henry, he the said Sir Henry told this informant, that he should have a commission to command the three houses. And this informant asking him, how he could get the commission in so short a time, he the said Sir Henry replied, that he had a way of sending for it with safety, but would not discover it to this informant. And this informant demanding of the said Sir Henry, whether he had acquainted any other with the business, the said Sir Henry answered, that some had thought, that Jeremiah Smith was the fittest person they could think of at present to be employed in the business. And this informant saith, that on the 7th of March last, he this informant received from the hands of the said Sir Henry Slingsby

Slingsby a letter directed to this same Sir Henry Slingsby then at York, which he desired A.D. 1658. this informant to deliver, which was in these words, viz.

Harry, concerning two men, which are of the jury, I would not have you fail to speak with your friend about them, that they may not fail to be at the assizes; and, if it be possible, let him speak with the rest of the twelve; for it concerns your friend's business very much. You had need of an expositor; therefore let the lawyer see this letter, and commend me to him. I rest

Your loving father,

HEN. SLINGSBY.

March 22. When he hath seen it, burn the letter. Major Waterhouse is pleased to deliver this letter to you.

And this informant further saith, that on the 27th of March last, this informant being then in discourse with Sir Henry Slingsby, amongst much other talk he told this informant, that he the said Sir Henry had promised captain Overton to raise forty men; and that there had been with him the said Sir Henry, two or three days before, one Smith of Cawood, and had engaged to send in two men; and that he had offered to come himself to serve as a soldier in this informant's company. And this informant saith, that on the last day of March, the said Sir Henry Slingsby told this informant, in discourse between them, he the said Sir Henry had a commission by him; and that he would not only lend captain Overton money, but give it him towards raising men; and that if this informant would disburse money for buying provisions for storing the south block-house, he would give this informant his bond to repay the money, or else deliver this informant a commission from the king; and that he would speak to captain Overton, to know whether he would accept of a deputation to command the castle, or that he would accept a commission. And further this informant saith, that on the 1st of April last, the said Sir Henry told this informant, there was one Andrew, a tenant of the said Sir Henry's, who had promised to raise fifty or sixty men, if occasion were; and that the said Andrew told him, that he sent four horses to Sir Marmaduke Langdale. And speaking of the governor, colonel Smith, the said Sir Henry had a commission for him, and was in good hopes, that he would accept it; and he then again told this informant, he would help captain Overton to money to lay in provisions. And further this informant saith, that upon the 2^d day of April last, captain Overton and this informant being with Sir Henry Slingsby, amongst other discourses between them, he the said Sir Henry Slingsby said he had a commission for the governor, which he hoped he would accept; and further said, he hoped he need not trouble himself, for others would do it. And this informant asking him, what reason he had to imagine any such thing, he said it was for some reasons best known to himself. And the said Sir Henry Slingsby did at that time deliver a commission from Charles Stuart unto this informant, which is the very same commission now shewed to this informant; on the back whereof this informant hath endors'd his name. And the same night the said Sir Henry Slingsby did read to the said captain Overton, and this informant, a letter, which he said was the king's (meaning Charles Stuart's) own hand, beginning thus, I can never be enough sensible of your favour to me, or words to that effect; and the contents thereof was little more than compliments, save that he desired him to assist the bearer in taking up such commodities as would yield him the best profit; and that he did not doubt, ere long, to be in a condition to pay all his debts.

Taken and acknowledged, this 7th
of May, 1658. before me,
HEN. SCOBELL.

RA. WATERHOUSE.

Lockhart to secretary Thurloe.

May it please your LORDSHIPP,

Mardick, May 7. 1658.

I Have little to add to what I said yesterday, save that the French army will march very suddenly, and I feare sooner then we shall be reddey heare. I learnt this by a letter from Mr. Tellier to the king's lieutenant heare, which arryved this morning; and therefore I must beseech your lordshipp to hasten over the rest of the recruits, with all other things contained in the French ambassador's list. And againe, I make bold to presse your lordship's mooving his highnes, to send over theise two half regiments, that are in Kent. I find not one minister heare, and out of charity have sent for my chaplaine from Calais: the foldiers need much to be both dehorted from evill, and exhorted to good. If you will send over three ministers, they may very well serve the six regiments; and I engage myself

VOL. VII.

K k

to

A.D. 1658. to procure them 180 lib. sterl. per annum a-piece, which, I think, is encouragement enoff to any honest man, who hath zeale for his master's service, or the propagation of his gospel. The Popish priests, who go a begging to vent their errors, will ryse upp in judgment against our ministers, who cannot be yett perswaded, even upon reasonable terms, to preach the gladd tydings of salvatione to their poor countrimen, who have som longings after the ordinances of God. I beg pardon for this trouble; and am,

May it please your LORDSHIPP,

Your most humble, fathfull and obedient servant,

WILL. LOCKHART.

Lockhart to secretary Thurloe.

Camp, May 8th, 1658:

In the possession of the right hon. the earl of Shelburn.

UPON thursday last, towards the close of the evening, the enemy sallied out upon the point of our trench with all their horse, amounting to 43 troupes in six squadrons, which made a body of 700, as the prisoners then tooke assert. These horse were supported with two battalions of foot, and intended to have passed at a little opening we had left in our trench, in order to the drawing of a line of communication betwixt our approach and that of the trench. They were very vigorously repulsed, when they first offered to force their passage; and finding that station too hott for them, they went up towards the point of the trench, and passed where some ground was not broken, and so thought to have scoured the backside of our trench; but they no sooner offered that way, but the two battalions in the trenches were ordered to quitt their posts, and to face them in the plaine feild, which they did with a great shout, encouraging one another: and at the same time the reserve, commanded by lieutenant-collonel Haynes, marched downe from a high downe, which covers the entry of our trench; so that all the 14 companies, that were in the aproach, were in battle, ready to relieve the enemy; and our reserves of horse coming up at the same time, the dispute did not last long: the horse did execution upon them in their retreat, till they entred the barriers or scrupisons upon their counterscarpe. This action was performed in the face of all the canon and musqueteers, that were upon that part of the walls or outworks; and certainly both the officers and soldiers of our body did as much as could be expected from men, whom God had enabled, not only to see what their present duty was, but also to performe it exactly. I knowe his highness will not take it ill, that I have bin larger in this account then needed; the account passeth for a handsome one in the report of the French, who are not over-apt to flatter us; and the enemy have bin so well satisfied with the supper they then gott, that hitherto they have not expressed any appetite for a breakfast, or any other meale of that nature. Sir Bryce Cockran comanded the 19 companyes: I had occasion to be near him, and a witness to the truth of what I have related; and sent off next morneing at lest a 120 wounded men; the number of the killed was not great; but I know many of the wounded will dye. Their was none of the officers, above the quality of a lieutenant, killed or wounded.

WILLIAM LOCKHART.

Vice-admiral Goodsonn to secretary Thurloe.

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

Vol.lix. p.51.

I Have herewith sent a more exact account of the late transaction at this place. Yesterday I received a letter by a messenger from marshall D'Aumont, giving me to understand, that he is endeavouring the release of our seamen; but I take it for a French complement, in that I have cause to believe, that he hath at present neither men nor money to give in exchange; one of which must bee. I writt in my last to the commissioners of the admiralty, requesting to know, whether I might not endeavour their release upon my parole for giving their equalls in exchange; which I humbly begg may be taken into consideration. I am informed, that the enemies men of war are furnished with a greate part of their men from Fleishling, and that there, and at other portes in Holland, the goods and prisoners they bring in with them, are put on board Holland vessells, and carried for Antwerpe, and soe through the land of Oastend and Dunkirk. There are diverse prisoners at Oastend, that have bin brought that way: this I have from one of their owne men, native of Dunkirke, who hath forsaken them, and entered himselfe in one of your vessells of war here: he hath also further related, that a small Ostender went out of Fleishling a few daies since, since, and carried 20 of the men of that place with her; which abuses, I hope, will be A.D. 1658. taken into serious consideration. The shippes here with mee are most of them very foule, and our victualls exhausted, and the supply thereof ordered hither, not as yet arrived; which is all the trouble of

Your Honour's very humble servant,

Speaker, off Ostend, 8th of May, 1658.

WILLIAM GOODSONN.

Captain H. Smith to the protector.

May it please your HIGHNES,

I Have enclosed sent your highnes the examination of George Thompson, lieutenant to Vol.lix. p.55; major Waterhouse, concerning Sir Henry Slingsby's designe; wherein hee hath not carryed himselfe well nor honestly, haveing had private discourse severall times with Sir Henry concerning that busynes; but did not discover any thing of it to mee, till I drew it from him, haveing some other account of his carriage by others. Hee hath of late frequented the company of Sir Henry Slingsby's sonn very much, and such as are disaffected to your highnes. Supposeing that he was able to discover something more then others from Sir Henry and the cavaliers in this place, I did endeavour to make use of him for that purpose, but did not find him forward in that worke. I have sent him up to London, supposeing that his evidence may be of some use against Sir Henry. I have also sent your highnes the examination of three other persons, whom I have in custody here, who are fitt instruments for so wicked a designe. I tooke boldnes formerly to present your highnes with a paper I received from captain Overton, concerning some unhandsome expressions delivered by Mr. Stapleton to Sir Henry Slingsby; of which the captain is able to give your highnes a more full account: which is all I shall trouble your highnes with at present; but to crave leave to subscribe my selfe

Your HIGHNES

Most humble and faithfull servant,

Hull, May 8. 1658.

HEN. SMITH.

Lockhart to secretary Thurloe.

May it please your LORDSHIPP,

Mardick, May $\frac{12}{20}$. 1658.

SINCE my last, their haith arryved from Plimmoth towards 270 more recruitts. I Vol.lix. p.57. hope all that will need to compleat the number of 3000, will be heare very speedily. Their came some granado shells and baveens yesternight: those who brought them assure us the rest were embarking. They cannot be heare too soone, for I am in howerly expectation to heare news of the approach of the French army. I need presse the hastning over the generall and major-generall of these forces upon no other account then that of the interest of your own affairs. I have sent Mr. Noell ane account of the money received for the provisions last year, and must begg, that he may have order to pay in the surplus of what will be resting me in arreare before the 1st of August last. He will give your lordshipp ane account of both. We have not heare one bitt of coals: the soldiers cannot be restrained from burning the deale boards, that are in their howses: to send them a few coals will save his highnes treble their pryce in boards. Their came a shipp with coals heare two dayes before me; but finding their was no reddy money for him, he stole away in the night. I forgott to give your lordshipp the copy of ane arrest I obtained, towching the affair of Blay. I cawfed print at Paris, and it will not be amisse, that the same be done in England, to the end all merchants may take notice of their priviledge. Don John is expected at Donkerk upon the $\frac{14}{24}$. instant. I shall continue to pray, that the of the two regiments, that are in Kent, may be sent over, and that as soone as is possible. I have had no newes from the court since their comming to Montruill: I heare they are expected at Calais once this week; and therefore shall once more begg, that all things may be hastened over. I am,

May it please your LORDSHIPP,

Your most humble, fathfull,

and obedient servant,

WILL. LOCKHART.

My

A.D. 1658.

MY LORD,

The officers heare have no power to punish offenders with death, which occasioneth many disorders. I leave Mr. Swift at court, to the end he may advertise your lordshipp of all its motions, which I hope he is able to perform carefully.

May 11th, 1658.

An accompt what moneys have been weekly paid into the receipt of his highness's exchequer, arising by fines, for buildings upon new foundations, from the 9th day of March, 1657. inclusive, (on which day a committee of his highness's privy councill began to dispose of the said monyes) till the 7th day of Aprill following inclusive, being the last day the said committee disposed thereof, viz.

In the possession of G. Duckett esq;

Within the weeke ended, {

March 13. 1657. -----	1157
March 20. 1657. -----	651
March 27. 1658. -----	1323
Aprill 3. 1658. -----	1214	4345

There have been paid in of the said moneys since the said 7th Aprill to the 8th of May, 1658. inclusive, viz.

Within the weeke ended, {

Aprill 10. 1658. -----	1189
Aprill 17. 1658. -----	390
Aprill 24. 1658. -----	1196
May 1. 1658. -----	1277	5
May 8. 1658. -----	537	4589 5

Secretary Thurloe to H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland.

MY LORD,

In the possession of the right hon. the earl of Shelburn.

I Perceive by your lordship's, that the way discoursed of here for some present supply of money will in noe sort accommodate your occasions, nor be any releife at all; but that you had rather expect a parliamentary supply, then be put to those shifts. I cannot say, that you take a wronge measure, and am very glad, that there is soe much as a possibility for your excellency to keepe the cart upon the wheelles, untill the parliament comes. However, if any meanes yet can be found to raise any money for you, it shall not be neglected.

I wrott your excellency by the last, what was become of mareshall D'Aumont's designe. The enclosed will shew the issue thereof more at large, which is the first tyme wee here knew the ground of this undertaking; and I beleive it is the first of this kinde, which soe great a souldier as D'Aumont is esteemed to be ever engaged in. The very same designe was offered to his highnes by the same persons neare a yeare agoe; but it was thought here ridiculous and impracticable. The greatest evill is the weaknes of Goodson, to afford them boates and men to land his men, without any order hence.

Wee expect the French armye upon the coast very shortly, being already within a few legues thereof.

Our owne affaires here stand as they did by my last, without any alteration. I begge your excellency's pardon for this hasty scribble; and am

Your EXCELLENCYE'S

Most humble and faithfull servant,

Whitehall, 11. May, 1658.

JO. THURLOE.

H. Cromwell

H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland, to secretary Thurloe.

12 May 1658.

I AM not at all pleased, that Dr. H. should be so officious as to trouble you with A.D. 1658. such a piece of incoherence, as one single subordinate action must needs appear to you to be. I doubt not, but he might mean well in it; but for him to get a paper from me under colour of his own perusal, in order to the management of the matter to which it related, and to dispose of it in another way, I must say was not very fair. But the thing is the more qualified, when I consider into whose hands it fell; for I am confident, you will use it so, as not to give occasion to any to think, that I am put to that streight, that I must numerare pecus. I confess the general drift I aimed at, and the several means to that end taken altogether, might have been worth your knowledge, so far as to have induced you to give your opinion thereupon, which, I must needs say, I value in any concernment of mine.

I suppose the subscriptions of the army here, ere this time, are with you. I do every day receive others from the English inhabitants of the several parts of this nation. When they are all come together, I shall transmit them over, to the end you may make such use of them, as you shall think fit. I have also subscriptions from most of the ministers of this nation. I am also told, that the Scotch ministers are thinking upon something of the same nature. I am,

Your &c.

H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland, to secretary Thurloe.

SIR,

12 May 1658.

HERE is a messenger on purpose from col. Roger Mofson, of Mofson, in Denbighshire, by whom I am informed, that col. Mofson is secured, together with such other persons in those parts, as have been officers in the late war against the parliament. In the possession of William Cromwell, Esq;

This gentleman is a person, from whom I have received many civilities in my voyages for and from Ireland, and one who hath often declared to me, that he thought it was his duty to submit chearfully to the present government, and that he was resolved never to act against it, but to follow his private affairs, and mind the improvement of his estate, and discharge himself, as became a good subject, to his highness. I will not undertake to say, he hath kept his word; or that any other obligation lies on him to keep it, more than that of gentleman and honour: yet, nevertheless, if you have no particular matter against his person, but that he is taken only within the compass of a general rule, I would mediate so far in his behalf, as to desire you to take the best opportunity you can to get him enlarged, he being willing to give what security shall he desired for his good deportment. I remain,

Your &c.

H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland, to general Fleetwood.

DEAR BROTHER,

12 May 1658.

I Perceive by your last (wherein you express, that we have design'd to alter the ways of the minister's maintainance, &c.) that you have been fully and particularly informed of that affair. I hope (that to bring things into their proper and legal channel, and thereby to gratify the greater number both of good ministers and other persons) to make way for the encouragment of more ministers to come over into this land, which doth so much want them, little more than a third part thereof being as yet supplied; and altho' it be so, the maintenance set apart for them as it is now managed falling short 2 or 3000 l. even to pay this quarterly salary to those upon the place; and it being impossible to improve the maintenance any other way than by putting them that are free to receive tythes in kind upon their tythes, and making other provision for those, who conscientiously scruple that way of maintenance, altho' they are contented, that the state be their stewards to set, let, and gather the profits, and themselves receive the very specifical money, which ariseth out tythes, instead of tythes in specie, which all of them have done ever since that revenue hath been put into a distinct treasury; for so it hath been now above these 12 months: I say, I hope upon these and many other considerations, it will not be lookt upon as an evil design,

A.D. 1658. design, thus to settle the ministers, having regard as aforesaid to those that do soberly, and not wantonly, scruple that way. I wish as fair a way lay open for answering the necessities of the state, as this will those of the church.

Mr. Downing, resident in Holland, to secretary Thurloc.

HONOURABLE SIR,

Vol. lix.
p. 67.

I Receiv'd none from you this last weeke; and by mine from my wife, I understand that she had received none from me that post, I should be troubled, if the letters of that post to you should have miscarried, in which were some things of consequence, and, among others, a resolution of the States of Holland, commanding the two Dukes of Yorke and Gloucester out of this country.

Wee have noe newes yet of the arrival of the Portugall ambassador, but are in dayly expectation of him, as you will perceive by an inclosed memoriall of the French ambassador. However, the States of Holland have offered it to the States Generall, as their advice, that about six men of war be employ'd in the narrow, and to looke after Biscayners, about eight for the Streights, and ten for Portugall, the rest to remaine here for the present, to be made use of as occasion. And ord * for fitting out those, who are not ready * of Holland, are separated not to meet again * upon accompt of the Portugall ambassador's arrivall. Yesternight my lord Nieupoort came to me from the States General, to know whether I had any answer concerning the Portugall prizes, and acquainted me with a letter to them from the admiralty of Amsterdam, and the resolution of the States of Holland thereupon. You have already an accompt. I told him that I had no letters this last post; but that by what I had by the post before, I did suppose I should have received something this post concerning them. I wish with all my heart, something were done in that business. And haveing so often told them, that some answer would come, and none coming, I know not what more to say to them; but I hope by the next post, to have something from you about them. My lord Nieupoort is hastning to make ready to go for England, ^{w h i c h h a d i t n o} 158 325 25 60 319 32 67 145 395

t been for this Portugal bu f i n e s, I h a d h i n d e r e d.
146 232 305 469 551 242 140 68 390 140, 70 319 33 325 106 34 286 279.
His ma in bu f in es is to the ma ri ne t r 327 371 339 242 141 339 287 346 477 * 62 468 271 441 390 147 132 e a ty; the y t h i n k that the y o b t e i n m o r e 40 11 475; 468 169 147 325 104 74 467 468 170 401 466 339 384 133 41 upon the p l a c e from you the n by a ny instructions you will give to 523 468 120 355 251 306 510 468 105 239 12 393 343 510 503 313 477 me.

379. Mynheer Mornoe, and three other deputies of the town of Trevere in Zeeland, came th'other day to me, in the name of that town, to desire my intercession for the continuation of the Scotch staple at that town, and to let me know, that there were two Scotch men, the one named Robert Anderson, and th'other Andrew Sheene, which are endeavouring the removall of the said staple to Rotterdam; from whence the English merchant-adventurers had lately removed themselves for the evill treatement they found there, and the place which doth so stoutly interest themselves for Vandieft. I have promised the deputyes my assistance, and that I doubted not, but that his highness would be very ready in this particular to testify his good will towards them. I cannot think, that these Scotchmen have any authority from his highness.

Yesterday also the deputy of Dantzick was with me to let me know, that that city had ordered him to transport himselfe to London, earnestly to beg his highness's favour and mediation in behalf thereof, that they may be served in their privileges, and remain in the same condition as formerly, and that the lord Nieupoort should have instructions to the like effect; and therefore that his * is to cross the Sea with him.

There are two English prizes brought into the Texell by a small Ostender; there is a ship ca l l e d the Ha m b o r o u g h, or the Ha m b o 456 245 81 83 279 468 319 80 241 443 152 54 61, 416 468 319 90 18 416
o u g h A r m e s, f q u a r e f t e r 111 153 54 61 213 100 287 of about 300 tuns 138 126 155 213 40 140 466 133 ne; l o a d i n g with pi t c h and t a r r, 390; which is 365 12 267 105 54 500 429 147 26 61 207 463 133 136, and from Amster. for Me f f i n a i n S i c i l i a, f such like things 306 566 305 379 141 143 339 14 339 141 71 252 362 14, to 141 u p p l y the Span i f h f r e e b o o t e r s 154 121 123 362 468 550 72 142 62 46 132 40 42 241 113 466 134 141. This is certaine;

certaine; and I shall hereafter give you a more particular accompt concerning it. It is said, A.D. 1568.

the la dy S ta n h op hath a p af s e to go to that 468 355 267 141 463 105 61 414 322 14 120 217 141 41 477 314 477
England, h er mo the r be in g la te ly de a d;

547, 62 286 384 468 133 231 339 55 355 466 362 263 13 35; which I doe little f he is pr e v y to all the la te wonder at, for I am sure that 141 324 346 121 44 153 169 477 199 468 355 466 p lo t t. O Ne al e h er house w

121 265 147 149. 113 390 199 41 was at 62 286 329 all the last winter, and 160
e n t for England:

41 105 106 directly from thence 305 547: and though I did use some meanes to that him; and the princefs royal her end, yet I would discover nothing concerning 326; 207 468 570 is now gone to 62 286

l l e n, j o u r n

 75 81 84 41 105, which will be a good preparation for * 71 113 154 133 106
y. The r e is o ne L e e of Eff ex Englnd.

170. 468 133 42 346 114 390 82 41 44 408 2 * 294 that is now going for 547.
He was with me for a pass, but I refused him. He said he would take his  that although its true, that he was once secured  suspition, yet that nothing could be proved against him  by the meanes of your lady he obteyned his liberty: hereupon I gave him a word or two to yourself  a manner as I believe he would make noe  he pressed earnestly to have f in ce I under f

had it in form  that I would by noe meanes consent unto 140 339 251 69 519 141 ta n d that for ce r ta in he f ho u d ha v e go ne

463 105 33 467 305 251 133 463 339 324 141 328 84 34 319 154 41 314 390 for England d u ri n g the la te p lo t t, and o ne co

305 547 36 154 441 106 55 468 355 466 120 365 147 150 207 113 390 254 lo ne l J er v as Ho l l is f ho l d have gone as his 365 390 82 70 286 154 217 328 82 86 346 142 328 83 34 323 316 217 327 f er v an t.

141 286 154 205 150.
The lo r d Di g by Ar mi g

468 365 132 37 267 55 239 was also in England, and is returned. 213 381 54 er this to w ne

286, is now in 469 477 160 390 and it is said, that he hath gott very well by his voy-Ma r f in is r et u r n ed to age by presents given him. 371 133 141 339 346 134 289 155 135 105 279 477

Bruxels from F rank for t with af f u r an ce of C. St. w e l

585 306 46 438 305 148 500 217 141 154 133 205 251 408 572 161 42 83 come the r e.

255 468 134 42. So that it is supposed, that he will speedily be going thither. I heare
O Ne al e or La n g da le.

noe newes yet of the returne of 114 390 199 41 416 355 106 55 260 358.
The r e is o ne co lo ne l B la c k w e l of To um o

468 131 39 346 112 390 254 365 390 81 18 355 25 14 158 40 83 408 477 518 113 u ne in I r e la n d me, p ri v

154 * 133 42 355 106 34 that came to 370, * that one was 122 441 155 y to all that Ormond did in England, lo d g ed with him at Amsterdam p ri va

172 147  268 339 547, 365 36 56 279 500 3  and that he 123 441 514 te ly go t co pi es of his p a pe r s and a

466 362 314 148 254 429 287 408 327 123 14 426 134 141 207 desires 16 p af s and mo ny to carry him to you, di f co v er

121 217 145 207 384 393 477 249 326 477 510, and that he will 267 142 254 155 286 all he know es;

199 324 353 287; the man is altogether a stranger to me, and therefore I know not what to say of him, or what weight to put upon what he sayth; but desire your directions.

I p ra y lo o k for letter s from Bruxels, di r ec t ed
69 120 437 171 365 113 77 305 361 143 306 585 267 136 278 148 279

T ho m as P la m p in a l a Ro f e b
A Monsieur 148 328 101 217 123 355 101 124 339 15 85 16 443 142 43 22

la n c h a B r ed f t r e a t 355 108 29 64 16 22 135 279 142 150 136 43 16 151 Londre: and by the first ship s you cy p h er s.

456 142 510 shall receive 252 124 63 286 144. If I had any knowledge of the French intentions against Ostend, I should in all probability have hindered that disafter; for that I had a very particular and timely accompt of the march of those extraordinary

Spanish * that place. It seems Don John had notice of the * first. The difference continues very greate and the cityzens of Antwerp, by reason of the greate somes of money he would have from them. The 18th instant Don John gave orders to all the Spanish horse to march towards Cambrey, Dowey, Tournay, and those parts, to be in readyness; and their whole army is beginning to leave their quarters: and having

A.D. 1658. having furnished such places as are necessary, they will have not many foote to spare to make them capable to be even upon the defensive.

Having spoke much of surprizing St. Venant. I am at a greate straight truly, and goe upon tickett for want of mony; but shall try no more, being confident to receive authority for returning mony by the next, or bills of exchange; and I pray, that you will be pleased to take care that I may have an order to charge my allowance on Mr. Noell, as it grows due for the future, monthly; that I may not be so troublesome to you in my letters hereafter.

It was most fitt, that as I wrote in my last, I had something to say to the commissioners of the states general, who came to me about the protestants of Piedmont. And am,

HONOURABLE SIR,

Your most faithfull

humble servant,

Hague, May 24. 58. [N.S.]

G. DOWNING.

the French ambassador about Hesden,

I have spoken with 468 532 182 324 139 33 339,  he saith that he is possitively of opinion, that 468  not 477 149 67 145 151 271 233. 324 140  110, and that he beleeves that 324 503 395 149: and that he would againe write at large to that purpose; and he saith, which is also most true, that the great 328 121 287 of all the 47 441 282 143 408 468 545 346 467 542 503 231 141 70 279 311 467 p la ce. 121 355 251.

Discourseing at large with the deputy of Dantzick about the affaires of Poland, he said that the king of Poland had reason to be carefull of offending the king of Hungary, who had done so much for him; but especially, because he is not sure (as he said) of the intentions of the king of Sweden to peace with him; and that he should be in a desperate condition if he should have the Muscovites and Swede upon his back, and lose the assistance of Hungary: but that if the king of Sweden were come to this side the water, and that the king of Poland did know upon what terms the king of Sweden would be content to quitt Prussia, that then he verily beleaved the king of * would give little care further to the difficulties the king * makes against the acceptation of the mediation of France, * of that kind. Monsieur Aplebom is not yet in a condition.

A letter of intelligence from the Hague.

Samedi la 18 May, 1658. [N. S.]

Vol. lix.
P. 53.

CEUX Zutphen avont escrit pour plus de garrison, et reparation de leurs remparts. Le vice-admirall Pieter Floris pleint, que à Amsterdam on ne luy veut pas donner part du butin du sucre confisqué. Le Sieur Beuningen escrit derechef pour sa permission de revenir, qu'on veuille pour cest effect y faire venir un vaisseau de guerre. Il y a ou aura du bruit pour la question (meüe à l'occasion du proces de Tins) si des sentences du Conseil d'Etat il y a appel. Ceux de Hollande veulent encore, que Beuningen demeure quelque temps a Coppenhage. Les Estats de Hollande se separeroient ce soir.

Lundy 20 Dito.

Il y a eu un grand avis du conseil d'Etat touchant l'appel, que demande Tins. La question n'est pas propenement touchant Tins; mais s'il y a appel des sentences du conseil. Pour la negative sont le conseil meme, et pour tout le Sieur Beverning; et en Hollande le rael pensionnaire avec les siens; qui estudient a augmenter l'autorité de la Hollande dans ledit conseil, ou le sieur Beverning a la direction, avec trois de Hollande: attirants a eux aussy le sieur Vander Hooge; et par ainsy la plus part du...ayants, pluralité. Pour l'affirmative sont tous, qui ne desirent pas, que le conseil soit aggrandy, desapprouvant, que dans la deputation vers Munster, il y a eu un: Item, qu'a faire des traites on prend l'advis du conseil; item, que dans des conferences avec ceux du conseil, il commencent avoter par capita; et cy devant ils ne fouloient que donner avis en corps.

La

Le prince Maurice a écrit, que dans la capitulation de l'empereur futur on veut faire A.D. 1658. inferer, que cest estat ne doit pas se mesler des sujets de l'empire contre leur prince. Touchant le consul d'Espagne l'admirauté de Rotterdam a avisé, qu'on le peut admettre, en ne tirant plus icy, que les consuls d'icy ne tirent en Espagne. Le conte Harman demande commissaires.

Mardy, 21. dito.

De l'ambassadeur de France il y a eu derechef un memoire, disant que l'ambassadeur de Portugal soit en chemin, & desja sous les costes de France, desiroit qu'on mit ordre à la reception du dit ambassadeur, & que tout se fit avec honneur convenable, sur quoy on a resolu, qu'oui. Touchant l'affaire de Tins on est tombé d'accord de requerir aussy un avis du haut conseil, & apres cela on y avisera de plus pres. L'ambassadeur Boreel demande augmentation de traitement, autrement qu'il cassera la moitié de son trein.

Mecredy, 22. dito.

Aujourd'huy messieurs d'Hollande ont proposé leur avis provincial d'avoir enfin consenty au subsidie à l'equipage extraordinaire des 48 navires, non pas d'un million, mais de 600,000 Francs, comme l'année passée, & que 6 navires & deux yachtes seront employes dans le Bocht contre les depredateurs ou capers, & le reste vers les costes de Portugal. Quant à l'affaire Baltique, ont trouvé à propos de n'y toucher pas, ou pas encore; ains de permettre au sieur Beuningen de retourner, s'il trouve qu'il n'y a plus rien à faire, & pour celle fin est resolu d'y envoyer un navire de guerre pour son transport. Et pourtant mieux parfaire l'equipage, est consenty aux admirautés Nort Hollande & Rotterdam de negotier pour chaque navire dix mille Francs, au lieu de six mille.

Jeudy, 23. dito.

Aujourd'huy ceux de Hollande ont proposé de l'instruction à donner au sieur Newport; ou des points influants en icelle, à savoir qu'il aura à remercier le protecteur touchant les offices de mediation d'entre cest estat & Portugal. Qu'aura à resumer & avancer le traité de marine; mais evitera d'accorder le formulier du passeport proposé par les Anglois; ains persister en la resolution du 18. Janvier, 1657. & ne point decliner d'icelle. Item, il taschera d'engager le protecteur à se liger plus estroitement avec cest estat, specialement pour la conservation du commerce dans la mer Baltique, & pour la ville de Dansick. Item, à empescher l'alliance & dessein de la Suede & Dennemarc pour exclurre tous estrangers de la mer Baltique. On a aussy parlé d'asseurer la pescherie des harengs. On parlera aussy au Downing touchant les prinsees du sucre. On aura aussy resolu quelque chose touchant la compagnie d'Ostende.

Vendredy, 24. dito.

Il n'y a rien eu aujourd'huy qu'une plainte de l'admirauté en Zeelande, de ce que les depredateurs Turcs ont prins six navires de cest estat; sur quoy est resolu d'escire. Des 24 navires sont desja six dans le Bocht; 8 iront en la mer Mediterranée, & dix iront sur les costes de Portugal. Les 24 restants s'en vont estre equipés, & iceux serviront pour donner jalousie aux voisins, comme aux Anglois & Suedois.

The protector's instructions to the fleet.

WHEREAS by treaty between us and the king of France, Dunkirk is to be besieged both at land and sea; to witt, at land by the French power, and at sea by our fleet; and we are given to understand, that the French army is come near to that place for the purpose aforesaid, you are forthwith, upon the receipt hereof, (leaving behind you 2 or 3 of the ships, for preventing the enemies from coming into and going out of Ostend) to repair with the rest of the fleet with you before Dunkirk, and with them, such ships as you shall find there and thereabouts, and such as shall be sent unto you from other places, you shall your best endeavour to block up the said town of Dunkirk, and to hinder any relief to be carried thereinto, and prevent the enemy from coming out from thence; and the commissioners of the admiralty have direction to send you victuals, and send other provisions, as will be requisite.

You shall in this correspond with our embassador in France, and likewise with the general of the French army, and shall comply with all designs, as far as you are able, for the taking of the said place.

You shall afford to the French army such quantities of powder and bullet out of your ships, as you can spare for the said service, they paying ready money for the same; as also to lend them some battering guns, if they shall have occasion to use them.

VOL. VII.

M m

Whereas

Vol. lix. p. 65.
In the handwriting of secretary
Thurloe.

A.D. 1658. Whereas there are 5 companies of colonel Salmon's regiment to be transported to Mordeck, you are to send over our first ships to take some of them on board, and to be a convoy to the rest.

Whitehall, 14. May, 1658.

Extract out of the register of the secret resolutions of the lords states general of the United Netherlands.

Sabbathi, the 25th May, 1658. [N. S.]

Vol. lix. p. 91.

WAS heard the report of the lords Huygens and others, their H. and M. L. commissioners for the affairs of the sea, according to their resolution of the 23^d instant, having visited and examined the letter of the college of the admiralty writ at Amsterdam the 10th of the same month, concerning their considerations and advice upon the letter written by the consul David de Vries to their H. and M. L. from Salee, the 2^d of February last, 1658. Whereupon being debated, it is thought fit and understood herewith to ratify the said treaty by the said consul, upon procuration and order of their H. and M. L. with the lord Sid Abdalla Bensod Mahumed Benbuquar, concluded the 2^d of March of the last year, and by letter of the 25th of the same month, sent to their H. and M. L. by the said consul, and consequently an act of ratification shall be dispatched in due form, and sent to the said college, to be sent to the said consul. But considering the hard and exorbitant proceedings which are now-and-then used against the subjects of this state at Salee, from whence we may presume to gather, that the said lord doth not seem to be so much concerned as he ought in observing the treaty of peace and amity with this state, and in regard the said treaty by such practice might be easily broken, or interpreted that the same is unuseful to this state, it is resolv'd, that therefore shall be written to the said college of admiralty, that their lordships will send away the act of ratification upon the said treaty to Salee, by a squadron of ships of war, according to a former resolution, designed for the subduing of other Turkish pirates, and recommend the exchanging of the said act to the commander in chief of the said squadron, together with the consul; with some civil excuses for the relapse of time, and protestation of this side's inclination to observe the same precisely, and to continue it; and this having taken effect, they be then to insist upon the complement of justice in the business of Mr. William Wilhelmi Jaques Vyssell, and other subjects of this state, mentioned in the said letter. And in case they cannot come to a good agreement, the commander of the said squadron shall use the best means he can to preserve the subjects of this state dwelling at Salee, together with all their effects, and keep the said road and harbour blocked up, as if the said treaty had not been made, till such time that the said lord come to alter and change his resolution. It is also left to the choice of the said consul, according to the success of affairs one way or other, either to quit his charge, or continue in it, as he shall conceive to be best for him.

Relation of a voyage to Amsterdam and North Holland, with an account of all the ships of war, sent by Mr. Downing, resident in Holland.

Vol. lix. p. 95.

APRIL 30. departing from the Hague, next day I arrived at Amsterdam, where, from the secretary of vice-admiral Ruyter, and the commissioner-general of the admiralty, I was certainly informed, that the said admiralty was charged with seventy-two ships of war, twenty already employed for convoys, and of the rest 52 there are 36 equipped, whereof most are already descending towards the Texel. To know exactly the true constitution of the said equipage, the 2^d of May I hired a shallop to visit all the ships at or near Amsterdam, and found, that only 8 ships of the 36 were about Amsterdam, which are preparing with all diligence; the other 28 are descended toward the Texel. The same day I sent to the resident at the Hague this following list.

A list of the ships under the direction of the admiralty of Amsterdam, that are equipped, or to be equipped, whereof these following are descending towards the Texel.

Commanders.	Ships names.	Cannons.	N ^o men.
Vice-admiral Ruyter	The Great Genoway, or House of Swieten	54	250
De Wilde	English Apleton, or the Leopard	54	250
Brahel	The Little Genoway, or House of Cruningen	50	230
Van Salingen	The Shepherd	40	200
John Gedeons	The Amsterdam	52	230
			Vander

Commanders.	Ships names.	Cannons.	No men.	A.D. 1658.
Vanden Bosch	The Bull	32	180	}
Gillis Tyssen Campen	The Gouda	60	230
Caulery	The Utrecht	34	180
Peter Salomons	The Peasant	30	160
Boogaert	The West-Friesland	30	160
Jeroens Moy	The Seven Provinces	50	230
Jweers	The Dom of Utrecht	50	220
Arent Wernarts Swart	The Brack	20	90
Jacob Swart of Edam	The Greyhound	20	90
Isbrant de Vries	The Shepherdes	30	160
Dirck Crynen	The Prince on horse-back	50	200
Schatter of Harlam	The House Jaerswelt	50	200
Marrevelt	The Overysfell	30	160
- - - -	The Zeland	30	160
- - - -	The Leyden	30	160
Schaeff	The Harlam Stadthouse	50	200
Abraham Vander Hulst	The Peace	50	200
- - - -	The Pastime	54	230
Jereen Adelaer	The Zutphen	32	180
Le Graef	The Virgin of Enchuyfen	30	160
John Richecoyn	The Star	30	160
Van Reen	The She-cat	16	80
Nieuwen-hoff.	The He-cat	16	80

These 8 ships following are making ready with all diligence at Amsterdam.

Willem Vander Saen	The South-house	50	200
John Van Campen	The Half-moon	50	200
Ruytings	The Shepherd	30	160
Schay	The Bonnel	44	200
- - - -	The Burg, or Castle of Leyden	50	200
- - - -	Arms of Campen	50	200
- - - -	The Waking King	50	200
- - - -	The Harlam	50	200

13 ships of war at Amsterdam, that are not to be made ready for this year.

The Cowerden	50
The Geldersand	50
The Lantman	50
The Duyenford	50
The Holland	50
The Stadenlande	50
The Oosterwyck	56
The Tergoes	50
The Jaerswelt	50
The Trump	50
The House without name	50
Two frigates	{ 30 16

Within the freights are,

Admiral Tromp	The Arreere	50	200
Evert Tennis	The Lewarden	44	160
	There is also another ship	44	160

So that the whole sum of the men of war belonging to the admiralty of Amsterdam are as followeth :

Already going out, and at the Texel	Ships.	28
Almost ready at Amsterdam		8
Out in convoys		20
Within the freights of the Mediterranean sea		3
Those that will not be fitted out this year		13
In all		72

The

A.D. 1658. The 3^d of May from Amsterdam I went to Bruyckflood, and advanced as far as Monickendam, where I found not one man of war; but understood, that at Hoorn they made ready a man of war of Moninckdam, called also Moninckendam, commanded by captain Samblen, of 36 pieces of cannon, and 130 men. The same day I arrived at Edam, and there found none; but learnt, that Edam had lately separated its equipage from North Holland, and order it to be done at Amsterdam; and that the Greyhound in the list above was a frigate of Edam. The 4th I arrived at Hoorn, and there found true the ship Moninckendam to be commanded by captain Samblen.

There I also learnt, that the ship Alemar, belonging to captain Groot, was sent for from Helvoetsluice to be made ready; besides which I found at Hoorn these following:

Vice-admiral Peter Floris	The Joshua	50
	The Caleb	50
	A great ship without mast or name	50
	The Orange-tree	32
	The North Holland	58
	The Hoon	32
	Enchuyfen	32
	The Marriage	40

Vol. lix. p. 95. The same day I arrived at Enchuyfen, where are the ships following:

Pomp	The Endracht of Enchuyfen	36
	The Arms of Holland	30
	Moninckendam	50
	The Jupiter	50
	The New Endracht	50
	The West-Frise	50
	The Two Lions	50
	The Young Prince William	24
	The Shepherdes	30

The same day at Medenblick I found these ships:

	The Three Willands of David	44
	The Arms of Medenblick	40
	The Castle of Medenblick	28

So that all the ships of North Holland and West-Frise, depending upon the admiralty of Hoorn, are 23.

	Ships.
At Hoorn . . .	10
At Enchuyfen . . .	10
At Medenblick . . .	3

Whereof there are preparing only two.

The Alemaer	50	200
The Moninckendam	36	180

That evening I went towards the Helder, and there arrived at 3 of clock next morning; then took a boat, and visited the fleet, and found as above-said; also, that the Greenland fleet for whales went away the 30th of April, and some merchant-ships toward the Mediterranean sea, yet without convoy, which is ordered to stay till the 20th of May. The commissary-general of the admiralty of Friesland told me, that at Harlingen, where the college of that admiralty resides, were 10 ships, whereof these two were making ready.

The Groingen	36	160
The Westergo	40	160

And that the same equipage went on but slowly; so that these two ships, and those two of North Holland, will not be ready before June.

Vol. lix. p. 99. The names and number of cannon of the ships set forth by the admiralty of Amsterdam in all places.

The House of Swieten, commanded by de Ruyter, with 70 brass cannon.
 The House of Kreuningen, with 60 cannon.
 The Tyger, heretofore belonging to Appleton, with 60 cannon.
 Arms of Amsterdam, 56 cannon.

South-

South-houfe, Leyden, Harlam, Ofterwich,
Campen, Dome of Utrecht, Jupiter, Gelderlant,
Hollands Garden,
Holland,
Naffau, Gideon,
Joshua,
The Landfman,

with 50 to 56 cannon each one.

Kilmerfon,
The Conne,
The Moon,

50

The Great Shepherd,
The Great Shepherdess,
The Little Shepherd,
The Little Shepherdess, Pheasant 30 guns.

frigates of 40 guns.

frigates of 30 guns.

The Cat,

The Hater,

The Brack,

The Hound,

The Old-way,

The New-way,

The Bears, or Exchange,

The Town-houfe,

frigates of 16 or 20 guns.

of 40 and 46 guns for the city of Amsterdam.

Examination of Richard Culpeper.

May 15. 1658. Richard Culpeper, living in Three-middle Alley in Moorfields.

THAT yesterday there came unto him Edmund Stacy, John Edwards, and Edward Hagar, dwelling in Dunning's-alley in Bishopsgate-street, and propounded to him, that he would take a commission from the king of Scots, and that this night he would be assisting for him at Fisher's-folly for the surprisal of his highness and his guards, and that their grandeur or council had a list of all such persons as were enemies to the said king. They also said, that their colonel lived at Hoxton, a gentleman of 300l. a year, but his name they would not impart. John Edwards said, that he had lodged a barrel of powder, and a barrel of shot, in Bishopsgate-street, but did not discover whereabouts.

RICHARD CULPEPER:

The information of John Halleman, a Staffordshire man, born in Ridgeley, and lived lately at Ashby in Leicestershire, and now lying at the Lock and Sheers in Church-lane, near Dunstan's church, butcher, taken the 15th of May, 1658. before John lord Barkstead, lieutenant of the Tower.

SAITH, that one Mr. or major Cane came to this informant's lodging this day, and called upon this informant to drink with him; and then said to him, We are this night to fall upon and rout the party at Paul's, and colonel Pride's regiment in Southwark, and alarum Whitehall and all the out-guards. And said, When we have routed that party in the city at Paul's, we are promised strength enough, with guns and halberts, and the train'd-band arms, to carry on our work; and appointed this informant to come to the Bell in Carter-lane, at nine of the clock this night, where he should have two or three to come to him, and to certify him more fully. And this informant also saith, that one Mr. Dr. Banke, that was formerly a gunner for the king at Sashby, lying at a glazier's house next door to the Lock and Sheers, knows Mr. Cane, and hath been several times in his company; but the informant knoweth not, whether he knows of this design or no; for he never heard them speak together any thing of this business. When Mr. Cane went from this informant,

VOL. VII.

N n

A.D. 1658. informant, he said he was to go to some friends in Southwark, before he was to come to the Bell as aforesaid; and said, he had been up and down all this day to acquaint his friends with the design of this night's rising. And this informant saith, the said Cane was with him four or five days ago, and told him, he should see such a sight in London, that he had not seen a good while before; and when it was to be executed, would come and acquaint him with it. And in discourse this day, he bid this informant fear nothing; for this night they should be able to do their work, and bring them now under, that kept them under so all this while; and said they should have gold and silver enough to-morrow eleven of the clock, for they would plunder all the goldsmiths shops in London. And also promised this informant four months pay, which he said he should have in hand; and also said, though he could not prefer him at present as he desired, yet he should have a halbert, and better preferment after. And further said, when they had routed that party in the city, there would be few apprentices, journeymen, and others, that he doubted not, but that they should have forty thousand in 24 hours; and bid him not fail, but to be at the Bell aforesaid, before nine rather than after, and to inquire for Mr. Roberts instead of his name; because, he said, upon such a design, they must take any name.

JOHN HALLEMAN.

Letter from Marcus Mom.

London Tower, the 15th of May, 1658.

Vol. lix.
P. 233.

MUCH beloved father, greeting. I have received your acceptable of the 17th current, which in this cannot be answered, because the present condition wherein I am will not permit it, which (to inform you of it) is, that I do not follow here a suit in law upon account of captain Govert Tyssen, who was owner of the tobacco that you sent, against one Thomas Couwell, who had made seizure on the said goods by letters of marque, all which I have defended, and gotten the goods free; and having since disposed of the said goods, I arrested the said Thomas Couwell, and intended an action of damage and expences against him; which suit having won, and being ordained, that he should give me 150l. sterling for the damage and charges, I got an execution against him for the said moneys; and because I have pursued the said suit something hard, he often threatened to be the death of me, yea to make me come to the gallows, which I do not fear. In fine, seeing he could revenge himself with no other action against me, hath made a declaration, that I should have offended the protector and his counsel with injurious words, and held correspondence with the enemies of this state; which the said Thomas Couwell hath sworn absolutely against me. Whereupon, last saturday morning very early, I have been (though unguilty) taken by soldiers out of my bed, and led prisoner into the Tower; wherein it is very easy to come into, but very hard to get out. Therefore I beseech you, that you would be pleased to go with the first occasion to the Hague, and to make it known to the embassador Nieuport, and to intreat him to send a letter of recommendation to his secretary Crooke being here, or else to Mr. Strickland, who is here one of the council of state, and hath great favour, that I only may be heard with my witneses; for I am unguilty, and that which is declared, is but of pure malice against me. I intreat you to use all diligence to get recommendation; for the long being here, is of great charges; in the mean time, many friends use all diligence to help me out. So I recommend me to your good fatherly care; and commit you to the protection of the Almighty.

Subscribitur,

MARCUS MOM.

Agreeth with its original, written in Low-Dutch, and translated by me, translator of the high and mighty lords the states general of these United Provinces; in fidem cujus signavi,

G. LO COEUR.

John Cooke, &c. to Sir John Copleston.

HONORABLE,

Vol. lix. p. 75. IN pursuance of your instructions wee speeded to Dorchester, where wee came on Monday night aboute eight att night, delayinge the time untill then, because wee would avoid observation in our cominge; and in order to the concealment of ourselves, left our swords att Burport. Suddenly after our cominge to Dorchester, wee delivered your honor's A.D. 1658. letter to Mr. Bushrode, who thereupon readily engaged his best assistance; then acquaintinge us, that some of the Annabaptists had beene with the major, (himselſe and major Strange being present) and desired to have one of the churches to meete in; which, after some consideration and debate, hee refused to grante them. One tuesday morninge, a trusty and fitt agent attendinge them, thereby to gett knowledge of the number and quality of the persons assembled, as also what they did, who acquainted us, that the wholl forenoone was spent in receiveinge and readinge certaine letters, (by them stiled epistles) which were sent by the respective churches, whose messengers there mett; whereof there were many. The inscription of all which epistles was this, viz. An epistle from the church of Church in ——— to the messengers of the severall churches of Christ, who are now assembled att a generall meetinge in Dorchester. The subject matter of most of them (besides salutations) was to inquire the estate of the other churches, and to give an accounte of there owne; the motive to both beinge the consideration of the season, which they assert to be a time of apostasy and persecution, wherein the sufferings of Syon were. There subscription was under such terms; Subscribed by your fellow-members and sufferers in the body of Christ. The regulator of this affaire was one Collier, a clarke, all the while attendinge and recordinge the said epistles. The afternoone was spent in prayer, and such kinde of preachinge as they customary use; wherein there were eight employed that little time. In there prayer all of them much complained of the bonds and sufferings of the faints; some callinge itt the time of Syon's affliction, wherein those that have beene glorious lights on the right and left hand, are shutt up in bonds; vehemently prayinge, that in order to there deliverance, God would put a hooke into the nostrills of, and destroy him, who is the enemy of God and his people. In both these meetinges there were about three hundred persons. The same afternoone came captain Kiffin, captain Deane, one of the treasurers at warr, Mr. Warren, Mr. Harrison, and six more from London, to attend this meetinge.

Wensday in the forenoone the like or a greater number mett in the same place againe; and after prayer, performed by captaine Kiffin, many epistles (so called) were presented and read under the same inscription, and of like substance with those of the day before. The remainder of the time then, as also the afternoone, was spent in answering certain questions, viz.

1. Whither one of these church-members, beinge poore, might lawfully seeke after and receive reliefe from the world?

2. Whither a church-member might lawfully marry with an unbeliever?

3. Whither a teacher might preach and presse such truthes (not beinge fundamental) on his hearers, as appearinge soe to him, are yet not generally received for such by the churches in generall?

4. What is to be understood by anointinge with oyle, mentioned in the epistle of James, &c. whither itt were materiall oyle they anointed with, and whither such unction be now in use?

5. Whither layinge on of hands bee nowr equisitt to be used?

The debate about these questions was very greate, and the answers at last resolved soe empty, as not worth reciteinge. All that was donne besides, was the proposall of a little manuscript they had got printed, intituled, Sertaine questions and answers proposed and answered att fower generall meetings; two whereof were to bee sent to each church, who sent there messengers thither: the contents whereof I could not understand. That afternoone one John Cary, captaine Vernon, and adjutant Allen came to town. Att night there was a private meetinge in the George, where many of the principple ones were; and amongst other thinges there debated, a greate contest arise aboute there joyneinge with the fifth-monarchy-men; but for that time not concluded, by reason of captaine Kiffin's opposeing itt.

Thursday morneinge, a little after eight of the clocke, there mett att the George-inn all the grandees, with the pastors and teachers only, where (the doore beinge close shutt, and all resort of others denied untill two in the afternoone) they sate close in debate; but whither about the fifth-monarchy-busines, (broke off the night before) or what else, could not learne. All the day their publique meetinge in the accustomed place was carried on and managed in prayinge and speakinge as before; but att eveninge, another close meetinge was held; to what purpose also, unknowne.

Friday morninge they mett againe in the accustomed place, the forenoone, in prayer.

In the close of these meetinge it was published, that the messengers of the churches were desired to meete att the same chamber they mett in the night before, to receive an accounte of the result of the generall meetinge, to communicate to the severall churches from whom they came, and to receive information of the day and place appointed for the next generall meetinges; but what their conclusions were, or the day and place assigned for

A.D. 1651. for the next meetinge, wee could not learne. This donne, the company disperfed to there { } respective homes. We are

Your Honour's and the commonwealth's faithfull and most humble servants,

15. May, 1658.

JOHN COOKE,
 DANIEL CARY,
 GEORGE FORDE.

The principall persons at this meetinge were these under ;

Mr. John Cary.
 Adjutante Allen,
 Captaine Vernon.
 Lond^{rs}. Captaine Deane, one of the treasurers at warr.
 Captaine Kiffin.
 Mr. Warren.
 Mr. Harrifon.
 Mr. Collier of Wells.
 Mr. Strange of Barneftaple.
 Mr. Sheires of Plimouth.
 Mr. Mercer of Bridgewater.
 Mr. Glaffe of Bovey-Tracy.
 Mr. Hitch of Lime.

The names of the other wee could not get.

Colonel Barkstead, lieutenant of the Tower, to secretary Thurloc.

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

Vol. lix.
 p. 101.

SUMNER and Fryer are here ; Harrifon is certaynely noe house-keeper in or neare Aldersgate, and foe cannot be heard off ; only the party, that I sent for him, apprehended four genteele fellowes, in a desperate malignant ale-house, which can give noe good account of their being together at that tyme, or how they live otherwise. Somerton hath not layne at his house these five or six dayes, but they expect him to-morrow, whom I shall look after. There are foe many of the Carletons, and having not his christian name or place of abode, I know not which to apprehend. Major Cane, against whom the information of John Halleman was, (which I sent the last night inclosed to his highnes) I apprehended at the tyme and place as in the information. Soe soon as I saw him, I knew him : he was a major in the late king's army ; and after they were beaten out of the field, served in Wallingford ; and was accounted, both by myselfe and others, one of the stoutest officers of that garrison. He had planted himselfe in the midst of the butchers at Algate, at a cooke's shop, where he had layne for three monethes by-past. There were two other taken with him : had it not byn for the beating up of the drummes, and allarum in the city, they had byn a greater number. There are severall others taken up in the streets, by my petrolls, which I have not yet had tyme to examine. As for horse, in all that part of the towne, there were very few innes ; and all places being strictly examined, they found not above forty, which were most of them carr-horse. Soe farre as I am able to judge, their resolution was to horse themselves where they could take them by force, as to their greater number. I shall not faile to wayte upon you to-morrow ; only I thought it my duty to give this to you at present, from

Your most affectionate friend,

and hearty servant,

May 16. 1658.

JO. BARKSTEAD.

Some boxes of pistolles, which were seised upon by some of my men, whilst they sent for a stronger guard to fetch them off, they were forced from them by a party stronger then they sent from Paul's.

A letter

A letter of intelligence.

SIR,

Hague, May 28. [1658. N. S.]

A.D. 1658.

SINCE my last, which was the first I ever had the honor to address from these parts, according to directions, I returned to the Hague, to resolve on some buisiness, and

Vol. lix.
P. 117.

Charles Stuart

receive new instructions; the former not sufficient for future resolves, 625 resolving, the latter end of this weeke, or the beginning of next, for 70 147 31; 121 71 128 147

Franckford;

Sidney Stocale,

161; and giving some passes to one 154 91 54, 122 190 155 162 129 47 92 107 elect. Brand. Ch. Stew.

Ormond,

61, and others, for the service of 663. 625 takes very few with him; 629, my lord

Gerard,

77 63, 149 33 150 57, and some few. I am designed yet to goe in the place of secretary Nicholas, where I

157 64 51 151, 65 549 552 463 292 419 159 599 95, shal be able to doe you no

O Neale

Brussels

England;

inconsiderable service. Sunday last was seavenighte 485 320 422 came to 638 from 667.

Ormond is come Brussels. Sunday last Ch. Stew. D. York, D. Gloucester, Prfs. Roy. his son, and Ho-court did dine

629 404 293 to 638. 545 303 420, 625, 626 627, 623, 382 382, 545 239 383

the burghers of Brussels: all

quin 297 151 163 310 309 460 with 554 277 148 363 143 157 481 638: 231

at another table

251 489 549 276 110 were very highlie received, and with much ceremony; stay'd till about 8 of the clock. Monday last don John, and the marquis

214 8 481 554. 51 112 130 52 100, 68 451 123 303 420 628 239 554

Caracena, marched to the army.

On tuesday prince Condé, D. York, 438, 151 quis 283 518 289 67 445 329 563 554 246. 484 tues 303 624, 626,

D. Gloucester, and Ho-

court

on wednesday. All make fourteen thousand

627 239, 383 quin 297 151 163 484 484 177, 62 123 159 303 231 443 554 horse.

They have but 5 or 6 thousand foot.

552 560 560 383. 149 146 66 554 y 778 279 5 or 6 560 353 552. Most of the

D. Gloucester's men are lost.

Ormond's

seven hundred; Ch. Stu. as many. They are said

627 447 241 431. 629 regiment consists of 7 387; 625 249 441. 554 190 245 to be four thousand

Dunkirk.

61 534 305 563 266 4 560 in 635. But of this, and what else that happen, I shall certainely give you an account by the next poste; by which you shal be confirmed, that I am,

SIR,

Your unfained, assured freind and servant,

WILLIAM BROWNE.

Culpepper

Holland.

650 is in North 677. I shal know hereafter his imployment. The next you shall receive from 638.

Brussels.

The Superscription.

A Monsieur Monsieur Thomas Plampin, à la Rose-blanche en Bredstreete, London.Captain Stoakes to secretary Thurloe.

RIGHT HONORABLE,

IN my last from Furmitora I gave a full relation of the statt of the squadron, and of what had passed att Leagorne, and my intention in plying towards Cadiz, in hopes

Vol. lix.
p. 103.

to meet with the victuallers; since which time I have ranged all the coast of Spaine as farre as Malaga, where the last of Aprill wee surprized a Spanish man of warre of 24 gunes and 120 men, which had his station att Gibraltar, in the mouth of the straites, and had done much hurt; and (in all probability) would have done much more, if not timely taken off. The windes proveing verey boystrous att west, I was by noe means able to gett out of the straites, although I endeavored many dayes; and was the more earnest, by reason of the intilgence I had from the captaine I tooke, and from a Holander whoe came lattly out of Cadiz, that the Spanish fleet are in the bay of Cadiz, reedy to faill for the Indes; 38 or 40 faill in all: 17 of them are to convoy the Indes men as farre as the Canaries, and then to returne to Naples. One of there best men of

VOL. VII.

O O

warre

A.D. 1658. warre was overfett in the Carackes, which have hindred their goeing forth some time. I am informed shee is wholly lost, only her gunes. It hath been noe small trouble to mee, that want of victualls should hinder my meeting the enemy. I had with mee but six of the ten; being forced att Formitora to send two of them to Argir, to procure, if possible, victualls for their subsistence, and on to Marfilla, and another to Tetuan. Had all the ten been with mee, and victualled, I should have adventured upon them, though I had followed them halfe way to the Indies: notwithstanding, wee were all resolved to fall upon them in the bay of Cadiz, with the small party which wee had; and endeavored it eight dayes; but westerly winds held foe vemently, that we could not gett out. Our victualls being foe neare expended, we weare doubtfull of perishing in the sea, and foe were forced to this place, where we arrived the 15th instant. Truly, my lord, for wante of all thinges, especially faillers and victualls, we are in a verrey sad condition; for in all my life, never was I foe put to my shestes by fowle weather: the winter hath, and still continues so bade in theise parts, that the oldest man never saw the like. We have not, throughout the whole fleet, above 18 dayes victualls att short allowance; and thinges so excessive deere, that I know not what sheft to make, if the victualls come not within that time.

May it please your honor, this day I received a letter from Mr. Longland of Leagorne, that informes mee, my bills, which weare charged on the treasurer of the navy, are not yet pay'd, nether accepted; nether was a bill of Mr. Thomas Amoreyes of Lisbon, in November. This being blowne abroad amongst the merchants, I dout of being furnished with mony to buye victualls for our men to eatt. I leave the consequence to your honor's judgment, and doe earnestly desier some course may bee taken therein; for I will assure you, I shall charge noe more then necessity forceth me to: nether have I exceeded the credit given mee by his highnesse, the mony being mad good, which I payed for the captives at Tunes. I have lengthened out the victualls which I had at first, by putting our men to short allowance, that if I should pay them what is there due, it would neare amount the credit his highnesse gave mee. In the man of warr which I took, there was a small parfell of suger, which I intend to make off for paying some short allowance to our men for there refreshment here; it being high time to keep them quiatt. I hope your honor will be pleased to consider, that almost seventeen moneths is a long time to bee abroad; and every man is talking of home; the time hath been out a long time; and captaine Smith sayd, hee would not stay out in her, if hee might have her given him. If it should be foe, that I did stay out another winter, I desier that a shipp might bee sent; for this can never doe it: besid, poor men cannot maintain their families foe long att home. I leave all to your honor's grate wisdom, doe take leave, and remain,

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

Lyme, in the bay of Marfilla;
May the 18. 1658.

Your faithfull servant,

JOHN STOAKES.

H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland, to colonel Cooper, May 19th, 1658.

In the possession of William Cromwell esq;

I Received, about three weeks since, a desire from you by major Lowe, that this young man, who attends you, of whom you give a good character, might have a colours in your regiment. I must confess, I was not forward at that time to signify to him my approbation, tho' I was and am still willing to gratify you in any thing of that nature, or otherwise; for truly I do esteem him to be an honest man, faithfull to his highness and the publick, and one who on all occasions hath testified the like to me.

Dr. Gorges hath direction to prepare a commission for the ensign's place; and withall, to signify my grant thereof to lieutenant-colonel Duckenfield, with orders for his passing the musters accordingly.

I suppose I need not give you any relation of major Lowe's carriage at that time, when the late address from hence to his highness was first under consideration with the cheif officers here. I shall only say, that it favoured of so much peevishness and perverseness, that even his best friends, and some of those of his own judgment, could not but censure him for it. You know, that I never thought him any ways qualified to be a major; besides he hath been observed, as well by myself as other sober persons, who have known him longer than you have done, to be a man of none of the best temper. Moreover I must tell you, that he is so engaged in his own and others affairs, that he hath not given that diligent attendance on his charge, which an officer of his quality ought to have done. I say, upon these and many more considerations, with which I shall not now trouble you, I have thought it a duty incumbent upon me, on this occasion, to dismiss him from his com-command, lest (besides what else might be urged) so evil a precedent, no ways discountenanced, might have a dangerous influence upon such a body as an army, to the encouragement of unquiet spirits to oppose the unanimous resolutions and actings of the army in the manifestation of their duty, and to the discouragement of such as are sober and well-minded among them. Having made this vacancy, which I do assure you I have done on no other account than what is publick, I have not been a little solicitous to find a fit person to supply that place; even such a one, as might be most suitable to you, and most serviceable to the publick. I have prevailed upon captain Staples to leave his troop of horse, and accept of that command, and have commissioned him accordingly. He is a person of a very clear reputation, and generally known to the officers of the army, having always served among us from the beginning of the warr, and well experienced in foot-service. Having given you an account of my proceedings in this business, which hath been done with a great deal of respect and candidness towards you, I no ways doubt your fair interpretation thereof.

And likewise to prevent mistakes of the proceedings of our synodical meeting, so called here, I suppose your good friend and mine, Dr. Harrison, will give you some account thereof.

Although your relation to this place, and my inclination to you, might put me upon hastening your return hither; yet understanding, that there are still discourses of calling a parliament suddenly, wherein I suppose his highness will judge your attendance necessary, I shall only say, that whenever you receive his highness's dismiss, you will be very welcome to

Yours, &c.

Lockhart to secretary Thurloe.

May it please your LORDSHIPP,

BERGH was rendered yesterday upon no better conditions then to be prisoners of war; their is fyve of the eldest regiments the Spanyards had taken in it, and are this day a shipping for Callais. The Spanish forces cannot be in greater confusion and disorder then they are in; and their is that consternation upon all men, that they stand as it were with their armes folded, beholding their owne ruine, without endeavouring, by any reasonable way, to stopp the course of that inundation, wherein they are reddey to be swallowed up. All the considerable towns in Flanders are levying forces for their owne defence; and some here, who pretend to know much of the intentions of the Flemings, flatter me with hopes, that the provinces will ere long speak for themselves; and, that especially the marittime places of these provinces will rather inclyne to demand protectione from his highnes and England, then either from France or Holland. I give all discourse of that nature the best entertainment I can; and if it please the Lord to give that (which as to all faire appearances he hath broght to the birth) strength to bring forth, I doubt not, but a goodly chyld shall be come, which shall own his highness and England as one of its best godfathers. As to businesse heare, I carry it on with all the care and industry I am capable of. I may say, this towne hath hitherto afforded me lesse rest then the camp. I have not yett gott all the approaches flighted, tho' I work as hard as ever I can every day. I make a good stepp both as to reparations without, and government within. I am now settling of the harbour, to the end the profitts of it, belonging to his highnes, may be dewly collected. I send your lordshipp herewith the copy of a proclamatione I have emitted: it relates to the deportment of the soldiers; another will goe forth tomorrow; a copy whereof I shall send, which will relate to the bourgoise, and will regulate the valeus of mony, and the pryces of provisions. Your lordshipp will find both of them ruff-hewed peices; but so I can reach the matter of your businesse, your lordshipp will, I hope, excuse my failings in point of form. I have been bold to assume the tytle of generall, severall of the directions of your lordshipp's letters to me carying it: and I must beseech your lordshipp to beleve, that I was not prompted to take that name, either by vanity or ambition: but a name (tho' ane airy thing in itself, in all cases where it's design'd rather to cary on a businesse by authority then force) doth many tymes signify considerably, especially amongst the meaner sort of people. I writt in my last to your lordshipp, that provisione must be made for hay, for the subsistence of the cavallry in winter; but now Bergh is taken, I am putt in hopes to gett hay furnished at the third part at least of the expense it will stand you in, if it came from England. I resolve also to save what I can for pallisados heare, and shall give your lordship an account of it: but in the mean tyme I must begg, that 2 or 3000 good ones be sent as soone as possible; they are to be employed at the points of the principal bastions. If his highnes will send over 300 effective horsemen, I beleve I shall be able to doe our businesse with that number;

A.D. 1658. ber; or at least, if I find that number not sufficient, I can importune his highness for more. I could wish I had if it were no more but one troop for the present necessity, till the rest could be transported with conveniency; for I begin to find the French horse as dangerous to be mett with in the fields as the enemies. I had yesternight a very complementive letter from his eminence, wherein againe he renewed his sense of his highness's favour in the treatment of duke de Crequi and his nephew. So soone as he returns to Mardick or Bergh, which will be within this 3 dayes, (if it please God to preserve the king in health) I intend to presse the settling of the contributione for the subsistence of this garrisone, that all marches may be distinct and cleare betwixt us and the circumjacent garrisons belonging to the French. The devastations made by both the armyes are so great, as their will be no possibility of drawing any contributiones at present; but it's good to have things of that nature settled. The barbarities committed yesternight by the French at Bergh will begett me addresses from severall of the most substantiall inhabitants their, for liberty to transport themselves to Dunkerke: their friends have spoake for them alreddy; butt they are all rigid Catholickes; and wee have too many of that stamp here alreddy. I hope his highnes will give leave to any oppressed Protestant family to come in under his protection heare; but without his highnes's expresse commands, I will receive no Catholicks, not so much as those, who have belong'd to this place, and have once deserted it. I am confident it will be a most acceptable sacrifice to that God, who hath given his highnes and the nation ane interest heare, that this place may be made ane asyle to poor Protestants. But I consume to much of your lordshipp's tyme. God will direct your lordshipp better then any can advyse; and I must make it my businesse rather to doe well then say well, tho' I am not good at either. I am,

May it please your LORDSHIP,

Your most humble, fathfull and obedient servant,

Dunkerke, June 2^d.
S. N. 1658.

WILL. LOCKHART.

General Fleetwood to H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland.

DEAR BROTHER,

In the possession of the right hon. the earl of Shelburn.

WE are now preparing for the high court of justice, which sits to-morrow, wheare are to be tryed Dr. Hewett, Mr. Mordant, Sir Henry Slingsby, Mr. Smyth, and Mr. John Russell, Sir Richard Willis, Sir William Compton; and severall others; wheare I doubt not but they will finde impartiall justice. The Lord make it a warning to others, and of use to us, to see how little we are to trust to the fayre pretension of som mens kindnes, unlesse they have hade hearts and hands in or to the work! For surely our worke is of that nature, that will discover persons not to be long friends to it nor us, unlesse they have princeples in some measure sutable to it. The buyfness of Ostend you will heare what the issue is therof. They begin this campaigne with very ill successe. I wish we may have a beter account of our men this then the last yeare. Our men begin to be very unwilling to goe upon that service. His highnes is not as yet com to a resolution as to the time of parliment; the delay of which, I feare, will put us upon some extremities, by reason of our extraordinary wants of moneyes, which treade so fast upon our heeles in all our affayres, that I confesse I know not what will becom of us, unlesse the parliment will suddenly answer our occasion. I do beleive we spend as litle of the states moneyes but upon publicke occasions, as ever any did; but the truth is, our expences and occasions for moneyes are extraordinary, and we canot with safety retrench them. Ther is 2 or 3 auncient ministers, Dr. Tate, Mr. Fayrfull, formerly a minister in Tyrron, and another, whose name I know not, out of Willshire, all of them, because of my former relation to Ireland, do desire each of them 50l. advance. I know not the gentlemen as to know their gifts and holynes, neither can I tell what direction you give about their advance-moneyes. Dr. Tate, I understand, is perticularly invited by yourfelfe; and therefore you are, I presume, fully satisfied in him. I intreat to know.

May 24. [1657.]

Captain Stoakes to secretary Thurloe.

RIGHT HONORABLE,

Vol.lix. p.119.

IN my last I gave your honour an account of the condition of the party with me at the entrance into this port, to which please to be referred. Since is come to me the Bristoll and Hampshire from Tituan, bringing me a small refreshment, which cost double the price usuall, by reason of the extraordinary raines, the country being soe overflowed, that the

the people are not able to approach the citty. This I mention, that your honour may A.D. 1658. know what unfesonable weather hath bin in these seas; not any summer as yet. Our necessities are such, wee have not the liberty to dispute the price of victuals, but take it at what rate soever; soe that a great sume of money goes a small way, and the worst is, such a great want of boath, that it puts me to my witts end. God grant weather to bring the victualls hither; otherwise in all these parts I shall not finde victualls to subsist. Amidst all these perplexitys, I am somewhat comforted by your honour's of the 13th instant, together with the copy of his highness's letter to the great duke, and answered to his agent; wherein he is pleased to owne the proceedings at Leghorn, which is no small encouragement, that his highness will countenance me, who, to the utmost of my power, shall endeavour the accomplishment of all his commands, nothing more troubling me, then that I am not able to doe him any more service in these seas, where the enemy hath so many ports and watch-towers all alongst the coast, that we noe sooner appeare, but they get under their castles, where we can doe noe good, but at more hazard then the service will be profitable. The Bristoll and Hampshire mett with fower galleys of Naples close by Barfelsonia, and chac'd them under two of their castles, which was all they could doe. I have this day ordered the Kent and Guinea to convoy a merchant-ship towards Tunis, to surround Sardinia, and soe to Leghorn, (by way of Mounte Christo, where the enemy usually lyeth) to take in those provisions left there, and see if they have a better reception then our last, in which they are to spend but thirty days, by which tyme all their victualls will be expended. The Jersey have ordered to ply off the isles of Erres. The rest of the frigotts with me doe intend shall range the bay of Valentia, and the coast thereabouts, as long as their victualls shall give them leave. The Farfax as yet appeares not, being gon from Algeir (from whence I sent to call her, and the Yarmouth). I conceive they are gon to Tituan, being unable to furnish themselves at Algier, by reason of the drought. This is all at present worth your honour's notice, more then that you would be pleased to give order my credit be not lost in the non-payment of my bills; which will very much add to the rest of the favours received from your honour. For which I am,

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

Your honour's in all due observances

Lyme frigatt in Marselia bay,
the 25th of May, 1658.

JOHN STOAKES.

H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland, to secretary Thurloe.

SIR,

26. May, 58.

WE are glad our address found the acceptance we hoped for. I wish the same success to my lord Falconbridge.

Although I have often traced the cavalier in his trinkling here, yet I always thought more advantage might be made (as our affairs stood) by observing his walk, then preventing his first attempt; yet your stirring the ill humours in England made me a little watchful, least some of them should discharge themselves upon us. And being informed, that more passengers than ordinary were lately come over, I thought fit to cause a search through this city and suburbs last night at midnight, to the end I might have an account of every stranger and his business; but I have met with nothing of so much moment, as would amount to more than your diversion. I know not whether that might be a kindness to you. I am sure it would not be so to the publick; for I may say, upon your carefull labour depends a great part of our security. The ministers I called together about their maintenance, have this day given me a large paper in reference to several matters offered by me to their consideration, and are now returning to their respective homes, parting with much love, having, during the time of their being together, kept a good understanding, and mutual respect and tenderness one towards another; though I must tell you, endeavours have not been wanting amongst persons of no mean quality here to blow up the coals, and frustrate those good ends we aimed at. I confess I always thought Robert Goodwin was not laid aside for his own faults, but rather to make me fit to be chastized. I perceive occasions are often sought. I have had patience hitherto, and if things mend not shortly, it will be necessary to trouble you with a state of them. I am

In the possession of William Cromwell esq;

Yours, &c.

H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland, to lord Fauconberg.

A.D. 1658: MY LORD,

May 26. 58.

In the possession of
Will. Cromwell esq;

THIS trapan at Ostend seems as strange to me, as the sitting down before that place the last year at a coast, which the besiedged might overflow at their pleasure. I know not whether Don may sacrifice to his own politicks for either. It seems rather to mee, that the French have failed in theirs. Altho' people do commonly measure mens wisdom by their success, yet in this case one may wonder, that marshal d'Aumont should expect faith in those, whose want of faith was the only thing, which qualified them for his service.

I shall be always very willing to dispose myself according to the advice of my friends; but I think that affair, which you mention, about my going into France, will require much consideration; which being duly had, would easily incline me to whatever should appear most for the publick service. But I suppose your lordshipp speaks of it as a matter rather past, than under any present deliberation. I am

Yours, &c.

H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland, to lord Broghill, May 26. 58.

MY LORD,

In the possession of
Will. Cromwell esq;

SINCE your retirement into the countrey I am more a stranger to affairs than I was wont to be. However things have gone hitherto, I cannot expect they should mend by your absence. I must needs agree with your lordshipp, that the posture of affairs is not such as I could wish it were. We hear still of a parliament; but no time appointed for it. This bopeep game will likewise necessitate me to wear my faith in my eyes. I doubt the delay of a parliament may be occasioned from the unripeness of the design of Disbrowe and Fleetwood; the account whereof you received from your honest old neighbour. Your lordshipp knows this place seldom affords any remarkable matter. Thanks be to God, that unhealthfull distemper, which seized almost on all the inhabitants of this countrey, is quite removed; and in further answer to our prayers, we have had very seasonable rains.

And truly I hope the meeting of the ministers hath not been without a blessing. They are now gone home, having very lovingly agreed in all their conferences. I could tell you some workings of another nature, but must deferr it either till you come to London, or till I see you. I am, &c.

Monsieur Talon to the French ambassador.

From aboard the vice-admiral of England, the 7th of June, 1658. [N. S.]

SIR,

In the possession of the right hon. the earl of Shelburn.

I Send you in all haste a letter of M. de Turenne, by which you will see the present necessity we have of a speedy recruit from England, for the perfecting of a work so well begun. I come just now out of the trench, where I have been best part of this night. In which time the enemy made a very violent sally out upon our men, but were beaten back with loss, even into their counterscarp, our cavalry being engaged with theirs, and bringing back ten prisoners; among whom there is one captain of horse, and a cornet. We had on this occasion near 100 disabled men, half French and half English. Monsieur de Turenne was himself in the trench, and the lord Lockhart in the head of the English, who gave a signal testimony of their valour. Their work is much advanced this night, and they are now got in 3 nights within 60 paces of the enemies counterscarp. The trench of the French is not yet so much advanced; but to-morrow morning there will be two pieces of cannon brought for a battery, which will much expedite the work. I am now with the vice-admiral, from whom we receive considerable assistance for our siege, to discourse and consult with him about the means to demolish by sea the fort de Bone at Dunkirk, which doth us much mischief as to our works. While I was in the enemies hands, from whom I lately made my escape, I found by them, that they would hazard all to hinder Dunkirk from falling under the dominion of the English. If I had here an opportunity of writing to you, I would inform you of all the particular passages of our siege, that so you might do the same to his highness. As also, I should be glad, by this commerce, to give you a testimony how perfectly I am,

SIR,

Your most obedient and humble servant,

TALON.

The

The testimony of Thomas Topham, sworne and examined.

SAITH,

A.D. 1658.

Vol. lii. p. 21.

THAT he was, May the 8th, at the fethers taverne in Cheapfide, where were one collonel Deane, Mr. Manley, Mr. Seamour, Mr. Somers, a west-country gentleman, to the deponent unknowne, and Mr. Carleton, who appeared on behalf of Mr. Southcoate of Paul's church-yard, Mr. Hall, Mr. Isaackson, together with the deponent. The intention of the meeting was for the interest of Charles Stuart, to give an account what forces they could raise at an hower's time. That Charles Stuart was to come over with 7 or 8000 from beyond sea, Oastend, or some place beyond sea unknown to the deponent. For the meeting at the mermaid, he should give an account of, that they had not many meetings but to drink a cup of wine. And the deponent being comanded to declare what else he knew in relation to that designe, said, in relation to the citty, Deane said, that if Mr. Manley would make good what he promised to him, he would secure all the outparts of London to him, and demanded 150 horse to face the Mewes. This was the 8th of May last, as the deponent takes it; which if Manley would make good according to his promise, he would fall upon all the quarters from Fleetstreete, Holborne, and Smithfield; but he would never make out where the faces were. That the number of men, that each person engaged to bring, are as followeth, viz. Manley spoke of 200 horse, Carleton for Southcoate 250 foot and horse, besides some men to secure Paul's, if they were provided with armes, Seamour 200, Somers 500, and did not question but he should make them up a regiment, if the designe held out but a while, the west-country gentleman 800 horse, but would have brought it more, had he known it sooner. And this deponent further faith, that Manley was the collonel of horse, who had his comission from the king Charles Stuart, dated from Bruges the 20th of January, the 9th yeare of his reigne; and that Manley did fix upon under-officers: that Somers was to have been a collonel of foot: that he told this deponent, his comission was in Morefields, and that one Carleton delivered it to him, a minister, as the deponent takes it, an ancient man, in grey clothes: that Manley spake of some horse, that were to come from Hatfield; but the deponent knew not the number: but Manley further told him of some pistols and holsters, put, as the deponent thinkes, in one of the lord of Salisbury's houses that was to be lett: that the said Manley further told the deponent, that there were very honourable persons would appear, if the foresaid party were able to stand, and told of one person, that, he said, we would wonder at; but he was engaged on an oath not to discover him, nor make it knowne to any; and did not question but many would appeare, if they did but stand a while: that the 8th of May it was appointed they should meet againe the 9th, being Sunday, at Mr. Isaackson's, the Golden-key in Cheapfide; but that held not, in regard the persons that should, could not be met with: that May the 10th they met at the deponent's house; there came onely Deane, Manley, and Seymour, with 2 or 3 more persons, unknowne to the deponent. They came in about 9 of the clock, ordered no candles should be seen, but would come in the darke, and went up to a roome, and staid there 2 howers; but the deponent was not admitted to come to them, nor was Seamour admitted in the counsell; but told them it was very late, and came down to the deponent into his kitchen. They staid there till 12 at night, and Manley told the deponent, that they were agents from the generall; and that Deane had given them very good satisfaction; and that the designe should be put in execution; but did not then tell the time. That May the 13th, at the Exchange taverne by the stocks, met Manley, the 2 Needhams, Isaackson, Brandon, and a man in a plush jackett: that the end of that meeting was only to know and be acquainted with one another. The deponent was to have been an officer under Manley. That the deponent was at a meeting at Creeplegate, where were Manley, the 2 Needhams; one of them was to have been an officer under Manley, as Manley told the deponent; and that one was to have been a lieutenant-collonel, and the other a captaine: that there were also present there Isaackson, and one Carrant, who, Manley said, was to have been a captaine, Goodwin, Hancock, Langridge, and the deponent: that Mr. Manley told them, that saterday was the night, and that there should be a meeting the next day for orders, and for the word and the signall. This was fryday; but the next morning appointed his officers to meet at the Mourning-bush taverne at Aldersgate; and there only his officers met, and were to goe for the word and other orders to the Mermaid in Cheapfide, from an agent from the generall: that the signall was to have been given on saturday at 2 a clock; but the designe should have been put in execution at 11 at night, when the chymes went at Bow and Cornhill; and then should they receive orders at the Mermaid, as Mr. Manley told him: that the discourse at the Mourning-bush, where were onely Manley his officers, was, that they were going to receive orders; that their regiment were to meet at the Sunn taverne to receive orders at 8 at night from him that was to be their major: that Stacy came to the deponent at the King's-head in Swithin's lane,

A.D. 1658. lane, and told him, he had met with a foldier at the Tower, who told him, that the lord Barkstead had receiv'd orders from his highnes to march out from the Tower with 5 running drakes; whereupon he said, that the business was discovered; but he slighted the drakes. That the deponent being going to the Mermaid, Mr. Hale stopt him, telling him, that Manley and the rest were taken; and so the deponent returned back: this was between 2 and 3 a-clock. That they brought in armes and ammunition to a warehouse took of the deponent, which were brought in by Manley his order, who, as he told the deponent, was to provide armes for his regiment; and told the deponent on saterday morning, that there was a suite of armes for Sir Gilbert Gerrard at the said warehouse. That one Brandon had the key of the said warehouse. That there were 2 boxes of pistolls there, some loose, some holsters; being, as Manley told the deponent, for Sir William Layton, who was to seize on the guards at Paul's. That there were 5 or 6 dozen of powder hornes, some 3 or 4 dozen Mr. Manley, as he told the deponent, sent in with some powder; and that they spake of seizing the lord Titchborne, collonel Rose, and the officers of the train'd bands; and that the prisons should be all open. That Isaackson told the deponent, that it was in motion to have a collection, viz. 5 l. a-piece from the officers, for some person to seize upon his highnes. That when Manley was examined before the lord Titchborne, he told this deponent, he became ingaged for Hutchinson to raise a regiment of men for the king of Sweden; but before he would be bound, he made him swear he would never fight directly or indirectly against the house of the Stuarts, else he would never become bound; and said, that if this designe went on in London, that Hutchinson with his party would joyne; and that the said Manley told the deponent, that there would be men enough both from the cittie and country, that would joyne.

Marshal Turenne to Bordeaux, the French ambassador in England.

MONSIEUR,

Vol. lix.
p. 109.

LA cour s'estant rencontrée icy, il y a quelque temps, que je ne me suis pas donné l'honneur de vous escrire.

Mais comme les tranchées sont ouvertes depuis trois jours, et que l'on trouve une grande resistance, et que l'on a nouvelles asseurées, que l'armée de l'ennemi s'en viendra un de ces jours en presence de celle du roy, je vous supplie de parler à Monsieur le protecteur, à fin qu'il envoie promptement un renfort d'infanterie. Il seroit necessaire, si on veut avoir quelque seureté pour la conqueste de cette place, qu'il s'eut au moins deux milles hommes de pied de renfort, que Monsieur le protecteur envoyast en diligence. Je vous supplie de luy représenter, qu'il fit bien cet effort là pour Mardick, car cecy est de telle consequence pour ses ennemis, qu'il n'y a rien au monde, qu'ils ne fassent pour le secours de la place. Si Monsieur le protecteur a de l'infanterie sur la coste de la mer, il faudroit, qu'il la fit embarquer pour venir icy en diligence. Car je vous diray sans treneur, que l'on manque de l'infanterie faire un grand siege, et resister à l'ennemi de dehors, qui a tous les avantages du monde pour entreprendre sur les lignes de quel costé, qu'il voudra.

Les ennemis firent hier une sortie sur les deux tranchées: les Anglois y firent fort bien, et se levent fort de notre cavallerie, qui poussa ses ennemis sur leur contrescarpe. Il y a eu un capitaine de cavallerie de l'ennemis pris, et quelques cavalliers, avec un cornette, et quartier-maistre. Ils disent qu'il y a soixante compagnies de cavallerie dans la place. Il est vray, que les compagnies sont foibles, mais asseurement il y a plus de sept à huit cents chevaux: Cela nous occupe beaucoup de plus, et est cause, que je vous demande encore de solliciter en diligence un renfort de deux mille hommes, et que l'on envoie tousjours, ce qui est prest.

Il si est passé deux ou trois actions, ou les Anglois ont fort bien fait; et on veu comme les Francois vont de tout bon cœur pour la conqueste de cette place, ce qui leur donne beaucoup de gaité et de la confiance. Nous sommes desja fort proche de la contrescarpe, et cela hastera fort l'ennemis de faire un effort; et asseurement estant divisez, comme nous sommes, par des ponts, si on n'est promptement renforce d'infanterie, il peut y arriver un accident. C'est la pure verité, laquelle doit obliger Monsieur le protecteur à l'envoy des hommes en diligence. Continuez moy vos bonnes graces, et me croyez,

MONSIEUR,

Du camp devant Dunkirk, le 7. Juin, 1658. [N. S.]

Vostre tres humble serviteur,

TURENNE.

Mr.

Mr. Downing, resident in Holland, to secretary Thurloe.

HONOURABLE SIR,

A.D. 1658.

SINCE the last post I wrote to you by one Mr. ^{P r i n c e a m e} 120 441 104 251 102 379 ^{Vol. lix. p. 115.}
^{r e c h a n t of Amsterdam,} 132 26 319 106 147 408 566, who is indeed a very honest man, and faithfull to his friends, and indeede the man that I depend upon, upon all occasions, 339 566; and unless you shall be pleased to shew him a reall countenance and assistance in that particular business of his owne he comes about, I shall be incapable of giving you such accompts from those parts as I have done, and otherwise shall for the future be able to doe. It is true I have some others, but none like him.

in Amsterdam;

I can assure you, that heere is nothing like ^{the ft. gen. e n g a g e i n g to} 468 535 40 105 308 311 339 55 477
^{r e l i e v Dunkirk by f e a,} 134 42 83 70 42 154 582 239 141 42 14, though there are not wanting them, that ^{e v e n i n the ft. gen.} doe their utmost, 43 155 44 108 339 468 535, to blow them up to such an art; but ^{Zeeland,} having gained so much upon ducees of 558, this doth extreemely keepe of any such ^{next neighbours to Dunkirk,} thing; for that they being 391 392 144 477 582, the onely way to bring about such ^{Holland} a thing must have bin by engaging them first; but 557 finds them very little inclined to any such thing, which is of no small consequence to your affaires; and by mine above-mentioned I gave you an accompt, that the fleete from Amsterdam is gone to sea, which ^{very good assurance to your siege of Dunkirk;} is, I thinke, a 154 45 441 317 217 144 157 437 109 251 477 511 142 72 279

311 408 582; but truly I know not what to say to the ranckling business of the Portugal
^{de Wi} prizes, nor what effects it may produce. I dout at next rancounter I shall finde 263 502

150 very much out of patience; for that, according to your former, I promised this weeke an answer without fayle concerning them; and surely some answer, though generall, were, I thinke, much better then none, were it onely a letter of kindness in generall termes, intimateing his highness resolution, in this particular, and in all others, to preserve the treaty
^{such an answer as this would serve for some time, till} of peace betweene him and this state: 144 156 27 66 205 205 142 161 286 217 469

^{Dunkirk might be out} 159 114 83 36 143 286 154 305 460 475 476 83 87 probably 582 381 57 65
^{of danger;} 150 231 418 408 260 109 58 286; and further, relieving the Spaniard, they will say, that that is but the act of particular men, and not of the state; and that 'tis noe more then their subjects did against themselves dureing the warr with Spaine; and that they have made orders for the punishing such as I have complained of, although it's as true, that nothing hath bin effectually done against any of them in pursuance of them: and for the Spanish bringing in the shippes of the English into their harbours, reasoning that case with admiral Obdam, he replyed, that being in friendship as well with Spain as England, their harbours ought to be open equally to both, but that they were willing to use their endeavour to hinder the unladeing any of them: and at another time de Witt said to me, that they could not complaine of any by virtue of Portugall manner bring Dutch ships into the English harbours, and that it was not against the

^{But I shall do my utmost.} treaty. 244 71 142 319 84 270 381 157 148 385. I am glad of what you write concerning the Scottish staple at Trevere. By my last I gave you an account, to wit, ^{lady Stanhope's and her pafs.} stands in relation to the 355 267 142 463 108 64 414 207 63 286 122 217

143.

^{Amsterdam} I shall, according to your directions, fend to 566 for the ^{I r i s h c o l o} 72 441 143 66 254 365
^{ne l} 390 86, and by the next give you an accompt concerning that business; but the person being wholly a stranger to me, I cannot as yet say much therein. I shall have a care of ^{Gardiner} 308 134 36 339 286. He is ^{now come hither from Bruffels,} 397 255 325 468 135 306 585, and this post comes to

^{Plampin.} you a letter from him directed to Monsieur 124 355 100 123 339. This weeke 143
^{Sir}

VOL. VII.

Q q

70

A.D. 1658. John Marlow

sons to me

70 135 72 116 64 105 371 135 86 116 161 sent one of his 459 109 143 477 379 with a 122 443 48 51 286, that the said 138 67 131 73 118 66 110, if he might have 306 379 15 425, and an hundred pound sterling to bear his charges, 207 his pardon, would go for England, and discover 327 123 213 37 412 161 117 85 37 314 305 547 207 267 143 254 154 286 to you all he knows 477 510 199 324 77 395 162 287 concerning 572 263 141 72 56 108 287; and this he in general 450 34 477 379 467 324 254 84 36 267 142 29 470 142 408
 338 431 136 150 205 251, and that 267 155 114 156 286 186 41 339 468 395 136 150 65 408 547 had sent to him, 477 339 155 71 466 326 339 477 547; and that his 459 108 would put himself any-where as a 123 441 459 106 286 339
 511 433 for his 298 468 134 141 298 72 149 65 50 150 86 426 135 305, 371 109 251, I told him, I could say nothing thereto without directions, which when I had, he should have an answer from me; but he said, that 327 298 168 734 162 117 86 amongst them.
 37 395 150 231 217 17 143 123 173 477 137 44 371 339 203 468 103.
 469 384 137 110 339 57 246 477 379 116 390 254 365 390 86 124 199 100
 286, and gave me 468 339 30 365 142 279 184 258. 'Tis he that 328 85 36 41 109 468 379 142 138 339 57 286 once brought to you, and who was to have bin 362 42 152 466 387 109 150 254 365 390 84 477 collonell 362 412 144, who was to have 249 279 17 regiment into 549. 324 409 143 327 service, if 72 will imploy him, 477 572; so I desire your directions therein.
 I think the resolutions of the states of Holland, which I sent you by the last post, concerning a 136 44 390 160 199 408 199 362 205 251 500 156 42 393 251, is considerable to 547. I have spoken with 532 about it, and he will give an accompt thereof to Mazarine.
 371 174 14 441 390. Just now a messenger of the states general came to me to let me know, that the deputies of the states general desire a conference with me to-morrow at 10 of the clock; and whether I shall have some new thing concerning the Portugal prizes, I know not. I have by this post sent you the coppies of such papers as they gave me at my last conference, on the 1st June instant. The inclosed, which was mentioned to be sent you in the letter by my secretary, was forgott. My wife, I thank God, arrived here safe on tuesday night last.

I have this post charged 500 l. upon Mr. Noell upon my owne account as part of my allowance of 1510 l. per annum, and shall truly in all things endeavour to my utmost.

I shall look after the 456 140 for England as well as I can. He that will direct his letters to you from 585 to 475 384 468 528 25 477 174 110, will make use of the inclosed cypher, of which he hath a copy. I am,

HONOURABLE SIR,

Hague, June 7. 58. [N.S.]

Your most faithfull humble servant,

G. DOWNING.

Lord

Lord Fauconberg to secretary Thurloe.

SIR,

BEING yet very sicke, and my eyes much weakened by sea, physick and smoake, off which I have had good store since my landing, I must beg leave to use Wickham's hand in acquainting you with our adventures.

Be pleased then to understand, that heareing his majesty intended for Mardike, I resolved to venture any weather, rather then disappoint his journey thither. About ten a clocke at night on thursday last, I shipt all my horses and carriage; and on friday morning about ten a clocke embarked my selfe, takeing only my lord Howard, and my owne retinue, aboard with me: all the rest of the gentlemen, which were grown more numerous since my last, went aboard the lesser vessell called the Wakerfeild.

The wind turneing against us, as soone as ever we were aboard, shutt us up all the day in the roade; about eleven at night we weighed anchor, the wind then very high; and within halfe an hower, turneing to a very great storme, drawe the Wakerfeild, and the biggest of the three horse-boates, in which all mine were, to the number of 39, away from us, we hope to Mardike or the Downes, otherwise the horses are inevitably lost, having nothing of provision aboard with them. My owne ship, and two smaller horse-boates, though with the losse of their masts, praised be God, cast anchor upon this road earely this morning. But the wind continued so extreame high, as made it impossible for us to get ashore till about an hower ago; and then with so much hazard, as I would perswade but few of my people, scarce of the seamen, to venture with me; but had they bin so sicke on board as I, they would not have been so thoughtfull for themselves. At my approach, I could but wonder to discover such infinite numbers of all sorts of people along the coast, and upon the wall; the kinge himselfe, the queene, and duke of Anjou, in a box built, I thinke, on purpose for this occasion; though the posture I entred in answer'd nothing their expectation, haveing onely my two ship-boates, which all the rhetorique I had could not perswade my company to fill. The count de Charos, governor of the towne, stood ready at the pierre by the king's order to receive me with 8 or 10 coaches. Immediately after my arrivall, most persons of quality in towne came to salute me; but particularly from his eminence came the captain of his guards; from his majesty the duke de Crequy; from the queene the count de Orvall, sonne to the famous duke of Sully; and from the duke d' Anjou marquis d' Hiantelle, all to complement me, and lament the disaster of my journey. The king's own Switzers guard my door. All his officers and the queene's are appointed to attend me at meales. The duke de Crequy had orders to have supped with me; but finding me so exceedeingly out of order, left me to retire. In short, the same orders, that have formerly bin given for the entertainment of the dukes of Modena and Mantua, &c. are now for my reception. The count de Charos acquainted me at my landing, how much the king desired to see me, and know by me of his highnes's health; and to that end told me, his majesty intended to give me audience to-morrow, which I endeavored to excuse, saying it would be an interruption to their majestyes devotions, as I conceived, and was a day, which ought by mee to be set apart for other matters. This, with other endeavors, which I intend to use, will, I hope, free mee from any trouble to-morrow.

As to the siege of Dunkirk, by the little discours I have had with the duke de Crequy, chevalier Grammont, and others, I find they infinitely esteeme my lord Lockhart for his courage, care, and enduring the fatigue beyond all men they ever saw. These were their owne words. The enemies army, as they say, are 10000 horse, and 8 or 9000 foot. Our forces, French and English, will be to-morrow 18000 within the lines, besides what the king hath heere, and 6000 horse, that the marshall le Fonte commands up in the country, in case they should make an incursion that way. The besieged have made two sallies, one upon the French quarters, and another upon the English, both which were repulsed very suddenly, and without any losse on our parte. I do not heare the king hath any intentions of returneing suddenly thither, in regard of the Spanish armyes approach; for Monsieur de Crequy tells me, he resembles so perfectly his grandfather, as, should any thing of action happen, they would be in danger of looseing the gallantest prince they ever had.

Monsieur de Crequy came just now to acquaint me, the king would give me audience to-morrow, but I have excused it; which I hope you will do, the useing another hand, and this bad paper. For my owne writeing-box is still aboard, as all my other clothes yet are. Dear sir, I am most heartily

Saturday night, 12 a clocke, 29th [May 1658.] from Calais.

Your affectionate and most faithfull servant,

FAUCONBERG.

I feare

A.D. 1658.

In the possession of the right hon. the earl of Shelburne.

A.D. 1658. I feare I shall be forc't to stay fower or five dayes, to-morrow being a lost day as to my buisnes; and therefore I shall desire you would please to dispatch a courier to me with what commands his highnes hath for me. I was really scarce able to see what I writt to his highnes; therefore I hope your goodnes will pardon my useing another hand.

Secretary Thurloe to Mr. John Aldworth, consul of the English nation at Marseilles.

SIR,

In the possession of Joseph Radcliffe, of the Inner Temple, esq;

I Have received yours of this $\frac{28}{18}$. May, with one inclosed from captain Stoakes, where- to the inclosed is an answer, which I pray cause to be safely delivered to him. You have done exceeding well to assist him in furnishing himself with provisions for the fleet. The 1500 l. which you charged, is ordered to be paid, and shall take all the care I can, that it be paid accordingly, which is all the trouble that I will give you at this time; and rest Whitehall, ^{May ult.} June 10th, 1658.

Your very assured friend.

Instructions to captain Stoakes.

OLIVER P.

In the possession of Joseph Radcliffe, of the Inner Temple, esq;

WHEREAS the French king hath communicated to us, that he is very shortly to engage in a naval expedition against the king of Spain, the common enemy of us both; and to this purpose his said majesty hath commanded a fleet of ships at Thoulon, and some regiments to be transported upon them; and hath hereupon desired of us, that some of our ships in the Mediterranean sea may keep company with his fleet, for their better security: you are therefore, upon the receipt of this instruction, to cause 5 or 6 of the ships, now under your command, to set sail for Thoulon, or at least at such time as you shall understand the fleet of his said majesty shall be in readiness to sail; and being come thither, or being met at such place as agreed upon, the commander of the said squadron of 5 or 6 ships shall keep them company upon their expedition, and sail with them to such place in the Mediterranean sea against the Spaniard, as the admiral of the French fleet shall desire, according as the wind and weather will permit, and as it will consist with the safety of the said ships; and shall also endeavour to defend the said fleet of France against any of our enemies, which shall attack them.

The commander of the said squadron is to carry his flag as at other times, and to take care, that in all other things, during his being with the French fleet, the honour of us and commonwealth be preserved.

And having done this service, he is to observe such farther orders as you shall give him, in pursuance of your former instructions. Given at Whitehall, this 31st May 1658.

To captain Stoakes, commander in chief of our fleet in the Mediterranean sea.

Secretary Thurloe to captain Stoakes.

SIR,

In the possession of Joseph Radcliffe, of the Inner Temple, esq;

I Hope my last is come to your hands, whereby you will see what his highness hath done upon the representation you made him touching the unexpected encounter you meet with at Leghorn; so that I need not add any thing more upon that subject.

This day I received yours, dated from Marseilles on the 18th instant, and am very sorry, that the great industry you used for the meeting of the enemies ships at Cales hath been ineffectual for want of victuals, which truly had been sooner with you, but that they were kept very long in the river of Thames by easterly winds. I hope the victualling ships are now arrived, for your future supply.

As for the bills of exchange, which you charged hither, I do assure you, it is the first word I have heard of their being sent back again. Upon the first notice of their being come, I moved it in the council, and the payment of them was immediately ordered; and if any obstruction fell out afterwards in the payment thereof, it was very ill done of those,

those who look'd after them, that they did not acquaint some of us with the difficulties A.D. 1658.
 they found in obtaining the money; for though we are in some want of money, yet we know, that your credit must not suffer, the good of the whole fleet depending upon it.

I suppose you will have heard, before this comes to your hand, that Dunkirk is besieged by the English and French, both at sea and land, and the siege goes on very hopefully. The last news we had from thence was, that the enemy made a very bold sally, but were very gallantly repulsed; and our men are got within pistol-shot of their counter-scarp. The Spaniard is drawing all the forces he can make into the field, to endeavour its relief.

De Ruyter is in the Downs with 22 men of war: he is bound unto Lisbon and the Mediterranean sea. This is all I have at this time to trouble you with; and rest Whitehall, May ult. 1658.

 10th June.

Your affectionate friend to serve you.

Your taking of the Spanish man of war is a very good service. It will be necessary, that upon the receipt of this instruction, you do give notice to the admiral of France, that you have received this direction from his highness.

Secretary Thurloe to Henry Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland.

May it please your EXCELLENCY,

I Have little else to trouble you with by this post, save what relates to Dunkirke and the siege thereof; and to the end your excellency may have a true account of that action, I have sent you coppies of such letters as I have received from my lord ambassador Lockhart, who commaunds the English there; as also 2 letters sent to the French ambassador there: one is from mareshall Turene the generall of the French army, and the other from a chiefe person, which I send, that your excellency may see, that the French acknowledge, that God owned the English in this action. Since these letters the enemye made another sallye, to witt, upon saterday night last; and that was upon the French quarters, whom they forced out of their trench, and raised some part of it; but the French horse came in, and made good all againe, and pursued the enemye home to their gates.

In compliance with the desires of mareshall Turene, his highnesse is sendinge away 500 recruits and 7 companies out of the regiments.

As for our owne affaires, they stand much at one staye: some discourses have beene this weeke about a settlement, and how to prepare for the comeinge of a parliament; but I doe assure your excellency, that I cannot finde the mindes of men soe disposed, as may give the nation the hopes of such a settlement as is wish'd for; and truly I thinke, that nothinge but some unexpected providence can remove the present difficulties, which the Lord (it may be) will afford us, if he hath thoughts of peace towards us, as I trust he hath; and therefore it is good to wait upon hym, and to referre all matters to his wise and gracious disposition, without beinge anxious about the event, after wee have done our duty.

I am glad the ministers parted soe well satisfied: only it's sayd, that not only those inclyned to Anabaptism dislike the proceedings, but that the sobereft Independants were and are dissenters to most of the thinges agreed upon. I acknowledge matters of religion are tender points, and (through our owne corruptions) the consideration thereof hath seldome beene upon the stage here, but it hath engender'd strife and contention; but I know, your lordship's prudence (through the grace of God) will be seene in the tymely application of remedies fitt to any distempers of this kinde, if any such there be, which truly I knowe not otherwise than I heare it sayd. I shall not add to your excellency's trouble here, crayinge leave to signe me, Whitehall, 1st June 1658.

Your EXCELLENCY's most humble

and faithfull servant,

JO. THURLOE.

Captain Stoakes to secretary Thurloe.

A.D. 1658.

Vol. lix. p. 123.

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

MR. Thomas Browne, the late consull of Tunis, and since againe confirmed by his highness under the great seale of England, hath come to mee, to require me to send a frigatt with him to Tunis for his resettlement; for the which I having noe particular order to doe, I have denyed, untill I shall know his highnes further pleasure therein, which Mr. Browne requested, I would certifie your honour. He that now acts in Tunis (Mr. Thomas Campian) was left there by Mr. Browne, and as his deputy was owned by me, which is all that offers in this affaire. I remayne,

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

Lyme-Frigatt, in Marselia-Bay,
the first of June, 1658.

Your Honour's obleg'd servant,

JOHN STOAKES.

Vol. lix.
p. 120.

This post brought me not any from your honour; nor is there more of novelty then the comeing to me of the Farfax and the Yarmouth, with whom (God willing) after I have gotten as much victualls as may furnish them and myselfe for one month, I shall goe with them, and lye off Cape-Mello, and Cape-Corsigo, untill such tyme as all the rest retourne to this place, being the rendevous. In the intrim doe leave directions with the agent, for sending me any commands he shall receive for me; and that he may the speedier meet with mee, have left the prize to be sent unto me, as occasion shall offer. From Titean is notice, that a marchantman is come thither in 15 dayes from the Downes, which gives me great hopes, the victualls will not be long wanting. Not els, save that I am,

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

Lyme in Marselia-Bay, pr. Junii, 1658.

Your honour's faithfull servant,

JOHN STOAKES.

General Monck to secretary Thurloe.

MY LORD,

Vol. lix.
p. 175.

IHAVE received your lordshipp's letter of the 13th instant, and thank you for the newes you sent mee of what hath hapned at Dunkerke since the battel. I am confident the towne cannott hold out much longer; butt I heare, that hee, that is the governor, is a gallant man, and one that hath good judgment in defending of a towne. Captain Deane, one of the treasurers, came hither on wednesday last; and I hope now wee shall bring Mr. Drywood's businesse to a period, and likewise so settle the treasury heere, that there will be no danger of the state's or treasurers being losers by any intrusted heere. Mr. Short wee have discharged, being we cannot prove any thing against him; butt I believe Drywood is the verriest knave of them all. I remayne

Dalkeith, 19. June, 1658.

Your lordshipp's humble servant,

GEORGE MONCK.

H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland, to secretary Thurloe.

SIR,

2d June, 58.

In the possession of William Cromwell esq;

IF you cannot live without a supply of money, and no visible way appear for it but a parliament, are not you thereby called to a resolution in all other points concerning it? I am glad to hear of Ludlow, Rich, and also Sir Harry Vane's compliance. I hope they do not intend to tickle you, as men do trouts; yet the letter about the retreat rather argues their desire to shuffle again, then better your hand. Neither do I think, that your affairs will gain much reputation by their being in your councill. I confess I think it were happy, if his highness could confine the conduct of all affairs military and civill civill to the hands of such, as have in the worst of times opposed the common enemy, so A.D. 1658.

 as to leave none out. But if God will have men laid aside, let us observe his providences, and not be too solicitous to please man; (whatsoever his appearance is) least we justly fare the worse for their company. Is it not also a matter worth observation, who are the men, that are most industrious to call in such help? May it not be a design to obstruct and clog the business, when no other way is left to hinder your settlement, or cover their own disaffection? Charity indeed bids us judge the best, yet so as not to be secure. He, that runs along with you, may more easily trip up the heels, than he, that wrestles with you; but my jealousy is easily appeased, when you say his highness hath an opportunity in his hands to settle. I pray God direct him. Last night the councill made an end of the claims upon the proviso in the act of attainder, which were like to make a great hole in his highness revenue. Mr. Annesley claimed upon a contract with the lord Barnwell; but we resolved such a claim would not lye, in regard Barnwell was excepted from the purview of the act; so that whosoever claims from him, must stand or fall, as he succeeds before you in England in the proove of his constant good affection. He hath a great estate very near Dublin: if he enjoy it in specie, his interest will always be at least a great eye-sore to the government. I would not have him wronged; but there being much matter against him, I hope that though his interest be very great, there he will be narrowly sifted. In the mean time we were not engaged to give our judgment in a collaterall case, which might have had influence upon the main question, it may be, have been falsified by your judgment there, not for want of guilt, but evidence, at such a distance from the place of his offence, where he must not be tryed by his neighbours, nor, it may be, by many, who will think it much worth their case; so that unless you make it yours, I shall much doubt the issue. I am

Yours, &c.

Postscript. You mention making Sir Charles Coote a baron; my letter mentioned a viscount. I doubt the other will not be acceptable.

Colonel Lockhart to secretary Thurloe.

May it please your LORDSHIPP,

YESTERDAYE'S action can be more surely and plainly related by my lord Howard, In the possession of the right hon. the earl of Shelburne.
 then by my selfe, he haveing done himselfe the right to informe himselfe very particularly of all that passed, as being an eye-witness. He left our camp in the afternoone, and went on board his vessell, and I thinke he had not weighed anchor, when one came to mee from Mr. Turenne, and told mee, there was a necessity of giving battell to the enemy to-morrow morning. I was much surprized with the shortnes of the warneing, and more with the strange providence was in it; for I had one of the most violent fitts of the stone upon mee, that ever I almost had in my life; but finding there was no mids, but either fighting, or abandoning the siege, I chose rather to trust God with the event of a battell, then to give over so hopefull a cause; and so about ten a clocke drew out the forces, and put my selfe on their head in my coach, and reached Mr. Turenne's quarters next morneing by breake of day. We spent some 3 howers in putting our forces in battell, and about 8 of the clocke marched up to the enemy, who kept his ground, till we should come up to him. I, having the command of the left wing, rancountred the right of the enemy, where all his old Spanyards were, and posted so advantageously, as, when I considered my worke, I looked upon forceing them as altogether impossible; but necessity haveing no law, I ordered my owne regiment to attempt it before, and at the same time, haveing some comanded men upon the strand, which were to have seconded the horse, I made them attaque the Spanish upon the flanke; and after the hottest dispute, that I ever saw, it pleased God to give us successe, and with that advantage, as the enemy, seeing their best men forced in their most advantageous post, did not in all the rest of the battell behave themselves as I expected. The rout was universall, but not so closely pursued by the French horse as I could have wisht. There was a rumor, thatt Mr. le prince was taken, and the pretended duke of Yorke slaine; but after examination, that appeared to be false, though a great many else of quality are taken, as Mr. Bouteville, and count Bologne, and a prince whose name I cannot remember; and besides a great many, Mr. de Camps, of which I shall give your lordshipp a most perticular account by the next. We kept our approaches, and our bridges upon the channells; but I being forced to draw out, and finding that 1000 men were not able to secure my quarter, I left it to the hazard, and found it all burnt downe at my returne. My owne losses were most considerable; but all thoughts of them were drowned in a greater; for I have not one officer in my owne regiment,

A.D. 1658. regiment, who is not dangerously wounded or killed, except one captain, and a captain-lieutenant, and some sower lieutenants, ensignes, and serjeants. The truth is, my lord, I have fallen asleep, I knowe not howe often, in writeing this; and so shall only pray, that we may be made sensible of the good hand of God, which hath bin wonderfully with us this day. I pray for the continuance of his highness health, and the encrease of his glory and hapines. I am,

May it please your LORDSHIPP,

Your most humble and obedient servant,

Mardike, June $\frac{4}{14}$. 58.

WILL. LOCKHART.

Mardike, $\frac{14}{4}$. 1658.

In the possession of the right hon. the earl of Shelburn.

THE Spanish army appeared in two bodies before the line before Dunkirk thursday the 3d of June, which occasioned the marshal Turenne the next day to draw off the whole army, upon some considerations of the difficulties of both maintaining the siege, and fighting the enemy. The French army, with the conjoined English forces, divided themselves into two wings. The right wing, consisting of 10000 foot, and 6000 horse, commanded by marshal Turenne, undertook the dispute with the prince of Conde. The left wing, being made up with all the English foot, under the command of the lord ambassador Lockhart, (now their general) and 3000 French horse, under the command of the marquis of Castleneuve, were assailed by a good body of the enemy, under the conduct of Don John of Austria, the duke of York, and the marquis of Carafene. The English, after a hot dispute, shattered all that party, that opposed them. The marquis of Carafene is supposed to be killed; but some say, he was taken and released by a soldier for 10000 crowns. The forlorn of English foot, consisting of half his excellency the lord embassador's regiment, and part of that commanded by lieutenant-colonel Haines, was led on by lieutenant-colonel Fennerick, his excellency's lieutenant-colonel, in whose company was that noble young gentleman Mr. Henry Jones of Oxfordshire, a voluntier, who went lately over with my lord Falconbridge. Fennerick was shot through the body, and Jones shot through the shoulder, and wounded in two other places, and not yet heard of; and all the officers of the lord embassador's regiment killed or wounded, except himself and colonel Drummond, a voluntier, that went also over with the lord Falconbridge, accompanied his excellency the lord embassador in all this action. He had one horse shot under him, and being with difficulty remounted, was pushed off by a pike; but is not wounded. The English acted miracles in this battle. Major-general Morgan came on with the rest of the men a good trot; but it was faster than monsieurs gallop; and when they had beaten that part of the army under Don John of Austria, marched to the assistance of marshal Turenne, whom they found in some disorder; but by their assistance the day was won. The enemy within Dunkirk in this time burnt our huts, and took most of our tents. It being now late, relation cannot be certainly sent of the number or quality of the prisoners; but I suppose near 3000 may be taken, and half that number killed. Prisoners of quality here are one, Memorancy, lieutenant general to the prince of Conde, and one Coligne of the same quality, and one Bouteville, a great officer. Don John was once taken by the bridle. This relation being taken just after the battle by a weary hand, must refer you to a more particular account by the next; only this know, the French acknowledge to our nation the honour of this victory.

Secretary Thurloc to captain Stoakes at Marseilles.

In the possession of Joseph Radcliffe, of the Inner Temple, esq;

I Received yours of the 25th of May, and do very much wonder, that the victualling ships are not yet arrived with you, they having been gone from hence many weeks since. They cannot be now long absent, in case it hath pleased God to preserve them from the weather.

I confess your bills have not had the speedy payment, as was to be wished; but I trust the difficulty of that is over, and that you will hear no more of complaints of that nature from the merchants, which were employed by you, effectual order being taken for the payment of those, which are yet unpaid.

I writ to you by the last, and sent to you an instruction touching some service you are to do in those parts; and I do very much desire to know, whether that instruction be come to your hand.

It

It hath pleased God to give the conjoined force of England and France a great victory A.D. 1658. against the Spanish army near Dunkirk, which place being besieged by the joint forces, Don John, the prince of Condé, the forces of Charles Stuart, Caracene came with 16000 men to relieve it; and the other army rising to give them battle, did wholly vanquish them, took and killed all their infantry, and many of their horse; and it is said, that Caracene is slain; but that is yet not certain: but many persons of quality are taken and slain. The siege is renewed again, and I suppose the town will soon be reduced. This is all the news. I rest

Whitehall, 7th June, 1658.

Your very affectionate friend and servant,

The English in this fight behaved themselves most gallantly, as the French acknowledge.

Secretary Thurloe to Mr. John Aldworth, consul of the English nation at Marseilles.

I Have, according to your desire, endeavoured the payment of your bill of 1500 l. and am promised by the commissioners of the admiralty, that such care shall be taken in it, that your credit shall not suffer, they and I too being sensible of the good affection you have shewed to H. H. service, in furnishing the fleet with such provisions as they stand in need of. In the possession of Joseph Radcliffe, of the Inner Temple, esq;

I sent you the other week a packet to captain Stoakes. I much long to hear, whether it be come to your hand, and that you have delivered or otherwise conveyed it unto him.

I suppose you will hear, before this comes to your hands, of the great defeat given to the Spanish army in Flanders near Dunkirk, by the conjoined forces of the English and French; so that I need not write to you of it particularly. It was a total overthrow. I rest

Whitehall, 7th June, 1658.

Your very assured friend.

General Monck to secretary Thurloe.

SIR,

I RECEIVED two letters from you, the one of the first, and the other of the third instant, for which I returne you many thanks. By them I understand, his highnesse hath given orders to the companie, that belongs to the garrison of Berwick, that lies now at Hartlepoole, to come back to Berwick. The hundred men, which were to goe from Berwick for Dunkirke, mutinied before they went out of the towne for want of their arreares; but the governor at last, by knocks and force, made them to march towards Tinmouth. I thanke you for the newes you sent mee concerning the French army lying before Dunkirke. I am glad the English had soe good successe in giving the enemy a repulse. I hope, if they have not too few forces to defend the line, and that the enemy bee not of force to affront them, I doubt nott butt they will carry the towne suddenly. I cannott yett give you an account of any certainty concerning Mr. Shart and Mr. Drywood; butt I believe Mr. Drywood will prove the veriest knave of all. What we shall prove against Mr. Sherte, I know not; but if Mr. Bilton and Mr. Drywood bee found knaves, I thinke hee cannott be very honest. For newes heere, wee have none; only judge Smyth is this day come to Scotland. Which is all att present from Vol. lix. p. 127.

Your very affectionate, humble servant,

Dalkeith, 8. June, 1658.

GEORGE MONCK.

Secretary Thurloe to H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland.

May it please your LORDSHIP,

THE victory, which it hath pleased God to give the conjoined forces of England and France uppon Friday last, in a battle with the Spanish army near Dunkirke, is expressed in the letter here inclosed, whereby your excellency will see how good God hath beene to us at this season, when our affaires soe much wanted such a mercy as this is. Your excellency

VOL. VII.

S f

A.D. 1658. excellency will perceive the letter was written the same day the battle was fought, and foe noe particular account could be given either of the numbers slayne or taken. As wee understand it, their whole infantrie was lost. This mercy is the greater, in respect that it was obteyned the very day, whilst his highnes and the counsell wer keepeinge a day of fastinge and prayer, to seeke God for help in that siege; and truly I never was present at any such exercise, where I saw a greater spirit of faith and prayer powred forth; and it was a meere providence of God, that ordered the fight and the seekinge of the Lord to be upon one day. It will bringe in our thoughts, that as matters stand, that the 2 armys could have beene engaged foe soone. The seege and the approaches were continued; only the English were constreined to quit one of their posts, haveinge not men enough to defend their quarter, and to fight with the enemye alsoe. And it is certeyne, and foe acknowledged by the French, that the English behaved themselves with all manner of gallantrie, and in truth, under God, were the cause of the enemyes overthrow. Wee hope Dunkirke will not now longe hold out. Wee have yet received noe farther perticulers; but expect them every houre. The takeinge care of all thinges, which related to this great action before the fight, and the rejoyceinge at the good successe it hath pleased God to gaine us, hath taken up all the tyme, that I have noe other subject to trouble your lordship with by this post, save to acquaint you, that Sir Henry Slingsbey and doctor Hewett were executed this day upon Tower-hill.

Your EXCELLENCY'S

Whitehall, 8. June, 1658.

Most humble, faithfull, and obedient servant,

JO. THURLOE.

Lord Fauconberg to H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland.

MY LORD,

Whitehall, June 8. [1658.]

In the possession of the right hon. the earl of Shelburne.

I AM now returned from the French court, where I have had the honourablest reception imaginable. The king did not only keepe bare at my publique audiences, but, when I made him a private visit, he talked with me in the garden an hour or two uncovered. From the cardinal the honours I had were particular and unusuall: he waved the state of a publique audience, came out of his owne roome to meete me, lead me presently into his cabinet; after an houres discourse in private, he conducted me downe to the very doore, where my coach stood, a ceremony he dispenses with not only to all others, but even to the king himselfe. The charge of two very handsome tables were defrayed (for my selfe and follouers) by the king all the while I stayed. In summe, through all their actions not the least circumstance was omitted, that might witnesse the truth of these respects they beare his highnes and the English nation.

While I was at Calais, we had every day news from the leagues at Dunkirke, where all things went on hopefully. The English are generally cryed up for their unparalleld corage. At my comeing away the Spanish army was in view of ours. They had drained all their garrisons in Flanders to make their body considerable; and now, some two houres after my arrivall at Whitehall, the certain news is come of their utter defeate; so that Dunkirke will be certainly ours in few dayes; and it being early yet in the yeare, we shall probably make their best garrisons in Flanders tremble ere winter overtake us.

The cardinall admires your lordshipp very much, as all the world must needs doe; but none ever to that degree as

Your LORDSHIPP'S

Most heartily faithfull and obedient servant,

FAUCONBERG.

General Fleetwood to H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland.

DEARE BROTHER,

[June, 8. 1658.]

In the possession of the right hon. the earl of Shelburne.

THIS great mercy in the Lord's owning of us in the totall rout of the Spanish army by the English and French forces, will, I presume, be more perticularly imparted unto you by other hands. An exact account is not yet com; but what is, will be sent you. It is the more remarkable, that the Lord did draw forth his highnes's heart to set apart that A.D. 1658. day to seake the Lord; and indeade ther was a very good spirit appearing. Whilst we wer praying, they wer fighting; and the Lord hath given a signall answer, which if it hade not bine with that successe, this nation would soone have felt the smart. The Lord give us a due sence of what he hath intrusted us with in this choyce experience of signall mercy! And the Lord hath not only owned us in our work ther, but in our waiting upon him in a way of prayer, which is indeade our old experienced aproved way in all streights and difficultyes. We are in hopes of the sudden reducing of Dunkirke, the consequence of which will be very great to our affayres. This day is the execution of Sir Henry Slingsby and doctör Hewet. Great endeavors have bine used to save their lives. Ther will be some sudden resolutions touching that party. Ther is no fixed time for the parliment's sitting; but I doe think it will not be befor September. Our wants will be the more increased upon us by this buyfnes of Dunkirke. Your condicion is very sadde for want of money, and ours; when we can helpe ourselves, you will be equally taken care of by us, and in perticuler by

Your most affectionate brother,

and humble servant,

CHA. FLEETWOOD.

Ther is one Mr. Elies, a member of Mr. Bridge's church, who desires to com for Ireland to preach the gospel. Mr. Bridges very much commends him, and so doe others. It is desired he may have 120 l. per annum, and 50 l. for advance. Your order therein I shall observe.

Doctör Clarges to H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland:

May it please your EXCELLENCY,

PERCEIVING the inclosed print somewhat short on the account of the late victory In the possession of the obtained in Flanders, I have made bold to send you the exactest relation I have yet right hon. the seene, which was sent to me by one, that was a forward actor in that daye's work. Some earl of Shelburne.
letters since add, that the marshall de Hauthencourt was the day before killed by Pickereing, and that the prince of Ligne was either kil'd or taken. Your excellency may see by this the great goodnes of God to all your noble family, much manefested in this great successe to my lord ambassidor Lockartt, whoe I now reckon by the relation of his deare confort to have the honour to be in that number.

This day Sir Henry Slingsby and doctör Hewett were executed at Tower-hill. On thurdsday next the court meet againe, to proceed to the tryall of the others. There is a strong report from Germany, that the king of Hungary is chosen emperour. The truth will be cleer'd by the next. The Hollanders have above eighty saile of ships now in the Downes, which put the country about the coasts into a little jealousy; but I heare of none at Whitehall. Yet Dunkirk in our hands is much apprehended by them. I have for a few posts past acquainted your excellency with the occurrences of this place, as part of my duty to your excellency, from the intimation I had from Mr. Bury of your excellencies favour towards me; but because I heare not from any hande, how my poore services are received, I am in a little disorder of minde; but till I receive your excellencie's order to the contrary, these offices shall not be neglected by,

May it please your EXCELLENCY,

Your excellency's most humble servant,

London, this 8th of June, 1658.

THO. CLARGES.

Mr. R. Beake to H. Cromwell, deputy of Ireland.

May it please your EXCELLENCY,

THE Spanish defeate fills all men heere with discourse. It's remarkeable for the probable In the possession of the consequences of it. If the electoral chamber did put, and yet offerr'd to put more, right hon. the conditions on the Hungary king, and that whilst the French were but in preparation for earl of Shelburne.
a campagne, how much more will they demurr now, when the visible strength of Flanders

A.D. 1658. ders is gon? This army, that's thus broken, has made the Spanish brow to sweate to make it upp; yet doe not heare, that they exceeded 5000 foote, though almost double the number in horse. The relations we hitherto have obtayned are something imperfect; yet we have a certeynety in some thinges. It's supposed the designe was onely to reinforce the towne with men, and to returne; and untill they had an opportunity to doe this, they incamped there foote on the brow of a sandey hill 3 miles from the leagues, where they intrenched themselves. Our English had orders from Turenne to leave their trenches, and to march with their bagage and lugage to Mardike, where they were to leave them, and thence to marche the next morneinge to meet that French flying army, and in conjunction to attacke the enemy. The English foote were designed to make the first onsett; a taske difficult and deadly; for they were to mount 10 in breast: the white regiment under the command of general Lockhart, ledd on by lieutenant-colonel Barington, and the blew regiment commanded by colonnel Lilleston made the assaulte; and after the los of many men master'd the enemyes grownd. Colonel Alsop's regiment, on the flank of theirs, tugg'd hard with Charles Stuart's owne regiment, which they utterly foyled and made prisoners, besydes what they killed; all its officers but the white and blew regiments, haveinge to deale with two sturdy veterane regiments of Spanish, were gauled and fretted much; foe that with the fiercenes of these, and an inroade, that was made upon them by the Spanish horse, they lost many men; yea, the white regiment had not an officer except one, that was not killed or wounded; yet in the issue they putt the enemy to flight, and untill then there was not a Frenchman that ingaged; but after (it may be the horse wanted passage before) the count d' Schamburge ledd on a body of French horse, which gave the fatall blow. There was taken 17 ensignes of foote; how many of horse, I knowe not; also 6 guns, which was their all. It was sayd the duke of Yorke was wounded, but his coach they tooke. Marshall d' Hocquincourte was slayne by Pickeringe, the day before the fight. This the French look on as a just recompence of his treachery, in betraying of Hosden. As yet we have not the names of prisoners, that were taken. In this action the English have gott the testimony of French, Switz, and the vanquished enemye, for their valoure and gallantry. God has honnoured the nation by this poore handfull; and I hope they will be yett more victorious.

The concernment of this affaire to this nation is apparent by the extraordinary care, that was made for supplies for them. Many intire companyes were sent thither out of this army; and throughout they were remanded back, uppon information of this defeate, as supposing them useles, yet were they after ordered forward, and noe doubt there will be worke enough for them still.

Neither has the Spanish affaire a better complexion elsewhere; for our agent from Legorne by this post writes, that the Spaniard has not foe much as an army in appearance, but lye close in their strong-houlds; and it is not discernable, that they will bee able to patch an army together. On the contrary, the French, under the conduct of the duke of Modena, will be in the feild 10000 foote, and 7000 horse. The militia of the kingdom of Naples was formerly Spaine's support for the defence of Millane; but that kingdome is, in a manner, now made a desolation by the late rageinge pestilence.

This day the heads of Sir Henry Slingsby and doctor Hewett were stricke off at Towre-hill. The doctor spent much tyme uppon the scaffold, in a great measure justified himselfe, prayed for king Charles, and that God would restore him to his right. I humbly crave your excellency's pardon, and liberty to subscribe

YOUR EXCELLENCY'S

8. June, [1658.]

Most devoted servant,

ROB. BEAK.

Colonel Lockhart to secretary Thurloe.

May it please your LORDSHIPP,

Vol. lix.
p. 129.

UPON monday at night I went to the approaches, and carried those seamen along with me, which my lord Montague sent ashoare, after the French and wee had spent most of the night in waiting for small shott and granados. Mr. de Crequi, with the French, attacqued that part of the enemies counterscarp, which was oppositt to his approach, and at the same tyme I attempted the points of the counterscarp before ours. The dispute was hott, and lasted about half an howre. The enemy at last abandoned the points of the counterscarp, and lodg'd themselves in the chemin couvert, and the angles of the foresaid points. This chemin couvert is a lyn, that surroundeth the ditch of the towne, and the points upon it are flankers run out paralell to the bastions within the ditch. The French,

at

at their lodging upon their point of the counterscarp were discovered to our men, that were lodged upon the fort Leon, ours was not so; and to give your lordshipp a trew account of what pass't, I must say the French made the better lodgement, tho' that we made stood us dearer then theirs did them: howsoever, I thank God for it, both goes on reasonable well now; for what wee came short of them in the night, we made up by working in the day. The sea-men, from whom I expected much, did nothing extraordinary; and indeed our people wanted several things, that would have contributed to their cheerfull going thorough with their businesse, for which I could not prevaile, tho' twyce or thryce I importuned Mr. Turenne aboutt them. I am this day causing prepare a battery and plattform for our mortar-pieces; and the fyer-master is making reddey all things fitt upon his part; so that I hope they shall beginn to play once to-morrow.

My lord, I received a letter yesternight from his eminence, which with his majestie's resolutione to send the duke to complement his highness, and his own, of not sending his nephew Mr. de Manchini for the same end. It is unnecessary for me to offer any thing touching the way of their reception and entertainment; only it will be expected, that Mr. de Manchini meet with some particular kyndnesses, which may be done thus: After the publick audience is over, his highness may send a coach or two for him, and give him a privatt audience, whereatt he may, according to his own goodnesse, give his eminence those assurances of friendship he shall think fitt. The cardinal hath writt for two frigatts to transport them; and I have desyred my lord Montague to give them that accomodatione. If the battery I am now desyning have that successe I hope it will, I shall ere long be able to send your lordshipp good news concerning Dunkerke. Our greatest difficultie is how to get carriages to mount our cannon upon the doones; but we must wrestle over that, and I am confident the Lord, who hath brought things to the birth, will give strength also to bring forth. I have at last had tyme to draw a bill upon Mr. Frost for 300 l. one of the contingencies, and ane other for 500 l. upon Mr. Noell. In his last to me he told me he could answere no more of my bills, unlesse your lordshipp gave order to furnish him with a stock for that end. I must beseech your lordship to putt him in that capacitee, as my bill may be satisfied; otherwayes I shall not know to what hand to turne me, there being neither money nor credit to be had heare. I am,

May it please your LORDSHIPP,

Your LORDSHIPP's most humble and

obedient servant,

Camp, June $\frac{2}{19}$. 1658.

WILL. LOCKHART.

H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland, to secretary Thurloe.

SIR,

June 9th, 1658.

I AM glad the English have got so good a reputation at Dunkirk. I have left wondering, that your affairs goe heavily, when you draw so many several ways. You hear it said, that most of the sober Independants were and are dissenters to most of the things agreed upon at the meeting of the ministers. Indeed 3 of their number dissented from the way of maintenance by tyths; but this is the first time I heard of any other difference; and I can tell you, that the whole number of the ministers (amongst whom were many, I hope sober, Independants) which met together, came to me on the day their meeting was dissolved, and presented me with their resolutions, which they said were unanimously agreed unto by them, and so took their leaves for their respective homes. I hope they did not fall out by the way. I wish I could as truly tell you, that the Independants are not dissatisfied. It may be some of them thought they should ride, when they had thrown the Anabaptist out of the saddle; but I must neither respect persons, nor parties, nor rumours, so as to be thereby diverted from an equall distribution of respect and justice to all, though I hope I shall always have a due care of all, (under what form soever) in whom I see the least appearance of godliness. Indeed (by secret practices) some here, whose duty obliged them rather to heal and compose, have too evidently done the contrary. I forbear to complain, and am content to bear my burthen for peace-sake. Standish is returned, brings us cold comfort; he tells me, that he solicited his highnes for the muster-master general's place; that he was in some hopes to gett it, if he might have my consent, which truly (for many reasons too tedious for this letter) I cannot give; besides, he cannot be spared from his present employment; and those places are too much akin to be in one hand. If it be thought fitt to be disposed to any, I think it most proper for Sir John King,

In the possession of William Cromwell esq;

A.D. 1658. whose father and grandfather enjoyed it. And indeed I think he is a person of no less merit than his father, being grown a very serious, and, I hope, religious man; but I have been so accustomed to have my requests laid by the walls, that I have no great expectation of any account concerning this. I remain, &c.

Henry Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland, to the protector.

May it please your HIGHNESS,

9th June, 1658.

In the possession of William Cromwell esq;

THE bearer Dr. Worth, having occasions, which call him to England, is desirous to take that opportunity to present himself to your highness; and being of late a stranger there, besought me to accompany him with a letter, which I granted the more willingly, because he may possibly have had the same hard measure with some others, to be misrepresented there; which I should the less wonder at, in regard those have not been wanting, who have endeavoured to asperse him here, which gave me cause to make a narrow scrutiny into his temper and demeanor. I find he is of the judgment of the associated ministers in England, and practiseth accordingly, for which he lyes under a great prejudice with the prelaticall and malignant party: he is full of moderation and tenderness towards such as differ from him; he is painfull in his calling, and strives more to bring souls to Christ, than to propagate his opinion. He is an excellent man in the pulpitt, and one of an exemplary life and conversation; and in this point I could give many instances, which are not common; but I doubt your highness is not at leisure for such a discourse: yet I dare not omit to say, he doth affectionately love your highness; and I know no man of his condition hath given more testimony of it than he hath; and tho' he hath done it vigorously, yet with extraordinary prudence; and particularly in this address of the ministers, which he presents to your highness. I doubt not but your highness will give him such countenance and encouragement as he hath deserved. I remain, &c.

Evidence given at the tryall of Bennett and Woodcocke.

Vol. lii. p. 14. MAJOR William Smith sworn and examined, being asked what he could say concerning Mr. Woodcocke, whether he received any letter from him; sayth,

I did receive a letter to meet the next day with him and another gentleman a hunting. I came. The letter came from Woodcocke's hand about 3 moneths to meet them near Brighthelmston in Furzey-field. I first met Mr. Woodcocke, before we came into the field; and hee told mee Mr. Stapeley had a commission from Charles Stuart, as he was informed by Mr. Stapeley, to raise horse and foote; Mr. Woodcocke did not tell mee soe much. Mr. Woodcocke told mee, hee found Mr. Stapeley ignorant in martiall affaires, and spake to mee to speake to him. By-and-by Mr. Stapeley came into the field, and told mee he had received a commission from the king to raise horse and foote; and that the king would land with an army very suddenly. I asked him, what he had done in it: hee sayd, Nothing at all. Hee told mee, hee had his owne horse and man. Then Mr. Woodcocke came in to us; and I sayd, it was necessary hee should choose his officers. Mr. Woodcocke heard it; and since that time I ne'r saw Mr. Woodcocke.

Woodcocke. Did I ever tell you of Mr. Stapeley's imbecillity in martiall affayres?

Smith. As I remember, hee said hee had a commission; and that the king had given him honour. I know not what it was.

The letter was to meet with another gentleman neare Brighthelmston, which I did.

Counsell. What sayd Mr. Woodcocke of Mr. Stapeley, that hee was not acquainted in martiall affayres?

Smith. Mr. Woodcocke told mee, hee was ignorant in those things. In regard I was a souldier, hee sent to mee to discourse with him.

Woodcocke. Did I send to you to speak with Mr. Stapeley?

Smith. Noe, I sayd not soe.

I was sent for by Mr. Woodcocke by a letter; and I happened to meete Mr. Woodcocke, before I mett Mr. Stapeley; and hee told mee Mr. Stapeley would come into the field with his hounds by-and-by, and had a desire to speake with mee.

Smith. Hee told mee, hee heard Mr. Stapeley say hee had a commission.

Counsell. But you were speaking but now, because Mr. Stapeley was ignorant of martiall affayres; wherefore something was to be done.

Smith. Therefore Mr. Stapeley desired to speake with mee.

Counsell. Who told you soe? did Mr. Stapeley, or Mr. Woodcocke?

Smith. They both told mee soe.

Counsell.

Counsell. Who desired you to choose officers?

Smith. Mr. Stapeley did ; but it was before Mr. Woodcocke was present.

Woodcocke. Did I ever tell you of Mr. Stapeley's imbecillity in martiall affayres?

Smith. As I remember, hee sayd hee had a comission ; and that the king had given him honour. I know not what it was.

Counsell. Did hee say those words to you?

Smith. Either Mr. Stapeley, or Mr. Woodcocke ; as I remember, Mr. Woodcocke told mee foe.

Counsell. Whether did Mr. Woodcock tell you, that Stapeley had a comission and honour from the king ? Speake positively upon your oath.

Smith resorts to his notes for to helpe his memory, and sayth,

Hee told mee, that Mr. Stapeley told him foe.

Counsell. What sayd hee of a title of honour?

Smith. That he had a title of honour. I doe not remember what it was.

Counsell. Did hee tell you, that Mr. Woodcocke was ignorant of martiall affayres, and would speak with you ?

Smith. Hee did say foe to mee, That he found Mr. Stapeley had informed him, hee had received some trust from the king ; and that hee was ignorant in it ; and Mr. Stapeley desired to speake with mee.

Counsell. Wherefore did hee desire to speake with you ?

Smith. To conferr with him.

Counsell. Did he tell you the reason, why Mr. Stapeley would speake with you ?

Smith. To conferr with him about his comission.

Woodcocke. Did I ever say any such thing to you ; as when I did meete you to tell you, when Mr. Stapeley sent to speak with mee about this comission, because he was unskilled in martiall affayres ?

Smith. Not about a comission, I told you ; but you told mee, Mr. Stapeley had a comission, as Mr. Stapeley informed you.

Counsell. And hee sayd, that Mr. Stapeley desired to speake with you, about martiall affayres?

Smith. Hee did to that effect.

John Stapeley, sworn against Thomas Woodcocke.

That there was one day a meeting between Mr. Woodcocke and I, and Mr. Smith. Wee did meete a hunting ; but there was very little discourse at that tyme. I ne'r saw Mr. Woodcocke in Mr. Smith's company but at that tyme. There was at that tyme some discourse of raising of forces in Suffex for the assistance of Charles Stuart. It was but very little, because wee were at that tyme in sport ; and had not any tyme to speake of it.

I did acquaint Mr. Woodcocke, that I had a commission for Charles Stuart ; but I think not that day. It was the day before, when I spake to him about sending to major Smith hee did know of it.

Counsell. About what tyme ?

Stapeley. It was since Christmases.

Counsell. Did Mr. Woodcocke accept to be an officer ?

Stapeley. Mr. Woodcocke did not deny it, nor accept it ; foe I took it to be an acceptance.

Counsell. Was he not hearty, and did he not approve of the design?

Stapeley. Hee did not speake against it ; hee told me hee had noe interest in the countr to raise men ; but would venture his owne person in this service, the service of Charles Stuart.

Stapeley, being cross-interrogated by Mr. Woodcocke, said,

I doe not remember, that major Smith did heare mee offerr Mr. Woodcocke to be an officer ; but hee and I together have talked of it ourselves.

Woodcocke. Did you offerr mee any command ?

Stapeley. I doe not say I did.

Woodcocke. Where did you acquaint mee you had a comission from Charles Stuart ?

Stapeley. I told it him in myne owne house in my chamber. Hee did not desire to see it ; neither did he approve it, or speake against it. Hee sayd, hee would adventure himself with mee, if I did rise or raise any forces. I asked him, if hee would joyne with mee ; and hee sayd, hee would do it.

I did not ask him concerning his raising of men : all that I desired was, that himself would joyne with mee in it : this was this winter, since Christmas last.

George Hutchinson, sworn, examined, sayth,

A.D. 1658.

Hutchinson. I mett occasionally at Mr. Woodcocke his father-in-law captain Goodlyman's in Suffex; and there hee told mee, that Mr. Stapeley was ingaged, and that hee was very active; or to that effect.

Counsell. On what occasion did he speak theis words?

Hutchinson. Hee came newly from London; and I was asking him what newes, and in particular about Mr. Stapeley, whether hee were engaged or not. Hee told mee hee was ingaged.

Counsell. For whome do you meane hee was ingaged?

Hutchinson. I meane for Charles Stuart; I asked him, what newes from London: and he sayd, Mr. Stapeley was ingaged. There were captain Godlyman and his daughter, and others in company; soe that we could have but a snap.

Counsell. Was there nothing in discourse to induce that expreffion?

Hutchinson. I doe not know.

Counsell. Did Mr. Woodcocke know you were ingaged for Charles Stuart?

Hutchinson. I cannot tell; he did, it is probable; wee had been both before of the king's party; and hee knew it.

Woodcocke. Did I aske you, or you mee, any questions?

Hutchinson. I asked you ne'r a question. I asked you about Mr. Stapeley his ingagement.

Woodcocke. What was the inducement for you to aske mee about Mr. Stapeley?

Hutchinson. You came newly from London; and this was the shrove-tyde following; and you told mee Mr. Stapeley was very active.

Counsell. In what business?

Hutchinson. I understood in Charles Stuart's.

Woodcocke. Did I aske you any more questions, or you mee?

Hutchinson. Noe.

Major Smith, against Sir Humfrey Bennett.

Smith against Bennet.

In Michaelmas terme, I had occasion to ride to London; and I desyred to wait upon Sir Humfrey. I had a great desyre to give him a visit. I found him in his chamber in Milford-lane; I cannot tell the day: and after some discourses, Sir Humfrey told mee, hee was informed, that there would be 3000 horse raised in Suffex. I told him, hee was very misinformed. I told him, I was confident, there would not bee 300 horse raised in Suffex.

He told mee, hee was informed major Milbanke had listed 200 horse in Hampshire for the king of Scotts service.

Hee told mee, hee would goe down into Suffex to see whether that were true or noe; and that hee would send unto mee; but he never did.

Counsell. Did hee say they were listed for the king of Scotts?

Smith. Yea, and that hee would goe down to be ascertained of this.

Counsell. What discourse had you with Sir Humfrey the next day?

Smith. I met Baron, Bishop, Mansell and Henry Binstead, at the Lambe. Baron brought a blank comission.

Counsell. From whome was it said to bee?

Smith. It had C. R. upon it. Baron told me it was a comission from the king of Scotts, but it was blanke; it had a seale to it: the seale I cannot remember. It had the king's armes formerly, as I remember. Young was there. This was before I came to Sir Humfrey Bennett.

Counsell. Was that comission read there? Was it at the Lambe?

Smith. It was read there; and they put in gentlemens names in the county.

Counsell. Was Sir Humfrey Bennett there?

Smith. Noe, he was at his lodging. The comission I thinke was filled to gentlemen, that never heard of it; for it was not to have been delivered till the army was landed; and they were to have the power of the country to raise horse and foote. There were fower of them, I thinke, putt in.

Counsell. Was this comission read afterwards at Sir Humfrey Bennett's lodging?

Smith. The next day I went to Sir Humfrey's lodging, I told him what was intended for raising so many horse in Suffex. He thought it an impossible thing. I shew'd the comission to Sir Humfrey; hee read it. but sayd nothing to it; layd it by.

Counsell. What sayd hee concerning the horse, that were to be raised?

Smith. Hee told mee, he spake with a gentleman, who knew the county; and that hee told him, there would be 3000 horse raised.

Counsell. For whome?

Smith. Wee never questioned that. It was for the king of Scotts, noe question, there were to bee soe many raised in Suffex.

Counsell.

Counsell. What did Sir Humfrey tell you about Windsor-castle, if the king of Scots A.D. 1658. landed?

Smith. Hee did heare it would bee surrendred.

Counsell. When was this?

Smith. This was the second day, hee sayd he was informed foe.

Bennett. Declare how you and I became acquainted.

Smith. Long agoe in the king's army.

Bennett. But, now of late?

Smith. Sir John Leeds told mee where hee lay, and I had a great desire to see you, and give you a visit.

Bennett. Who moved discourse first, you or I?

Smith. I thinke myself.

Counsell. What was that discourse?

Smith. That the king had an army to land. I told you foe: you told mee, that you did heare as much, and you did beleieve hee was in a forwardness, or to that purpose.

Bennett. How many meetings had you and I together?

Smith. But two.

Bennett. Was that the first or the second?

Smith. The first at your lodging in Milford-lane.

Bennett. Were you twice at my lodging?

Smith. Twice.

Bennett. Did I ever give you encouragement to ingage?

Smith. Not any.

Bennett. Not for any body?

Smith. Not any.

Bennett. You talk of a commission; who brought it?

Smith. Henry Brinstead brought it in his pockett; but I produced it to Sir Henry, and hee look't of it, and read it, and past it by; and I remember not hee sayd any word to it at all.

Bennett. Was it directed to me?

Smith. Not at all: it was directed to Sir John Pelham, Sir William Morley, and other gentlemen I thinke, which never heard of it to this day.

Counsell. Did Sir Humfrey read that commission?

Smith. Hee tooke it into his hand, went into the window, and look't upon it. I conceive hee read it; he did not read it out.

Counsell. Did hee looke upon the inside of a commission?

Smith. Yea, my lord.

Counsell. Did hee looke upon it soe long as he might read it?

Smith. Truly, I think hee might; it was filled up when Sir Humfrey saw it.

Counsell. Did you acquaint Sir Humfrey you had filled up the blankes, or any body else?

Smith. I beleieve I did, I cannot well tell.

Counsell. What names were in the commission, when it was filled up, before you shewed Humfrey?

Smith. I take it Sir John Pelham and Sir John Morley.

Bennett. Did not I bidd you not meddle at all with any thing at that tyme?

Smith. You layd it by, and sayd nothing. I did not perceave you did approve of it by your of it.

Henry Binstead sworne and examined against Sir Humfrey Bennett.

I mett major Smith at Temple-barr, and hee desired mee to go to the Lamb-taverne to drinke a cup of wine. I did, and mett with Baron and some others. There came Baron, Bishop, and himself; and I thinke that was all the company: and upon some other discourse, he shewed me a blanck piece of parchment. I said I never was a soldier, nor never saw a commission. There was nothing in it. Hee went unto the window, and put in the gentlemens names, and bid me deliver it. I sayd I would. Then said Smith, will you go see Sir Humfrey Bennett? I sayd I had not seen him 8 or 9 years. We went to Sir Humphry; hee was sicke: there major Smith bidd mee shew him the commission. I delivered it to him, and hee went with Sir Humfrey unto the window, and had some discourse there. They had the commission in the window, and I think Sir Humfrey read it. Major Smith gave the commission to Sir Humfrey, and they went unto the window together; I think it was open between them; I was sitting by the fire-side.

Counsell. Had not this witness discourse with Sir Humphry Bennett about raising horse in Suffex? what number, and what place for rendezvous?

A.D. 1658. Binstead. I stood at a distance; there was a discourse about raising horse; whether in Suffex, or Hampshire, or where else, I could not tell. But I sayd to major Smith, that I was confident 200 horse could not be raised. Sir Humfry was in the room there.

Counsell. Did Sir Humfry speak to you about raising horse in Hampshire or Suffex?

Binstead. Never.

Counsell. Did he speak of a rendezvous?

Binstead. I cannot tell: there was something sayd, major Smith and Sir Humfry spake of a rendezvous in discourse, where I know not.

Bennett. Will you take your oath, this was Charles Stuart's comission?

Binstead. Noe.

Bennett. Did I reade it?

Binstead. I cannot tell: you were in the window together, major Smith and you.

Bennett. What answer did I make to you?

Binstead. Nothing at all.

Binstead crosse examined, sayd

The comission was interlined.

Counsell. Were these names in the comission, Sir John Pelham, Sir William Morley, and those filled before Sir Humfry saw the comission?

Binstead. They were filled before Sir Humfry saw the comission.

Counsell. Had Sir Humfry it in his hand?

Binstead. Hee and major Smith went unto the window together, and had the comission between them at the window.

John Stapley re-examined, sayd

I have heard doctor Hewitt oft speake concerning Sir Humfry. I have heard him say, that he and Sir Humfry Bennett were joynt commissioners in this designe, were two of a committee, were in a committee, as he told it, together; and that Sir Humfry was very much concerned in the affairs of Suffex, and that he did treat with major Smith, and some others of the country, in relation to Charles Stuart; and that Dr. Hewitt did tell Mr. Mallory and myself, that there were 3000 horse in Suffex for the king's service. This was at the lady Camdens house.

Mr. Downing, resident in Holland, to secretary Thurloe.

HONOURABLE SIR,

Vol. lix.
p. 133.

BY my last, I gave you a true and particular accompt of the severall wayes now on foote in theis countryes, ^{for the raising of money} 305 468 437 67 139 339 53 408 384 393 for the ^{K. Spain in F} 545 339 46 ^{landers. The Fr. amb. and myself} 352 104 32 286 138. 468 532 507 381 139 42 81 46 did agree to speake roundly to ^{Dr. Witt about it,} 263 158 67 145 182 68 146, which accordingly ^{we} 158 40 have done; as also to ^{ld. Bevern.} 525:
they both plead ignorance, but that they will look into it yet. ^{D e W i t} 34 40 159 68 146 did ^{mo ny for an a u c t r o} seeme to imply in his discourse, as if the giving of 384 393 305 205 12 152 25 145 443 y, 168, as if that part of the busines were not to be looked upon as under any other notion, ^{t r a f f i q u e.} than as a meere 146 437 47 302 126 152 40. It's most certaine, that a greate part of
^{the mo ni es,} 468 384 393 287, which they have had for the service of this companyne ^{at Bruxells,} 219 585, hath
^{f e c r e t a r y} come theis wayes; and the ^{K. Spain's am ba f f a d o} 139 278 132 40 463 441 of the 545 202 227 139 449 111
^{u r} 152 132 is to have for his paines in promoting the busines of the ^{a u c t r o y,} 13 153 26 146 443 170, ^{f e e n the art ic le s,} five thousand gilders. A friend of mine hath 140 41 42 105 468 216 335 358 140, but the party, that had them, was under an oath of secrecy; so that he could not get a copy ^{no man mo r e} as yet. I finde ^{Amsterdamer than Nieuport,} 395 372 384 132. 40 an 566 286 468 104 527, even in all things what-^{he} soever; though ^{K. Spain,} 324 pretends much in discourse to be against ^{ld. Protector.} 545, and a friend to 534.
I need not tell you, that wee are heere most extreamey surprised with the late newes out of Flanders: the consequences whereof wee doe imagin will be extraordinary greate, not onely in

De Witt and the Id. Beverning

A.D. 1658.

in Flanders, but also at Franckford, and elsewhere. 263 159 68 146 207 525 doe protest, ^{engage with the K. Spain;} ^{well with England} that they will not in the least 40 105 308 311 500 468 545; but continue 159 42 84 87 and France. Count William

500 547 207. 549 258 503 70 202 expresse greate joy at this newes. By my last I acquainted you, that I had given an accompt to vice-admiral Goodsonn, that severall vessells of this country, loaden with ammunition and provisions, would endeavour to slip into Dunkirk; and upon tuesday last there arrived at Rotterdam a vessell, which had the last weeke gott into Dunkirk, with all sorts of provision; and upon saturday last, having unladen all, adventured out againe, and is come safe to Rotterdam; to which place she belongs: and the master said to some at Rotterdam, that he accompted it a very easy thing at Amsterdam. hi g h, in ca f e Dunk.

 to gett in or out 219 566. They talk very 325 55 62, as if that 339 245 140 41 582
 f ho l d be take n, the y w o l d j o y n with the K. Spain; 142 328 84 35 231 464 105, 468 170 160 113 83 35 70 113 171 108 500 468 545;
 de f i r e:

and I believe it is really their 263 140 70 134 42: but they will have very much to doe, to dispose other places and provinces thereunto; and I thinke it is my duty in this conjuncture to give the m the best w or d s that may be.

of time and affaires 477 313 468 89 468 235 161 416 34 142 467 377 231. We heare yet nothing of the Portugal ambassador; I wonder that you have no more 361 141 418 of F la n d er s. w ri t t to you,

408 47 355 106 34 286 144. He that should have 161 441 147 151 477 510, a Mon-Lu ca s Lu cy, T ho m as sieur 370 245 144 370 252, will now address his letters to Mr. 147 328 100 217

 J o h n f on, Gu i l li am For d; f pe

70 113 61 105 140 412, and Mr. 318 71 84 362 202 305 36; and for more 142 426 ed, Go od f on Zeeland,

279, he will continue to give notice to 314 407 142 412 by the way of 558, of all such e m p lo y

things as may be necessary for him to have knowledge of. I have 42 101 122 365 170 ed co lo ne l P al m er, di r ec t his letter s to 279 254 365 390 84 121 199 107 286, and he will 267 133 278 148 327 361 142 477 you, to Ga b ri e l T ho m f on, 510, 477 Mr. 308 24 441 45 87 151 328 103 144 412, &c. He informes me that

 S i r J o h n Mi n ce O f t end,

143 72 136 72 117 65 109 381 109 251 is sent to 116 142 148 282, to lay up all those ships carry ed men for England; at 456 140, which should have 249 279 389 305 547; and that it is resolved 219 Michael-de f i g ne;

mus to go on with the same 263 140 69 55 390; and colonel Trafford is ordered away to borrow mony.

with all speed to Muscovy, and colonel Gill for Florence, to the great duke 477 241 136
 The princefs Royal

443 162 384 393. 468 570 hath been sick ever since the newes out of Flanders; yet to meet Charles Stuart:

yesterday morning early she went out of this towne; and, as it said, 477 379 289 572:
 F ra n c for t;

who, also it's said, is speedily for 51 437 106 77 305 149; and one is gone thither ex-El.Brand.

press, to see if he may have leave. It is said, that 543 hath very lately ratified the treaty
 K. Poland. changes even t s:

with 538. It is certaine that hee 27 319 107 55 287 very much with all 290 150 138: Refident me; I

his 135 287 336 43 107 148 was this weeke with 379, and 72 found him at very great Quaker over-sea;

uncertaintyes, expressing much discontent, that 536 was not yet come 115 155 286 142 43 16; and that thereby his master was yet wholly and absolutely at uncertaintyes; in which condition, he said he could not long subsist; and withall, declaring that his master saw very K.Sweden peace with K. Poland; little inclination in the 536 to a 427 500 538; which must necessarily beget great troubles. The resident of Poland giving me a visite this weeke declared, that he saw very little appearance of the king of Sweeden's inclination to peace with his master. I told him, I believed he took his measures out of Monsieur Buninguen's letters to this state. He asked me, if his highnes did not continue his resolution of putting to his helping hand for the advancing of that busines. I answered that his highnes would be willing to do any good offices; but that the late difficultyes, which had been made in the court of Poland, about the admission of the mediation of France, did beget in him no small umbrages.

Monsieur Appieboom tells me, that he had received an answer from my lord George Fleetwood,

A.D. 1658. Fleetwood, of what he had spoken to his highnes and yourself, concerning passages written hither to this state, by ambassador Beunnigen, of things spoken to him by Sir Phillip Meadowes. However, I have this post sent you a copy of that letter, feareing least it was forgott to be sent you before; though Monsieur Appleboom tells me, he sent a copy of it.

Beverning

525 hath spoken to me againe about the picture of his highnes. The Danish resident faith, that there they will know not what to do; yet that an ambassadour shall goe for England from his master. I have not yet received any word from my lord Lockhart, nor vice-admiral Goodsonn, since the defeat given to the Spaniards, neither by any of your ships, nor by any Dutch vessel; whereof many are gone from Mardike since the defeat; which truly I think a little prejudice to your affaires, not only heer, wher I should forthwith have printed what had come to me, as I alwayes do such neweses as may be for his highnes advantage; but thereby I am not in condition to give such an account so speedily as I might to M. G. Jephson and Sir Phil. Meadows; which truly is not so well for your affayres. I only write this as that you would please to give a line, that for the future I may have accounts, as I never fayle to give to you, yea (as before) ordered an to write out of Flanders to them for more speed, as to what might be there of importance.

Don John, since the blow, hath writt to all the townes to do their utmost to defend themselves, and hath given them leave to levy forces to that end; a thing which argues extremity of necessity.

The princefs Royal

meet Ch. St.

Franckfort

468 570 is certainly gone to 379 289 572, who afterwards goes away for 48 437 104 74 305 145. I have communicated to my lord Neuport what you gave me in commission, in relation to the lady Stanhop's pass; he said, that her husband had the states pass;

If he and desired me to send you a copy thereof, which I have accordingly done. 71 50 324

by any other hand

weaken me here

should obteyne a pass 239 206 114 468 135 319 109 38, that would 162 45 16 350 108 379 324 134. Here is a report come from Amsterdam, as if young Trump, after a long fight, should have bin taken in the streights by the Turks; but the states have noe letters thereof. 68 have sent you in a boyer of Rotterdam, whereof one Jean Wauterson is skipper, fo w r do z e n of bo t t l e s of S p a w w a t

I

304 162 137 270 174 39 104 408 241 150 146 358 144 408 142 120 16 160 483 147 er,

Lucas Luce:

286, in a hamper; directed, to Monsieur 370 25 217 370 252: they were put up with one person

know es any thing,

all possible care, and but onely 413 426 135 143 412 353 287 206 470, whom also for

f e c r e s y and f u r e n e f f e, more 143 278 136 41 143 171 207 144 157 136 43 390 139 138 39, I sent to see it put on board; and it was shipped upon wednesday last at night, and the vessel stays onely

the bottles

for a winde; so that I hope it will at London e'er the arrival of this letter: 468 241 149 sealed at the Spaw.

146 287 were all 142 41 14 85 279 219 468 140 124 15 161. If you desire any more, I pray let me have your commands, who in all things am perfectly,

HONOURABLE SIR,

Your very faythfull servant,

Hague, 20 June 1658. [N. S.]

GEO. DOWNING.

This day my lord Newpoort came to me on the behalf of the States Generall, to thank me for the greate civility and ready assistance, which DeRuyther found lately in the Downes, when he was driven back by the storme. A copy of the resolution of the States Generall prince Royal. Ch. St.

I have also inclosed heere to you. 570, 572 will, I beleive, meete in some part of the united provinces; but I am not certayn whether the place under them, or on the borders.

Ch. St.

princefs Royal

Just now I have notice, that 572 and 570 mett last night at Sevenberge about seven a'clocke at night, and are there yet. This place is certaynly within the power of this state.

Mistress Philips

381 140 145 132 287 120 325 82 362 122 14 is now come to this towne. I shall endeavour endeavour to give you next post account of ^{her.} 61 286. One lieutenant colonel ^{Mackworth} 371 26 74 160 ^{A D. 1658.} 416 150 63 goes for England by this shipping from Rotterdam, which wayts only a wind:

 the shipping goes all for London; so its like he will land at Gravesend. He's about 50 yeares of age, vastly tall, a leane man, brownish hayre; ^{hee is to go for the North} 324 346 477 314 305 468 395
 136 156 62 afterwards, and to ^{Shropshire.} 140 61 443 122 143 325 136 32.

I have also just now certayne notice, that ^{the States here} 468 141 463 466 138 324 137 have yester-
^{Bruxels} day by the poste to 585 given notice to ^{Don John} 575 to putt ^{more men in the Fort Isabella;} 384 136 42 380 468 305 150 70
 140 178 44 85 355; saying that there was a designe upon the place, which is neer Antwerp;
 205 149 160 286 426: this is most certayne.

I have heerin inclosed to you such accounts, as I have received out of Flanders, concerning the late greate successe neer Dunkirk; tho' I know there can hardly be any particular you will not have received long e'er this can come to your hands.

Mr. Sa. Disbrowe, one of the council of Ireland, to secretary Thurloe.

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

HIS highnes haveing with the advise of his councill in England, mortified twelve Vol. lix.
 hundred pounds sterling yearly of certaine rents and dueties belonging to Chaplainries, P. 131.
 Deaneries, &c. for the maintenance of ministers and schooles of learning in the Highlands; but in transcribing of the grant, the words [yearly] and [for ever] being omitted, and the thing being intended and ordered in perpetuity for this good worke, as you knowe, who promoted it; the said councill here have caused the said grant to be written of new without any alteration or addition but of those words [yearly] and [for ever] to be presented to you. And they request your favour for obteyning it sign'd by his highnes, the former grant being with that draught sent to Doctor Clarges, the councill's agent, that when the new one shall be signed, the former may be given upp. All which, by appointment of his highnes councill heere is signified unto you by

Your humble servant,

Edinburgh, 10 June, 1658.

SA. DISBROWE.

Col. Lockhart to secretary Thurloe.

May it please your LORDSHIP,

I Come from visitting all the approaches, the French and ours, on the other syde, Vol. lix.
 and that which is carried on joyntly betwixt us at the fort Leon. I both passed and P. 139.
 returned upon the sands before the mouth of the harbor, the sea being out; and, I thank God for it, neither I nor any in my company had any harme. I mett Mr. Turenne at the advanc'd point of the French approach, which was upon a half moon, which the French guards carried this morning. I told Mr. Turenne, that I had left the batteries upon the fort Leon in a conditione to flanck both the key and the mercat-place, and after some discourse touching the conditione of the besieged, he resolved to summond the town, which he did. The governor was upon the bastoine before us, and a Spanish officer told the drummer, he should have his answer speedily, which was the discharge of a volley of small shott. This bravado doth not speake their affairs to be in the better posture. I am rather apt to think, their sense of the ill posture of their affairs hath putt them in passione, which will quickly be over, and then the spirits they loose in these hott fitts will help to make them more tame and sober then men of an equall temper use to be. I know the events of all things are in the Lord's hands; but, as to probabilitie, our work is now so neare an end, as I looke upon it as my businesse, rather to entertaine your lordshipp with what may be the fittest means of keeping Dunkirke, then of what rests to be done for taking of it.

A.D. 1658. Your lordship's last takes notice, that it's conceived the sending of more men will be necessary for the better maintaining Dunkirke, the Fort-royall, and Mardick, and that more men might be had, provyded those that raise them have the command of them. My lord, I shall, in as few words as I can, give you the trouble of my poore thoughts upon the whole: after the taking of this place, his highness will have 3 regiments of the 6 at his own dispose, which, with either coll. Samonds or coll. Gibbons his regiment, provyded either of them be made compleatt, and consist of 10 companies, will be a sufficient garisone of foot for the foresaid places, and may be disposed these 2500 at Dunkirke, 1000 at Mardick, and 500 at Fort-royal. He that commands Dunkirke must be redy to furnish Mardick, or the Fort-royal with secours from his body, in case the enemy shall attacke either of them: and because the 4 regiments will not be short of a 1000 men a piece, coll. Salmonds or coll. Gibbons companies, that will be over the number of the foresaid 4 regiments, must be kept till 5 or 600 recruitts can be conveniently sent over, and your lordshipp will find theise recruitts easy to be gott at Dunkirke.

Their will be need of 5 or 6 good troopes of horse, I mean strong, at least 70 in a troop; and it's no matter, whether they be single troopes, or in a regiment, for the commander in chief of the whole forces will often have use for them in parties, but seldome in a body. You must have a discreet able man to be town-major; he must be one, of whose integrity there can be no scruple; and if such a one could be had, it were requisitt he spoake French and Dutch, especially Dutch. Their must also be a person of great worth and fidelity nominatt to be deputy-governor, who, in case of the absence or death of the governor, must command the field officers of all regiments, that their may be no interfering nor disputting of command, which has often occasioned greatt misfortunes. Their must also be some small frigats, and some other flat-bottom'd vessels fitt for burthenn, that may attend upon the port, and be under the governor's command. But, my lord, when I have told you what I would have of men, and how commanded, I have told you little, for simul et simul their must be sent a great quantity of all manner of provisions for mouth and warr, and their is one part of the generall of amunitiōe, that I must speake particularly too, and that is hand-granados. I know they have not been much used in our English warr; but I can assure your lordshipp, and my former opinion is confirmed by my present experience, that nothing can be more essentiall either as to attaque or defence; and if you have not any considerable number of theise shells in store, 2 or 3000 may be bought in Holland, till you can provyde more at your iron-workes. A soldier, with half a score granados in his scripp, looks like a David, before whom a Goliah, although armed, cannot stand. When provisions for mowth and amunitiōe of warr is so plentifully provyded, that their will be enuff for present use, and for the forces or magazines in the 3 formentioned places, it will signify little, except they be accompanied with all manner of tooles for working and fortifying; and I can reckon nothing upon this head so matteriall as pallisadoes: it's one of the best magazines can be in a garrisone; and he that hath men and store of them, may dispose of every inch of ground he hath under the command of his cannon, and the spirit (which must moove and informe this confused and greatt body, composed of a greatt many more individuals then I can at present muster up) must be mony; which, as Solomon sayeth (under the protectione and blessing of God) will answere all things. My lord, I am sure in all I have said in this I have offered nothing, save what will be much better told yow by yowr lordshipp's own reason; but, indeed, when I begunn to wrytt, I was more fitt for my bed then my penn; and if I have raved to much, I know yowr lordshipp can distinguish between the weaknesse and zeale of one, who is with a perfytt submissiōe and respect,

May it please your LORDSHIP,

Your most humble,

fathful, and obedient servant,

June $\frac{11}{11}$ 1658.

WILL. LOCKHART.

I have cawsed to hang a serjant, that had deserted this body last yeare, and was found in arms under the pretended duke of York's command. The said duke sent me a high message by his trumpet about it, who is every day at Mr. Turennes camp. I sent him an answer, that did not please him I think very well, and refused his lyfe to a great many French officers, that would have begged him; but I have ventured to doe this without a commission;

commiffione; and tho' his highnefs letter to me impowers me to govern his forces A.D. 1658. according to the difcipline of warr, yet I am fometyms puzzled in my own fpirit, as being fometyms neceffitated to proceed too far upon fo flender a power as I have.

General Montagu to fecretary Thurloc.

MY LORD,

ON wedensday at night the wind blowinge fresh at fouth-west, and the full fea being at midnight, a small vefsel of about 8 tonns from Gravelinge came out to venter into Dunquerque; and though wee had an alarme of her taken by every one of our fhips, when fhe was a league off the port, and the captaine of the watch with eight boats manned, and the small frigats, and captaine Plumley commandinge the watch, as able a fea-man and ftout a man as any in the fleete, yet they could not by any meanes ftopp her (fhe havinge fo fresh way before the wind) but fired into her all alonge as fhe went; and when fhe came nere the point of the fhoare, where our forces have a batterrie and musqueteers within pistoll-shott, neither of both lent her any shott. In the morninge by 5 a-clocke, I called a councill of warr, to examine the carriage of our guard (which was not much found to be blamed) and to confult what was poffible to be done more to hinder any vefsel for goinge in; and wee refolved to make a batterye of our own afhoare againft the pierre-head, with 8 demy culveringe, and man them with feamen from our fhips, and to take our fpare top-masts, and make them fast with iron ftaples together, and lay them with greate ancors crosse the paffage, which may help to ftopp the way of a vefsel, and give our boates opportunitye to board her, if the tyde will let them ftand, as wee intend. I have alfo written to the governor of Calais to buy mee 2 or 3 brigandines, and I will pay for them; that foe havinge boates of the fame make and draught of water, as the enemyes are, wee may doe as much as they can, and the better prevent them. Whatever I, or any about me, can advife, that may promote our bufineffe, fhall be done; and what then falls out in event I cannot helpe. The difficultyes the fea gives us is not well underftood, without a greate deale of experience. I was yefterday afhoare to waite upon mareschall Tureine and my lord Lockhart, and was almost round the camp with them. Monsieur Tureine had sent to mee aboard (before I went of) to defire mee to moove his highneffe, that more men might be sent to his forces here. I acquainted my lord Lockhart with it, and he told mee, how matters stood betweene you, and seemed not very defirous of them, and foe he expreffed himfelfe to monsieur Tureine, who discourft with us both about it. Monsieur Tureine faid, that the enemye was drawinge together about Bergen, and thofe out of Gravelin were to meete them, and that they would be as ftronge as before; and if the armye was well conducted, they might make the fiedge to be raifed. The kinge of France is expected in the camp to-day. Mr. Tureine defires the enclosed may be delivered to the embaffador. I have noe more, but remaine,

MY LORD,

Your most faithfull and humble fervant,

Nasebye before Dunkirke

June 11th, 1658.

E. MONTAGU.

Lady Eliz. Claypole to the lady of H. Cromwell.

DEARE SISTER,

I Must beg your pardon, that I do not right to you fo oft ase I would doe; but in earnest, I have bin fo extreme fickly of late, that it has made mee unfit for any thing, thoye thare is nothing that can plese me more, then wherein I maye expres my tru lofe and refpekt to you; which I am fuer non has more refen then my self, both for your former fafers, and the cens you have of any thing, which arifes to me of happnes. I will aifuer you, nothing of that can bee to mee, wherein I have not a power to expres how really I lofe and honner you. Truly the Lord has bin very gratius to us, in doeing for us abofe whot we could exfpekt; and now has shod himfelf more extraordinary in delivering my father out of the hands of his enymife, which wee have all refon to be fenfible of in a very pertikeller manner; for feringly not ondy his famely would have bin ruined, but in all probabillty the hol nation would have bin invold in blod. The Lord grant it maye

A.D. 1658. maye never be forgot by us, but that it may case us to depend upon him, from hom wee have reserved all good, and that it maye cose us to se the muttablenes of thise things, and to yuse them acordingly, I am fuer wee have nede to bag that sperrit from God. Hary is vary well, I hope you will se him this fommer. Truly, thare is nothing I desier more, then to injoy you with us. I wis you may laye your grat bely here. I bag my tru afficktion to your letel wons.

DEARE SISTER,

I am your most afficktineate sifter

June 12 [1658.]

and servant,

E. CLAYPOLE.

General Montagu to secretary Thurloe.

MY LORD,

Vol. lix.
p. 142.

YOURS of the 10 and 11th instant I have received, and one of the 11th also to the commander in chiefe in the Downes, which mentions a greatte miscarriage of some vessel, which I shall enquire into, and examine the matter by a counsell of warr, when I learne out the vessel. Your intimation concerninge a seaman of this shipp, I shall take care of to returne him home (havige enough supernumerarye on board mee.) Your intelligence out of Holland will make mee remand a shipp to ride in the Downes, whereas I had called all away hither (only keepinge catches going too and againe to carry and bringe pacquetts) upon our jealousie of them; for though theire fleete be past through the channel, wee (not knowinge whether theire might be any additionall strength prepared in Holland to meete them) conjectured, that if they meant evill to us, they might not improbably be gone into the bay to conduct the reliefe prepared in Spaine for these parts, and then returninge take their opportunitye upon us. I suppose, before this comes, you have my letter, that mentioned the gettinge in of a shalopp into Durkirke, notwithstanding all wee could doe to prevent her. On fridaye in the eveninge Marshall Turein sent two messengers, within an hour one of another, to assure mee, that there were vessels preparinge and gone out of Newport to runn in her; whereupon I caused our guards to be strengthened, and went all night my selfe upon the watch in the Hart-pinke, to see things the better, carried; but none came, and I have been beene studdienge what best course I can take to make the matter more sure, that none may gett in, the seidge being come almost (as I hope) to an upshott; and greate blame will be layd upon us, if it should faile by that meanes, whether wee be blame-worthy or not; and I have thought to sinke a vessel in the mouth of the harbour by the peere-head, which will helpe much, what with her hull and chaines, or booms or hausers tied from her to either side of the shore, soe longe as wee can defend her from the enemies burninge her, or breakinge her up; and I have advised with the commanders about it, who have, by theire votes, resolved mee to goe on with it, and I have appraised and taken up a ffly-boate, that lies neere me emptye, and sent officers on board her, to prepare all things in a readinesse to synke her to-morrow in the evening tyde; and if the worke be rightly performed, I doubt not, but to give a good account of any thing that swimms and attempts to goe in here. The other wayes, in my judgment, are impossible to take a certaine effect; for with a fresh gale of wind and tyde, and men resolved, a vessel cannot be stayed. I here not much from shore; only marshall Turein's gentleman (one of them that came to me on Friday) said the towne would be taken in 2 or 3 days. Our men have had hott worke of the siedge and often repulses. I here major-generall Drummond was shott this night in the approaches; how it is with him I know not. The kinge is expected to-night in the camp. Not more at present from

MY LORD,

Your most faithfull humble servant,

June 13th 1658.

E. MOUNTAGU.

Since I wrote this letter, the towne beate a parlye, and I have sent my boate to bringe mee news, who just now returnes and bringes me word from the surintendant monsieur Talon,

Talon, that the towne is for his highness my master, and that all things are agreed, only A.D. 1658. they are now gone to Mardyke to the king, who is now there, to have the articles confirmed. There is some little strife about the exchange of some prisoners of qualitye.

Major-general Jephson to secretary Thurloe.

SIR,

I Receyved by the last post a letter from Mr. Morland, of the 4th instant, by which I Vol. lix. perceyve you had not then any thing, which you thought necessarye to add to my in- P. 146. structions. I shall now make it my most humble sute, that you will bee pleased to intercede for mee to his highnesse, that somthing may be diminisht of those which I have formerly receyved; I meane in relatione only to the command, of attending indefinitely, untill I can take my leave of the king of Sueden. Sir, his occasions have already detained him in his owne country, above 3 monthes longer then it was thought hee could possibly bee absent from his armye, which now begins every where to move, and the kings businesse may possibly force him to meete them farre hence by sea. If this should soe fall out, I thinke it would bee noe way reasonable, that you should long continue the charge of two publique ministers abroad to the same purpose. I speake this only to this end, that you would bee pleased to sett down a time, after which I should no longer awayte the king's returne; and to direct how farre you think it fitt I should follow him, in case he should land eastward in Pomerania, or Prussia. If this bee thought fit, I doubt not, but I shall soe order the matter, (though I doe not see the king of Sueden) that his highnesse's affairs shall not suffer thereby, which I shall doe by giving Sir Philip Meadowe all your commands punctually in writing, which I was to put in execution at my coming awaye; and by informing him fully, how affayres stand at present betwixt England and Sueden. There hath been a false alarme of the king of Suede's landing in Holstein; but I can not receyve any sure intelligence eyther of that, or the day hee parted from Gottenburgh. I shall be forc't very shortly to place another bill upon Mr. Nowell, as you may conjecture by my former accounts. I have nothing of newes at present considerable to entertaine you withall; but I hope I shall by the next receyve a confirmatione from you of the good newes I heard by the last out of Holland, of the successe of ours, and the French armyes against the Spaniards, which attempted upon the leaguer before Dunkerke. I shall only begg the countenance of your favour, that I may bee still esteemed, as I shall endeavour to shew myselfe,

SIR,

Your most really affectionate

and humble servant,

Wismar 14th June 1658.

WM. JEPHSON.

Col. Lockhart to secretary Thurloe.

Camp, June 24. 1658. [N. S.]

May it please your LORDSHIP,

I Received this morning your lordshipp's by Mr. Hory, and had returned him before now, Vol. lix. had I not been desyrus to see the conclusion of the capitulatione; and so in conditione P. 144. to assure your lordshipp, that to-morrow before fyve of the clock at night, his highnes forces under my command will be possessed of Dunkirk; but the Lord knoweth what I shall doe, what I come their for; I have neither mony nor provisions for the forces I imploy their; and I carry them to a place, where little or nothing is left. That which troubles me most is, I am forced to buy the very pallisados of the Fort-royall; otherwayes the French, notwithstanding of any order the king and cardinall can give, would pull them out; and not only burn them, but pull down the earthen works in taking them out. I must also presently imploy our foldiers in repairing the breaches, and in taking up the bridges of communicatione, and putt them upon a hundred severall kynds of work, which can not be done without mony. I must also pay the cannonniers of the army, for the bills of the towne; which is their indisputable dew at all renditione of places. I have a greatt many disputtes with the cardinal, about severall things. I have agreed he shall have all the canon in the towne, that have the armes of France upon them; but some other things, concerning shipping in the harbor, and the quartering of the French guards, and lodging the chiefe officers

A.D. 1568. officers of the army, is yett in controversie ; neverthelesse I must say, I find him willing to hear reason : and tho' the generallity of court and armes are even mad to see themselves part with that they call un si bon morceau, or so delicatt a bill, yett he is still constant to his promises, and seems to be as glad in the generall (notwithstanding our differences in little particulars) to give this place to his highnes, as I can be to receive it. The king is also exceeding oblydging and civill, and hath more trew worth in him, then I could have imagined. My desyn to dispatch this messenger with this good newes makes me end abruptly. I am,

MY LORD,

Your most humble

and obedient servant,

WILL. LOCKHART.

My lord, in desyring to make too great haste, I have forgott half my businesse : I beseech his highnes to hasten over all manner of provisions, amunitiōe, and mony ; as also some two or three troops of horse to beginn, a small body of cavallry, and as many palisados as can be had uppon the suddaine. The cardinal intends to-morrow to resolve upon what shall be next undertaken. I am to be at the counsell, and I hope to carry it either for Graveling or Berg ; either of theise two sieges will give his highnes tyme enuff to putt Dunkerke in a good posture of defence. I have borrowed two thousand lewises or pistolls from the cardinal. I give Mr. Le Tellier a bill at sight upon Mr. Wildegoes, merchant at Paris, for them ; and have ordered him to pay them out of that mony he hath in his hands, upon Cesi's account : it was the reddyest shift I could make at present, for I could not goe into Dunkerke without mony ; and though it may be thought a greatt sum, it will not last very long. I shall be faithfull to his highnes in my debursments of it, and shall give him an exact account ; only I must begg, that either Mr. Wildegoes may be reimbursed of that mony ; or, that I may, by an order from his highnes and the counsell, be impowered and requyred to take up so much of it ; otherwyse I and my children must be lyable to the interresses of Cesi for the mony : but when I say I have borrowed this mony, I mean I have propounded to borrow it ; and the cardinal gave me hope, he would lend it on my bill upon sight, but could not assure me of it, till he spoke with Mr. Tellier.

Poor colonel Drummond was mortally wounded, on Sabbath-day morning he would not leave me, though he had been up the night before. I took leave this day of lieutenant colonel Fennick and him : all I had to promise them was, that I should bury them in Dunkirke. I thank God for it, as to myself, I had more signall preservations and deliverances in the last day of the siege, than I had almost during the whole tyme of it. I take notice of it, not by the way of boasting, but in a way of most humble acknowledgments of the wonderfull providence of my God : and tho' I be incompassed with sorrows, on account of my losse of so many friends, yet when I consider what God had done, and how much this day of small things may contribute to the carrying on of a blessed and glorious work, which may extend itself to all the corners of Europe, I confesse I can but rejoyce in the midst of my private afflictions ; and must owne, that the lyves of all the unworthy instruments, that were employed, is not to be valewed in the purchase of so rich a mercy. Pardon this running from one subject to another in one, who in the middst of all his confusions, doth constantly remember the obligations he hath to be,

May it please your LORDSHIPP,

Your most humble, fathfull,

and obedient servant,

WILL. LOCKHART.

Poor Mr. Swift is very sick ; he should have carryed this ; and when it pleaseth God to recover him, will expect from his highnes bounty that reward, which usually is bestowed upon a messenger, that bringeth good news. The relation of the fight sent by your lordshipp is true in the maine ; only it doth us great wrong, when it sayeth we gave no quarter. The major generall kept the regiments in a body, and would not suffer them to straggle neither for pillage, nor prisoners ; and did them service by it, that merritted a better character than that of cruelty.

Col.

*Col. Lockhart to secretary Thurloe.*Camp, June $\frac{1}{2}$ 1658.

May it please your LORDSHIPP,

I Have been with his eminence this morning, and have adjusted most things in the best manner I can. I have parted with all the cannon in Dunkerke, that belongs to the French, and some other things in the store and harbour, that are of no great importance. The cardinal hath lent me the 2000 pistolls I mentioned yesternight, and I have given a bill for them upon Mr. Wildegoes; and therefore must againe begg, that either Mr. Wildegoes may reimburse it, or that his highness and counsell may give me ane order to make use of so much of the mony in his hands, belonging to the interesses of Mr. de Cesi. The cobby of the articles I cannot yett send, they being large, and are the same, that Dunkerke had, when it was taken by the prince of Conde, excepting the first; which was, that no officer nor soldier should be imployed by the king of France in the garrisone of Dunkerke, save such who were Roman Catholick. I told Mr. Le Tellier, secretary of state, that the article was to be inverted, and said in it, if the king had given the liberty of conscience to Protestants their he did in other places of his dominions, it was possible he might have conserved his interest in it longer than he did; howsoever the goodnesse of God is to be admired in this, that those, who expressed so greatt an animositie against Protestants, are now at their mercy. The Lord enable us to use the power over them with that meeknesse and christian providence, as our conversatione amongst them may not scandalise, but rather adorn that profession we walk under; and if it be possible, I shall make it my endeavour to put things in that order, as not only the mouths of our enemies shall be stopped, but that all of them, that are morally just, may be gained by our good example.

A.D. 1658.

Vol. lix.

p. 153.

Mr. Le Tillier hath been with me, since I left his eminence: he desyers, that at my receptione at the place, I may sign an act, by which I promise, in my master's name, that the article concerning religion, which is repeated in this act, shall be inviolably kept: it's just I should do so; and therefore I have not scrupled it. It was as good as resolved at counsell this morning, that Wynoxberg shall be besieged; in order to which, the French desyer, that they may keep Mardick till that be over, by reason all their magazines are there. I have promised to acquaint his highness with it, and to receive his commands in it. I doe not see, that it will proove prejudicial to his highness affaires, that the French keep Mardick two or three weeks longer; and to encourage the taking of Bergh, I have given way, that five of the regiments march with the army, take eighteen old companies, and my owne regiment, being a garrisone sufficient for Dunkerke, and the Fort-royall, which will be exceedingly secured, by being in the French hands, at the delivery of Mardick. I must withdraw ane other regiment from the army at least, and if recruits come not over, I think I must take of two; so that their will be then no more left in the French but three, tho' I know, if fowr could be continued, it would be greatt satisfactione to his highnesse, and would shame his enemies, who give it out, that after his deliverie of Dunkerke, the French shall have no more kyndnesse shoven to them from his highness and England. I am going to draw out the forces, with which I intend to take possessione of Dunkerke, and shall importune your lordshipp no further at present, save to give your lordshipp the faithfull assurances of my being,

MY LORD,

Your most humble

and obedient servant,

WILL. LOCKHART.

I hope some share of the provisions and amunitiōe I have formerly mentioned, will be upon their way before this comes to your hands. Poor lieutenant-colonel Fennick died yesternight. There is yet a possibility colonel Drummond may live, but no probability. I expect the young gentleman your lordshipp promised to send over, and have a collers for him.

Col.

Col. Lockhart to Secretary Thurloe.

May it please your LORDSHIPP,

A.D. 1658. I Cann add nothing at present to what I said in the morning, save that by the goodness of God, your servant is now master of Dunkerke; and indeed it is a much better place than I could have imagined: blessed be God for this great mercy, and the Lord continue his protectione to his highness, and his countenance to all his other undertakings; and lett his lyfe be pretious in his eyes, and his family prosper. So prayeth,

Vol. lix.
p. 156.

MY LORD,

Your most humble servant,

Dunkerke, June $\frac{1}{2}$ 1658.

WILL. LOCKHART.

Secretary Thurloe to H. Cromwell lord deputy of Ireland.

MY LORD,

In the possession of the right honourable the earl of Shelburn.

I Have nothinge now to enterteyne your excellency with, but the newes from Dunkirk. My last gave you an account of a battle fought there betweene the two armies, with the successe thereof. The inclosed papers will lett your excellency see what proceedings have been there since. I have not received a list of the prisoners taken in the last fight; there were about 3000 of them, amongst whom was generall Caracene, the most considerable man amongst them, a native Spanyard; but did afterwards get of by a composition with the French men, who tooke him.

I doubt Mr. Standish brought you cold comfort, but 'twas the best could be sent from hence, untill it please God to put affaires into another state and condition; which remeyne as they did by my former letters, if they doe not declyne. It's true the Lord is pleased to doe wonderfully for his highnes, and to blesse hym in his affaires beyond expresseion; which surely keepes thinges from rolling unto disorder. I wish we may answer hym in his dispensation, and see and make use of the opportunities, which he puts into our hands for settlinge of this nation.

I shall present to his highnes your excellency's desire of haveinge Sir John Kinge to be muster-master general of Ireland, and give you an account of his highnes answer; as alsoe signifie what he will please to say of makeinge Sir Charles Coot a viscount: I suppose there will be no difficulty therein. I rest.

YOUR EXCELLENCY'S

Most faithfull and humble servant,

Whitehall, 15. June, 1658.

JO. THURLOE.

General Fleetwood to H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland.

DEAR BROTHER,

In the possession of the rt. hon. the earl of Shelburn.

I Am so indisposed, that I cannot enlarge. Since my last we have had farther considerations of what is necessary as previous to the parliament, but are com to no resolution; which will a little longer, I doubt, retard the calling of the parliament; but that will, I presume, be in September, and sooner it canot well be, by reason of the yeare: most in the countryes will be busy about their own occasions, and not well at leisure to com up, till then. We have lately received good encouragement from my lord Lockhart, that we may expect the possession of Dunkirk before the ende of this weeke. The place is very considerable, and must be kept much by the bodies of men, it being not so naturally stronge, as by art; and notwithstanding is very approachable. The Spaniards are endeavouring to rallye agayne, but we hope not able, though the French are strangely carlesse in their letting prisoners goe; amongst which, the cheife next to Don John, the marquise of Caracene, was let goe upon some bribe to the souldiers, who tooke him, which it seems is a very usuall thing with them. One would wonder, (but that there is an over-ruling providence) how that warre, warre, considering the friendshippe each enemy have to the other, should continue upon the A.D. 1658. termes it doth. But the Lord surely hath an higher hand in it then is visible; and I doe hope the Lord wil cary on that worke to a further progresse and successe, in order to that generall cause we have bine thus long contending for; which that we may still have our hearts upon, is the desire of

Your most affectionate brother,

and humble servant,

June 15. 1658.

CHA. FLEETWOOD.

My lady Elizabeth continues very ill, and as I feare, unlesse the Lord supports hir, will be much worse, by the death of hir youngest son Oliver: the Lord sanctefy thos fore dispensations!

I shall beseech your just favour to my poore kinsman, my lord Lambert.

Dr. Tate has sent to me for his fifty pounds advance; I beseech your orders therein by the next.

Since the writing of this letter we have intelligence, that Dunkirk, is surrendered; the terms of which his highness hath not received.

General Montagu to secretary Thurloc.

MY LORD,

BE pleased to accept this two or three words, which is only to give you notice of my lord Vol. lix. embassador's beinge in possession of Dunkerke yesterday. This morninge I am goinge to P. 159. him to conferr together, and intend about night to dispatch unto you matters more at large. I am,

MY LORD,

Your most faithfull humble servant,

Naysebye. June 16. 1658.

E. MONTAGU.

H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland, to the lord Fauconberg.

MY LORD,

16 June, 1658.

I Hope your lordship will excuse me, that I did not send any letters in pilgrimage after In the posses- your lordship; not having the least account, either of the way of your journey, or of sion of Wil- the place, or time of your continuance in France. My affection leads me in the first liam Crom- place to congratulate your safe return, though I should prefer the publick before my private well, Esq; relation. Your kind reception, I hope, speaks much good to these dominions; and the circumstances went certainly beyond a French compliment. Your personal appearance in this negotiation did, without doubt, make it succeed the better. I am glad his highness made so happy choice; I hope it is a good omen: and I hope good things will always attend your lordship like the French victory, which it seems trod upon your heels. I have been under some indisposition, and am altogether unfitt to give your lordshipp any further diversion. I remain, &c.

General Montagu to secretary Thurloc.

MY LORD,

THIS bearer, my good freind, goinge for England, I have desired him to waite upon Vol. lix. you, who can give you an account of passages here. I referr myselfe for other matters P. 161. to the account, which my next letter shall present you withall. I waite here expectinge my lord embassador's returne from the court at Mardyke, to resolve about my owne businesse, hopinge to returne speedily into the Downes, leavinge such vessels here as shall be found necessarye for your service. I am,

MY LORD,

Your most faithfull,

and humble servant,

Dunkircke. June 16. 1658.

E. MONTAGU.

H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland, to secretary Thurloc.

SIR,

16 June 1658.

A.D. 1658.

In the possession of William Cromwell, Esq;

THE continuance of the reputation, which it hath pleased God to give our countrey men on t'other side the water, is surely great matter of comfort to every Englishman; and especially to such as have an eye to the welfare and interest of the people of God; and more particularly to you, whose hearts were drawn forth at that very juncture of time, to seek the Lord on their behalfe. I hope as this in reference to things abroad, so your late justice upon Slingsby and Huet may have its influence upon things at home.

Your packet came in but even now, so that I have not much time to make a returne; and indeed I have been this week under some indisposition, to both which you owe the exemption of being further troubled. I remain, &c.

Col. Lockhart to secretary Thurloc.

Dunkerke, June $\frac{17}{27}$. 1658.

May it please your LORDSHIPP,

Vol. lix.
p. 169.

THE taking possessione of a garrison of this importance, and the putting things into some order, which are in confusion beyond what can be believed by any that is not a witnesse to it, is a worke of so excessive fatigue, as I am not able to doe what every minutt requyres from me, and to give your lordshipp ane account of it; and therefore I must beseech your lordshipp to assure his highnes, that if my account of the state of things here be not so full as it ought to be, it is because I am endeavouring by all the care and vigilance I am capable of, to put affaires in such a conditione, as I may be able to give ane account of them. I send your lordshipp a copy of the act I synd at the reception of this place. I had disputes with Mr. Tellier concerning the preference of place betwixt my master and the king, which occasioned some heatt; but the cardinall had the goodnesse to decyde the question in my favor, as your lordship will perceive by the running of the act. This towne hath suffered no damage, either by the French or English: the French had it not above 4 hours in their possessione, during which tyme I had almost all the king's and cardinal's guards devyded into the severall streets to prevent pillaging; and when his highnes forces marched in, I drew up my own regiment in the market-place, and sent off guards to so many quarters of the towne, as all disorders were prevented. I have much adoe to keep our soldiers owt of the churches, and from committing some little abuses; but the trouble of that will be at an end in a few days; the noveltie of the thing will be over, and their curiositie sattisfied.

I hope Mr. Swift will be in a condition to bring over the articles in a few dayes, I have not yett gott ane authentick copy of them. The ecclesiasticks here doe find so little of that ill triattment from us, which the Spanyards thereattnd them with, as they pretend they are well sattisfied with us; and say wee use them better then either the Spanish or French did, which probably is true. But all that's done for them is lyke washing of the Black-moore, for their hearts cannot be gained; and what is done for them, is rather done to satisfy others, then out of any hopes to doe good upon them. The citizens would make us beleve, that they have long wished to be under his highnes government, provyded the liberty of their religione might have been secured. I make it my interest to perswade them I beleve all their faire professions, and my businesse to watch over them as enemies in our bosome. I have propounded to them a deputatione to his highnes, which they have resolved to doe so soone as things heare are a little settled. I think it will be both for his highnes honor and interest at home and abroad, that the deputatione be made in as sollemn a manner as may; and if your lordshipp approve of my opinion, I shall goe about the executing it with all care, and shall give it as much advantage and lustre as is possible. The cardinal tells me, that his affaires goe well at Francfort, and that in spite of all the oppositione made by the Austrians and pope, he hath carryed it, that it shall not be lawfull for the emperour to give any assistance to whatsoever prince, against France, or any of the allies of France. He sayeth he strugled hard to gett England excepted, but that he carryed it on the contraire, and was forced to buy the casting vote at a very dear rate. Bergh and Linck will be invested this night and to-morrow: that seege will give me good opportunitie to putt this place in defence. I have already propounded it to his eminence, that when Bergh is taken, their must be course taken, how contributione may be raised for the subsistence of this garrifone; and that a passage must be allowed us either at Bergh or Linck, for sending ovr parties to collect it. It's a harsh pill, and he was loath to enter upon any debate upon it; but I doubt not to carry it; for if they block us up heare at land, his highness can block them up by sea; and it's so materiall a part of the treaty, as it must be. A.D. 1658.

highnes

 stuck too. I take it for a great mercy, that his highness will have opportunity to discuss this point of the treaty, before he is ingadged to beseege Graveling by sea, or any other sea-port. I have been forced to draw in ane other regiment, and made them cast lotts for it, which gave generall satisfactiōe: the lott fell upon colonel Alsopp's regiment, so that with colonel Gibbon's and colonel Salmond's regiments, and the two odd companies belonging to captain Eaton and captaine Harrisone, we will have foure regiments in the towne, and foure in the field. His eminence was a little ill pleased, that I drew off this last regiment from the army without acquainting him, having promised fyve to the seege of Bergh; but I find in things of that nature, that when they are done, they are easilier excused, then they can be gott agreed too before they be done. I hope his highness will not think (if any thing be represented to him about it) that it's my own way to desyer greater numbers of men for any businesse, then the necessitie of the work will requyre. Yowr lordshipp by Mr. Garing had in it a copy of Mr. Turen's letter. I can assure yowr lordshipp, he did himselfe wrong, when he informed, that the English were rebutted. I thank God for it, our enemies will not give us so badd a testimony; and when the town cappitulatt, I had the good fortune to show my lord Montagu the point of the French attaque, and that of ours; and if he will say, (notwithstanding all the advantages they had) that our point was one inch behind theirs, I shall submitt to all the punishments can be inflicted upon ane offender. Their are no other companies arryved here besydes those of colonel Salmond's and Gibbon's regiments, save the two companies above-mentioned. Yowr lordshipp by captain Guy mentions his highnes care of sending provisions to us: it will come very seasonably, for at present there is not much of that in this place. I have been forced to make the soldiers breadd of some old rye I found heare, and ame about to buy as much wheatt to mix with it, the soldiers not being able to eatt the rye bread without a mixture of wheatt in it. I have between 6 and 700 wounded and sick comming in, whereof at least 300 wounded. I putt all the wounded in some howses neare a nunnerie, and have bargained with the nunns to waite upon them and furnish them. I pay them 1 styver by the day for each wounded soldier, for which they putt a nunn to every 8 wounded men, and give them warm broth, meatt, breadd, and beere, and keep them clean in linning. I shall also allow the sick money for their present subsistence, and shall be as good a husband as I can; butt I find my 22000 livers will not hold out long. I shall so soon as is possible settle custome and excyse upon all commodities that come into the port, and upon the beere that's sold in the towne; but till wee gett some quantity of beere and other provisions in, I dare not putt too greatt discouragement upon any that brings provisions. I intend by proclamatiōe to order, that English and French mony passe in this place, at the rates they doe in England and France, which will free the soldiers of a greatt deale of troble they are putt to by changing their money, after the rates it goes at heare, when they buy any thing. I shall have of canon heare, when the French have taken away their 16th, and the enemy their two, which they had by capitulatione, about a 130 peece of canon, whereof 63 brass and 67 iron; but most of them are small gunns. I have a great quantity of match, but almost no powther, nor lead, not a 1000 weight of lead in this towne; so that I take from my lord Montagu double proportione of lead, and no match. It will not be necessary, that your lordshipp send any shovells, spades, and pickaxes, because I gather together all I can about the works; and I have ordered the burgers to bring in what they have gathered in the tyme the town was under capitulatione: they have already swelled to a great bulk, and I beleeeve, when all is gott in, will amount to six or seven thousand, which is a good stock, if well managed. I desyer that no greatt shott be sent, till I see what can be gott together of them also. The French have left a many in their quarters scattered; and I give the soldiers for every ball of 29 lb. weight they bring in, six-pence; and of 12 lb. or thereabout, a groatt. Their are severall other things, which I cannot now enumeratt, butt e'er it be long, shall putt all in ane inventarie, and shall be as carefull to gather every thing together, and to preserve it when gott, as if the advantage of it were to redound to my own purse. My lord, there is an old frigatt in the harbor; she hath neither roape nor yeard; particular persons clame her, and the French clame her, and I clame her upon my lord protector's account; she is of a considerable bulk: if his highnes will allow me his part, I will treat with the other pretenders. I am sure of the French; but if his highness have not freedom to give his interest, or that I be beholden to the French for theirs, I will not meddle with it further then faithfully to preserve his highness interest for his owne use; and if I can recover her, shall give her to whom he appoint. I shall wrytt to-morrow by captain Guy. I am

Your LORDSHIPP'S

faithfull fervant,

WILL. LOCKHART.

General

General Montagu to secretary Thurloc.

MY LORD,

A.D. 1658.

Vol. lix.
p. 164.

I Hope you have received 2 or 3 letters of myne before this, to certifie you of takinge of this place, which truly is a very gallant towne, I suppose as good and better than Hull; and very well fortified; only the works are large, and will I doubt at least require 4000 men to keepe it, the inhabitants being not to be trusted by you. Likewise I beleeeve it will aske some chardge to make the workes more secure for us; for the breaches upon the approaches must be repaired. The Royall-fort betweene that and Wynoxburgen, which is not half finished, must I conceive be considered either to be slighted or repaired; and I thinke the last were as little chardge, and very usefull to hinder an armye for sitting downe to beseidge Dunquerque. Something would be done also at Fort Lion, and at the pier head; and also the providinge it with stores and provisions for the garrison and shippinge, and other matters, deserves speedy and effectuall consideration, which I doubt not but you will take; for if this place have noe other use then to take a chardge of soe greate a constant guard of shippes to attend it, and the advantage of fittinge out small vessells from hence, together with the creatinge of piracye hence, it is worth the chardge to have it secured unto you. I was yesterday all day in Dunquerque to understand the resolves of court of the disposinge their armye, and to know of my lord Lockhart what shippes he stood in need of here now; and at night my lord Lockhart did communicate with mee the resolves of the court to beseidge Bergen, though himself pressed for Gravelin, and others for Hesdin; which resolution (if it hold) will give good opportunitye for a peaceable perfectinge the Royall-fort before-mentioned. And you see, that it setts this fleete wholly at libertye (6 small vessells only excepted, which I leave to my lord embassador's command, for convoyes about Calais, for the armyes provisions, and correspondence, and convoy from hence to England) which within a few weeks may (I suppose) be lessened also. My instructions are at an end also; and I know not how to proceede in any service, untill you shall please to furnish mee with new, which I shall expect as soone as possibly may be, intendinge (with Gods blessing) to sayle with the next opportunitye into the Downes, and there hope to meet them. In the meane tyme the best way I could take, I thought to be, to send about halfe a dozen of the foulest fregatts to cleane, that they may be fitt for what service may be commanded; and beinge told by the cardinall on monday last (when I waited on the kinge and him) that he was certainly informed, that the shippes of Sebastians were parted out from thence, and came on the back of Scotland, bound for Flushing or Ostend, (according to their former intelligence) I meane to send 6 or 7 frigates more to those that are alreadye upon the station, and direct them to divide into two squadrons; the one to waite their entrance into the Wiellinges, (which respects both Ostend and Flushing) and the other to ply at sea over-against the Texell or Schivellinge, soe as they may probably hope to meet them, if they goe for the Mase. I have had and have a great desire to goe into those seas with this shipp and about 20 of those in my list, she being cleane and able to sayle as well as any fregate in the fleete; and soe I might answer this service, or any thinge else from the Northward; but it becomes me not to moove until the consequences be considered above, and I directed to it, which if it be thought fitt, I shall hope to sayle at an hour's warninge out of the Downes to them. The sea is safe and bold all to the northward of these Flemish bankes. This is all at present from,

MY LORD,

Your most faithfull

and humble servant,

June 17. 1658.

Nasebye in Dunkerke road.

E. MONTAGU.

There is a new shipp in Dunkerke-key, a handsome frigate, that will carry about forty gunns; there is some question about her, whether she belongs to us or the French, or upon private account; but surely she is a utensill of warr within the trayte.

Mr.

Mr. Downing, the resident in Holland, to secretary Thurloe.

HONOURABLE SIR,

A.D. 1658:

WEDNESDAY was a fennight I caused to be shipped on board a boyer of Rotter-^{Vol. lix.} dam, bound for London, whereof John Waterfon is master, four dozen of ^{bottles p. 171.} 241 of Spaw water

145 146 358 138 408 140 119 12 158 483 150 286 in a hamper, which is ordered to Mr. Lucas Lucy. Onely one party was by me imployed in the thing, who is very trusty, and yet withall knowes nothing but that they are for the party, to whome they are directed; and for that end, for the better avoyding any the least suspicion, I caused him to write with them a letter to Mr. Lucy, letting him know, that I had sent him such a thing in such a vessel; so that you must looke after them, for that, upon the receipt of the letter, he will thinke them to be for himself. I shall send you more, if you please.

filled and sealed by a sworn officer,

They are 303 279 207 140 40 199 279 239 12 141 160 416 390 408 302 25 286, as I am informed, and so sent hither, where they are made use of by all withoutt doubt.

De Witt

I have seriously spoken with 263 160 68 147 about that, which was written in your last two of the states of Holland concerning 147 160 114 408 468 141 463 466 141 408 557 haveing bin in conference Don John.

with 575. He positively denyes it, yet withal did confesse to me, that it was a greate truth, lord protector's progress in Flanders, that they did not like 534 121 443 55 132 287 141 339 47 355 107 34 286 144, armes

but could be glad, that his 213 379 142 were rather imployed at a greater distance.

French ambassador

Thus much he plainly told me; and I have since conferred with 532 about it; and he is of opinion, that such a thing cannot be without some previous resolution both of the states generall, and also of the states of Holland, one whereof at least could very hardly have escaped both our knowledges; but the states of Holland being to meete the 3. July, wee are both resolved to use all possible care and circumspection in gaining true and timely knowledge of what shall pass there; and it will be most necessary for your affaires, that wee so doe, for that all resolutions and counsells of that kinde must begin there, and I hope you shall not fayle of a good, true, and timely accompt. I have sent you by this post a copy of the letter for the convocation of the said states, as also a minute of the points they are called upon; and one of them I have at large sent, it seeming a very strange one, (to wit) for the compelling of the other provinces to pay their arreareages or proportion of the moneyes paid to England and Denmark. I beleieve you will finde upon stat. gen.

further inquiry, that the persons above hinted at to be of the 535 were noe other then

Amsterdam,

authority

trade in the

some of 566, who were sent to treat about the 14 156 26 147 443 170 to 150 437
West-Indies, returned out of Flanders

263 339 468 161 287 151 339 267 287, one whereof 134 289 154 134 106 279
418 408 50 355 107 36 286 142 noe longer agoe then the last weeke; and a freind principal of mine spoke with him in this towne, as he was upon his returne; and he is a 122 441 man of Amsterdam;

107 252 120 199 372 408 566; and I am confident this is the truth of the business.

Sir John Marlow

As 142 70 134 71 112 62 105 371 134 369 will doe nothing underhand, he will in hundred pounds

pais;

the first place have an 332 431 154 107 35 141, and a 122 217 141 43; for his intention is to come wholly of from 572, or otherwise not to doe any thing in the least:

Ch. Stew.

Ch. Stew. at Newcastle;

he is a notable man, and indeede did all for 572 219 390 160 250 358; so it lyes before you what you thinke fitt to doe therein, according as you judge for your service.

Moor

I shall not one hare's breadth goe beyond your orders; but as for collonell 384 416, I have but meane thoughts of him and his business, upon the reasons hinted in mine of this day fortnight to you; yet, upon what I received in your last, I shall againe write letters out of Flanders;

to him. I doe extreemly wonder, that you receive noe 361 142 418 408 52 355 109

Vander Hide doth write

263 136 144; sure I am, that 154 207 286 325 263 270 148 64 160 441 466 by names of Johnston and Fould;

De Degret

the 388 142 408 70 115 64 108 141 412 207 304 213 35; and that Mr. 263 54

VOL. VII.

A a a

132

A.D. 1658. by the name of Timothy Uſc-rozo,

col.

132 122 148 239 468 388 142 408 475 384 468 524 27 477 174 118, and 254

Palmer by the name of Gabriel Thomſon,

365 390 86 122 199 100 286 239 468 388 408 408 20 441 43 84 151 328 101

Gardiner

name of Plampin,

142 412, and 308 134 267 390 136 by the 388 408 122 355 102 124 339, whoſe alone it ſeems you have received; but unleſs he give you better contentment, I ſhall have no more to do with him. There are now at this time about 13 or 14 ſayle of Engliſh ſhipping att the Brill laden for England, moſt whereof have ſtaid above a month for convoy, and doe make very ſad complaints to me, and that they muſt be inforced, many of them, who are laden with corne, to take out their corne againe, to the utter overthrow of their voyage; and without a convoy they dare not ſtirr, their harbours haveing in them at this time, and indeed never want, Flanders men of war as have come upon this coaſt, to convoy the Engliſh ſhipping for England, when I have underſtood there hath been a conſiderable number of them, to the great content of the Engliſh merchants; and upon this occaſion I did give the like order for the captaine of the Bradford frigatt (who was before the Brill, and had nothing elſe to doe) to convey his fleete away; but he would not doe it, but inſtead thereof gave ill words, which I am ſure is not for your ſervice, nor fitt to be ſuffered. Indeed, unleſs (as I formerly wrote) a man of warr be ſent once in 14 or 20 days at fartheſt before the Brill to ſee what ſhips are ready for England, it muſt certainly in a very little time come to paſs, that not a tunn of goods ſhall either be brought from England unto this country, or be carried out of this country into England, ſave only in Dutch bottomes, to the totall ruine of the Engliſh ſhipping and ſeamen; which is a thing that I am very greatly afflicted at, and the more for that I am ſure it may very eaſily be remydyed, eſpecially at this time, when there are ſo many men of war ſo near at hand. I have written to captain Baſkitt, who came before Scheevling with a letter to me from general Montague, if he can without loſs of time, to gett them out of the Brill, and convoy them for Dunkerke, that ſo they may thence gett convoy for England; but I doubt whether he will be able to ſtay for them; and the poor maſters, who are now 15 or 16 in number, doe make moſt ſad complaints to me, their corn, which is on board, being in danger to be ſpoyled. If you pleaſe to give order, that a man of war may come, as above hinted, once in 14 or 20 dayes; and for the better ordering of the buſineſs, that they may give me notice of their arrivall, whereby I ſhall alſo have opportunity of diſpatches to you upon extraordinary occaſions, which may ſometimes be of great concernment; as alſo in regard that there comes ſometimes accidentally, upon ſeverall occaſions of convoyes, men of war to their ports, that they alſo may give me notice of their arrivall, and that I may have power from his highneſs and counſill to order them to convoy Engliſh merchants ſhips, as alſo to carry any diſpatches to yourſelf, or for the coaſt of Flanders, upon emergent occaſions; this will doe the buſineſs, and I hope I ſhould manage that truſt with what prudence and diſcretion I could: butt if the men of warr ſhould come up in the Brill to convoy merchants, without any ſuch directions from me, there would be continuall fallings out among the merchants, and perpetuall diſorder, the particulars whereof would be too large to putt in this paper. I am greatly affraid, leaſt England ſhould come to want ſeamen; and it's that which makes me ſo zealous in this buſineſs; for tradeing and ſeamen are gotten and loſt by degrees.

My lord Shannon, one of my lord Broghill's brothers, hath earneſtly preſt me for a paſs for two horſes for a friend of his, who is going to ſerve the elector of Brandenburgh. I have written by him, whome he hath imployed about it, a letter to yourſelf, and deſire that you will be pleaſed to let him have it, and am,

HONORABLE SIR,

Your moſt faithfull humble ſervant,

Hague, 28th June,
1658. [N. S.]

G. DOWNING.

The incloſed will give your lady an account how my wife is at preſent, with my moſt humble thanks for hers, and your remembrance of her. I have herein incloſed a letter of the duke of York's, and another of colonel Leygh-ton's. Pray let me know every week, how many packets you receive from me, leſt any miſcarry.

A letter

A letter of intelligence from Blanck Marshall.

SIR,

Antwerp, this 28 June, 1658. [N.S.] A.D. 1658.

but Ch. Stew being Vol.lix. p.173.

I HAVE recived that comiditie, and came hither to have fould it; 691 77 104 718
 35 52 27 28 56 53 this 441 73 78 86 36 10 40 to 48 19 20 79 31 37 74 75 38 76 80 21 69 towards 8 70 22 142, and promised to retorne speedily; if hee come not in a day or two, I beleive 32 18 19 77 3 41 20 73 33 39 74 35 57 82 71 54 21 94 23 58 72 29 22 69 49 455 95 58 70 74 61 5 36 52 18. I see very small comfort for 34 37 50 59 71 34 38 73 31 18 19 72, notwithstanding 77 32 60 74 20 78 33 1 79 87 21 2 72 in the 45 374 80 62 46 56 77 18 52 30 44 5 53 16
 4 69 15 5 96 47 96 11 57 51 38 54 58 83 22 70, and by the 880 1 97 59 24
 12 2 45 35 74. There is 59 54 18 75 36 70 60 92 55 48 3 52 19 94, that 45
 37 84 73 in 40 20 53 77, who intends not to 76 78 38 71, who was as 17 21 22
 64 1 73 2 52 95; nay, most of that 61 18 60 62 47 19 39 53 20 54 30 44 3 55 14 31 4 15 a 325 52 16 35 53 36 78. I have bin now eight dayes with three of those marchants, and doe intend to stryke a bargaine for more of those commodities above-mentioned: they are making great 63 69 20 64 5 70 1 77 37 56 52 73 to 71 21 13 72 84 78 22 79 31 18 69 2 70 48 94. 104 32 36 74 80 71 57 58
 64 75 3 72 49 59 76 80 17 19 73 77 69 60 96 20 14, but 106 4 53 15 123
 5 70 in the 25 21 22 44 16 74: if well 26 56 45 46 57 88 18 17 23 57 59 52
 19 9 20 70 27 and 28 71 5 85 46 38 54 29 will 23 58 46 47 59 86 14 81 55 40 39 72 41, which 87 18 19 32 20 21 69 35 76 80 4 42 22 52: the perticullars ar nott yet heer. I am now going with these merchants to 112, wher I hope to make some profitt, and then will follow your last order to 86 136 81 64 56 52 106; but truly it's impossible I can give you so good an accompt ther, as I did give you formerly;
 however, I am ready to obey; but I begg I may not be forced to goe 60 55 26 56 57 80. That which you 73 18 52 77 51 19 44 5 74 78 31 20 75 hardly 61 t 97 15 48 94 16 21 6 79 76; but if it bee your pleasure in any way, I will obey. I humbly beg pardon for my last omission; for I was then at sea. I hope by the next to send you more of that comodite. In the interim, I beg pardon for this boldness, and rest,

SIR,

Your most humble servant,

MARGARET SMITH.

Sir, if you please to let me receive your commands, pray direct them to III.

Leeds borough. The examination of Thomas Norton, servant of James Craven, of Leeds Milhill, clothworker, taken the nineteenth day of June, in the year of our Lord one thousand six hundred fifty-eight, before Francis Allanson esq; alderman of the said borough, John Thoresby and Marmaduke Hicke gentlemen, justices of the peace within the said borough, by virtue of an order to them directed from the right honourable his highness's council, &c.

A.D. 1658.

Vol. ix. p. 56.

WHO being examined, how he came by one paper of dangerous consequence, inciting the apprentices and journeymen of Leeds to a rising, and expulsion of the officers of excise out of the town of Leeds, saith and confesseth, he had it from one Nicolas Palmer, his fellow-servant; and saith, that one Henry Collingwood, servant of Robert Goulding, of Leeds Milhill aforesaid, brought it to their house, and the said Henry Goulding bid them send it to another shop presently; whereupon he carried the same to William Whitby's of the Milhill, and gave it to Thomas Wade, one of his servants; but who was the author and contriver thereof, he knows not.

His mark.

THOMAS + NORTON.

The examination of Henry Collingwood, servant to Robert Goulding of Leeds Milhill, taken as aforesaid, aged eighteen years.

WHO saith, that the nineteenth day of May last one John Browne, servant to Richard Kirk, of Leeds Milhill, brought a paper to his master's house, and delivered it to this examinee, but told him not what was in it, neither could this examinee read it, and bid him and his fellow-servants carry it to another shop presently; whereupon he carried the same to James Craven's, and delivered it to his men with the like charge, to carry it to the next shop; but who writ the said note, or were authors or contrivers thereof, or ringleaders herein, he know not.

HENRY COLLINGWOOD.

The examination of John Brown, servant to Richard Kirke of Leeds Milhill, clothworker, taken as aforesaid, aged sixteen years, or thereabouts.

WHO saith, that upon Wednesday the nineteenth day of June last, young Christopher Skaife's servant brought the paper above-mentioned to his master's shop, and delivered it to this examinee and his fellow-servants, and wish'd him and his fellow-servants to carry it to the next shop presently; but who was the author or contriver of that paper, or were ringleaders in that design, this examinee knows not, neither hath heard; but this examinee carried it presently to one Robert Goulding's.

His mark.

JOHN + BROWNE.

The examination of William Watson, servant to Christopher Skaife younger, of Leeds Milhill, taken as aforesaid, aged fourteen years, or thereabouts.

WHO saith, that upon wednesday last one Thomas Dillworth, servant to Joseph Dillworth, of Leeds Milhill, brought the paper above-mentioned to this examinee's master's house, and gave it to his fellow-servants to carry away presently to another shop; which paper this examinee carried to Richard Kirk's, and delivered it to his servants and apprentices to carry away forthwith; but who were the authors and contrivers thereof, or ringleaders in that design, this informant knows not, neither hath heard.

His mark.

WILLIAM + WATSON.

The examination of Thomas Dillworth, apprentice to Joseph Dillworth, aged sixteen years, taken as aforesaid.

WHO saith, upon the nineteenth day of May last Thomas Borwick, servant to one Christopher Hobson, brought the said paper to his master's house, and delivered it to his fellow-servants, who caused this informant to carry the same to Christopher Skaife's, who accordingly did, and delivered it to his servants and apprentices to carry to the next shop;

shop; but who were the authors or contrivers thereof, or were ringleaders in that design, A.D. 1658.
this examinee knows not, neither hath heard from any.

THOMAS DILLWORTH.

The examination of Christopher Hobson, apprentice to Thomas Borwick, taken as abovesaid.

WHO saith, that upon the nineteenth day of May last, one Robert Ramsden, apprentice to Robert Hickson, brought the paper above-mentioned to his master's house; whereupon this examinee (as he was appointed by the rest of the fellow-servants) carried the same to Joseph Dillwood's, and delivered it to the servants there to send away; but who writ the said paper, were contrivers thereof, or were ringleaders in that design against the excisemen, this examinee knows not, neither hath heard from any.

CHRISTOPH. HOBSON.

The examination of Robert Ramsden, apprentice to Robert Hickson, of Leeds, clothworker.

WHO saith, that upon the said nineteenth day of May last a certain boy (whose name he knows not) came with the paper above-mentioned to his master's house, and delivered the same to Benjamin Borroughs and Thomas Edge, (two of his fellow-servants, as they told him) who appointed this examinee to carry it to Thomas Borwick's house, which he accordingly did, and delivered it to one of the journey-men there, to carry it to the next shop; but who was master of the said boy, he knows not, neither who were authors or contrivers of it, or ringleaders in that design against the excisemen.

And being further examined the sixth day of July, 1658. before the said Mr. alderman Thomas Harrison esq; high sheriff of the county of York, major Owen Cambridge, William Adams, George Byard, John Stanhope and Joshua Horton esqrs; John Thoresby and Martin Iles gentlemen, saith, that he now well remembreth, that one Francis Brigg's man, whose surname is Mounteyne, but knows not his christian name, (as Benjamin Borroughs told him) brought to his said master's shop, and delivered it to Thomas Edge and Benjamin Borroughs, his fellow-servants; and afterwards the said Borroughs read it, who appointed this examinee to carry the same to Thomas Borwick's house as above-said.

ROBERT RAMSDEN.

By order from the gentlemen before-named.

Signed by JOHN LUNDE, town-clerk for the borough aforesaid.

Col. Lockhart to Secretary Thurloe.

May it please your LORDSHIP,

THE copy of that act I synd at my relieving of this towne was forgott to be inclosed Vol. lix. p. 185.
in my last: I send it by this, as also the articles with the garrison, and with the towne. The conditions given to the towne are large, and all obligations are reciprocall betwixt his majestie and the towne, as betwixt prince and subject, without any mention of his highness or the state of England. I was desyred to signe the articles granted to the towne; and his majestie, by any particular treaty with a towne, could give away nothing of my master's right. At last the card. quitt all pretences, that can be bottomed upon their mock articles with the towne; and acknowledged, that his highness had the only tytle to all that can be claimed of jurisdictione over the towne as prince and soveraign, and that he alone hath right to all the powers, proffits, and emoluments, that were dew to any of their former princes. The treaty with France, upon which I grownd his highness right to this place, reserves to the inhabitants of it the injoyment of their propriety, the liberty of their conscience, and the administratione of justice, according to their usuall laws and customs, in all matters of difference between man and man. This is all his highness is bound to by his treaty with France; which being just in itself, I make it my studdy, that all their priviledges of this nature be inviolably preserved; and in so doing, give full satisfaction both to the magistrate and inhabitants. I send your lordship herewith ane inventarie of what I found scattered, and have now gathered, to the stores. I have, besyds what is mentioned in the inventarie, some rye and oats, that was conceal'd, but no considerable quantity of either; as also some biscuitt, which by computatione will amount to at least

A.D. 1658. 12000 weight, which I distribute to the garrison for their present subsistence. I have bought some cheese, butter, and bacon, (which I give out with the biscuit) from particular merchants. I shall give your lordshipp an account of the quantity and pryses by the next, and must draw bills upon Mr. Frost for the payment of it. I intrust one captain Johnstone (who hath commissione from his highnes to be commissary for the provisions) with the buying and distributing of it, and am careful to be satisfied, that the pryses of the provisions are reasonable, before I give him leave to close any bargain. The summe expended upon provisions will not be considerable, and yett with the helps I have found here, I think I shall be able to give the garrison subsistence for three weeks or a month. I have upon my hand at least 700 wounded and sick men, the greatest part whereof belong to the four regiments, that are in the field. I erect eight hospitals for them, which is one for every regiment. To each of the hospitals I appoint a sutler, to give them their allowance, and a convenient number of women to wait upon them. My last told your lordshipp I had contracted with the nuns for furnishing and attending the wounded and sick; but finding them not able to perform their promise, I was forced to retreat my bargain, and take the above-mentioned course. I shall, as soon as I can have so much spare tyme, send your lordshipp a list of such persons as I imploy about the businesse of the garrison, and the nature of their respective employments: they are many, and yett a great many more will be necessary; for I have had no regard to the bene esse of things, but have restricted myself to so small a number, as they cannot be able to carry on their work long without assistance. I have given order to the magistrates of this place to prepare a full and cleare account of all things, that concerne their government, justice, and publick revenue, a copy whereof I shall transmitt to your lordshipp. I conceive, when it shall please God to reduce things heere to any settlement, the revenues of this place will not be inconsiderable; and if (as I hope it may be e'er long) contributione can be raised sufficient for the subsistence of this garrison, his highness will find, that his conquest here will not only be honourable, but profitable. I must entreat your lordshipp to hasten over provisions for the garrison, as also recruits. Some of my countrymen will not doe amisse, provided they be not kep'd in a body, but distributed amongst the severall companies. It's possible the giving out they are to serve under me may be some encouragement to them to come the more willingly. We shall need a great many pallisados heere of all syles; the more of them be of the biggest sort, will be an advantage to our out-works. I am not in any present strait for any amunition of warr, except it be powder, muskett-ball, and hand-granado-shells. I am promised 300 barrel of powder from the fleet, a 150 whereof is already come into this harbour. I demanded no match from them, but should have had double proportion of muskett-ball, of which, by the account I had the day, it appears they have not much to spare; and theirfor I must begg, that your lordshipp may order the sending over a good proportion of muskett-ball, and as much powder, as may make our magazine amount to at least 700 barrell, and small-shott or muskett-ball conforme. So soon as that is once lodged, I shall not diminish any thing from the store, but shall endeavor to furnish the garrison for what they will have occasion to consume dayly out of a powder-mill, which I have putt in order heere for that end. The siege of Bergh goes on well; those of our regiments, that are employed there, give the enemy no cause to beleve they are rebutted. I think the towne will not hold out above four or five dayes: they expresse little or no courage in their defence; and the enemy is under as great a consternation as hath been knowne: they do not intend, for any thing I can learne, to dispute Furn. I am of the opinion the French will gett it for the axing, I mean if they once surrounde it. They make great preparations for the defence of Newport, and are a fortifying its channell. The neighbourhood of the French army, as it is advantagious to me upon some account, it's troublesome upon other accounts; but I hope in few dayes to see an end putt to all our confusions and disorders. As I am writing this, Mr. Simball arrayves with your lordshipp's of the 18th. The provisions, that are on their way, and the dispatch, that is used in sending over money, and some horse, gives us new testimonies of his highness goodness to us, and of your lordshipp's care of us. I pray that their may be at least 300 horse sent. It's the minimum quod sit, and their must be some provisione of hay made for them, especially against winter. I shall get them to shift for grasse in the summer: tho' all about us be eaten up, yett the season of the yeare will recover it, so as to be pasture good enuff; but I expect little or no hay. As for pallisados, I shall at present only desire 2000 of a reasonable syle, and about a month hence I shall need a greatt many to be employed about the Fort-royall; but if your lordshipp will give timely order to cause provide them out of the woods, the load of them I think should not need to stand you much more then that of billett, since I know there is a greatt deale of billett-wood bigg enuff for that use, and it is but to keep it at 10 or 11 foot length. I shall henceforth renew my correspondence with Mr. Downing, but really I have not had tyme to wrytt to him hitherto. Poor Mr. Swift continues to be very ill, and I have no help, being forced to sitt up and wrytt many times, when all others others go to take their rest. I am preparing two proclamations, one relating to the soldiers, and another to the inhabitants of this garrison: your lordship shall have copies of them by the next. His eminence of late hath been a little more humorous, than he hath been accustomed to be; and yet, I thank God for it, I alwayes appease him, before we part; but every one heare makes it his business to fill his head with a thousand false stories of us, and accuse us of what wee never intended, nor so much as thought of amongst us; and the close of all is, that now wee are possessed of Dunkerke, wee value the French no more; and that all our faire promises will evaporate into smoke, when, the Lord knowes, if it were not, that I would not give the world so badd a character of us as to think, that, upon our having Dunkerke, we are become haughty and proud, it were impossible for me to bear the insolences I doe; and I have told the cardinal freely, my patience is wearied out: but I begg your lordship may not take any publick notice of this; for I doubt not but, through the goodness of God, I shall be able to wrestle thorough all difficulties. My lord, it will be necessary to send over good store of oats for the horsemen, as also some carpenters and gunners from the Tower. Wee shall serve ourselves with soldiers for mattresses, and shall put his highness to as little needlesse expence as is possible. I must end heare abruptly, being necessitated to go about some business, that requyres my presence. I am,

May it please your LORDSHIP,

Your most humble, faithfull and obedient servant,

Dunkerke, June $\frac{30}{20}$. 1658.

WILL. LOCKHART.

The enemy hath sent two drummers to me from Newport concerning coll. Johns, whom I own as a captain in my regiment; the other from the pretended duke of York's regiment, concerning a prisoner of theirs, who is heare: both their messages to me were civil enough, and my answers have been the same. I shall not deliver Mr. Turenne's letter, till I heare from your lordship; and if you doe not send me a new one with the title changed, and celsitudo in place of excellency, and direct it to the prince of Turenne, the delivery of it will rather disoblydge then oblydge.

By his excellencie the lord Lockhart, ambassador from his most serene highness the lord protector of England, &c. to his majestie of France, and general of his said highness's forces in Flanders.

SINCE government and good order is the only foundation, whereupon all bodies politic stand firm and sure, but most especially to be observed in garrisons, which, if once slackened and corrupted, draw ruin and dissolution not only upon themselves, but upon those cities and people, for whose benefit and tranquillity they were intended; this consideration hath made me the more sensible of, and the more diligent to remove those several abuses, which, I am informed, are committed by the soldiers under my command in this garrison. But because I would not have any officer or soldier surpris'd with punishment for an offence before public prohibition thereof, I have therefore thought fit to declare, that a severe course shall be taken, according to the articles of war, against every man whatsoever, whether officer or soldier, who shall exact any thing unduly from his landlord, or shall demand any thing but lodging and beds, or shall wrong his landlord, his wife, or any of his family, by striking their persons, or burning and spoiling their goods, or the like:

Who shall offer any injury or abuse to the ecclesiastics, or Romish churchmen, of what order soever, or condition, in the streets, in their houses, convents, or churches:

Who shall be found off his guards, from the time of his entering thereupon, till he be relieved; or shall be seen in the streets without his sword, whether he be upon the guard or not.

For all such foresaid offences, condign punishment shall be strictly inflicted upon every man, without favour or forbearance.

And further, I do require, that all soldiers keep their arms in a secure place in their quarters, under their own lock and key; and that the officers commanding every company take special notice what arms are unfixed, and cause the armourers of every respective regiment to fix them:

That no soldier go out of the gates, without leave of his officer: That no man whatsoever pass over the works or palisadoes, but at the ordinary gates:

That no soldier be out of his quarters after the beating of the tattoo, or at undue hours:

That no officer or soldier do any wrong, or commit any spoil upon gardens, fruit-trees, herbs, or any other things growing therein. The field-officers of each regiment, and

A.D. 1658. and the captains of respective companies, are to take notice of the offenders in each particular, and to secure them, till they be brought to exemplary punishment, according to the articles of war.

Lastly, in respect of that gratitude they owe to Almighty God for mercies already received, that we become more capable of further blessings, I doe absolutely and universally forbid all ungodliness, swearing, profaneness, blaspheming, drunkenness, debauchery, or whatsoever carriage of ill favour and example; which, that they may not provoke the wrath of God upon us all, shall be most severely punished in every particular offender.

WILLIAM LOCKHART.

General Montagu to secretary Thurloe.

MY LORD,

Vol.lix. p.197. YOURS of the 18th instant I had this morninge. I hope you have been longe since informed about all necessarye particulars here. The army hath beene late downe before Bergen this 3 or 4 dayes; and the French gentlemen confidently say, that within soe many more they will have the towne. If that proove soe, then I conceive, that Gravelin is perfectly besiedged by land at distance, the French havinge from Dunkirke by Bergen, Linck, Bourborch, Ardres, to Calis, all the passes, that any thinge cann come to them by; and though my lord embassador seemed not to lay much weight upon havinge ships before Gravelin, since the French did not meane to attaque it, yet the case beinge as above, I thought it not amiss to keep 2 or 3 shippes before it, to blocke it up by sea, (as well as they can) untill other service makes it needfull for mee to remove them. This morninge I had a letter from Mr. Downinge, which hath little news considerable in it, and such as doubtles he hath given you before. I am now dispatchinge a vessel to him, with letters from myselfe, and (I thinke) the embassador too.

His eminence cardinall Mazarin did mee the greate grace, on friday in the afternoone, to come on board this ship; and the marshall Villeroy, and another marshall, and divers greate persons, and my lord embassador also.

Yesterday the Dartmouth came in hither from Flushing, and the captaine acquainted mee, that he had a person on board, that pretended to be sent from one Sir Robert Welch, who is now a prisoner at Bruxells, upon suspicion of giving an intelligence to England; and pretends to have letters to my lord Broghill, or in his absence to the lieutenant of the Tower. I beinge willinge to use him civilly because of his expressions, to whom he goes, have desired him, for his better passage to London, to goe into the Speaker, who is bound for Woolwidge, and will land him neere London: and give you this advertisement, that if you have a mind to search further into him, or his businesse, or papers, that you may have readye about Gravesend to goe aboard the Speaker, as she comes by, and give you satisfaction. I have noe more at present, but subscribe,

MY LORD,

Abord the Nasebye before Dunkerke, June 20. 1658.

Your lordshipp's most faithfull humble servant,

E. MONTAGU.

Major-general Jephson to secretary Thurloe.

SIR,

Vol.lix. p.211. UPON the newes of the king of Suedes arrivall Fraderick's-Oade, I came thus farre in my way towards him upon fryday last, whereof I have given Sir Philip Meadowe notice to Hamburg. The cause of my stay here thus long is to expect the returne of a messenger, whom I sent directly away to the king, upon the first notice of his landing, to bee informed, where he would be pleased first to give me audience; for 'tis supposed hee may not bee willing to be interrupted with businesse at Gottorp. Soe soone as my messenger shall return, (which I expect will be this night) I will give Sir Phillip Meadowe notice of my resolutions, and appoint some certaine place for our meeting. Since I came hither, I have received yours of the 11th instant, whereby I find your favour and care in providing mee a ship to bee ready for mee at Hamburg; for which I returne you my humble thanks; and doe hope by God's assistance to be there ready to take shipping about 14 dayes hence. I am very much joy'd to heare the good successe of our armye in Flanders. I yesterday receyved an awnswer in writting (whereof I here send you a copy) from Berlin to the propositions, which I there gave in to the elector's comcommissioners, which I am now very glad that I did desire; for it seems to mee to differ A.D. 1658: farr from the discourse, that was us'd to mee there. For first, the necessitye of the elector's conjunction with the king of Poland is much more positively asserted in this paper, then it was to mee there; where it was only founded upon a punctilio of the elector's honour in relation to his last agreement with Poland; but, in this it's grounded upon the unseparable interests of these two princes. Next, whereas the last paragraph onely mentions the conservation of the treaty of Munster (in generall termes) in the behalf of the king of France, it was positively promised mee, that the elector should give punctuall order to his embassador, that hee should insist, that these words should be inserted into the capitulation; that the house of Austria might not send any relief to the kinge of Spaine, into France or Flanders, under pretence of sending succours against the English. As to the second head, an answer is given quite besides the intention of the proposition; in which there is noe mention of a Protestant emperor, much lesse any thought to invite the elector to sett himselfe single to oppose a legall election of an emperor by the major part of the electors. In my next I hope to bee able to give you some account of the king's intentions, though beeing now to go out of the ordinary post-roade, I have reason to doubt my letters may hardly come to your hands by the next post, though I shall endeavour it; and in the meane time humbly take leave, and remaine,

SIR,

Lubeck, 21st June, 1658.

Your most faythfull, and affectionate

humble servant,

WILL. JEPHSON.

Captain Stoakes to secretary Thurloc.

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

BY the last post, I acquainted you, how necessary it were, (if it be his highness pleasure Vol.lix.p.183. to continue me abroad) that forthwith another supply of victualls, with powder, small cordage, and all sorts of stores, be forthwith provided under the convoy of three or fower frigatts, that soe as many more of these with mee, disabled by their long being abroad, may be sent home, and take under their convoy such ships as shall offer.

Fower days agoe came to me the Tredagh, and those frigats sent out with him, who in the road of Valentia burnt a Spanish ship of six and thirty gunns, fitting out for a man of warr, and took two Fleming laden with corne, the best part of which they had delivered; however question not but shall make six or seaven thousand pieces of eight, which will be some helpe towards the payment of short allowance, of which there is due to the men some months in generall Blake's tyme, and all my owne. From Tituan have advise, that the gallions departed the 16th of May; the which I intimate unto your honour, that if this party with mee be but well supplied with victualls about the month of December, in which tyme they will undoubtedly retourn, I might be able to wait on them. In three or fower dayes hope to take in my victualls, and be able to sayle to Leghorne, from whence I shall dispatch the Tredagh, Yarmouth and Jersey, for England, in convoy of such merchant-ships as doe there offer. Myselfe, Torrington, Taunton, Dover, Guiney and Prize, shall goe downe as far as Tripoli, to see what I can doe, as to a peace with these people. The Farfax, Kent, Bristoll, Phoenix and Hampshire doe leave to assist the French, according to his highnesse commande. I have noe certainty, when they will be ready, nor whether they goe. Rossas in Cattalonia is besieged by the Spaniard. Blessed be God for the good success of our army in Flanders! Such another will much abate the pride of the Spaniard, and put an end to the vain hopes of Charles Stewart, and that party; which that God will grant, is the prayer of

Lyme, in Marseilia-bay,

Your Honour's humble servant,

21st of June, 1658.

JO. STOAKES.

Lockhart to the protector.

A.D. 1658. May it please your most serene HIGHNESSE,

Vol.lix. p.137.

I DARE not give Mr. Fennick leave to returne to your highnesse service without protesting myself at your highnesse feet, and making my humble acknowledgments of my owne unworthynesse of the dayly favors I receive from your highnesse. If I could serve your highnesse with as active a spiritt, as I doe with a zealous one, your highnesse affaires heare would be in a better posture then as yett they are, tho', I thank God for it, things beginn to fall into better order then I durst promise at first, and every day some progresse is made towards such a settlement as I hope. When I shall be able to give your highnesse an account of the whole, I shall not need to be much ashamed of it.

The lieutenant-collonell's place of my regiment is vacant; and tho' I have taken the boldnesse to dispose of companies, because the interest of your service would not admit of any delayes, yet it's just, that I receive your high commands in this and all other vacancies, when their filling up may be delayed, till your highnesse pleasure concerning them be knowne. I shall presume to offer lieutenant-collonell Fleetwood to your highnesse consideration, both upon the account of his family, and his own meritt; butt shall cheerfully submit to whatsoever your highnesse shall command; and in that, and all things else shall study nothing so much as how to sute my obedience to that dewty I owe your highnesse, as,

May it please your most serene HIGHNESSE,

From your highnesse towne of Dunkerke, June 21.
1658.

Your most faithfull subject, and most humble
and obedient servant,

WILL. LOCKHART.

May it please your HIGHNESSE,

As I was closing this, count de Morrett came to me from the cardinal, to tell me, that the king hath had a little fever last night, and is going to Calais in greatt haste. The cardinal commands me also to let your highness know, that he is exceedingly sensible of the greatt favours de Crecqui and his nephew hath received at your highnesse court. There is hopes the king's indisposition will be quickly over.

General Fleetwood to Henry Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland.

DEARE BROTHER,

In the possession of the right hon. the earl of Shelburne.

I AM somewhat indisposed in health, and have little to trouble you with. Indeed the Lord hath given in a very great pledg of mercy, in this surrender of Dunkirk; and it is very observable, how the hearts of people are opened to the worke of Flanders, in hopes that the Lord is preparing a way for the farther carrying on of the great worke against that antichristian power. We hope the Lord will enlarge hearts therein: and surely, had we a purse suitable to the present occasion and providence, we have as large an opportunity put into our hands to doe what is considerable to that service, as ever we had; and nothing but wants of money obstruct what is upon our hearts to doe. And if the Lord please thoroughly to ingage the king of Sweeden in Germany, which I feare (by reason of our not being able to helpe him) will not be in a condition to answer that business; which if he should, ther would be an advantage for the carying on of that great cause of the Protestant interest against the common enemy, which cries aloud for helpe. There is many a prayer upon that account on the file, which will in due time be answered, and that will prosper; and the day of recompence for all the blood of saints will be render'd. The most considerable articles at Dunkirk are the liberty of their conscience, the administration of justice between man and man as formerly; and that they have the liberty of their real estates. I have one word, which was hinted by a friend and relation of yours, that sayes, you have a steward coming out of Wales, whose name is Dutton, of whom himselfe and wife he gave a very evill character: I know not the person, but I was much desired to give this hint, which I conceive duty and affection obliges me unto. With my wife's very affectionate and humble services to yourselfe and deare lady, I am

June 21. 1658.

Your most humble servant,

CH. FLEETWOOD.

De

De Lombres to Bordeaux, the French ambassador in England.

MY LORD,

Sirakow, 1st July, 1658. [N. S.] A.D. 1658.

YOUR lordship will have heard of the queen of Poland's going to Berlin, under pre-^{Vol. lix.}
tence to see the elector of Brandenburg; but on purpose, as 'tis beleived, to make^{p. 199.} him sure to the Polish interest, which he hath chosen. She is expected here in 5 or 6 days; from whence she goeth to Warsaw, whither the king is gone, to be there some days before the overture of the dyet, which is to be held the 10th instant. The queen hath desired me to accompany her hither. In the last audience, which the ministers of the king of Hungary had, they declared that their master doth not pretend to the crown of Poland, and that he doth consent, that the great duke of Muskow should be named his successor. It is very probable, that the chiefest cause, which moved the said king to this nomination, is that he beleiveth thereby to engage the king of Sweden in a long war with the king of Poland and the Muscovite, in regard this last promiseth, if so be he be chosen, not only to help retake all such places as the Swede hath taken in Prussia, but also to conquer Livonia at his own charge, and to reunite it to Poland; under whose obedience he also undertaketh to bringe the Cossacks.

The Swedes endeavour to make a chanel from the Haufft to the sea, and to make some forts to defend it. If they can finish what they be about, it would very much prejudice both Royal-Prussia and Prussia-Ducalis.

Charnetfky hath received order to march that way with his troops, to whom are joined those of the elector of Brandenburg, which are in Prussia, commanded by duke Razivil.

Vice-admiral Goodsonn to secretary Thurloc.

May it please your LORDSHIP,

THE last first day and night the king of France having had a fit of the feaver, the^{Vol. lix.}
court removed yesterday (with a great hurry) about twelve for Calais; but it is said,^{p. 203.}
if his majesty bee againe well, he will returne within two or three daies to the army.
Yesterday about two of the clock I was with my lord ambassador Lockhart at his quarters in Dunkerke, at which time came in a major from the leagure before Bergin, who gave an account, that before his departure thence the army being fitted for storme, and the same being perceived by the enemy, they beat a parly; and there were burgers came out to treate; but in that time of treaty the English souldiers and the enemy had a smart bout for a quarter of an houre; upon which the burgers returned into the towne againe with some shew of discontent: but the said major saith, before he was out of view, he saw mareshall Turrein, with a body of horse, ride up towards, and, as he supposeth, into the towne; and some, that followed hard after him, said, that the towne was surrendered; which was further confirmed mee by many more before my coming from the shoar, the military part being all taken prisoners of warr. This morning my lord Montagu, weighing from the Flemish road, came into Mardike pitts, and from thence he intends to-morrow for the Downes; but I forthwith received orders there from his lordshipp to saile for Woolwich with this shipp, being very foule, in order to refitting, or otherwise, as the commissioners of the admiralty should thinke fitt; and am at present anchored here, waiting for a day-tide and a pilott, which is all the trouble of

Speaker, in Margate-road,
the 22d June, 1658.

Your LORDSHIPP's most humble servant,

WILL. GOODSONN.

Lockhart to secretary Thurloc.

May it please your LORDSHIPP,

THE marshall de Turenne hath written a letter to his highnes, and hath earnestly^{Vol. lix. p. 180.}
desired me to wayte upon it with a word or two from myself; as also to recommed unto your honour the marquiss de Montpouillan his nephew, in whose behalf the said letter is written. I could not handsomely refuse to comply with the marshall's request in this particular; wherein I humbly beg your lordshipp's favour and concurrence, as far as his desires

A.D. 1658. desires do not clash with reason and justice. I humbly beg your pardon for this presumption; and rest,

My LORD,

Dunkerke, the 2^d of July,
1658. [N.S.]

Your LORDSHIPP's most humble, faithfull,
and obedient servant,

WILL. LOCKHART.

Secretary Thurloe, to H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland.

May it please your EXCELLENCY,

In the possession of the right hon. the earl of Shelburn.

DUNKIRKE hath beene in the possession of the English ever since this day fenight. The kinge of France hymselfe delivered the keyes of the towne unto Sir William Lockhart, who for the present commands it, and the forces therein, which are all English. The towne is very considerable for bignes, and all other wayes. The French army, with four regiments of the English, are set downe before Bergen, 3 miles from Dunkirk, (and is an inland place) and hope to have it in a very few dayes. This successe for the present hath a beauty in it even in the eyes of our enemyes, who seeme much out of countenance to see all their matters thus turne upon them, and every thinge, which they hoped would have beene for their goode, to be for their undoeinge. I wish they see the hande of God in it; and also that freinds doe not mistake the minde of God about it. The honour of these victoryes certeynely belongs to the English nation, and not to any partye therein; and God favours therein the whole land, and would have men doe soe too. I knowe he hath a people of his owne, which he esteemes more then all mankinde besides: he loves the tents of Judah better then he doth all the dwellings of Jacob; and wee must follow him therein: but then wee must not narrow that interest, and fix it either upon men only of my oppinion, or of our particular way, but make it comprehensive of all the saints; yea, doe good, justice, and right to all; and when things come to be manadged with this spirit, I shall looke for settlement, and a blessinge with it, and not before; least of all, whilst wrath and discontent steeres affaires, which I am sure never yet wrought the righteousnes of God, nor never will; but I begge your excellency's pardon for this digression. There are 9 in number, who dayly meet for consideringe of what is fitt to be done in the next parliament. The first head debated was, how wee should be secured against the cavalier partye: one way propounded is an oath of abjuration of the pretended kinge, his title and family; and swearinge allegiance to his highnes, &c. upon payne of forfeiting 2 thirds of their estates, in case of refusall: this was thought a good way to distinguish them, who are implacable, from those, who are willinge to submit and come in, supposinge also a good standinge armye besides. This oath was propounded to be put upon their children as well as themselves. But this way is disliked; because it is thought probable they will all take it, and none of them keepe it; and soe it is offerred, that a burden may be layed up upon them all promiscuously, for menteyneinge a force to keepe them downe, and a moiety of their estates is spoke of; but this I suppose will not downe with all the nine, and least of all will it be swallowed by the parliament, who will not be perswaded to punish both nocent and innocent without distinction. Truly I foresee there will be noe great agreement upon this point; nor I beleve upon the next, which is, how wee shall be secured against a commonwealth; but that not beinge come into debate, I will deferre the account of it untill the next. The 9 are, lord Fiennes, lord Fleetwood, lord Desbrow, lord Chamberlayne, lord Whalley, Mr. comptroller, lord Goffe, lord Cooper, and

Your EXCELLENCY's

Whitehall, 22. June, 1658.

Most humble and faithfull servant,

JO. THURLOE.

Lord Fauconberg, to H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland.

My deare LORD,

In the possession of the right hon. the earl of Shelburn.

IHAVE beene trouanting all this last weeke from the respects I ought to have payed your lordshipp. The giving entertainment to some ministers sent from the French king to this court with complements so wholly tooke up my time, even nights as well as dayes, dayes, that 'twas impossible to doe ought else. The chiefeft of those that came were the duke de Crequi, the cardinal's nephew, Monsieur Mancini, and chevallier Grammont. They had their first audience on wedensday, and their last for takeing leave on saturday; but were treated from the time of their arrivall till going, which was yesterday, with all magnificence possible, at his highness's charge. During their stay came another envoye from France, to acquaint his highness with the delivery of Dunkirk into the English hands; but withall, that the French were sat downe before Winingsberge, which I am confident is done on purpose to block us up, and by straightening the quarters of Dunkirke, to hinder boath contributions, and our future makeing farther progresse into the country. Whither I hitt right or no in their scope, 'tis most sure they have done the thing.

My lord, I now receive your lordshipp's telling me of an indisposition you are under; which really gives me apprehensions for you unexpressible. The attendance I have been forced to give the Monsieurs has brought me into no little disorder; not only stopping a journey my lady and I intended this day northward, but shutting me up in my bedd, where I write all this to your lordshipp in so much paine, that it compells me to begg your pardon, and leave to tell you, that I am

June the 22^d. [1658.]

Your LORDSHIPP's most truly affectionate, faithfull, and most perfectly obedient servant,

FAUCONBERG.

Dr. Thomas Clarges to H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland.

May it please your EXCELLENCY,

THE last two posts brought us litle newes from Germany, and the entertainments we had from Flanders so took us up, that wee were well enough contented. But by the last wee are acquainted, that the election of the emperour is very near. The city of Franckford have lately put out of their gates all idle suspected persons, and by the behaviour of marshall Grammond, the French ambassidor, it is beleived all parties are agreed; for he lately made a great feast for all the princes electors, and seemed not ill satisfied with the present posture of affaires.

The forty-eight præliminary articles are almost accorded. The 11th and 36th (wherein was most difficulty) are accommodated. In the one the emperour is obleiged not to raise any men, to be sent out of Germany, without consent of the electors; and in the other, the vicarship is (as to the chief points) reconciled. It is sayd, what hath bin already done by both the elector Palatin and the duke of Bavaria is to be confirmed, and to be alternatively for the future. The princes electors have sent four ambassadors to the king of Sweden, to desire, that no part of his army (without permission first obtained) may march into or through any part of the empire, and earnestly to recommend to him a peace with Poland, to which they have been invited by the Polish ambassidor, who hath much complained at Franckford of the king's breach of the treaty at Munster, as to that country. At this present the Sweedes are very numerous in armes, and their designs rather guess'd at then knowne; but many suppose he aimes at some part of the Hollanders territories. The elector of Brandenburg has lately denied the Swedish army passage through part of his dominion, and is prepared with a good body of soldiers to oppose them, if they attempt to force their way. The king of Denmarke, all thiswhile, watches for a turne in the king of Sweden's fortunes, being lately much discontented at his seizeing upon Scarlet-island, (which commands the Sound) upon pretence, that it is an appendix of Schoneland. The best agreement could be made in this conjuncture was, that the proffits should be payd to the queene of Denmark, to whome they formerly belonged. Major-generall Drummond, three dayes before the rendition of Dunkirk, commanded a party to storme a work, that commanded much of the towne, and took it; but received a dangerous shott in his belly, of which the last letters say he is not dead; but there is litle hope of recovery. His losse will be much lamented; but he has the honour to see so good an effect of his service, that from that action of his the place was brought to termes, and is since render'd, and in our hands. Five hundred horse, and recruits of foot, are suddainly to be sent over; but whoe commands the horse, I cannot heare, or whither they will be new raised, or ten out of a troop. The calling of a parliament is now in agitation, and will be (as I think from no small grounds); but how members can be elected from Ireland to sitt at Westminster, by the petition and advice, I understand not. I have heard

A.D. 1658. heard of late by Mr. Monck, that your excellency is not displeased with the succession of troubles in this kind, that I have continued to you, which is a great enlargement of the ambition of,

May it please your EXCELLENCY,

London, this 22^d of June, 58.

Your EXCELLENCIE's most humble,

and most obliged servant,

THO. CLARGES.

Mr. H. Mallory to secretary Thurloc.

MY LORD,

Vol. lix.
p. 177.

NOT to shew my selfe ingratefull to his highnes for his mercy to mee in prolonging my life, being in his power next to my maker, to have cut of before this tyme, and not longer to abuse your patyence, I shall and doe declare my knowledge, which is, that the party at her last comming to me at my lodgeing in Black-fryers, I guessed her to bee of Mr. Mordant's family: I confesse I asked her very few questions, but the mayne was about my going into Holland, which shee told mee would bee very speedily; but I found my selfe abused, and was endeavouring to get my selfe a passage; but was prevented by my taking. What I was to have in this my said undertaking, as I shall answer before God at his tribunall, was but this fiftie pound, and soe much annually for my life, which was but equivalent with what I had of my owne in England, with my father's mayntenance: this is the whole bribe, as I now live, and the whole matter.

MY LORD,

June 22. 1658.

Your LORDSHIP's unworthy servant,

HENRY MALLORY.

Mr. Timothy Langley to secretary Thurloc.

SIR,

Leith, June the 22^d, 1658.

Vol. lix. f. 2:6.

I HAVE not presented your honour with any lines of late time, in regard I have not beene very well in health, nor my family, this bad spring-time; beside, I had something concerned mee at the relieving of Lochaber alias Inverlochy garrison, which is now over; and I am now at your servis, if any thing offer: for present all that I descerne is, that the Quakers are altogether retrograde, though now som of them pretend mericles. The Anabaptists seem for the major partie here, to bee neither pro nor con; they neither rejoyce with those that rejoyce, nor morne with those that morne, as to the present: but they still looke like a commonweale of there owne; they are like a sick finer, then the same, when not the same outwardly. I may take notice, that the towne of Berwick is very much contrary, and every day worse and worse; they perfectly hate all soldiers upon the account of because they are the lock and chaine; in a word you will finde them dangerose, if ever able. The cittie of London is strangely disaffected, did you know the inward parts of it: this I know by some intimate friends of mine, lately there, not soldiers; but such as deale, and did converse, with aldermen, and some of the chiefe of them; but I learne it, because 'tis like you know it, being so neere it. Mr. Short the draper of London is now gone hence; he had a prittie takeing way to discourse of all thinges at a distance, which together with a litle good-fellowship gott him many friends in a short time. Simile non est idem, is our best construction. Hee seemed here to speak sometimes to som intimate against Bilton, and said, hee would have him be honest, and doe fear things; but if hee would not, hee could not help it: however hee said, hee was perswaded, that the state heatherto had mist the right man, that had the money; and that hee was confident hee knew him, that had it, but could neither prove it, nor sware it positively, but had a strong presumption, that assured him, that it must bee soe. I write this, because that I judge it possible with good handling, that you may gett that out of him by fare meanes, that could not bee don otherwise. It was easy to perceive, that hee did believe Bilton had mony, though not in his hand, as hee did possess. Mr. Bilton lately desired several officers to give him a meeting, and promised hee would be very ingenyose and free, and then should only desire their advice. Whereupon the officers repared to general Monck, and desired his liberty liberty to come to them at a taverne in the Canygate, which was granted, hoping some A.D. 1658. good thing would grow out of it, but in vain; for when Mr. B. was com to them, hee only desired to see what commission they had to treat with him, as hee called it; and without they had commission, hee had nothing to say to them. They told him hee was a foole, or worse, to invite them for soe simple a purpose; soe ended that meeting. But I shall trouble your lordshipp noe further at present, but am,

SIR,

Your Honour's cordiall servant.

TIMOTHIE LANGLEY.

Sir, if you shall neede any quantitie of biskitt for Flanders this year, I can make it heere, and believe it will be cheaper then you will gett it out of England; alsoe I can make you gallant quiltes made with Scotch ticking, and good wooll, well stock-carded and well quilted, which will be bedds for the soldiers, much better than flock-bedds, and will last their life-time, as we have had experience here. I ordered the first to be made, and now we use no other in garrisons; alsoe good plading blankets, that serve for sheets; and all other things you may have here.

General Montagu to secretary Thurloe.

MY LORD,

I HAVE little occasion now to trouble you, but that I would not slipp any opportunitye Vol.lix. p.205. of presenting my service to you. The messenger can tell you all the news from shore of the takinge Bergen, and designinge to give battaille to the Spaniard, whose armye is drawne together about Furne (very considerable). The shippes with mee beinge gone to the posts I gave you an account of, severall days since, ther being in my company only the vice-admirall, and the Maidstone and Lampat, this morninge, the wind beinge easterly, we weighed out of Dunkerke road. The vice-admirall is gone for the river to Wolwidge: The Maidstone I have sent to Hamborough, to convoy major-general Jephson, accordinge to his highnesse commands I received for that purpose; and my selfe am come to an anchor betweene Mardyke and Gravelin, intendinge (God willinge) to sayle for the Downes too-morrow morninge, if the wind serve. This is all at present from,

MY LORD,

Nasebye in Gravelin-pitts,
June 22d, 1658.

Your most faithfull and humble servant,

E. MONTAGU.

Sacrae regiae majestatis Succiae deputatorum ad serenissimi domini electoris Brandenburgici legatos propositio.

QUEMADMODUM per gentium jus moreisque admissio legatorum non semper eadem Vol.lix. p.217. est, sed pro mittentium qualitate et meritis, causarumque et negotiorum diversitate variat, sic, quod in eo communis libertatis regique arbitrii est, sacra regia majestas propositione quadam per deputatos suos facienda praemittere noluit necessaria, vel ideo quod domini legati electorales venirent ab eo, qui haectenus non nisi hostem se esse velle ostendit. Etsi enim inter deliberationes de bello Polonico sua electoralis societatem ejus ambiit et desideravit, ipsamet arma contra Polonos cohortans, post tractatus etiam varios iniit juncto foedere perpetuo et indissolubili promissis auxiliis et constantia; constat tamen actorum publica nunc conscientia, quomodo nulla necessitate (si quod decebat et expeditum erat facere aut admittere voluisset) coacta, cum praeterea per insignem benevolentiam neutralitatis aliqua conventionione, sine praepjudicio tamen sacrae regiae majestatis sibi indulgere promitteretur, a foedere plane discessit, et non saltem amicitiam cum hoste, sed etiam adversus sacram regiam majestatem foedus velut contra communem hostem pepigit, favorem et auxilium non in Borussia modo, sed et in imperio promittens invicem, velut in praemium deserti amici stipulata, quae sacra regia majestas possidebat, et adhuc possidet, ipsamet sua ope tueri sancte promiserat, prout ejus foederis rationes et conditiones primum Velaviae compositae, postea Brombergae exasperatae et conjuratae sunt, ut ex istorum tenore amplius liquet.

Porro et cum Daniae rege sub ferventi adversus sacram regiam majestatem hostilitate post collusiones tractatus communis belli initi sunt, illum ad arma pertinaciter retinenda, pacem-

A.D. 1658. pacemque respuendam non excitando saltem, sed auxiliis ostentatis, et proclivi ad invadendas terras, quas sacræ regiæ majestatis exercitus tenebat, eumque divertendum cupiditate, hostilia quævis comminando, sicut de eo pactum Hassniæ, et quidem ab eodem legato, qui pro componenda Sueco-Danica amicitia intercesserat, inchoatum, postea ab alio tractatum, et Coniæ ad Spream conclusum fuit, et quo firmitus hæc procederent cum serenissimo Hungariæ rege fœdera, primo defensivum, postea offensivum tentatum, hoc tandem conclusum, et ita quidem, ut vocaverint sacræ suæ majestatem communem hostem, nec quicquam omiserint, quod adversus infensissimum hostem constitui solet, adeo ut non saltem in Polonia, sed et in imperio Romano-Germanico regias proprietates et possessiones invadant, imo istas velut prædam dividendi pactorum conditio reperiatur; nec saltem ea chartis inserta, sed et in hostiles actus erupere, cum e Polonia regius exercitus ad retundendam Danicam vim transisset, prædatoribus Polonicis ad rapinas, incendia, et devastationes Pomeraniæ, transitu et comiteatu concesso, suo milite in Germaniam, ubi eo opus non erat, deducto, et juxta fines Pomeraniæ magna ex parte locato, impedita innoxia collectione militum per imperii terras, omnibus alias permessa, et ad ejus ditiones defendendas usurpanda, avocatis per publica edicta contra assertæ legibus publicis Germanicæ libertatis a servitio regio subditis, arrestato contra pacta jusque gentium in Pillauw pulvere tormentario, et quod aliud in subsidium defensionis locorum regionum appulerat, objectis, cum invaderetur Bremensis ducatus a Dano quarantiæ debito in conventu ordinum circuli inferioris Saxonie obstaculis; excitis ubique velut contra hostem, cum non modo nihil mali fieret, sed et inter sæpius declarata, si amicitia retineretur, benevolæ, imo et beneficæ mentis argumenta, querelis, inde demonstrato odio atque invidia; nec ignota sunt alia molimina inimica perspicuis documentis demonstranda, promissa Danis auxilia, incitata Austriacorum armorum conjunctio, exercitus fœderatorum iteratæ in Germania conglomerationes, ubi hostis nullus, nihilque metuendum erat, requisita velut contra hostem auxilia, excitata effictis obrectationibus odia, eruptura dudum in bellum apertum, nisi Deus, justitia et fortuna sacræ regiæ majestatis actionibus pace belloque favissent. Ex quibus ut fama ubique hostem dixit dominum electorem, ita nemo aliter censere potuit. Inter quæ tamen sacra regia majestas non deposuit, plane inclinatis ad meliora, quam quæ talia minabantur et merebantur, animis, significationem suæ electorali serenitati Gothebergo editam intentamque, si ita placeret, pro abolendis talibus, atque redintegranda amicitia tractatus admittere, deputatis et sufficienti mandato instructis ministris suis, expectata propensæ benevolentiae vicissitudine, unde sperandum fuisset, et alia consilia, præsertim quæ non hostilitati servirent, prævalitura et subsequutura esse. Tantum vero cum id abesset, ut et post ista accepta, et discessum e Berlino dominorum legatorum, non attentis tantis propensionis amicæ documentis, Stetini sua electoralis serenitas fœdus cum serenissimo Hungariæ rege contra sacræ regiam majestatem, velut contra communem hostem initum, hostilibus repletum conditionibus, ratum haberet, denuo pulverem tormentarium, et quæ alias in munimentum bellorum destinata in Pillauw detineret, Frawenburgum, in quod ipsi nullum jus, postquam ab Austriaco milite derelictum ad jura regia ex pacto cum electore, et bello cum Polonis pertinens occuparet, ab ejus arce regius miles prohiberetur, officiales militares regios persequi, et querelis contra sacræ regiam majestatem sine jure et ratione omnes conventus et aulas complere, auxilia velut contra hostem poscere non omitteret, qui potuit existimari quidquam amicæ et ad pacem propensæ mentis talia facienti inesse, adeoque cum illo ut amico principe agi? Quapropter cum multum interesset, an cum amici principis, an cum hostis legatis res esset, et sacræ regiam majestatem dominum electorem per ea, quæ processerunt, non nisi hostem, qualem se verbis et actu indicavit, reputare deberet, non potuit non sub adventu dominorum legatorum propositione talium per deputatos facienda mentem mittentis, rationem legationis, et potestatem dominorum ablegatorum pro more inter reges populosque sueto sciscitari, antequam inter tot tantaque dubia de admissione quidquam statueretur. Hæc cum legatis præliminarie agi solita minime inde exclusa putari poterunt, quod sacra regia majestas dominis legatis huc venire permisit, quo fine, nec quæ necessaria ab ipsis explorare, nec quæ congrua ordinare et tractare licuit, cum quo ad istum legationis processum cuncta dirigere oportuit, non defutura in posterum legatis tribuenda audentia, si prius ex iis, quæ præcedere decet, constitisset e dignitate regia, atque rerum statui conveniens esset, et cum celsissimorum dominorum ducum Brunsvico-Lunenburgicorum et Hassiæ legati pro concilianda amicitia officia nomine dominorum ablegantium obtulissent, pro solidioribus tractatum auspiciis e re visum est adhibere, perspecturos quam juste sincereque et fide agatur; quod cur excusaverint domini legati electorales, etsi non appareat, et allegata causa, quod e dignitate, et quod sine exemplo sit, non mereatur ideo a rationabili proposito desisti, cum nihil in eo quidquam sit aut a consuetudine in his, quæ cum aliorum officiis tractari solent, aut ab æquitate, aut a dignitate electorali, dum nihil in eo, nisi quod et sacra regia majestas sibi conveniens duxit, desideratum est alienum, de negotio vero præsentis aliorum rem suspectam reddere videatur, quando tamen prædicti domini legati ipsimet rogarunt sibi remitti, quod libenter non voluerunt admitti, ne prætextum remoræ præbere viderentur, ipsis sacra regia majestas hoc indulgit.

Ea autem hujus propositionis ratio, est quod sacra regia majestas id præprimis scire necessarium A.D. 1658. putat, ideo explorare commisit, quæ suæ electoralis serenitatis mens sit, utrum ab hostibus regiis semel separare, & amicitiae pacisq; reparationem tractare velit, quæque dominorum legatorum sunt id ad mandata ubi sacra regia majestas intellexerit, cum animum illum tum pro negotii conditione sufficientia mandata adesse tractatum sine mora suscipi curabit: quod si fortè hoc ad istum desit, idonea potestas relinquit integrum, an domini legati in hoc loco subsistere eandem sibi propediem parare, et ejus adeptionem expectare a sua electorali dignitate in loco nemini partium addicto Chiloviæ, Slesvici, aut Hamburgi, quæ huc spectant, tractari velit. De quo ubi sacram regiam majestatem certiores fecerint de nominatura est commissarios, cum quibus ista peragentur; et quæ porro ex re erunt, constituet. Idque dominus legatis exponere debuimus, ad quævis benevolentiae genera, quaternus officii devotissimi ratio non repugnat, paratissimi.

Dab. Flensburgi, 23 Junii, 1658.

Lockhart to the protector.

May it please your most serene HIGHNESSE,

MY brother hath brought me the honor of your highnesse commands, and least some Vol. lix. things I find in your highnesse letter may give you a just trouble, because your high- p. 208. nesse businesse here is not mannaged either to your highnesse own satisfaction, or that of your good subjects, who I know have zealus desires for the advancement of truth, and the discountenancing of error; I have sent him back, and shall delay his dispatch from hence no longer then I needs must, in wrytting that poore return, I am able to give to the particulars mentioned in your highnesse's. I shall repeatt nothing that is mentioned in any of my former to my lord Thurloe. The act I synded was forgott to be putt up in the first packett, but was sent in the next; and I hope will have been under your highnesse view before this: all I say in it as to religione, is the words of the treaty repeatted verbatim, and at that tyme it was not safe to dispute the repetitione of that article. It hath a clause in it (dummodo nihil adversos regimen cui in posterum submissi erunt moliantur) and this clause will give your highnes advantage enuff against them; for I am confident many weeks will not go over their heads, before they give to whosoever shall serve your highnesse heare just occasione to turne owt a greatt many of them. But as Roome was not built in one day, so it will not be pulled downe; and for any thing else contained in that act I told the cardinal truly, and he is satisfied with it, that I understood your highnesse interest in Dunkerke to be founded upon the treaty betwixt England and France; and at that tyme I synded that act, their was no treaty showen me, save one which hath only one article in it, namely the 9th, which relaits to the bourgoise, and the other articles pretended were not synded by Mr. Turenne, till two or three dayes after the renditione of the towne, but the French are ashamed to insist upon them; and therefore I shall give your highnesse no further trouble concerning them, but shall returne to the matters of the church. Their is but one parish in this towne; and as things stand, the towne not being furnished with any thing fitt for its defence, and two Roman catholick armies neare, I leave it to your highnesse to judge, whether it be a seasonable tyme to turne the inhabitants owt of their parish church. I heard a sermon upon the last lords-day at the towne house, which is as publick a place as the church, and till a church can be built, shall make use of that place (and by the way, must begg your highnesse pleasure concerning the building of a church.) And as to the rebuking of soldiers for having their hatts on, the businesse was thus; the morning after wee entred the towne, their were some industrios to putt the soldiers in very ill humors; and it was oppenly discoursed amongst them, that it was fitt to pillage the place, and especially the churches, where their was much riches; and their insolence went to that hight, that one of them lighted his pype of tobacco at one of the wax lights of the altar, where a priest was saying masse, which occasioned my being sent for in haste; and when I came amongst them, I commanded them to their arms, where they ought to have been, for they were not as then lodged; and told them it was ill done to come into the Romish churches, and if they needs would satisfy their curiosity, it was fitt to come so as they should not give disturbance to others in that, which they imagined to be their devotion. I am sure I am accused sufficiently at cowrt for the contrair; but so I can satisfy my conscience in that, I honestly act what I to the best of my knowledge judge fitt for your highnesse service; I have qwyett inwardly, and hopes your highnesse will putt (out of your accustomed goodness for me) charitable constructions upon all my failings through weaknesse. As to what is reported concerning the first place, and the priority that the Romish religione seems to have of the protestant, the giver of tolleratione must be much greater then that which is ollerated; and their is no provisiõe made for the protestant religion at Dunkerke, in the treaty treatty betwixt England and France, because a free and plenary professione and exercyse of it was never questioned. Their was on Mr. Maire of Calais with me, concerning the Protestants of Piccardie, and I shall referre myself to the account he will give of my answere to him; but that businesse is raw, and I prayed them before their resolutions to leave their habitations became publick, that they woud putt their persons and estates in some security; and in all things of this nature your highnesse will find, that I am rather apt to faile upon the right hand then the left; and for the greatt goodnesse your highnesse is pleased to expresse dayly to myself, my poore wyfe and family, I beseech your highnesse to beleieve, that I have nothing that I shall account too deare to be sacrficed for your highnesse and family's service.

I have disposed the magistrates of the towne for their oath of alledgiance to your highnesse, and must begg that your highnesse will order a draght of one to be sent me, which will be agreeable to your highnesse's pleasure. I know oaths are not bynding save with conscientious men; and yett it's fitt to have that obligation upon them, if it were but to make their punishment, when they are offenders, the more justifiable. So soone as the cardinall returns, I shall urge the treatty for contributione, and I hope close it: but before I doe conclude, shall make knowne the conditions of it to your highnesse, and receive your commands concerning them. I find no present inclinations in the French to treatt for the carrying on a warr jointly. I think your highnesse will be no looser by it; for once by the middle of August at furthest, they will be in such wants, both as to men, and all other things fitt for carrying on a warr, as a conjunctione with them will not in my opinione be very advantageous; but if your highnesse shall think fitt to send me instructions about any further treaty, I shall prosecute them with all the zeale and industry I can.

I have not hindred the departure of any bourgoise from this place: I have upon the contrair given them leave to transport their goods to Newport as peaceably as if they had removed from one street in London to another. I have also caused to prepare me a list of all the inhabitants that are heare at present, and the names also of such as have removed, and shall answere it to your highnesse's severest justice, if I permitt any of them to returne. I shall likewise send a copy of the names of such as have absented themselves, to the end, if I faile in this, it may beare witness against me. If any English familys will transport themselves heare, provyded they bring with them a lyne from my lord Thurloe, mentioning their fidelity and affectione to your highnesse's government, I shall see them settled, and and serve them faithfully. I shall cause disarmie the bowrgois, and search for all manner of armes and amunitione, so soone as their shall arryve 150 horse.

I know I ought not to importune your highnesse with so rude a letter, butt I have rather choosed to appeare before you in any dresse then to delay a minutt's tyme the giving your highnesse an account of your affaires; and tho' by it your highnesse will see how farre I have come short of performing what might have been done, had your highnesse imploy'd another; yett I may say in much sincerity, that I have endeavoured to lay owt my poor talent faithfully, and never have more joy then when I think the Lord gives me the least opportunity of doing any thing that may be acceptable to your highnesse, or expresse the truth of my being,

May it please your HIGHNESS,

Your most faithfull subject, and most obedient servant,

Dunkerke, July 3, New Style. 1658.

WILL. LOCKHART.

H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland, to secretary Thurloe.

SIR,

23 June, 1658.

In the possession of William Cromwell, Esq;

MY lord chancellor desiring an hour's private conference with me, saturday last was appointed for that purpose. His lordship then told me, that about a fortnight before he had enclosed a letter to my brother Fleetwood for his highnesse, wherein he desired liberty to retire. That his chief end in it was, that he might the better take care for his soul's concernment. Yet he said he must confess, he did not like the tendency of things, though he should satisfy himself with a government by a single person, at least while his highnesse was that person. He also said, that there was a people here, whom he favoured; and that he was accounted their head, and he feared lest they should suffer; and that by his management of things in order to their protection, himself might fall under some jealousy.

He complained of all the judges here, and said they did upon occasions give their opinions in points of law, not according to their conscience, but to please. Upon former occasions occasions of conference with him, I found that he designed to ensnare me by his mis-recital of what I had said in private, by wresting the sense, and adding to it what might serve his purpose. This hath ever since made me wary; and I now chose rather to hear him than speak much; yet I interposed what I thought necessary, and especially to find out the ground of his fears for that party, whereof he called himself the head; desired him to deal freely, whether I had denyed them any favour or countenance. He did very much vindicate me, both in this and all other things, with greater compliments than I am willing to repeat: neither did he instance (though I gave him fair opportunity for it) in any particular, but the opinion of the judges concerning commissions for uniting and dividing parishes. It is not my business to justify that opinion, nor much to disparage it for his dissent.

I think I have heard from you, that my lord chancellor at his coming over made large professions, how officious and serviceable he would be to me. I suppose he meant, not as a subject, but as a tutor or guardian to a minor; for at his first coming he appointed severall private meetings with me (which I diligently observed,) and then he read lectures to me of affairs and maxims of state, taught me how to carry myself at the councill, gave me rules how things should be managed at the board, how abroad; and lest I should forget my lesson, gave me three or four sheets in writing of those rules he thought of most importance. I listned to him with a great deal of attention, supposing, that if I got nothing else, I should get his measure. He then began to tell me of dissatisfactions amongst the Anabaptists, Independents, and others professing godlinesse; offered his help and assurance to unite and compose, and to that end he would bring the most considerable of the discontented of all parties to sett meetings. You know, I have had my share of trouble by the Anabaptists. And now things were reduced to that calm state, that I have not since that time heard the least stirr or complaint from them, but at that time many professions of abundant satisfaction from the chief amongst them. The Independent was then above measure pleased, and the fresh joy of being newly delivered from the reign of the Anabaptists gave him not leisure to think of setting up for himself (which nevertheless all parties will attempt in their turn) so that I had too much cause to suspect, that my lord chancellor's design was, first to raise, and then (it may be) to allay commotions, thereby to draw dependencies upon himself. Therefore by such occasions as I thought most plausible, I discontinued this private intercourse, and left him to act in his proper orb. Ever since which time by a secret correspondence by cypher into England (from whence he hath had constant encouragement) and by private meetings here, he hath endeavoured to make the Independents think themselves neglected; and having mounted the stage, failed in nothing but making me his jack-pudding, by my opposition to call the people about him. Indeed all his actions have tended to make that good, which was boasted by his nearest relations even before his coming over, That he was to rule the roast here; but finding things not according to his expectation, he was very active during the vacancy of government, by correspondencies in England and consultations here, to make the new constitution suitable to his purpose, which hath not been altogether useless to him. Indeed he hath so carried all things, that every man sees his aim. I have not seemed to take any notice of it, neither had I mentioned it to you now, had not the saturday's discourse given occasion for it. I thank God, things are here in a quiet posture, whatever may be suggested to the contrary. 'Tis true in this town there are divers practices, and I make some question, whether the letter to his highness must be delivered, till something is prepared here to second it.

Sir M. Tomlinson is used as the instrument, and is now hard at work. He hath had several private meetings with some that are soonest enflamed. But they cool so fast, especially if they leave the air of this town, that I know not whether he can make a flame; and if he do, unless fuell be sent from England, it will soon dye. I remain &c.

General Monck to secretary Thurloc.

MY LORD,

NOT opening the two packetts you were pleased to send us by the messenger untill Vol. lix. the councill mett, wee did nott know well what was in them, butt uppon the opening P. 225. of them wee found onely his highness instructions together with the commission for administering the oath of privie counsellors; butt there is yet wanting the commission for the sitting of the councill, without which wee can doe nothing; soe that as wee have troubled you for the other, wee shall desire your lordshipp that that may bee sent us, by doing which you will doe us a very great favour. I am desired by some of Sir James Mac Dowall's friend's heere to putt you in minde of him concerning the place of the admiraltie heere, which they tell mee will bee as well done in one man's hands, (and with lesse charge to the state) as itt is now in more, which they tell mee they have made appeare to your lordshipp; and if it bee soe, I thinke the gentleman will deserve that favour, having bin always faithfull

to

A.D. 1658. to his highnesse. Soe desiring your Lordshipp to excuse my giving you this trouble, I remayne

YOUR LORDSHIPP'S

Very affectionate humble servant

Dalkeith 24. June 1658.

GEORGE MONCK.

Major general Morgan to secretary Thurloc.

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

Vol. lx. p. 35.

Y^Esterday Marescall Thureine, with severall squadrons of horse, and a partie of foote, marched towards Fearne, one of the enemies guarriisons within 4 leagues of Dunkirk. Upon his approach they surrendered the towne, few of the enemy being therein, the most of them being fled. This towne is considerable, in regard it conduceth much to the safeguard of Dunkirke; but as yet it is not known, whether marescall Turein will guarriison it or demollish it. Hee did acquaint mee, that eyther this day or to morrowe, some part of the armie shall fall upon Fort Lincke. It is a place, which is very stronge, in regard it is invyroned with a waterish moorish ground. It is thought we shall gett our mortar pieces nigh enoughe, which is conceived the only way for reduceing that fort. I finde the 4 regiments with mee and la Ferté, viz. my owne, collonel Lillingeston's, Sir Brice Cochran's and collonel Clarke's, are much weakened by the losse of those wee have had killed and wounded, both at the battaille, and seidges before Dunkerke and Bergin; though I will assure you, that nothinge is wantinge in mee to preserve them, yet our last recruits fell sicke verie fast. There is a rumour, that there hath beene a scuffle betwixt the enemy and marescall la Ferté; howe true it is, or anye thinge of particulers, I knowe not, but shall fully acquainte you (God willinge) in my next. Monsieur Shomberge is governor of Bergin. I shall add no more, but that I am,

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

Campe before Bergin,

Yours verie humble servant,

4 July 1658. St. No.

THO. MORGAN.

Intelligence sent from Holland by resident Downing.

From Nerva July 4. 1658. [N. S.]

Vol. lix.
p. 223.

THE liberty, which the Muscovites have at length given to the ambassador of Sweden, whom they have long time kept in prison, and who will be here to morrow, and consequently wholly out of their hands, gives all reason to believe, that they are in good earnest to make peace with the Swede, and that they are affrighted with the Swedes progresse in Denmark, and of the encrease of their forces. These two parties have made a truce three months ago, which is well enough observed, and which must continue to the perfecting of the treaty of peace, which was to begin the 22d of last month. The sickness of the senator Gustave Bielk, one of the ambassadors in prison, and chief in the negotiation for the king of Sweden, being not able to make great journeys, they were forced to attend his arrival. The plenipotentiaries of Muscovy, who are four of the principal of their state, follow a day after: the place of meeting is not yet agreed on; only it is said, it shall be on the frontiers of Ingermanland, whereof this place is the capital and the frontier, much more commodious for the Muscovite than the Swede, who have their principal forces at Riga 240 mile off; and the other have an army within 45 mile consisting of above 50000 men with a prodigious quantity of artillery and ammunition. The baron of Benthorne governor of Revel and de Silvestern who are joined with de Bielk have thought fit, that I should be with them, that so if the Kzar accepts the mediation of France, I may draw the overtures on both sides, which their formalities and circumspections render very difficult in the beginning of the negotiation, chiefly on the Muscovites side, who are very distrustful and difficult. Beside their army 45 mile off, there is another gathering on the coast of Lithuania, which will be above 70000 men: we shortly shall see their designs, because according to their custom they begin their wars and sieges in August. They assure the Swede, that they will war with the Polanders, and these with the others. That which is like to be well for the former, is the liberty of their ambassador; and that they publish in Poland, that they have put them in irons, when they treat them gently. This peace is very important to the King of Sweden;

also

also he would make peace if he could, and employ all his forces for himself and friends. A.D. 1658. Vol. lix. p. 229.
 Marshall Douglas shall command the Swedes army in this country, and the count Magnus de la Garde, who should have gone into Prussia for the treaty of Poland, goes to the king of Sweden. I have made known to the Kzar my arrival and my orders; if he will favour me, I may have my dispatch in two months: he made an envoy of England stay seven months, and at last having spent more than 1500 l. sterling, having above 20 men of his train, he returned without his answer: his majesty hath endeavoured, that the same envoy should returne; for being come to Dantzick he received the safe conduct of the Kzar, and his said majesty would have been glad, that France and England would have appeared in the treaty of peace, wherein the Muscovites are in a condition to give law of their formidable preparations for war, and if they knew how to make use of their forces, they would make strange progress.

Intelligence.

MY LORD,

Hamburg, July 5. 1658. [N. S.]

FOR news here is little. The king is at Kiel; it is thought the army will break up suddenly; in two or three days here will be in print a declaration from the king. Vol. lix. p. 229.

This day Sir Phil. Meadows took his journey for Kiele. Major general Jephson is expected here in 8 or 10 days. Here is a frigate come to carry him home.

The syndic of this town, Dr. Peterson, being dead at London, another agent will be sent thither suddenly.

Lockhart to the protector.

May it please your most serene HIGHNESS,

THE bearer hereof, captain Flower, hath been recommended to me by such hands, Vol. lix. and given such large testimonies of his courage, good conduct, affectione to your highnesses interest, and love to his countrey, upon several occasions in the late siege and battle, that I was resolved to have bestowed a company upon him: which when I came to do, I found the lieutenant of the said company had behaved himself with so much worth and gallantry, that it had been pittie and injustice to deprive him of his pretenses. Having therefore no opportunity at present to accommodate captain Flower in any proportion to his desert, I have made bold to beseech your highness in his behalf, that since there is some horse designed for this place, your highness would be pleased to give him the command of the troop intended for me, he having heretofore been captaine of horse, and discharged himself very laudably therein, as I am informed. If your highness will bestow 20 or 30 horse upon him, he will be able to raise the rest of the troop himself; or rather then not serve the publick, he would strain hard to do it all upon his owne account. I leave him to your highnesses generous consideration, and rest,

May it please your most serene HIGHNESS,

Your HIGHNESSES

Most obedient and faithfull subject and servant,

Dunkerke, the 5th of July 1658. [N. S.]

WILL. LOCKHART.

Lockhart to secretary Thurloe.

MY LORD,

THIS bearer captain Flower was sent over into these parts with the recommendation of a worthy and gallant man, which character he hath abundantly made good by severall actions in this service. I intended him a company, as a small recompence of his great desert; but the lieutenant of the said company hath by his singular good carriage laid so just a claim to that command, that I could by no means consent to do him so great an injury: and indeed I find my self pressed in that particular by most of the inferior officers, they have all behaved themselves so well. For this gentleman I humbly desire your lordship's assistance, that he may be employed in the command of the horse, which is intended for this place, he having formerly led a troop himself with great commendation. And I am so satisfied

Vol. VII. Fff with

A.D. 1568. with him, that I could wish he might command that troop, which will be designed for me. He tells me, he thinks he shall be able to raise a good part of it himself; but if your lordship would take order that he might be furnisht with 20 or 30 horse for a beginning, I make no doubt but he would accomplish the rest. I have another request to your lordshipp, that you would be pleased to send me a good trumpeter or two; and I desire they may be (for that kind) gentle and intelligent men, because I shall have frequent occasion to send them upon some considerable messages. I take leave, and rest,

My LORD,

Your LORDSHIP'S

Most humble and faithful servant,

Dunkirke, the 5th of July, 1658. [N. S.]

WILL. LOCKHART.

Capt. Stoakes to secretary Thurloe.

SIR,

Vol. lix.
p. 157.

YOUR honour's of the 31st past found mee ready to sayle with the Farfax, Yarmouth, and Jersey, victualled for six weekes, which indeed, I intended to have spent about Leghorne, and if possibely to have come uppon the prince of Mounte Firci, who hath bought, and armed out a couple of ships from that port, and is in treaty for more. Uppon perusuall of the instructions, I did immediately dispatch captain Whetston to admirall Pol, at Tholon, to know in what readines the fleet is: having received his answer, I shall accordingly order the frigatts out of these I have here, or otherwise wait the coming together of all the party. Att the instant of captain Whitston's departure, I had the wellcome newes of the arrival of the Torrington, Taunton, Dover, and Sarah, which I have sent for hither, to avoyd the inconveniences, that may happen betwixt our men and the great rable of French marriners, that are now at Tholon. If the French affaires will admitt the stay of ten or twelve days, then I shall, with these with mee, forthwith depart for Leghorn, that being the only station, wherein at present I can be serviceable: from thence shall dispatch the three frigatts the commissioners have ordered me to send home. Were it thought fitt to change this whole party by three and three, it would much add to the carrying on of the worke, and content the men, most of which have bin out above eightene months. My shipp cannot be serviceable for much longer, unless at a vast expence of tyme and money uppon her. If his highness pleasure be to continue me out longer, then the expence of these victualls, which will soone run out, I hope your honour, will be a meanes, that tymely supplys may come together with a convenient shipp for mee, that I may be able to people the sea, and not forced into harbour to cleane at extraordinary expence, with great prejudice to the execution of his highness's commands. Your honour's orders, I shall now expect by way of Leghorn, as well as this place; retourning you my most humble thanks, for the care taken in reference to my credit. This night, or to-morrow morning I expect an answer from the French admirall, and is all at present worth your honour's notice. I remayne,

SIR,

Your HONOUR'S

most obliged servant,

Lyme, in the Bay of Marseilles the 25th June 1658.

JOHN. STOAKES.

P. S. I forgott to acquaint your honour, that I have ordered captain Whitston to command that party, which joynes with the French. Vale.

Secretary Thurloe to Mr. Downing, resident in Holland.

SIR,

Vol. lix.
p. 147.

I Received by this post two packetts from you of the 28th instant, and thanke you for the care and paynes you tooke about procureinge and sending the 4 dozen bottles of water, they are not yet arrived, but wee looke for them every day now that the wind is easterlye. I writt to you by the last for 100 bottles more, which I entreat you do me the favour to hasten over with all the speed that may be.

I thinke

I thinke you did very well to putt de Witt to it about their correspondence with Spayne. I A.D. 1658. doe beleve those two which my former mentioned were of Amsterdam, which is the place I doe beleve, where all that busines is managed; and it is very possible that they might also speake about the octroy for trade in the West Indies, but its as certeyne that other matters are alsoe transacted, and they will get nothinge of Spayne, but for service they are to doe against England. And as for the trouble, that they have for his highnesse progresse in Flanders, and that they could wish his armes were employed further of, I hope that wee prove as good neighbours as the Spanyards; and it will be very necessary that you endeavour to remove any jealousie that they may have of this kind, and presse them as farre as may be to speake particularly to the grounds of their dislike, that wee may be the better able to remove what may sticke with them. There is no state, that H. H. would more willingly conferre and advise with concerninge his forraigne designs and the common good, then with the lords the states; and this you may assure them. And his highnes takes it very kindly, that they require the duke of Yorke to go out of their dominions, and prohibited the coming of Charles Stuart into them, which wee heare they did; and if it be foe, it is fitt for you to take notice thereof to them.

I should be glad to heare what instructions Opdam shall have for the command of the 24 shippes, which they say are now goinge forth. And as you observe yourself, it is necessary above all things, that you informe yourself of any thing, which shall be done either by the States General or Holland, or more privatly about these affaires.

For Sir John Marlow, the question is, whether we must trust him, or he us. I thinke the first more reasonable. If he will first make this discovery, he shall have a 100 l. or more, and a passe if it deserve it; and otherwise then this I cannot treate with him.

I received one letter this week from our, who subscribes his name Jeronemus Van Abbsbach, and directs his letters to Foard: he, I suppose, is one of your men, and truly he writes materially, and is to be encouraged. The rest I suppose direct their letters wronge, which I know not how to rectify, otherwise then by desiringe you to let me knowe by what name they write, if they doe not use those names I sent, or these; viz. To Mr. John Alsop, merchant at London; Mr. Adrian Peters, at the Bell and Tun in Southwarke; Mr. Joseph Miller, at the Suger-loafe in Tems-street.

I shall take care, that orders about the convoy of shippinge as you desire, and endeavour to get the captaine of the Bradford frigatt punished for his unmannerly carriage towards you.

I have written to my lord ambassador Lockhart about correspondinge with you, and have received answere from him, that he will not fayle to do it, professinge his paynes were foe great both in the seige, and since in putting the towne into some order, that he could not spare tyme even to give us that account here, which was necessary. He commands in chiefe, and hath with him 6 regiments of foote; and Bergen beinge since taken, the French are like to make a very considerable progresse in Flanders this campagne.

25 June 1658.

H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland, to the protector.

May it please &c.

25 June 1658.

THE bearer, major Stapley of col. Cooper's regiment, is a good officer, a very sober well affected person, and of good interest in his countrey; and to signify that I have a respect, and am desirous to countenance and encourage those, who have a dutifull respect towards your highness, I give him the honour to present such addressees to your highness from several parts of this nation, as were come to my hand at his going for England. He will give your highness an account of the particulars. I remain &c.

In the possession of William Cromwell, Esq;

General Monck to secretary Thurloe.

MY LORD,

I Received your lordshipp's of the 18th instant, together with his highnesse instructions, Vol. lix; and commission for the councill here by the bearer Thomas Baker, upon the 22d instant P. 235. about two in the afternoone: by the speedy dispatch whereof your lordshipp has obliged both myself and the councill; and not only us, but the rest of the country: for affaires heere would have suffered very much for want of them, if they should not have come in time. I remayne

YOUR LORDSHIPP'S

Affectionate humble servant,

Dalkeith. 25 June, 1658.

GEORGE MONCK.

Com-

Commissioner Pells to the States General.

A.D. 1658. H. and M. LORDS,

Dantzick, 6 July 1658. [N. S.]

Vol. lix.
p. 241.

MY lords, in my last of the 3d instant I advised, that general Charnitzky at this conjuncture of time was come with a good number of Poles for the service of this city, and the preventing and damnifying of the Swedish designs against the same. Since that time, yesterday a burgomaster with some commissioners of the council of war went from hence to the said general, who is incamped at Dirschau; where they resolved to follow the orders of his majesty of Poland, for the frustrating of the said Swedish design: and to that end, they sent from hence much ammunition; and likewise that the Sweedes might not gain any intelligence of their proceedings here, yesterday and to day they kept the gates of the city on that side close shut, and would not suffer the post to pass towards Elbing or Koningsburgh.

Here in the old city is held a general assembly of the States of the country, to nominate commissioners to be sent to the Rixday at Warsaw.

Intelligence sent by Mr. Downing, resident in Holland.

Copenhagen, 6 July, 1658. [N. S.]

Vol. lix.
p. 240.

SINCE my last some little differences with the Swedish ambassadors have been decided; but as for the exclusion of foreign ships of war out of the Sound, and the restitution of forty ships, and goods, which were taken from the Swedes at Guinea, they are still upon the same terms; yet the resident of Sweden yesterday told a stranger, that all was agreed. There is beside a dispute about a ship, taken from the Swede, before the late war, and brought hither by virtue of a commission from Poland. The ambassadors of Sweden have lately proposed to the king of Denmark, that he should oblige himself to raise no soldiers, that might give cause of jealousy to the Swede; but it is not so much insisted upon this last and upon the two former points. They say still, that the army shall stay here till they have received satisfaction, which they make good; for their troops move not as yet, although that general Guldenleew, to take away all pretences, went hence 6 dayes ago to supply the want of 2000 horse agreed on to the Swede by the treaty, concerning which the ambassadors yesterday presented a letter to the king here from their master, wherein in a courteous way he complains, that this court by delaying the fulfilling of the treaty, forced him to continue with the troops in this kingdom, to the great damage of the subjects of this crown, and the prejudice of his own affairs. The French ambassador took his leave 3 days ago, but yet he stays, hoping that his endeavours here to agree the Swede and Dane may be more expedient and fruitful. As for the States General it is to be feared, that the continual complaints of the intolerable oppression of the Swedish troops may give the king of Denmark too much excuse to the said States, if he should consent to the exclusion of the men of war out of the Baltic sea, or any thing else that he shall exact at this time. The envoy of this crown yesterday returned from Muscovy hath made his report, he hath been honourably received by the grand duke, who seems to be willing to agree with Poland, and continue the war with Sweden, notwithstanding the treaty that he will begin with Sweden to hasten the king of Poland to give him satisfaction.

Dantzick, 3 July. The Swedes have landed at the Nering 9 or 1000 men raised in Denmark and Norway, with ammunition, and shipp'd 3 or 400 Polanders, wherein they would not so well confide, to be transported elsewhere. Five of their ships lie still in the rode without disturbing the traffick, but only in taking forbidden commodities, as they have already done from some ships of Lubeck and other places. They say shortly they shall with more ships quite block up the town. The king of Poland hath by a letter expressed his discontent, that this town hath not hindered the landing of the Swedes, as they might have done with a little more money and diligence if they would have employed it. The Nering is almost abandoned, and cannot be able to maintain any troops.

This town sends their deputies to the dyet of Warsaw, which begins the 10th instant, to shew the charges they have already been at, and the impossibility of furnishing what it continually demanded for Poland. News is come, that general Czarnetsky is not far off with four or five men to assist this town, and break the Swedes designs. Some Swedish troops are quartered on the other side the Wissel, between the Hoff and Dirfaw, with intention to pass the river; but the Brandenburgers and the soldiers of this town are quartered over against them, to hinder their passage; and they oft shoot one at another.

Intelligence sent by resident Downing, July 6. 1658. [N.S.]Copy of a letter from Amsterdam.

SIR,

A.D. 1658.

ABOUT some time past one abbot Volherts, Peter Ruttens, and divers others, seconded by one Crook a lawyer, got a grant from the king of Spain, sealed with a seal of gold, weighing two pounds, which have cost them much pains and money, for the two aforesaid disbursed 5000 l. sterling. They assemble every day in the Heere Logement dere, where they pay 30 l. sterling for a chamber, and 60 l. to one that waits on the assembly. They had great difficulty to get the same money tolerated by the states general; but the ambassador of Spain having obliged himself, that he would obtain it of the states, they doubt not of the success. The king of Spain will get thereby 20 millions English. Finally, the company is well satisfied, notwithstanding the great charges already made, and to be made: they say their advocate hath already got 12000 livres. They will raise the ducatoons to 3 livres 10 sols, and the Brabant shillings to 8 sols.

Amsterdam, 6 July.

The elector of Brandenburg repairs the fortifications of Muide, fearing a siege from the Swede: he hath given letters of mart against the Swede, but that is hardly believed. The Spanish fleet is gone from Cales the 11th of June. The king of Swede hath offered to the states the restitution of the money they lent to the count of Embden, that after he may put a garrison into Embden. Prince William of Nassau, under pretence of appeasing some troubles in Friseland, was gone to visit the fortifications of Embden, and the places thereabouts.

John Tilly, John Tirry, and John De Wit, are partners in some treaty made with the king of Spain touching the paying of his army in Flanders; yet enjoy the favours of the lord protector to traffick in the Barbadoes, and other isles, although they are so much affected for Spain, and not at all to his highness.

A merchant ship belonging to the said John De Wit, going with his highness free pass to the Barbadoes, was taken by an English frigate, and carried to Jamaica, and there sold, which he now petitions to have restored.

Resolution of the states general, 1st July 1658.

UPON a letter and petition from the burgo-master and counsellors of Rotterdam, in favour of Jane Meyn, widow of Robert Meyn, to have an order for the releasing her ship called the Black Eagle, with the lading of barley and sheep-skins, coming from Leith in Scotland, taken near the Texel by Dirck Frunestapel of Nieupoort in Flanders, with a commission from the king of Spain, and carryed to Sluys in Flanders; after deliberation, it was resolved, that the said letter should be sent to the said governors and magistrates of the said town to inform themselves thereof exactly, and to make report thereof, and to keep the ship and goods from sale or imbezling till farther order; also that a letter be wrote to Ostend to set at liberty the master and mariners without any charges.

Lockhart to secretary Thurloc.

May it please your LORDSHIPP,

THIS gentleman Mr. Fuller his comming away from me depryves me at the same time of a chappelaine and a friend. His father calls him back, and I cannot in justice detaine him. His deserts are so great, that it would be lesse justice in me to lett him goe without a faire character; and therefore I humbly beseech your lordshipp to looke upon him as a person abundantly qualified with good nature, excellent parts, great improvements, and I shall add, as that which adornes all, of a pious and sober frame of spiritt. I say not this to urge any thing for him; for he hath no desyers, save such as are submissive to, and followers of, providence. The losse of him makes me bold, as it gives me the occasione to putt your lordshipp in mynd, how necessary it is to have men of extraordinary talents in this place, who by ther conversatione, doctrine, and learning too, may be able to prevaile against adversaries, that victorie may not only be obtained over their persons here, but also over their errors. He will mynd your lordshipp more fully of this; and I know your lordshipp's care and zeale will prevent all, that I can either say or

VOL. VII.

G g g

desyer

A.D. 1658. desyer upon this subject, and therefore I forbear to trouble your lordshipp further in it;
and am

May it please your LORDSHIPP,

Dunkerke, July 6.
N. S. 1658.

Your most humble, faithfull, and obedient servant,

WILL. LOCKHART.

Lockhart to secretary Thurloc.

May it please your LORDSHIPP,

Vol.lix. p.249.

I DISPATCHED my brother yesternight, and stayed him so little, as I beleieve, by any account he can give of his having been here, he will hardly be able to perswade any body he hath been in the place. My lord, I fownd by that I had the honor to receive from his highness, that he is apprehensive the Catholick Roman religione meets with too much countenance, and the Protestant with too little. I know that those, who looke upon things at a distance, may have reason to give his highness such informations, and may mean honestly and zealously in their so doing; but I shall not trouble your lordshipp with a repetitione of any thing I said in my last to his highness, in which I laid the state of things plainly before him, and did conceale nothing, that I know, either of my actions or resolutions, since the delivery of this place into my hands. And if I have not answered his highness thoughts as to either of them, I begg that his pleasure may be made knowne to me, and your lordshipp shall find, that tho' I have not the facultie of walking so cawtiously as I should, when I have no rule prescrybed me, that I shall follow the rules and instructions I receive with as exact and obedience as is possible for me.

The enemye quitt Furn yesternight; they are now at Newport, and, for any thing I can learn, their disorders doe rather encrease than diminish, which makes the French so high, as no proposition for carrying on the warr jointly will be heard. Some two months hence they will be sensible of their own weaknesse, and will find, that what they get so easily now, will not be so easily maintained without his highnesse assistance; and then their ear will be open to all reasonable overtures. Mr. Turenne will advance with his army into the enemies cuntry, and will give jealousie to as many places as he can. The name of the place he intends to seege is kept as a great secret. It cannot be Newport, nor any other sea-port; for if their intentions had been that way, they would have declared them, that his highness might have been advertised to assist them with the fleet; and I doe not see, that they are in any capacity to make a considerable land seege, by reason they have neither that train of artillery nor amunition, which is necessary for such an undertaking.

My lord, I have this day mustered the forces here, and have done it with all the exactnesse possible. Their provisions shall be given out according to their rolles; and I find, that I have abated of what their French rolls were, at least a 100 of every regiment, and of some more. I have also sent away by this tyde betwixt 2 and 300 sick and wounded. I have ordered them to go to Deale and Sandwitch, fearing that Dover may be already too full. And haveing occasione this day, upon the account of muster, to putt the whole garrison under arms, I took that opportunity to disarme all the bourgeoisie, and other inhabitants of this towne, and have done it without clamour or noise, and, I believe, without greatt dissatisfaction. I have also got in this day a list of all the inhabitants, that are at present in this towne, and have sent your lordshipp a copy of it. I have ordered a list to be brought me of all, that absented themselves: so soone as it comes in, your lordshipp shall lykewyse have a copy of it. The magistrates, and four companies or cantons of the towne, are willing to take the oath of alledgance, but I will not administer it, till I have a copy of that forme your lordshipp shall think most proper. I have cawsed take downe all the little images of Nostre Dame that were at all the ports, and in their stead shall put up his highness's armes; only I could wish, that a pattern or moddell to make all the rest by were lykewise sent me, together with some motto or inscription. I intend to-morrow to emitt an order, requyring all such as have concealed armes or amunition, to bring them in within 24 howers, under the paine of having their goods confiscatt, their persons punished, and themselves and families banished the towne. I intend that search shall be made in private howses, but that no convents shall be meddled with till 8 or 10 dayes passe, and all the noise of it be over; and then I think I shall find some, if not a great many, of the priests guilty; and such shall find no quarter.

There hath not a day past, wherein I have not made some good stepp towards a full and plenary settlement of things. I have putt the customs and excyse in reasonable good posture, and have appointed one Mr. de Vall, recommended to me by Mr. Noell, to be checque and supervisor; he is an ingenious and industrious man, and I have nothing to except

except against his being constantly imployed, save that he is a merchant, and even at A.D. 1658. present drives a considerable trade. If your lordshipp will think fitt to alter him, and send some honest able man, I am informed the place will be worth a good man's pains. I have writt a line to his highness and your lordshipp, with one capt. Fleur, who is a very deserving man: he sayth, that, with a little help, he will rayse a troope of horse for me. I begg he may be favourably heard; and if his highness think not fitt to employ him, I pray that one of the troopes may beare my name. I shall take nothing from the officer, that commands it; for so long as I have the honour to serve his highness in the capacity I am in, I shall never take fixpence as a soldier. I could wish, that some discreet man, who were a good trumpett, were sent over to me. I will have often occasione to send one to the enemy; and I have nobody to send now butt a drum, which is not handsome. I am not very well, and much wearied out this day; so that I must take leave, after I have given your lordshipp the assurances of my being,

May it please your LORDSHIPP,

Dunker, July 6th
1658. N. S.

Your most humble, fathfull, and obedient servant,

WILL. LOCKHART.

My lord, poor Mr. Swift is dead: I feare he hath not left his wyfe very rich. I have desyred my wyfe to importune your lordshipp in her behalf, and I begg she may be favourably heard. I shall entertaine Mrs. Swift in my family, till she can be better provided for; and I hope his highness will extend his charity towards her, since her husband died in his service; and tho' their might be abler men then he, I am confident their was not a more faithfull trew-hearted man living. I have taken one Mr. Cooke in his roome, who is a very ingenious, and, as I hope, honest man, tho' I have ever observed that rule, that my secretary could not doe my master nor me any considerable injury, tho' he should designe it. I writt to your lordshipp concerning a vessel, that is in this harbour. I am much pressed about her by those, that pretend themselves to be interrestes. The hull I thought had been old, because she wanted masts and yards; but it seems she hath never been at sea, and is not yett compleated. I received, by the gentleman I sent to court to enqwyer after the king's health, a very civill letter from the cardinal. He speaks nothing as yett of his comming into these quarters. I apprehend, that, till the king be in perfect health, wee shall not see him here, nor be able to doe any thing in settling the contribution. Before the card. went, he gave ma. general Morgan 200 Lewises, and hath promised him the lyke sum yearly, as additionall to his pay. He told me he would axe leave from his highness, to make me a present: I answered, to give way to that would be worse then to begg it; and that, so long as I served his highness, I durst take no gifts.

Lockhart to secretary Thurloc.

May it please your LORDSHIPP,

THE cardinall sent count Morrett to me this morning, and by him a very melancolly letter concerning the king's indispositione. He hath lett me also know, that he is Vol. lx. p. 45
reddey to deliver Mardick to me, which hath oblidge me to recall another regiment from the army, not being able to garrison it from this; and when I have sent that regiment, they will not be able to keep more then the fort, as it was, when it was taken from the Spaniards; for by the stay of the court at Mardick, and the season of the year, which is dry, and occasioneth the blowing of the sands, all the works made this winter are filled up, and levelled with the sand. It's trew, the greatest part of the pallisados stand; but the out-works are so vast, and so little in defence, as it will require more men to man them then to keep Dunkirk; and besyds, the putting of these out-workes in defence will stand a world of mony, and the keeping of them up will be the making of them new once every yeare; for no worke, that is made of sand, can stand above six or eight months, except they be covered with stone or fodd, of which there is little that's good to be had thereabout. If his highness have not alreddy resolved upon the fittest means for keeping of the Splinter, which certainly is a harbour not to be neglected, I could offer it to him as my humble oppinion, that the best way for his so doing is to build on the banck of the Splinter, which is oppositt to the wooden fort, a fort of stone capable of a dozen of gunns, and a lesser one, where the wooden fort is capable of five or six gunns. These two forts will be kept at lesse charge then a frigott of 24 gunns, and will secure the Splinter better then Mardick can do, tho' it were made as strong as art can make it. I know it may be objected, that the building of these two forts will cost a great deal of money; to which it may be answered, that the expence of the garisone of Mardick will stand

A.D. 1658. stand his highness in more in two years, then what will need to be expended on the two forementioned forts. His highness promised he would send over one Tooffine, ane ingeniniere. I have need of one; I am forc't to use in some one Jurbiere, who waited upon my lord Faconberge in his journey to Callais, and pretends to be well known to your lordship. I am not well satisfied either with his humor or ability; and if your lordship hath not a particular kindnesse for him, I shall discharge him, and doe as well as I can myself, till a more able ingeneer is sent over. I have not disposed of the towne major's place, though it be at present reasonably well discharged; but it is a place of that trust and importance, as I shall begg, that his highness or your lordship may appoint one; and I must also make it my humble sute, that some honest and confident person may be sent over, who may be entrusted with the collection of his highness revenew heare, and with the contribution. When it shall be settled, it will be fit, that he give good cautione at London for his fidelity; for in a little time the profitts of this place, by revenew and contribution, will amount to a very considerable summe yearly. My last told your lordshipp, that I imployed one capitaine de Vall of Dover: he was recommended by Mr. Noell. If it should be thought fit to continue him, he must be ordered to forbear all trading upon the account of a merchant. I found one capitaine Johnson commissioned commissary for the store of provision: I find him a fathfull and diligent man as to all appearance; and therefore shall pray, that he may be continued. I have appointed till further order a commissary for the magazines of amunition: he hath also been very diligent, and has, by his industrie, gathered together at least the valew of 500 l. worth of powther, shotte, tooles, and other instruments of warr, that were scattered in the French camp, and hid in several corners of this place.

Count Morrett informed me this day, that the cardinal is advised of a plott the Spanyards have to seduce and withdraw the ecclesiasticks from this place; and therefore conjured me to engage them to stay by all good usuage and faire promises. I gave him a civill answer, tho' I shall pray, that the Spanish plotts in so farr may prosper; and as far as hanfomely I can, I shall cooperatt with them.

I had a trumpet this day from marquis de Carracene, and am putt in hopes, that coll. Johnes shall be sent heare within two or three days upon his parole, till his exchange can be agreed upon. It's possible poore coll. Drummond may live: if it please God he doe, I must beg, that his highness may let him have some charge heare. I shall send over the muster-rolls of the four regiments, and shall muster that regiment, that comes from the army, so soone as they arryve at Mardick. I have appoynted a committee of the chiefe officers in the foure regiments here to visitt the Fort-royall, and to agree upon a constant course for carrying on the works their. I imploy 200 men dayly at the reparatione of the works of this place; and tho' I say in the beginning of my letter, that the regiment, that goes to Mardicke, will not be able to maintaine the out-works of that place; yet I am resolved to assist them with 200 commanded men from this garrison, who (since the enemie are in the badd posture they are in) may be able to keep the whole works, till I be able to receive his highness pleasure concerning them. If the fort of Mardick be reduced to its old limitts, the pallisados their will be usefull at the Fort-royall. I pray that the provisions and the mony may be hastned over; and having of late been very troublesome to your lordship by my tedious scribbles, I shall henceforth endeavor to be a better husband of your lordship's tyme, and shall not importune your lordship, but when their is extraordinary cause for it. I am,

May it please your LORDSHIP,

Dunkirke, July 6th;
 sti. no. 1658.

Your most humble, fathfull and obedient servant,

WILL. LOCKHART.

I must remember your lordshipp of what I said in my former concerning the forme of an oath of alledgance, and a commission to administer it; as also I must beg your pleasure concerning a deputation from this place to his highness, of which I writt in one of my former. His majestie's sicknesse putts a stopp to all things heare. I beleieve the army will not make any considerable attempt. It's possible the enemie may take courage upon it, and therefore no tyme must be lost in sending over all things necessary for the defence of this place.

Lockhart

Lockhart to secretary Thurloc.

A.D. 1658:

MY LORD,

THERE is a letter come to my hands, directed to my brother at Dunkerke, which I thought fit to open; and now I have perused it, and seen the effect of it, I thought it no lesse fit to give your lordshipp the trouble of reading it, which I have here sent along with this. You see how bluntly (but I hope it will likewise appear, how honestly) I deal with your lordshipp, in offering these impertinences to your consideration. I know not the person concerned at all; but if your lordshipp approve him, and be desirous he should be employed in the way he aymes at, I have but to receive your commands, which shall be punctually obeyed: or if either in this, or any other charge here, you will be pleased to recommend any other person, I shall readily comply with your lordshipp's directions. I look only at my master's honour and service, whereof I know you to be the most competent judge; and therefore in this, and all things else, a word from you shall be a law to,

MY LORD,

Dunkerke, the 6th of July, 1658. [N. S.]

Your lordshipp's most humble

and most obedient servant,

WILL. LOCKHART.

General Montagu to secretary Thurloc.

MY LORD,

THIS morninge, about five a clocke (through God's mercy) I came safe to an anchor in this roade, and the Richard and Swift-sure in my company. The wind presentinge faire, I was loath to loose the opportunity of withdrawinge these great shippes from amonge the sands they were encompassed with on the coast; and though I had not tyme to see my lord Lockhart, yet I took leave of him by letter, desiringe to know, if he had any other service for mee, or the fleete (I havinge before spared him 300 barrells of powder, and a proportion of shott and spikes, and such thinges are verie useful at Dunkirke, and ordered shippes to attend his orders both at Dunkirke, Gravelin and Calais). It shall be noe unnecessary digression here to tell you of the prudent, skilfull, and most laborious and industrious deportment of the embassador in the service of his highness yonder with very much advantage thereunto, and to the satisfaction and love of the forces under him; and truly havinge beene an eye-witness thereof, I should be very unjust to him, if I should not put my testimonie thereunto. In his letter to mee he seemed to make it very requisite for mee to take my leave of the king, whom he said (if his health served him) would returne to Mardyke within three or four dayes; but consideringe the kinge went sick from Mardyke, and I thought would take care of his body not to come out againe, till he were perfectly well, and Bergen beinge taken, whither I thought he would rather goe then to Mardyke, (if he did returne) Calais also being just in my way home, I sent in my boate to the governor, to know if it were a convenient opportunitye for to present myselfe before the kinge, queene, and cardinall, to receive their commands, before I returned, who, by the cardinall's direction, invitted mee ashore; and accordingly I went on thurs-day, and dined with the governor, and after had the favor to waite upon the queene and duke of Anjou, who used mee with great respect and civilitye, and great expressions of affection for his highnesse, the cardinall beinge also present; and when the queene retired, kept with mee, and discoursed, and shewed mee extraordinary favor; and when his eminence had dined, I went to his owne palace to give him a particular visite, who still continued, or rather encreased, his respect towards mee; had mee into his bed-chamber in private; and after expressions of his greate affection for my master, and wonderfull kind esteeme of the extraordinary entertainment the duke of Crequi, and his nephew, had here, for which he desired my assistance to helpe to make his returne of thanks to his highnesse, he told me, that the kinge was ill d'une fièvre redoublée (that was his expression, which I well know not what it meanes); and though he hoped there was noe danger, yet it was of greate importance, (because of possibilityes) that wee had correspondence about it; and that he would take care I should be still advertised how it fared with the kinge, that his highness might be advertised thereof; and yesterday, since I was under sayle for this place, I had a letter from the governor of Calais, that tells mee with greate joy, that the kinge found himselfe much amended. The cardinall was pleased to make a proposition to mee, which I told him, if he desired, I would acquaint my master therewith, the which he prayed mee to doe: it was, that he had intelligence of above 20 ships of the

VOL. VII.

H h h

Spaniards

A.D. 1658. Spaniards now goinge out of Cartagena, to convoy out there India fleete, and bringe others home from the Canaries (if I remember well); and he said, that the kinge of France had 10 or 12 ships of good force about Marseilles or Toulon; and that, if you would appoint as many others, they should joyne together, and make one fleete, to hinder the Spaniard from goinge out. If you thinke this to be embraced, you may instruct somebodye to goe to the cardinall, and agree speedily about it; but if you will give me leave to offer a little of my opinion, I suppose, whether such a thinge can be effected tymely for the particular occasion or not, yett it is a good hint to treat about keepinge a conjoynd fleete in those seas, where wee must always have one, or lose the Streights trade, or suffer the Spaniards wealth to come in at ease. And if you had not only the French, but the Portugall also joined with you in a fleete in those seas, I thinke it would be much to your advantage, and very forelye prejudiciall to the Spaniard.

I have received more letters from capt. Stokes, which complaine much of the discontent (though not mutinous) of the shippes with him, that have beene out very longe; saies, that he is not wearye to serve his highnesse; but if the shippes with him might be exchanged, and sometymes fresh shippes goe for that service, it might be carried on with much more chearfullnesse. To ease your further trouble, I shall here subscribe,

MY LORD,

June 26. 1658. Nasebye
in the Downes.

Your lordshipp's most faithfull and humble servant,

E. MONTAGU.

I was much enquired of by the French of best quality, whether monsieur Montpouillan had favor shewed him in England, or the cause why it was not. I told them I could not tell, but I thought somethinge was done in respect unto him.

Major general Jephson to secretary Thurloe.

SIR,

Vol.lix. p.254. I HAVE not much to trouble you withall this weeke, save some little intelligence which I have gained since my comming hither, which was but the last night; nevertheless I got an opportunitye to speake with count Slippenback, of whose interest in the king's counsells and affection, I have formerly given you notice. The chiefe reason, which made me soe earnest to speake with him soe late at night, was, that I might be able to give you some account of the soe suddaine departure of the elector of Brandenburg's embassadours from this court, which hee told mee was upon this occasion: The king desired to know their power, whether they were fully authoriz'd to conclude a peace with him in the behalfe of their master; and desired, that if they thought not fitt to shew their power to him, or some of his counsell, it might (at least) bee done to some indifferent persons, proposing the ministers of some of the princes of the empire, which were here present. This they did not accept of; whereupon the king sent them word, that hee had now reason to beleieve what hee had formerlye heard, that their commission was only to propose the elector of Brandenburg's mediation for a peace betwixt him and the K. of Poland, which I hear the king of Suede tooke in great indignation, and sent them word, that hee very much wondered, how their master could believe, that hee would accept of him for a mediator, who had made himselfe a party, not only by a treatye, but by sending part of his forces to joyne against him in Prussia; but that if the elector had a desire to treat with him, particularlye for the re-establishment of a good correspondence betwixt them two, hee was ready to accept it. Hereupon they left this place, much discontented. Some say they intend to goe noe farther than Hamburgh, there to expect a farther power: others thinke

el. of Brand. is so e n g a g e d to k. of Poland, and h. of Austria, that 596 275 433 14 19 18 4 42 70 91 441 584 108 578, (with whom I that he hath r a t i f i e d a a l l i a heare certaynlye 443 253 247 23 36 12 44 2 100 89 91 87 strict 62 8 49 3 36 n c e that this is no other than he e x p e c t 19 7 14 since my being there) 443 449 275 343 372 451 253 29 21 52 70 7 54
e d and that no thing 89 91 108 desired. For my owne part, I am still of my old opinion, 443 343 452 will make them f r i e n d s b u t the of the Swed. army to 503 319 446 37 59 67 70 30 9 26 11 6 12 444 approach 365 549 118 441 his c o u n t r y, 245 7 17 6 19 103 23 24, which I doe still both hope and believe will bring it to passe. I doe not beleieve you will heare of any greate store of action in these parts, before the corne bee ripe; for the country people run all away from their houses upon the approach of an armye, and at this time of the yeare leave nothing behind them; so that I con-

I conceive it impossible for an army to goe through with any considerable designe, untill A.D. 1658: there bee sufficient provision in the field both for bread and provinder. Sir Phillip Meadowe is not yett come hither, but I expect him every houre. I hope to-morrow to have audience, and shall doe the best I can in the particulars committed to my charge by your letters, whereof I hope to give you some account by my next from some place inclining towards England. If I find not a ship at my return to Hamburgh, (which I am confident will bee the next weeke) you will heare of mee goeing towards Holland, which I shall bee very sorry for, both for mine owne losse of time, and your charge. In the meane time, I shall only kisse your hands, and remaine Flensburgh, 27th June, 1658.

Your faythfull and affectionate humble servant,

W. JEPHSON.

General Montagu to secretary Thurloc.

MY LORD,

THIS eveninge I have received a letter from the Splinter, advertisinge mee, that Furne is surrendred to the French, and that on friday last they layd seidge to Newport. Here are come 300 men wounded and sicke from Dunkerke, which I have disposed to Sandwich (most of them) to be looked after. I thought requisite to trouble you with this little advice; and not having more, subscribe,

MY LORD,

Aboard the Nasebye in the Downes, June 27. 1658. 6
a clocke in the eveninge.

Your lordshipp's most faithfull and humble servant,

E. MONTAGU.

Secretary Thurloc to Henry Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland.

May it please your EXCELLENCYE,

HIS highnesse hath writt a letter to your excellencye and the councell, touchinge colonell Clerke's arreares, which he directs to be satisfied out of lands in Ireland. The reason and justice whereof appears by what his highnesse is pleased to expresse in the letter itself, soe that I need not trouble your excellencye with any thinge of that kinde; only I am bould to recommend hym to your favour in two thinges; first, as to the dispatch of his buisinesse; and secondlye and chiefly, as to the place, where the lands should be sett out, which he will by his agents applye to your excellencye about, that beinge the thinge, which is likeliye to make this graunt of his highnesse to hym to be nothinge or somethinge. And therefore I would humblye begge of your excellencye to graunt hym his desires therein, verily beleevinge, that he will desire nothinge but what is fitt and reasonable to be done. And I am the more bould to be earnest with your excellencye in this particuler, because I knowe, that my brother colonel Ewer was noe gainer by the wars, and left a much lesse estate behinde hym, then the world possiblie may thinke; and though he was my brother, yet I may say without immodestie, that few officers of his quality, and who had done the service, which he had, and that died in the service, but had some testimony from the state given to their children after their death: but truly neither he nor his have yet had the arreares due to them; and now I knowe they will come with great disadvantage after the disposition of soe much land, if some favour be not affourded. Besides, truly colonel Clerke is soe usefull a man here, that much is due to him upon that account, and I knowe his highnesse intends him a respect herein; but wee all doe depend upon your excellencye's favour, whereby you will oblige a whole familie. I remeyne

Your EXCELLENCY's most humble, faithfull,

28. June, 1658.

and obliged servant,

JO. THURLOE.

His highnes letter to the councell was first drawne, directeing, that colonel Clerke should have his land set out to him in such place as he should choose; but a clause was afterwards omitted by me, choosinge rather to leave it to your excellency, being confident, that by your favour it would be all one to him, which I humblye entreate on his behalfe.

Captain

Captain Stoakes to secretary Thurloe.

A.D. 1658. RIGHT HONOURABLE,

Vol. lix.
p. 263.

BY every post, since my coming into this harbour, I have given your honour a particular account of what hath been worth your notice. I finde my letters goe and come safe, so shall not trouble you with a repetition, having in all sufficiently intimated, how much it will conduce to his highness service I be speedily furnisht with another recruit of victualls, and all manner of stores be forthwith sent me unto Tholon, it being judg'd by me the most convenient place, these people being very civill unto us, and wee have not bin wanting on our parts to returne what we are able. The Kent and Guiny are come to mee, and had done eminent service, had not they of Leghorne advised the enemy. They chased five galleys bound for Naples ten leagues backward into port Longona, and had surpris'd the Guilder coming out of Leghorne roade, (a shipp belonging to Monte Cimili) they being come almost in shott of them, before they made what they were, and then gott into the mould. It is two post since I accus'd the receipt of the instructions your honour mentions in the seaventh currant; in reference to which, have parted the fleet equally with capt. Whitston, whom I have dispatcht to the duke of Mercure, who commands the fleet, and is at Aix, five leagues off, to advise him the frigatts are ready to waite his commands. Uppon his returne, I shall sayle, having taken in my victualls, and finde it to be but bare three monthes: those now come to me have bin twice as long in fitting, which I mention, if it be his highness pleasure to continue me abroad any longer, it were high tyme they were already coming to mee, and not depend upon uncertainty of winde and weather; otherwise we shall be forced to come into harbour to provide victualls, which will be no small impediment to his highness service, and a greatt burden uppon my spirit, not to be able to answer what his highness may expect. I beseech your honour, as you have bin a meanes to take one great burden from me, in relation to my credit, you would likewise give order I may not want that, which will inable me to doe service. Uppon the very first certainty of the good news from before Dunkirke, the fleet made a generall rejoyceing, and we finde we have a second cause, of the taking of Dunkerke. In my former advised, that with the five frigatts, which I intended for Leghorne, from thence to Tripoli, and taking Leghorne in my way back to this place; soe that if your honour thinke fitt, your commands may come that way, as well as this. In reference to your honour's commands by way of Genoa, I dispatcht two frigatts thither to demand satisfaction for the ship Delight, of which shall give you a further account from Leghorne, remayning,

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

Lyme, in Marseilia-bay,
the 29th June, 1658.

Your Honour's faithfull and obliged servant,

JO. STOAKES.

*Intelligence sent by Mr. Downing, resident in Holland.*Copenhagen, 29th June, 1658.Vol. lix.
p. 221.

THE Swedish ambassadors having received new orders to insist firmly upon the exclusion of all strangers ships of war out of the Baltic sea; and to declare, that their troops should not quit the kingdom, till they had contentment upon that point, as an elucidation of the treaty; since for these five days they have not made farther mention thereof, because they expect an answer from the king of some letters lately sent unto him touching those affairs, although to-day the ambassador of France told the grand-master of Denmark, that the Swedish ambassadors have yesterday received orders again not only to insist upon the same, but to let them know, that if they will not yield to the same, his majesty will quit the affairs of Prussia for a time, and endeavour to reduce this crown to reason; the said ambassadors alleging for a ground of their pretensions, that they find amongst their records of their last treaty of peace, that these were reputed for enemies fleets, which would enter armed into the Baltic sea, with the consent of the two kings of the north: whereupon the ambassador Beuningen endeavoured to shew, with what injustice they would ground the interpretation of that treaty by a record, that agrees not with the text; and that they ought to be contented with the ratification of what had been accorded and agreed on, and that they could not allow hereof without offending all their allies of England and the United Provinces, with whom they made the last alliance, which would thereby be much weakened. Wherefore, lest the Swedes should have occasion to force this crown, it were most expedient to insist upon this point, wherein England and the United

Provinces

Provinces are so much interested, and not to stand always upon uncertainties, for the A.D. 1658. Swedes would never want pretences to usurp the same; besides it would be now decided, because now the Swede is engaged against Poland, Hungary, Muscovy and Brandenburg, it is not likely he will detain his forces here upon no other reasons; and if he had other, he would not allege them for his not going away; for then the pretension of what is past in Guinea, which the Swedes began to move, might be made use of for that purpose, with less offence to strangers. The reasons, which the ambassador Beuningen used to hinder this business, easily take place with the Dane; but the reasons, which they use against the said ambassador, have no effect; and after the said threats from the king of Swedes own hand, I fear the ambassador Beuningen's reasons will be less considered, and that the fear, which those threats cause, as well as the continual complaints of the vexations and extorsions from the soldiers, committed in the cities and country of Funen, Jutland, and Holstein, where they totally ruin all the inhabitants, reducing them to beggary. When the king here and his commissioners have discoursed with the Swedish ambassadors about the said letter of the king their master, the ambassador Beuningen will endeavour to discover their opinions thereupon.

Berlin, June 29th.

The queen of Poland arrived yesterday here, and was received a league off by the elector and electrice, with all imaginable respect: to-day they have been for the most part with her majesty, and have had divers debates in the presence of the generals of the army electoral; it is thought, about the landing of soldiers, that the king of Swede intends about Dantzick.

Cracow, 23^d June.

The army of the king of Hungary marcheth towards the frontiers of Silesia, and will encamp near Crossen. The said king's ambassadors, in their visits given to the states ambassador Isbrants, offer to entertain all good correspondence as charged it to do from their master. The king of Poland is preparing to go to the dyet at Warsaw, which is to begin 10th of July. In the last audience of the king of Poland, the ambassadors of Hungary have consented, that the succession of the crown of Poland may be granted to the great duke of Muscovy. The states ambassador Isbrants is to accompany the queen of Poland to Berlin, and after to Warsaw to the dyet, to endeavour to moderate the resolutions there, that the peace with Sweden may not be desperate, but a good accommodation made, if possible.

Brussels, 9th July.

The king of England is expected here, for his baggage and train are already come: here is news of the taking of Dixmuyden by the marshall de Turenne. There is everywhere so great a fear and consternation, that the country comes in with their goods to Antwerp for safeguard, and into other cities about. Also I am assured, that a burgo-master of Bruges, having complained to Don John of the evil government and the weakness of the cities of Flanders, for satisfying the contribution, &c. demanded of them, was for the same so ill used, that the officers there present had hardly power to save his life, which was one cause, that the said town refused Don John the passage he demanded; and that the citizens were so enraged, that they could scarcely be hindered from the pillaging Don John's baggage without the gates.

Dantzick, 29th June.

Upon information that the Swedes attempt to pass the Vistule near Dirsan, and to master that place, this city hath sent thither provision and ammunition, also 200 or 300 dragoons of Brandenburg, who heretofore offered to guard those shores against the Swedes. The Swedish men of war are still in the road, to take all forbidden merchants goods. The king of Poland will be suddenly at the dyet at Warsaw, where there will be a peace concluded with the Muscovite and Cossacs, and perhaps with Sweden.

Berlin, 2^d July.

The duke of Holstein hath yielded up to the king of Sweden his claim he had upon Travemunde near Lubeck, which put them in great fear, and made them increase the garison.

Bruges, 8th July.

The French have put a garison into Furnes, the fortifications whereof were demolish'd by the Spaniards, which increaseth hereabouts the great fears. The Spaniards have no army, but have put all their men in garison about the frontiers, which hath put dissention between the generals Don John and the prince of Condé, both which are now we know not where. The states begin to think of their safety, desiring to cantonize with the United Provinces. The French are every day hated more and more, for favouring the heretics; and many devices there are to render the English odious, especially of their insolences in Dunkirk, of their

A.D. 1658. their sacrileges, taking tobacco in churches, lighting it at the candles before the Virgin and Christ, &c. It is believed, that Ostend will be lost this year. This city and Gaunt and Ostend are all shut, and no man to go in or out. Now comes the news, that the English have taken leave within 20 miles of Brussels; and if half be true, that is reported, the English have taken above 50 places.

Antwerp, 9th July.

The people run away in great feare from the armies, and think themselves not safe till they are got into that part of Flanders, that belongs to the states general, whither come 500 carts together with bag and baggage, women, children, cattle, &c.

Copy of a letter feigned to be written from Calais, and printed at Brussels.

AFTER the surrender of Dunkirk, 25. June, the king in his royal robes entered. The English are masters thereof to the cost and shame of France, and to the irreparable prejudice of religion, since that those traitors to God and their king seem to be there introduced and establish'd by our ministers and generals for no other end but to ruin intirely the place; for there is no excess nor insolences imaginable, which they commit not to the despising of the Catholic faith; so that the profanation of churches, and all sorts of sacrileges, the cruelties towards all churchmen, the ravishing of nuns, and all sorts of villainies are there practised with all liberty; and these infidels brag in letters written into Holland, that they will turn the most holy places of that town into stables for their horses and other cattle; so that this success, for which our side make trophies, produces nothing but horror and abomination, and makes all France expect no better fruit from the policy of a particular person, who governs it by the only rule of his own ambition and own interests, these barbarians testifying as much by their pride and threats, that they already made towards our places, and by their ill usage to refuse our entrance into their town, and to the very wounded, that go from Berg thither to be dressed, and their not suffering the marshal of Turenne, who hath served there with so much care and punctuality, to enter, unless himself alone, and that seldom, and with as many precautions as one could use to a declared enemy. Finally it is now too manifest, that our minister can avoid the reproach of having in this business occasioned the butchery of a great number of our best soldiers, and exposed all the rest, even to the king's own person, to extreme danger, to banish religion, and go himself from that place, and to establish the most horrible impiety, that ever reigned amongst men; and it is not to be doubted, but he that suffereth himself to be so easily led by his own will, will draw down upon France all the curses, and the most severe judgments, that heaven hath prepared for its greatest enemies.

Cologne, 4th July.

It is reported, that the conclave of electors is dissolved, the strangers let into Franckfort again, and the election put off for 6 weeks; that the king of Hungary, weary of waiting, will be gone and join his forces to fall presently upon the Swedes, who have refused to receive the Brandenburgish ambassador; but there are no letters of credit, that confirm this news concerning the electoral college.

Lockhart to secretary Thurloc.

May it please your LORDSHIPP,

Dunkirke, July 9th, 1658. [N. S.]

Vol.lix. p.265.

I HAVE received your lordshipp's by captain Guy, and am more sensible of his highness goodnesse to me, in his putting so favorable constructions upon my weak endeavors in his service, then I can expresse; but the language my gratitude can speake is, that I shall, by the assistance of God, add as much of paines, care and diligence, to all my endeavors in his service, as is possible for me: I may say I have no more of faithfullnesse and zeale to give; for since I have had the honour to be imployed in this businesse, I have layd owt the little stock I can pretend to have of these, without any reserve.

My lord, you take notice of the act concerning religione, and the clause in it oblidging his highness to confirme not only what is mentioned touching the liberty of the Romish religione, but the articles with the towne. That businesse was carried in much confusione; the cardinal feared a mutiny that day, and was forced to find imployment for most of the cavallrie out of the camp; and their was then no articles signed save those to the garisone, which I did see, which have, as I said before, only one article relaiting to the towne. Mr. Talon, after I had been two nights in the towne, brought me the large ones to the bowrgoise; and he with some of the magistrates, that came along with them, desyred I might sygn them. I was then going to court, and said I would speak to his eminence in it, to whom I declared my mynd truly in it; and, as I conceive, he was satisfied; for I never heard more about it; only I must observe by the way, that when Mr. Talon brought brought me these articles, they had been in that confusione at Mr. Turenne's signing of A.D. 1658. them, as, instead of signing the last sheet, he had signed the middle, and so they were forced to carry it back againe to be new signed. But, upon the whole, I take the boldnesse humbly to offer it to his highness, that upon the account of his being unclare, which of these articles are meant in the treaty, and upon my informatione, that I did not see the large articles signed, till after I had been two nights in the town, and that even then, because of a mistake, they were forced to gett them new signed; he demurrs the ratificatione of that act, till such tyme as I cleare the abovesaid particular with his eminence. This, if the French ambassador presse his highness signing, will be, I thinke, no ill answer, and will, in the meane tyme, keep his highness in that freedome, as to the libertie he gives to the Romish Catholicks, that all the favors they meet with must be held of grace rather then right, tho' the grownd of his highness waving the foresaid act must be pretended to be upon the scruple concerning the articles, which I hope I shall be able to revell and perplex, as the ratifying of that act shall fall to the grownd. The declaratione herewith sent, which I have emitted lately, hath a clause in it, ordaining the keeping of the Lord's day to all the inhabitants of the towne, and discharging any personall punishment to be inflicted upon, or pecuniall mulct to be levied upon any inhabitant of this place, who shall follow his ordinary vocatione upon the days ordinarily called holy-days, doth a little offend the priests: fyve of them have taken leave upon it; but I have satisfied the magistratts concerning it. And indeed your lordshipp would have admired to see the posture this towne was in last Lord's day: not a shop open, nor any thing that was undecent to be seen. The holy-days, as the bigotts alledge, beynn alreddy to be very much prophaned: indeed I must say, that the temper of the generallity of the people heare is douce and tractable; I am confident a 100 French wou'd be more unquyett and unmanageable then the whole body of this towne. I have ordered the magistrates to cause make a pulpitt in the town-house, which is a roome, that openeth with a great porch upon the market-place: the roome is not much lesse than the chappel at Whitehall, and more publick then the parish-church here. I intend to use that place for our assembling together, till a Protestant church can be built. I have alreddy marked the grownd, where it is to be built, and have buried lieutenant-colonel Fennick, and some other of the chief officers their. I am informed by some, who e'er long will, I hope, make publick professione of that tenth they have hitherto out of feare concealed, that their is a Flemish minisher near Hunscoth, who doth privately preach, and sometymes administer the sacrament in the night. I have gott one here, who hath undertaken to lett him know I desire to speak with him. If I can perswade him to stay here, he shall want no encouragement; for besydes that he might procure me a good correspondence with the Protestants in the cuntry, I would make him preach once or twice a week in Dutch, which, I hope, may have good effects amongst the inhabitants. I am informed also, that some of our souldiers goe to mafs, and have ordered their being enquyered after. I intend to prosecute them, as those who keep intelligence with the enemye, and am sure they will doe so, if they meet with opportunity; neverthelesse, I doe not mean to punish them otherwayes, then by putting some publick disgrace upon them, and so exclude them the garrifone.

His highness desyers concerning Mardick were answered yesterday. I have received the place, and have perswaded two companies of the French guards to stay a day or two with the 4 companies I put there yesterday. I sent for one of the 4 regiments, that are with the major-general, to come back to me here; and was a little troubled to find, that when it should have arryved yesternight, their came two letters, one from Mr. Turenne, and another from the major-general, giving me reasons, why at present a regiment could not be spared. I have writt a civill letter to Mr. Turenne, holding forth to him the need I have of that regiment, and have begg'd his excuse for my sending a positive order to the major-general for it: till it come, I am forced to keep all these four regiments at every other night's duty, and am not able to carry on ovr working save a little about the breach and counterscarp of this place. If the cavalry were aryved, I should make the soldiers worke apace for their 10 d. per day; and now I mention the horse, I begg that his highness may allow them all back and breast, and carabines; and if his highness could spare 12 1500 corslets for our pikemen, I would accustome them to weare them, when they mount their guards, and at all other reviews: a stand of 500 pickes well armed, with head-piece and corslett, will be a very terrible thing to be seen in these countries. I feare the king's sickness will occasion the court's removall from this place, before any contributione be settled by way of treaty or agreement: but we shall not suffer much by it; for at present, by reason of the armyes being here, little or nothing can be levied. I have given protections to some few poor people for their coves, and when the poor fowls come to ask what contributione they should pay, (when, God knows, they needed rather a little charity to help them to some bread to preserve them from starving) I told them all the contributione I would demand at present was, that they would pray for the protector of England; for which they thanked me with tears, and falling down upon their knees.

So

A.D. 1658. So soone as the horse come, and the armies are retired, I hope I shall, (if no agreement be made for contributione) by the Lord's assistance, be able to raise rather more then will come to our share, if devyded, then lesse. I am of the opinione, that provisions for the forces at Dunkerk and Mardick will be made heare cheaper then in England. I am sure, when I deale with these, that pretend to have brought over provisions owt of love to us, and upon his highness incuradgement, I find them more unreasonable then any other. I have taken a shipp's ladning of coales from major Burton, which he sayeth came over by your lordshipp's order; and, as he pretends, the pryce is made at 40 shillings per chaldron; and the unloading them in bylanders, (for he would not come in to the harbor) and carrying them from the bylanders to the cellars, will come to some 2 shillings per chaldron more, besydes that he payeth no custome at the harbor; and I am offered by others, to furnish as many coals as wee need, for 26 or 27 shillings per chaldron. It is the same thing in all other provisions, that he or any body else sends, upon pretence to serve the publick, and accomodate the army. I shall go about the buying of wheat and rye, to make bread for the present subsistence of the forces, and shall keep the months provisiōe of biskitt in store, least at any tyme, either by seage or otherwayes, we should be putt to a pinch; and once in a yeare, the maggazine of bread, I mean the month's biskitt for 4000 men, must be renewed, and the old given owt, and rebaitted of the soldiers pay; but before the old stock of biskitt so laid in be meddled with, the new stock to the same quantity must be first in store; and so this place will never want six weekes provisiōe of bread, which is the staff of man's life. If I find the butter and cheese may be kept without spoyling, I shall lykewise save it; but I think, for provisions that are not to be made use of save once in a year, all cheese, or at least salt beefe and bacon, or pork in lieu of the butter will be best. My little purse of money hath many issues, and will not hold out long. I shall much desyer, that when money comes, the soldiers may be as much taken of provisions as may be, and left to make their own marketts; it will keep cownts more distinct and cleare, and will be more satisfactiōe to the soldiers. I find the wheat here, regulatted according to the pryses in the forementioned declaratione or order, will amount to about 40 shillings per quarter: the wheatt is very good, but if any can be sent much cheaper, I cowld wish some good quantity were bought for the use of this place. I send your lordshipp a copy of some instructions I have given to the committee of officers. I find that my looking to the gros and generall of things doth his highness work here better, then if I should amuse myself about every particular. Poor colonel Drummond died yesterday. I am going to give order for his buriall, and am not without hopes, that before many weeks passe, my letters shall not give your lordshipp the trouble of such tedious stories, as now you are importuned with by,

May it please your LORDSHIPP,

Your most humble and obedient servant,

WILL. LOCKHART.

My lord, I hope e'er long the pryses of all things mentioned in the declaratione or order may be lessened: they are now as low as can be. If I have not put the vallues of money as it ought to be, I shall alter it according as your lordshipp shall order me. I imagine, if his highness would countenance a voluntary contributione in England, Scotland and Ireland, for the reliefe of the poor oppressed Protestants in Flanders, his highness purse might be spared, and money might be raised to build one or two Protestant churches; and enough might rest to doe any charity, that were requisitt for the encouradging of these poore people to settle here: but I submit this to your lordshipp's judgment as to the mooving of it. I have, as I was closing this, received a letter from the cardinall, that the danger of the king's sicknesse is over, and there is greatt hopes of a speedy recovery.

Extract of a letter, writ from a confiding friend at Cologne, dated the 10th of July, 1658. [N. S.]

Vol.lix. p.271.

FOR this time the faithful affection, which I bear to the state of the United Netherlands, hath put me upon to advise you, what I heare and see clearly to come to pass, that the design of the Swedes and their allies is to straiten the said states to deprive them of their commerce, and, if it were possible, wholly to ruin it; which may be clearly gathered and seen, not only by their progress in Flanders, but also that the Swedes endeavour to make themselves absolute masters of all the east seas. Besides all this, I am informed by a good good hand, that the Swedish troops lying upon the Elbe, in the country of Sauwenbergh, A.D. 1658. and thereabouts, being 5 or 6000 strong, have a design to join with the duke of Newburgh, to make themselves masters of Gulick, which is a place so situated, that the state of the United Provinces may be thereby very much incommodated, as formerly happened, which I thought good to signify unto you in these few lines.

Commander Ferentz to the states general.

H. and M. LORDS,

Sas Van Gent. the 10th of July, 1658. [N. S.]

I COULD not omit, according to my duty, to advise your high and mighty lordships, of the alteration of affairs, which hath happened in these parts since the taking of Dunkirk, and the loss, which the Spaniards have suffered in their army. Don John, as for his own person, is at Bruges with his train. The prince of Condé is with some troops in the north, about an hour's march from thence, so that the whole body approacheth this way. There is a great confusion between Don John and the four members of Flanders, and in the last assembly between Don John and some of the commissioners of Flanders: some blows have past, and calling of bastard; so that the whole country is here in a disorder and confusion. And now, in regard the armies draw this way, I desire your high and mighty lordships to give order to reinforce this garrison; for I have already men enough to stand centinels, and the out-works are very ill provided. Now, in regard something may happen at this conjuncture of time, which may put me upon the defence of this place, I shall not be able to do therein what the service of the state doth require, unless your high and mighty lordships be pleased to give order about it.

Major-general Morgan to secretary Thurloe.

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

UPON the 7th instant, marshall Thureine with his armie came before Dirkesmew; and upon the 9th instant, all the French foote, and his highness's 4 regiments, under my conduct, were ordered to be drawne up before the towne, just as the summons was sent in: but the enemy perceivinge, that the whole army was about towne, sent forth commissioners to treat for the surrendring thereof, which accordingly was concluded on in an houre and a halfe's time; and about 2 of the clock in the afternoone, the enemy to the number of 4 or 500 horse and foote marched forth; and marshall Thureine had the towne surrendred to him. It is not as yet knowne, whether it will be kept as a garrison or not: it is a very fine place. The enemies armie flies from us into obscure places; and all the countrie people mightilie dejected, retiringe themselves into woods and boggs, sayinge that they nowe see all Flanders will be lost in a little time. There is a rumour, that some of these chiefeft townes, as Gaunt, does refuse any of the Spanish army to enter in. Marshall Thureine was pleased to acquaint me last night, that he does not intend to remove for some daies farre from this place, untill he heare somethinge of the kinge's recoverie, who lies sick at Callais of a highe violent feaver. Since our comeinge before the towne, wee have had great booties of cattle brought into the armie, to the number of at least 2000. It is a very strait countrey, all full of rivers and narrowe passages; and it is not much to be admired, that the enemy does not stand us, they haveing not much above 1000 foote, besides these garrisons; neither can they make any more. If these victories bee vigorously prosecuted, it will almost ruinate the Spaniards interest in Flanders this yeare. I shall add noe more at present, but that I am,

RIGHT HONORABLE,

Camp before Dirkesmew, 10th July, 1658. N. S.

Your very humble servant, &c.

THO. MORGAN.

H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland, to secretary Thurloe.

SIR,

30. June, 1658.

DUNKIRK being (as you say) very considerable for bigness, I suppose the gaining it was not your main end, but a means to such an end, as may answer the great charge of keeping such a place. I am sensible, that by having it we are not like to be infested

VOL. VII.

K k k

so

In the possession of William Cromwell esq;

A.D. 1658. so much with pyrates, nor the Dutch so apt to seek occasion to quarrell. But I make a question, (if you stay here) whether that security will not prove a dear purchase. You know better then I what the French mean that inland place 3 miles from Dunkirk, whether it must be got for us, that we may have a contribution country; or whether they intend to possess it to limit our influence there, and the maintenance of our force to our own purse here. I like well your comprehensive principle, to do good, justice, and right to all; but I think such as would lay a burthen promiscuously upon all the old cavalieer party, do not own that rule; and I wonder those, who can dispense with it, do not rather advise by a total ruin to secure that party, then provoke and necessitate to a perpetuall enmity such, in whose hand you leave power enough to destroy you, when you have made their cause just, which nevertheless I do not think an adequate remedy; for I suppose the most considerable party of the late king's interest are the sons of such cavaleers as are now dead, or of such as have formerly been of your party, and by your narrowness not obliged, or thrust, or kept out from a compliance with you. How will you provide against these? I like the test by an oath much better, because it may be comprehensive of all; but to what shall men swear? Have you any settlement? Does not your peace depend upon his highness life, and upon his peculiar skill, and faculty, and personall interest in the army, as now modelled and commanded? I say, beneath the immediate hand of God, (if I know any thing of the affairs in England) there is no other reason, why wee are not in blood at this day. Will you only abjure the late king's family? I, all competitors for empire, and even commonwealth's-men, will concur in this advice, and judge they have lost no ground. The wise men were but 7. It seems you have made them 9; and having heard their names, I think myself better able to guess what they'll do, then a much wiser man; for no very wise man can ever imagine it. I heartily thank you for your freedom with me; for I deal truly with you. I use none towards any person but yourself, and therefore cannot expect it from any other. I remain

Your very affectionate and faithfull servant,

H. C.

H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland, to lord Fauconberg.

MY LORD,

30th June, 1658.

In the possession of William Cromwell esq;

AS you have gained his highness and these nations a good reputation abroad by your late negotiation into France, so you have preserved it by the handsome reception of the ministers of that king here. I am sorry it could not be purchased at a less rate than the price of your health. I thank God, my indisposition is over. I shall be very impatient, till I hear the like of yours. 'Tis well we have made sure of Dunkirk. Methinks our design should not end so; but if your lordship's shrewd conjecture about Winingberge hit right, Monsieur will put water into our wine. I hope your lordship and my sister do not intend any long stay in the north; though where-ever you are, I know you will be serviceable to his highness's interest; yet I shall suffer a great disappointment in the want of that useful correspondence, by which your lordship hath obliged me. I am, &c.

H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland, to lord Broghill.

MY LORD,

30th June, 1658.

In the possession of William Cromwell esq;

I MUST now really complain of your lordship's long absence from London, having not heard from you in four or five posts, being thereby much more in the dark, than you would have suffered me to be. I am informed, your lordship is visiting your friends this summer season. I am loth to envy your liberty, and would content myself with the expectation, that ere long a parliament may call you to London. I wish no mischief be done there in the mean time. The subjects in the county of Cork have made an address to his highness, with a numerous subscription, which I have sent over with others of the like nature to his highness. This letter must run the gantlopp so often, before it reach you, that I think 'tis best for me to conclude here. I remain, &c.

An information concerning frier Rely.

The last of June, 1658.

ON the 7th of this month fryer Rely showed me a letter from one Daly a priest, Vol.lix. p.277. who corresponds with him, declaring that he received from M^r Loghlen a copie of the propofals, sent from the king of Scotts, and instructions likewise from him to the said Daly, to conferr with, and shew the said propofals to such persons as he thought fitt, and therein to be very discrete; which accordingly he did to 3 persons, whome he thought fitt for that designe, viz. captain Henry Crofton, major Burck, and captain Bryn M^r Donogh. These now last-mentioned would but in a manner hear what he proposed to them, saying, that the clergie ever was and should be the destruction of this poore nation, and that they themselves had noe more relation to the king of Scotts then to my lord protector, and words to that purpose; but Crofton did embrace his motion, and desired him to assure M^r Loghlen, that if he had seene or understood any possibilitie in the kings of Spaine or Scotts, or any Christian prince in the world, to send a considerable army into this nation; that by God's helpe be able to secure by sap'fall, or otherwise, the most considerable garisons in the county of Slygo; out of which Daly did date his letter, on account of all the premisses Daly sent to M^r Loghlen.

On the 16th of this month I was with fryer Dromgould, who told me, that in 2 or 3 dayes before, there landed here out of three severall vessels three clergymen, whereof two were Jesuits, and the other a Dominican fryer: the names of two of them were Fitzgerald and Costulogh, the other's name he forgott. The same day above-mentioned, they, and the Jesuit Walker, did part out of towne; and, as Dromgould conceaves, they went to meet M^r Loghlen: what their occasion were, he doth not as yet know.

The 19th of this month, Dromgould shewed me a letter, dated at London the 12th of the same, declaring that the French had noe reason to rejoyce for their victory over the Spaniard near Dunkerk, which left the English, who were there; and that there were twenty thousand horse and foote coming downe from Jermanye to assist the Spaniard, by whose meanes, next to God, these nations should be soone rid from heresy and slavery; and in this letter he compares the French to the month of March, beginning like a lyon, and ending like a lamb.

The 28th of this month, Dromgould told me, That M^r Loghlen should be soone here, or hereabouts; and that he heard he is to goe into Spaine; and sayes, he hopes soone to know what he hath done in his journey, and to what end he goeth.

Colonel Bamfylde to secretary Thurloc.

MY LORD,

ACCORDING to your lordshipp's commands, I had before this tyme endeavoured Vol. lxi. p. 234. to have waited on you aboute the busines I lately proposed to you, but that your lordshipp's indisposition, and the thronge of busineses, which I beleve you have at this tyme on your hands, have prevented mee; soe that I have once more taken the boldnesse to represent to your lordshipp, that if a league with the landgrave of Hefs, and the rest of the Protestant princes in Germany, can be of advantage to his highness service, and theyr raising of forces upon the designe (which I knowe is nowe in agitation) of joyninge with the duke of Niewburgh, I can make it appeare, that I can bee serviceable to you therein. If there are any thowghts of your making a further progress in Flanders, I suppose there will not need many arguments to enforce the usefulness of this proposition, as to your imediate interests; or if you have resolved to content yourselves with what you already stand possessed of, it will bee of great advantage to your allyes: besides this, I am now capable of giving your lordshipp a perfect account of all proceedings at the present diet at Franckfurte, by the means of the ambassadours of the landgrave of Hefs, and of the elector Palatine and others. In fine, I am sure, that I am much more able to serve your lordshipp there, then I have ever bin in any place or busines, since I had the honour to bee known to you; and for my fidelity, I should thinke you may bee secure of it, even from your owne knowledge, of the condition I stand in with the king and his party, which you were pleased to say you had discovered in many intercepted letters; but it is a thing soe visible to all mankinde, whoe know any thing of theyr affayres, that I am confident it is not doubted: soe as haveing abandoned them, and being entirely lost with them, I cannot tell, for whome I should bee suspected of falsehood to you. So as, if you are pleased to beleve me soe horrid a wicked a creature, as that noe vows nor obligations can holde mee firme to your service, and that I am soe greates a foole as to betray my own interest, it cannot much avayle me to use either further arguments or perswasions to gayne your

A.D. 1658. your beliefe. All I shall say more is, that it's reasonable to imagine, that you muste have somebody in Germany to doe your businesse; and that the knowledge I have of those parts, the interest which is visible I have with some of the most considerable persons, together with the French and Dutch tounge, render me as capable of serving you as another; and if you shall please to favour me with that imployment, and to support me in it for a year or thereabouts, I beleive I shall all that time soe make my fortune amongst these princes, as not to be further troublesome to you. But if your lordship be resolved to abandon mee, for whom I have lost all the world, I shall beseech you to let mee know by this bearer, what I am to truste to; and that, if you will not favour mee, that you will not bee my enemy, if I seeke by some other meanes to deliver myself from that distresse, under which I am likely to perish; which will be a great obligation to,

MY LORD,

Your lordshipp's moste humble and moste obedient servant,

JO. BAMFYLDE.

The examination of Henry Mallory gentleman, prisoner in the Tower of London, taken before the right honourable John lord Barkstead, lieutenant of his highness's Tower of London, and one of the justices assigned to keep the public peace of the said county.

Vol. lviii.
p. 326.

WHO saith, that he this examine was taken as one of those that were of the party intended to rise in the county of Suffex for Charles Stuart; and after examination by the lord Goffe and Mr. Scobell, to whom he gave an account, what he knew in that business, he was committed to a soldier in King-street, and from thence to St. James's, where he remained about a month; and on the saturday before doctor Hewett and Mr. Mordaunt were first brought to trial, Mr. Stapley the elder came to this examine's chamber, and told him, he had been with my lord Goffe, and came to consider with this examine of the evidence, that he and this examine was to give against Dr. Hewett; and till then, this examine saith, he knew nothing of his being intended for a witness against Dr. Hewett, or any other person; and the said Mr. Stapley said nothing at all to this examine of Mr. Mordaunt. And this examine further saith, that some time before Mr. Stapley aforesaid came to this examine, he this examine found a note laid in his chamber, by whom he knows not, neither knows by whose hand it was written, the scope of which note was to terrify this examine from being a witness for the spilling or shedding of blood: That the same saturday night, that the said Mr. Stapley was with this examine, there was left in this examine's chamber a sute and cloak; and in the breeches there was wrapp'd up 50 l. in money, with a note, directing him this examine to go to a house in Blackfriers to lodge in; and says he knows not who left the said money and cloaths, neither ever had any speech with any body of cloaths, money, or lodging, or of his escape; but saith, he told my lord Goffe or Mr. Sherley, for aught he knows, 'twas the woman that came to him at Blackfriers: That the monday night following, he this examine made his escape, and went to the house at Blackfriers, as the paper directed him; and saith, that there came a woman several times to him at that lodging, once bringing him linen, another time to advise him to go beyond sea, and another time to take care and keep close in his quarters: and saith, the reason why he conceived that woman was of Mr. Mordaunt's family, was, because she discoursing with this examine about the trial of doctor Hewett and Mr. Mordaunt, the said woman sometimes called the said Mordaunt master; but saith, he knoweth not who she was, neither did he ask her name. And this examine further saith, that the said woman came to him the day after Mr. Mordaunt's trial, and brought him a note written in small characters; and as this examine conceives, was written by a man of judgment, but neither subscribed nor superscribed; but it began, Sir, that worthy action tending very much to the preservation of Mr. Mordaunt's life; and also saith, that by that paper he was advised to go beyond sea, and remain there, and assured there should be 50 l. per annum duly returned him during his life, in what place soever he was; and saith, there was more in that paper, that he doth not remember; and the reason why he cannot give any better account of this paper, which gave him that assurance, is, because he tore it within half an hour after he had received it; and also saith, that the said woman or maid told him this examine, that all, that was promised in the said paper, should be made good; and that there was a person going over, with whom he should go; and that he would be ready within two or three days; but the said woman did not name that man, neither does does this examinant know who it was; and saith that he, this examinant walking from that A.D. 1658. lodging in Black-fryers to Thames-street was apprehended, and saith he cannot declare any more.

HEN. MALLORY.

JO. BARKSTEAD.

Barkstead, lieutenant of the Tower, to secretary Thurloc.

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

I Spent a good part of the last night in examining of Mallory according to your direction. Vol. lx. The inclosed is a true copy of his examination. That under his hand is soe interlyned, P. 9. by reason of his unsteady answerings, I send not, but keepe it by mee. I tooke much paynes to make farther discovery from him, but he often affirmed he knowes no more. Not more, but that I am,

Your very affectionate friend and hearty servant,

Tower, July primo, 1658.

The two papers are returned.

JO. BARKSTEAD.

Intelligence.

July 1st. 1658.

THE king of Scotts is now at Oxcon, in the king of Spain's power, and the princefs-royall with him; and there they doe intend to stay, untill the duke of Yorke and duke of Glocester come to them. Now the messenger is come back from Franckfort, and he hath brought word, that the king of Scotts may come if he please, it being a free state; but they feare, as the case stands with them, they shall be able to doe very little for him; but it is so resolved by himself and councill, that he shall goe with all speede. There hath bin a greate falling out betweene the chancellor and the duke of Glocester, because he might not goe along with his brother. There is but two lords to goe along with him; th'one my lord Ormond; the other is my lord Gerrard. In his bed-chamber goes Thomas Killigrew, and Daniel O Nele, and one of the squires, whose name is Armorer, and all the rest are ordinary servants. The chancellor stayes behinde to drive on the greate worke, which is resolved on so soone as the Spaniards army comes to the field. And the Spaniard hath promised Charles Stuart 5000 foote, and arms for them. This is resolved by both the councils. And it is further resolved, that those, who are on this side the sea that are safe, shall be employed again, so soone as the noise is over more. They are much troubled to heare, that one capt. Francis Withrington is now taken prisoner at London. It is that Withrington, I told your honour formerly of; he knowes where Mr. Cooper is to be found, as also capt. Palding, who was one of those who killed coll. Rainborrow. He also can tell where to find Mr. Holder, who was secretary to Sir Marmaduke Langdale, who was sent to the North. Haveing this Withrington, you have all theis people, if he please to confesse. There is one, who is a very active man, whose name is Arthur Hascott; he hath bin a major always for the king; he is about thirty yeares, hath browne haire, and hath had a greate hurt on his face; he wares thereon always a round black patch; he is generally knowne in Kent, and is to be found at the house of Sir Edward Payton.

There is another, who hath bin long acting there; he is about forty yeares, and is grey haired; he is marryed to the siter of Sir John Boyce, and is there to be found. He hath gotten much money, and sent over for the King. This, Sir John Boyce is he, who was governor of Dunington-castle; and I doe beleve you will finde he hath a greate hand in this business; major Bosken hath bin long imploy'd in those parts. There is one, who lyes in Covent-garden; his name is Roscarock; he is trusted by the gentlemen of the West; he and these people of the West have dayly letters pass betweene them. The man hath not bin employed in the last plot, but in the other he was. He hath bin a collonell for the king, and is well knowne all over Covent-garden, and is dayly at John Chace's an apothecaries in Russel-street, the next door to the Dolphin. And there is one John Seymor likewise employed, and hath a brother one coll. Seymor in the West. This John Seymor hath sent over formerly much money, and he is of this and the other plott. He is a young man of about twenty-six yeares, hath black haire, and lyes always in Covent-garden. Now you must be very wary of the lord Lovelace, or else he will doe you much mischief, for he is in greate kindness with the king; therefore pray slip not this.

A.D. 1658.

The chancellor is ordered to lye at Breda, when the king is gone for Franckfort, and secretary Nicholas to come to the Hague, and continue there.

The messenger, that brought the word to the king of Scotts from Franckfort, reported, that the same day he came from Franckfort, the king of Hungary moved in the assembly, that it might be ordered, that the army might be ordered to be true to all the princes of the Empire, provided the said princes would be sworne to be true to the emperor.

The vessel St. John of Bruges, which brought old Crisp into England, is now come to Flushing, and lyes ready to goe out to sea againe, and is commanded by one captain Udbert. There lye two gentlemen at Rotterdam, whose names are Colt, who came lately out of Kent, and were of this last busines.

Charles Stuart went away in all haste. The second day he came to Sevenburgh being monday the 23d June to Oxon, as they said, by an order, which was procured by resident Downing, and were very much enraged; insomuch that the princess-royall was once resolved not to come to the Hague again this yeare, but her minde altered since, so that she came this night. The marquiss of Ormond came to the Hague with the princess-royall, where he now is.

Mrs. Phillips hath bin theis tenn days at the Hague, and she is gone for England in the same fleete from Rotterdam, in which went the hamper, which I sent to Mr. Lucas Lucy.

One Mr. Shaw of Antwerp is imployed to procure money for Charles Stuart for his journey for Franckforte, and doth much busines for Charles Stuart.

The bishop of Mackland hath undertaken to raise and pay a very considerable number of foote.

Several resolutions of the States-General.

8 July [N. S.]

Vol. lx.
P. 15.

THE ambassador of France having communicated it to the assembly, and after there being read two writings, to wit, the copy of the proposition, which was made to the king of France by the envoys of the electors of Mentz and Cologne, for procuring a peace between France and Spain; also the copy of the answer of the said king to the said proposition, it is said and resolved after deliberation, that the agent de Heyde shall in their lordships names go and thank the said ambassador.

Moreover after deliberation it is resolved, that the provinces shall be exhorted to declare speedily for redressing the militia of this state.

In the assembly hath been read the letter that hath been writ to the elector of Cologne in favour of those of the reformed religion in his archbishoprick; and thereupon order'd, that the agent de Heyde shall in person present it to the said elector, so soon as he shall be returned from Francfort to Bonne, or elsewhere in those parts, and by his good offices and endeavours second their lordships good intentions.

9 July.

A letter from ambassador Boreel at Paris, dated the fifth instant, desiring to know the good intentions of the States-General, how he shall behave himself about the declaration made by the Venetian ambassador Justinian, touching the renewing of the alliance between Venice and this state; whereupon it was resolved, that the provinces should be desired to declare themselves herein to-morrow.

11 July.

There hath been read a memorial of the consul of the French nation here, supplicating that the captain, who hath transported hither the ambassador of Portugal, may be permitted to sell the salt wherewith he is laden; also a letter from the college of the admiralty of Zealand, writ at Middleburgh the 8th of this month about the same busines. After deliberation the deputies of the States of Holland have deferred the matter to communicate the same to their principals.

Moreover, in the same assembly, was read the petition of the nobility of Falkenburg in the country beyond the Maese, complaining, that the officers hinder them in the tax of aydes, which they make amongst themselves. Whereupon, after deliberation, it is resolved, that the said petition shall be sent to the commissioners of the States General at Maestricht, to inform themselves with the deputies of the council of state, and to make report thereof.

Major

Major-general Morgan to secretary Thurloe.

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

A.D. 1658.

I Acquainted you in my last of the surrendrie of Dirkesmew to marshall Thureine. Yesterday one of his highnes regiments marched with me, a French regiment of foote, and some of these horse, had a redoubt surrendred to them within a myle of Newport. All the enemies foote, which consisted of 800 and no more, with marques de Curasceine, and the titular duke of York, threw themselves yesterday into Newport; but wheather those persons will continue there, or wee shall beleaguer that place, is not as yett knowne. Marshall Thureine is verie desyrous, that some shippinge should continue neare Ostend and Newport, while this armie is upon the sea-coast. I do assure your honor, Flanders is sorely shaken with this year's service. The messinger beinge ready to be gone, I have no time to inlarge; but, that I am,

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

Your verie humble servant,

Campe, nigh Dirkesmew.
11 July, 1658. Stilo Novo.

THO. MORGAN.

*Lockhart to secretary Thurloe.*Dunkerke, July $\frac{1}{11}$. 1658.

May it please your LORDSHIPP,

HAVING been neecessitated to lett blood by reason of some indisposition, I shall not trouble your lordshipp with much by this. I shall only tell your lordshipp, that Mr. Peters is arryved, and hath acquainted me with some things, that he sayeth your lordshipp hath been fully acquainted with; to the carrying on of which I shall surely contribute my share; and shall pray that his proposalls may prosper and be acceptable to all good men. Their is one comisary Mandossi hath been heare; his pretence was to make up some account with the bakers and apothecaries of this towne, for what they furnished during the seige: he told me had some thing to say to me from the marquisse of Caracene, and after many compliments from the marquisse, he told me, that the said marquisse thought the warr between England and Spayne, was an unhappy warr; and could wish these differences had never been betwixt two nations, that had continued in so long a friendship; and after he had extolled the advantages, that might accrew to England from a peace with Spayne, and had much slighted the alliance betwixt England and France, he had a very foolish conclusion; which was, he desyered to know, if I had any thing to offer to his highness Don John, or his excellence of Caracene, that favoured of peace, or at least of a treaty, which might open the way to a peace, or a cessation. I treated him as civilly as I cowlde. The substance of what I sayd was, that my master's affairs was by the blessing of God in so good a posture, as he needed not to be the first suer for peace with any of his enemies; and tho' the Spaniards had callumniatt him as one, who could not heare of peace, and was the great disturber of the quyett of Christendome; yett when their should be a faire occasione for treating of peace conjointly with his allies, I hoped they should find him more inclineable to peace upon just and reasonable terms, then they had represented him to be at Franckfort. He had little to say in returne to me, and finding of a vottage talkative humour, I gave him a handsom intertainment, and dismissed him after I had him twice or thrice axd him, if he had nothing else to say to me from the persons he had named. Marquis de Caracene hath been so civill as to send me coll. John's upon my parolle to return him to him, so soone as he shall be pleased to call for him. My lord, our soldiers at Mardick and the Fort-royall have no bedds, and there is greatt scarfity of them heare: if 800 or 1000 bedds could be sent, it would be a great accomodation to our soldiers, of whom a great many sicken dayly; besyde, when the horse com, I shall have no bedds for them; and they at first coming will think it, I feare, a little strange to be without them. I have sent your lordshipp a list of such things, as the gentleman of the ordnance wanteth at present. I pray the commissioners of the Tower may be ordered to send them. The hand-granades are not yet arrived; I could wish they were heare; and that at least ten thousand more were provided. I beg pardon for this rude scribe, and am,

MY LORD,

Your most humble servant,

WILL. LOCKHART.

Lock-

Lockhart to secretary Thurloe.

A.D. 1658.

MY LORD,

Dunkerke, July 11. 1658.

Vol. lx.
P. 3.

THE bearer hereof, Mrs. Ward, widow of a captain, that behaved himself worthily even to the losse of his life in these parts, will without any recommendation from me become a laudable object of your lordshipp's favourable respect and charity. I was only writing to give her this for an introduction, being well assured that your lordshipp will of yourself find motives enough to pittie, and way to relieve persons in her condition. I know not her aimes; but if they be modest and moderate, as I presume they will, I shall beg of your lordshipp to move something in her behalf, that may be an encouragement to other married officers amongst us: but I referr this and all other things, and myself to your lordshipp's own goodnesse and judgment, as being entirely,

MY LORD,

Your LORDSHIPP'S

Most humble and most obedient servant,

Dunkerke the 11. of July 1658. [N. S.]

WILL. LOCKHART.

General Monck to secretary Thurloe.

MY LORD,

In the possession of the rt. hon. Philip, lord Hardwicke, lord high chancellor of Great Britain.

I Thanke you for the good newes you sent mee of the surrendring of Bergen; by which I perceive the governor made good conditions for himself, though ill for his men. As concerning what Scotchmen you are like to have from hence, I wrote you in my last letter, that heere are none this year like to be had; being col. Raterfort, and the lord Douglas had formerly above 1000 men; and Sir Herbert Leafford is now rayfing of men for col. Cooke. The next yeare wee shall bee able to gett you some, butt this yeare I doubt wee shall nott, though they are very unwilling to goe under Englishmen, or under officers they doe not know; butt the next yeare, if you please, I shall see what may bee done; for this yeare I am sure itt will nott bee worth the paines.

As concerning Bilton's and Drywood's businesse, wee can finde noe more monies that is due to the state, then what was due uppon Mr. Bilton's account; only after Bilton was discharged of his employment, we finde Drywood delivered him 700l. which was acknowledged by the letters, and himself to the auditor generall. Soe wee have secured him heere likewise, and truly wee finde hee has bin accessorie to Mr. Bilton's knavery, and wee hope by the meanes of his imprisonment, wee shall make him confesse somethinge, if wee cannot gett the 700l. which as yett wee see noe probability of, unlesse wee gett itt out of his land in Ireland. Hee complains hee has noe monie to live uppon. Hee had some few goods heere, which being of noe concernment to the state, wee have given him to supply him for his present subsistence. Sir, I make bold to putt you in minde of our new commission for the councill heere, our old being out of date. For newes, we have none at all, only all thinges are quiett and well, which is all att present from

Your LORDSHIPP'S

Most humble servant,

Dalkieth. 1 July, 1658.

GEORGE MONCK.

Major general Jephson to secretary Thurloe.

SIR,

Vol. lx.
p. 20.

IN my last of the 27th of June I gave you notice of my arrivall at Flensburg, upon saturday the 25th at night. Upon mooneday morning having gotten some intimation, that the king would take it better, if I came to the court according to my former freedome, without asking a publique audience, I went thither, and was presently brought into his chamber; where, as I conjectured, I found him very busy with his admirall Wrangle, which made mee resolve to bee as little tedious to him as I could. I did therefore at that time only renew some expressions of his highnesse's kindnesse, and acquaint him with his absolute commaund to mee, not to leave these parts, untill I had againe saluted him in my master's name, name, and presented him, a person to succeed mee in my employment. I did then according to your commands congratulate his successes in Denmark, especially upon that point, that that warre (whereof his highness had so much apprehended the ill consequences) was, by the king's foe greates moderation amidst such vast successes, foe happily concluded, in a peace and good correspondence betwixt the two crownes. I tooke occasion upon what I then saw, and had formerly heard of the king's multitude of businesse to desyre, that he would appoint some person, or persons, with whom I might treat upon some propositions, which I had to make from his highness. His majesty returned mee very many handsome expressions of kindnesse and joy for his highness's successes in Flanders. Hee gave mee alsoe the reasons of his denying audience to the elector of Brandeburgh's embassadours to the same effect, which I have written in my last letter, professing still his desyre of making peace with the elector, if hee will treat with him apart, and leave the king of Poland to doe the like, with whom he seemes alsoe to desyre peace; though, as farr as I can observe, I find little inclination eyther in him, or his counsell, to quit their interest in Prussia. This I very much ground upon the landing of 3 thousand Swedes neare Dantzicke, and fortifying there-upon the Peninsulla, cald Nerung, a place where they have found meanes to land, without coming neare the Pillawe or Dantzicke. Hee told mee at last, that hee would presently appoint some persons to treat with mee, which hee accordingly did; and sent to mee count Slippenbacke, and his secretarye Phillipson. To them I declared, that his highness did a little wonder, that in all the time of my being here, noe proposition had beene made mee, in order to a stricter allyance. This they excused, first, that it was the usuall course, when any publique minister was sent to another prince, that the propositions should proceed from him; and that therefore the king had expected them from mee, as his ministers had earnestly prest the same in England. To this I answered, that I had, according to my master's command, freely made offer of his friendship to the king of Sweden, and signified his desire of a stricter conjunction of armes, and counsells; but that, having nothing to demaund of his majesty in the behalfe of England, his highness might reasonably expect, that the conditions should be proposed to him, if his assistance were desired. As to what had beene proposed by his ministers in England; I told them freely according to your command, that although they had proposed thinges almost impossible, yett had they made noe overture of any reciprocall advantadges for his highness's interest, without which, noe state did ever ingage itselfe in a dangerous and chargeable warre: nor was it possible for his highness to perswade the commonwealth to such an undertaking, without beeing able to hold forth som probabilitye of publique benefit. To this they urged the interest of the protestant religion in these parts, the benefit we should receyve by diverting the house of Austria; and added the examples of the French king to Gustavus in the former warres, and that of England to the last king of Denmarke. To this I shortly answered, that these examples are nothing paralell to the present case; that for that of religion, since the protestant princes of Germany did not thinke it fit to joyne themselves to the king of Swede upon that account, that alone could not be thought a sufficient motive to engage his highness so to doe. That for that of the house of Austria, wee did not now, (blessed be God) thinke ourselves in much daunger from thence; but if wee were, there was as yett noe assurance given, but that the king of Swede might make peace with them the next day after he had receyved all the assistances desired. I fayled not to put them in mind of many reall and considerable tokens of friendship, which his highness had manifested to the king of Swede, since his last warres; all which they could not deny: but they have still one blocke to lay in my way, which I cannot handsomely step over, which is the 30000l. which they confidently say, was promised without any conditions; which if it were, I must confesse I think it a very great scandall to us, that it should be said, that the state of England should be forced for foe inconsiderable a summe (though it were to bee throwne into the sea) to fayle in a promise made to a publique minister. There past little more between us at that meeting, only that upon some discourse mentioned by them ^{of some in j u r i e s they m i g} 365 435 267 44 6 23 100 29 26 447 apprehended 5 44 18 ^{h t b e} against them, by the Stat. Gen. in the Balt. sea, ^{them to consider what} 46 12 11 70 attempted 117 446, 135 599 267 598 44, wished 496 441 157 508 advan- ^{they would bring to England,} ^{by way of trade or otherwise, to ayde them} tages 447 496 441 20 19 18 299, eyther 135 13 4 3 505 12 23 62 9 89 366 372 13 67 ^{at sea} ⁱⁿ ^{cases, or what means} ^{bee} 26 29 441 4 38 9 446, 110 26 70 87 267 such 7 62 45 89 366 49 333 99 might 11 29 ^{thought on to} ^{the St. Gen. to join} ^{us in this league against the} 70 465 367 491 oblidge 599 441 264 with 475 207 447 8 29 4 16 6 70 117 444 com- ^{e n e m y,} mon 29 30 70 33 24, to all which they promised to give me the king's speedy answer. On thursday following I went again to the king, and as modestly as I could, I urged him to dispatch mee, and tooke occasion to make the last proposition to him, which I have in ^{the protect or of his designs} command; which is, that he would give some intimations to 444 397 366 365 245 166

A.D. 1658.

this campaigne, ^{give the protector} 26 29 7 4 5 52 36 42 30, wherein hee told mee hee would 230 444 397 366 satisfaction; but, that hee was then very busy, and was goeing the next day to see his queene and father-in-law, where he would not stay above two or three dayes; therefore must desyre mee to goe with him to Keele, which was not farre out of my way to Hamburg, from whence hee would speedilye dispatch mee. In pursuance of his commaunds I am come to Sleswicke, where I conclude my letter, for the former part was written at Flensburgh. Sir Phillip Meadow is not yett come, which I a little wonder at, but I hope I shall meete him at Keele. Here are four commissioners from the electorall colledge, whom I observe to bee very busy with the king; and very well receyved by him. I cannot learn particularly what they have done in their businesse, but their designe in generall is to accommodate things soe with the king of Swede, that they may prevent his disturbing the peace of the empire, wherein without doubt ^{they endeavour to include the} 447 186 441 207 7 8 50 6 28 29 444 interest ^{of} 365 K. Hung.

553. I may probably give you some conjecture in my next, what successe they are like to have. I gave you notice in my last of the departure the elector of Brandenburg's embassadours, whereof count Slippenback hath given mee all the transactions, which are too long to send you, and have little in them, but a demonstration of what I wrote you in my last letter, but I shall send Mr. Downing the substance of it; for I heare the elector's resident is strongly pressing at the Hague for assistance for the towne of Dantzick, against the king of Swede; under which pretence, much more may be done. How you are to comport yourselfe in that affaire, I know not how to advise, untill I see what the king will answer to my last proposalls. The king, I heare, goes on mooneday or tuesday to Keele, where I shall presse hard for my dispatch; and hope shortly to bee soe happy to kisse your hands at London, and to assure you, that I most really am,

SIR,

Your most faithfull and affectionate humble servant,

Sleswicke 3 July, 1658.

WILL. JEPHSON.

Extract out of the secret resolutions of the lord's States Generall, of the United Provinces.

The lord Stavenisse was president.

Veneris the 12th of July, 1658. [N. S.]

Vol. lx. p. 17.

THERE being once more produced in the assembly the present condition of affairs in Europe, and especially in the eastern and northern parts, after deliberation had, it is resolved and understood, that before any thing further can be finally resolved on, advice and advertisement shall be expected from the lord Van Maesdam, ambassador extraordinary of this state with the king of Sweden, what he shall have effected in pursuance of foregoing of iterative orders of their high and mighty lords; and especially of their resolution of the 29th of March last, concerning the final conclusion of the treaty concluded at Elbing in Prussia, on the 11th of September 1656, between the lords commissioners of the said king on the one side, and the extraordinary ambassadors of this state on the other; yet withal there shall be once more writ to the said lord ambassador, that he do labour there with all earnestness and diligence, and that in a short time he do get to know the final intention of the king of Sweden about it, and that he doth forthwith signify the same to their high and mighty lords.

Likewise in pursuance of the high and mighty lords resolutions of the first of the last month, as well by the king of France, as by the lord protector of England, Scotland, and Ireland, without any loss of time, such good offices therein expressed shall be performed and effected; and to that end the lord ambassador Nieuport is desired to take his journey without any further delay; and the colledge of the admiralty at Rotterdam is hereby ordered to provide him a ship forthwith, to transport him into England; and the said lord ambassador Nieuport is once more and iteratively ordered, above all to propose and declare with all earnestness the intention of their high and mighty lordships to the lord protector, comprehended in their said resolution of the first of June last; as also to know in a short time his inward mind and resolution, and also to come and make report thereof in person to their high and mighty lordships, in regard this state is highly concerned therein, by reason of the present constitution of times. And that the said lord protector may with the more confidence communicate his intention about it to their high and mighty lordships, there shall be laboured and endeavoured in the mean time with all earnestness and diligence, to put and maintain the military power of this state, both by sea and land, in a considerable posture.

Mr.

Mr. Downing, resident in Holland, to secretary Thurloe.

HONOURABLE SIR,

A.D. 1658.

THE post from England, which usually hath come in upon wednesday, came not in till late this morning; so that it will be impossible for me to give you any greater accompt concerning the ship called the Postillion, taken at Bantham in the East Indies; concerning which, I received this morning a packet from you. As soone as it came to my hands, I sent forthwith to Monsieur DeWitte to have conferred with him about it, but he was gone to the assembly of the States of Holland. I sent also to Monsieur Neuport, and found him just ready to goe also thither, and have at large lett him know how the matter is, and his highness his sense thereupon; he hath promised this morning to speake with Monsieur De Witt about it. I shall neglect noe time or meanes, but can do noe more in it this day, lest I neglect my letters to you, and the rather for that the French ambassador and the Brandenburg resident have sent to desire, that they may come to me to syeak with me. Wee are full of an infinite number of discourses concerning Flaunders, where the English are become very terrible; and it is the worke of the ecclesiastiques in print, and by all other meanes, to animate the people there against them upon the accompt of religion, as persons that have committed a thousand sorts of sacrilidges, as they call them, in Dunkirke, and which give noe manner of libertye or tolleration to their religion there; thereby to render more difficult any further progres which his highness might make in Flanders. There is a most strange dread upon the people of those countreyes; the townes of Holland and Zeeland are full of such as are fled out of those parts, who do not thinke themselves safe, noe, not in the strongest holes of Flanders; and all manner of meanes is used to incite this country, telling them what must necessarily befall them, if England and France gaine Flanders; yea we have draughts of treatyes, which pass from hand to hand, wherein the United Provinces are also shared between the English and French; and amongst the rest England is to have Zeeland, and France Holland; and yesterday the winde having bin good, and noe heerings coming in, the report was carryed throughout towne and country, that the English frigatts, which were upon the coast (being of those which generall Mountague left) had demanded of all the fishermen the tenth herring, and had thereupon stopt all the fishermen; but it is a meere forged story: and so I this day told Monsieur Nieuport, withal hinting to him, that they would do well to consider what neede they have to looke about them, when as the Spanish party are so strong among them, for the spreading and ready receiving of such reports, being to be accompted among the many other symptomes, which there are thereof. There was also a most strong report at Flushing, that some English had privately founded that harbour; and in fine there is noe two houses without some such kinde of story.

S p a

By my last I gave you an accompt that I had sent you an 100 bottles more of 140 119 12
w Wa t er
158 483 150 286 by captain Basket, who I doubt not will take care for the speedy delivery thereof. I sent one with it from hence to Rotterdam, and he there delivered it to captain Baskit, who promised that he would keepe it in his owne cabin, and either carry it himself to London, or deliver it to such other person as generall Montague should appoint to carry it from the Downes for London. I also therewith sent another hundred bottles to my lord Fleetwood, which he wrote to me for, and I shall send you the other 6 doffen, which you now write for, by captain Baskitt. I alsoe sent a packet to yourself, which I hope is come safe to your hands, there being in it severall things of importance. The octroy, which I therein sent you, greates adoe is made about it, as a thing, by which the king of Spain, and persons that carry it on, hope for greater matters. The Portugall ambassador was this weeke (incognito) in towne, and lodged two nights at the French ambassadors house, where I dined with him; and wee went abroade together in the afternoone incognito alsoe. He seems to be a man of understanding: he tells me, that they hope to have this yeare their army in two boddies in the field, and to doe something considerable against the Spaniard. I hope by the next I shall receive your instructions, how to comport myself in that business. Just now the Brandenburgish resident hath bin with me; his business was to give me an accompt, that their ambassadors had bin at Flosewick, where the king of Sweden is; that they had demanded audience of him; that the king of Sweden gave them for answer, that he could not give them audience, unless in the first place they would declare, that their master would joyne with him; or at least, that he would quitt all alliances made against him, and declare himself neuter. That the answer of their ambassadors was, that what they had in charge must be spoken to the king onely; and that they had noe preliminary to that: and therefore pressed earnestly for audience, which being still denyed, after four days stay they departed early in the morning towards Berling (where as you will finde by an inclosed) the queene of Poland now is. The resident tells me also, that the king of Sweden's ministers do

A.D. 1658. do declare flatly, that they will keepe Pruiſſen, and accept of no ſomme of money in lieu of it, though, as he ſaid, the French ambaffador doth his utmoſt to incline him thereunto; but that the king of Sweden being now ſtrong will ſtand upon his owne leggs, and not part with that country, though thereby the peace might be made with Poland; but that he will treat with the houſe of Auſtria, and if they will be a meanes of his obteyning Pruiſſen, that he will make peace with them: this is the ſubſtance of what the Brandenburgiſh reſident did communicate to me. Monsieur Appleboom tells me, that his maſter hath now 28 thouſand horſe, and 12 thouſand foote; and that he attends the coming of 26 brigades of foote more out of Sweden, each brigade to conſiſt of 500 men. The Engliſh miniſters at this towne praying continually in their aſſembly for Charles Stuart, I have acquainted Monsieur Bevering and Monsieur DeWitt therewith, and they have promiſed me to take order about it. I have repreſented the thing to them according to its weight, and I hope to bring it to a good effect: and to do ſomewhat more in that buſines, both for the good of the Engliſh heere, and his highneſs intereſt.

De Witt gave mee a viſite :

Upon wendeſday laſt, 263 160 70 150 308 154 41 379 15 156 346 72 466 he preſſed me earneſtly about the Portugall priſes. I told him, that that buſines was in the ordinary courſe of law, and there muſt receive its determination, and that he might be ſure that right would be done, and a due conſideration had of the treaty between his highneſs and this ſtate; and withall letting him know, that the Engliſh had many kindes of buſineſſes other then that to complain of, if one would deſire to rake up complaints. He

Baltick ſea;

preſſed me about the buſines of the 227 81 475 26 350 140 41 12 and, in fine, according to what you gave me order, I told him, that if 535 would give 534 ſatisfaction

St. Gen.

l. proteſt.

K. of Spain,

concerning 545, that then they needed not doubt of ſatisfaction; alſo as to that particular ſigning an act;

he preſſed me much about 142 71 54 108 339 56 205 189, of which I have ſo often made mention; to which I made him answer, that my lord Nieupoort being ſpeedily to goe for England, and the buſines of the marine treaty and other matters being to be agitated in England, and conſequently that place now being to be the ſtage of buſines, I thought it would be beſt to remitt all things of that nature to his arrivall there. In diſcourſe, among other things, he told me, that when the meſſenger of this ſtate came to Sevenburg to Charles Stuart, to lett him know, that he muſt not ſtay there, Charles Stuart made answer, that had he knowne that place had bin under their power, he would not have come thither; but withall added, that he looked upon this as a very poore answer from ſuch a perſon. In fine, he moſt earneſtly preſſed, that as a particular favour to him, I would procure a paſſ for Monsieur Hemphlit and his lady, with their ſervants, to goe for England about their private occaſions; adding, that he had particular obligations to Monſ. Hemphlit, and would take the granting thereof as a particular obligation put by his highneſs upon himſelf. I told him the objection, which lay againſt it, particularly in relation to 115 390 199 42. He ſaid, that he ſhould engage in what manner his highneſs ſhould thinke fitt, never to do the like for the future, nor to do any thing to the prejudice of

Oneale.

He m f l it was De W i t s in te l li his highneſs. 324 90 48 358 151 488 263 161 72 151 144 339 466 84 362 ge n c er:

fo u n d

311 109 30 286: he came to give me a viſite yeſterday, and I 459 156 109 37

ed him

279 326 a little at a diſtance. There is an envoye coming hither from the king of Poland, and another from the greate duke of Muſcovye, and third whoſe name is Friquet from the king of Hungary, who is a very dangerous man; and by the letters of the 5 inſtant from Franckford (of undoubted credit) it is adviſed, that the Auſtrians were endeavouring, might and maine, in the reviving of the Imperiall capitulation (which they were then about) to take out the words (confederates and allies of the king of France) whereby they might be at liberty to act againſt them in Flanders and elſewhere, and within a day or two itt would probably appeare what would be done therein. Heere is a report, as if the election were put off for a month, which hath probability enough in it; but I ſee noe authentique letters thereof. The French ambaffador hath bin with me; he is very much affected with the buſines of Poland, and thinks that his highneſs would doe well to doe his utmoſt therein, and that otherwiſe he would finde himſelf in very great difficultyes. He doubts not but a peace may be made, if the king of Sweden will be contented to quit Pruiſſia, and accept of a reaſonable ſum of money in ſatisfaction for it; but otherwiſe hee ſees noe probability thereof, and that the Poles will rather engage to chooſe the ſecond ſon of the duke of Muſcovie for their next king (which is a thing at a diſtance, and may be altered by many accidents) then to part with ſo conſiderable a preſent certainty at Pruiſſia, and that thereby the king of Sweden may come to have the Muſcovites, Auſtrians, and Poles,

Poles, and probably also this state upon him, upon the accompt of Prussia and Dantzick. A.D. 1658. He also earnestly desired me, that, for his sake, I would write earnestly for a pass for Monf. de Hemphlet, saying, that the cardinal was particularly obliged to him, and much to his friend. I have not promised any thing on Monsieur Hemphlet's behalf, further then that I would let his highness know, what instance was made to me for him, and give them an accompt of his answer. 324 90 48 81 289 hath the disposall of the 122 441 100 his purse prince of Orange controul the 251 408 416 205 311 327 124 152 136 144, and is he alone, that can 254 110 prince's royall, kindness may engage him, 151 443 87 468 570; and possibly this 351 107 34 390 142 377 44 109 308 311 326, and thereby in this you prove a very good service. This morning my lord Nieuport told me, that the States of Holland have ordered him to be gone forthwith for

England; but I believe it will be neare this month before you see him. 263 502 150

Hath made report to the 143 463 466 142 508 557 concerning the busines of the Baltick-sea;

227 85 475 29 350 142 43 15; but as yet they are not come to any resolution about that busines. 530 hath made a report, that the 456 143 cannot be ready under neare 6 weekes, the getting of men is the greatest difficulty. You shall have an accompt from time to time, how that busines goes on, and of his 343. I shall endeavour as much as may be to remove the 67 39 12 365 524 168 287 of 535 of 534 120 443 53

132 287 339 47 455 106 34 266 140, but its a hard worke to make them be-leeve, that it can be 377 305 468 89 467 534, who is so 139 146 443 107 55

219 138 45 17, should have such a 431 133 151 138 111 390 286 468 102

140 70 133 67 113 62 106 371 133 84 114 160 327 459 109 was againe yesterday with me, and I told him what his 300 must expect; so he is gone, and I expect some time the next weeke a final answer. I wonder very much that you receive noe more 361 140 418 408 52 86 207 286 141. I am sure there come every 432

361 138 267 132 278 149 279 477 475 384 468 524 27 447 174 116 I must

160 441 466 477 498 102; for they would none of them by no means consent to that, but as they 255 477 379, I shall be able to take further order in it.

There are very many, that have spoke to me of the greate considerableness and feasibility

of 219 466 101 575 110 59 20 355 108 350 107 242 134 55 207 260 89

90 44, and that thereby many other more considerable places must necessarily fall. It is worth considering of. 21 447 58 287 54 324 108 147 207 115 141 148 282 must fail therewith. No more at present, but that I am,

HONOURABLE SIR,

Your most faythfull humble servant,

Hague 12 July, 1658.

G. DOWNING.

Here is much adoe, that the Portugall ambassador stayes so long at Rotterdam before his coming: he told me, that his intention was to make his entry upon monday next. I shall incourage him that 162 441 468 143 477 510 239 468 address 408

304 213 36. I am sure he is honest, and he hath 309 33 17 29 358 136 80 408

272 199 412 459, who offers to 313 205 184 258 of what 324 247 353 467

255 142 477 199 412 459: whether shall I 414 107 466 136 63 339 326: truly I thinke it may do good, and possibly make way for something further. It is said, that

A.D. 1568. all the English are marched out of Mardike, and that the French are marched into it, which is much wondered at those two places, being looked upon as inseparable.

I pray do me the favour every post to let me know how many packets you receive every post from me.

This week comes to you two packets.

469 490 255 140 477 410 151 162 118 120 184 350 150 143. The French ambassador hath earnestly desired of me a picture of his highness, and that he will take it as a very noble favour from his highness. If you had one from Cooper for Beverning, another also might be had for him. Truly it's worth the cost, which is little. He is a person of great quality, count De Thou, allyed to the best families in France. I pray, that it might come with Beverning; he would have me promise it, which I have done.

Surely it might be of great good to settle a good minister or two in Dunkirke, to preach constantly in Dutch; possibly one might be had from hence.

A letter of intelligence.

MONSIEUR,

Bruges le 13 Juillet, 1658. [N. S.]

Vol. lx. p. 24.

APRES que les Francois ont pris Lyuken et Winoxberg, les Espagnols ont abandonné Veurne et Dixmuyde, lesquels sont aussi rendus aux Francois. Depuis Mons. de Turenne s'a campé au long de la riviere d'Yser entre Neiupoort et Ipres, s'y ayant emparez des quelques petits forts et redoutes des Espagnols sur ladite riveire jusques au fort de Midledam (lequel est environ une mile d'Angleterre de Nieupoort) ou estoit le marquis de Caracena et le duc d'Yorke avec environ 2000 d'infanterie et 1500 cavallerie, lesquels apres quelques escharmouches sont forcé par Mons. de Turenne de se retirer dans Neiuport, avoient laissé environ 150 hommes dedans ledit fort de Midledam, lesquels apres une petite attaque son rendu ensemble ledit fort. Le marquis de Caracena apres sa retraite et la perte dudit fort fait ouvrir toutes les escluses d'environ de Neiupoort, et fait entrer les eaux de la mer inundant ainsi toutes les pays d'alentour pour empêcher les approches. Toutes les grands en generaux disent d'estre bien aise, que les Francois ont assiege Neiuport, disant (pource que les eaux y ont environné la place) ils y perdront toute la saison de l'esté sans rien effectuer, ayant eu grand peur, qu'ils avoient premierement attaqué cette ville on Damme, en quel cas toutes les autres villes des West de Flandres eussent esté perdus. Depuis la perte de Duynkerke, Luyken, Winoxberg, Veurne, et Dixmuyde, a esté une assemblée icy de toutes les generaux tant Espagnols que Condees (les Estats etans aussi assemblé icy) pour considerer les occurrences du temps present, ou apres plusieurs propositions et deliberations on a pris la conclusion suivant; que premierement devant tout on quitteroit et abandonneroit tout-a-fait et entierement la campagne, et qu'on se retireroit avec artillerie, pontons, canon et baggage dedans et environ cette ville et Damme, et qu'on feroit de l'infanterie et cavallerie, qu'on avoit encore plusieurs petits corps, et de les mettre dedans ou devant et d'alentour telles places, dont on craint une siege, et les faire fortifier devant les-dits places pour en cas de besoin et necessité se retirer dedans, et les defendre aux derniers extremitéz, obligeant et engageant les commandeurs desdits petits corps, ensemble les gouverneurs desdits places, d'en respondre en leurs propres personnes. En conformité de cette resolution le prince de Condé et Marche dedans Ostend et ses troupes se fortifient la devant pour en cas de necessité se pouvoir retirer la dedans, le marquis de Caracena environ Nieupoort a Midledam, lequel (avec de duc d'Yorke) a desja perdu son quartier et ledit fort, et fait sa retraicte dedans Nieupoort, comme j'ay dit cydevant. Hier sont arrivez icy quelques blesez de la garde dudit marquis de Caracena, lesquels m'ont raconté ledit rencontre, disant que ledit marquis a esté en grand danger de estre prisonier: don Jean d'Autriche et don Estienne de Gammara icy et a Damme, auquel Damme ledit don Jean a esté hier pour y visiter les fortifications, lesquels sont de meilleur façon, qu'on peut desirer, mais en mauvais ordre, n'estans pas bien entretenu; pourquoy on y travaille fort pour le reparer et remettre en bonne posture. Le prince de Ligne est envoyé vers Ypres avec environ 1500 chevaux, et quelque 2 ou 300 d'infanterie don Jean Ferdinand Salis a Cambrey, don Caffa a Armentiers, don Carlo Campia a Gravelines, le prince de Conde est envoyé avec une partie des forces dudit prince (estant ensemble tant d'infanterie que de la cavallerie environ 2500 hommes) pour prendre gard aux desseins de marshal de la Ferté lequel feroit marché avec environ de 8000 (dont la plus part feroit de la cavallerie) vers les quartiers de Haynaut; et parmy son armée seroit le duc de Wertemburg (lequel a servi autrefois le roy d'Espagne en ce pays, comme aussi encore la campagne derniere) avec un regement de 2000 de cavallerie, lesquels sont bien cognus icy et respectez d'estre de valeureux soldatz et par consequent fort redoutés icy. Toute la baggage de l'armée Espagnol et Condeez sont retirez a Moerkirke

Moerkirke et Maldegem entre Sluys, Damme, et Aerdenburg dedans le pays, lequel a A.D. 1658. donné des contributions aux Estats Generaux, durant la guerre desdits Estats contre l'Espagne, estirnant ces quartiers les plus asseurez, ayant ladite baggage pour garde trois regiments de la cavallerie Espagnole, lesquels ne sont plus fort que d'environ 250 chevaux, dont la plus part court toujours a ravager et voller, non obstant jamais je n'a veu telle quantité et abundance de baggage, don Jean en ayant luy mesme plus que 200 chevaux et d'environ 1000 chevaux, et 100 mulets excepté et hormis toutes les baggages des autres princes grands, et collonels, leur artillerie consiste en 33 pieces de cannon, dont on a retiré 25 sur la marche de cette ville, viz.

Cannon de bronze.		Cannon de fer
4 pieces tirant boulets de 24 livres.		1 piece de - - - - -	18 livres.
1 piece de - - - - -	18 liv.	12 pieces de - - - - -	12 liv.
2 pieces de - - - - -	6 liv.	Les autres 8 pieces sont de bronze, viz.
3 pieces de - - - - -	8 liv.	6 pieces de - - - - -	18 livres.
2 pieces de - - - - -	12 liv.	2 pieces de - - - - -	12 liv.

Ensemble 33 pieces du cannon.

Lesdits derniers 8 pieces de cannon sont retirez aussi, ensemble les pontons de l'armée. Dedans ledite pays des contributions des Hollandois a une place appellé Steenbrugg une demie mile de cette ville, aux chemin vers Gand: voila toute la constitution et resolution des Espagnols et Condeéz, et comment ils sont contraint de se gouverner cette armée, n' ayant ny argent ni force pour se mettre en campagne; pourquoy on a fort aisement a conjecturer, que les Anglois et Francois feront toutes leurs conquestes a souhait, et pour faire executer beaucoup des desseins en un coup. Damme ou cette ville doit estre attaqué, lesquels sans doute feroient forcé a se rendre en peu des jours; en quel cas tout la reste des villes et places du quartiers de west falloir suivre necessairement. Outre cela il y un mescontentment general de tous et principalement contre Don Jean, mesme des soldats. Il passa lundy dernier (quand il arriva icy) par quelques de ses troupes, disant en passant (quand on les salua) courage, courage, mesfieurs, nous nous en vengerons bientost de l'enemie; surquoy ils commencerent a crier presque tous, argent, argent, argent, nous ne voulons plus combattre sans argent: ce que lui donna un grand espouvantement, lequel a esté fort augmenté, pour ce qu'on luy refusa l'entre de cette ville, les bourgeois a la porte le resistant bien deux heures, jusques a ce que les magistrates les appaiserent par douceur, cependant les bourgeois (estants menacez par quelques uns de sa suite avec les pistolets aux mains) crierent, Va han poltrons, montre vos pistolets a l'enemie, qui vos fuie, et tirerent plusieurs coups des mousquets sur eux, et ont tué la trompette de Don Jean, un de sa garde, et un de ses archers ou halleberdiers. On dit qu'il ne se fie plus icy, et qu'il partira demain vers Brusselles. J'ay descouvert, que le comte de Marcin general du prince de Conde, a des correspondences exactes, precises, et estroites avec quelqu'un aupres le Marechal de la Ferté, et en ay telles informations veritables, que je suis bien asseuré de cela, et il a tres certain, que ledit Marcin a de jour a autre, et continuellement la cognoissance des desseins dudit mar: de la Ferté tousjours devant que le dit la Ferté se mouve pour mettre quelque dessein en execution, et pour en scavoir la verité, premier gard dorenavant. Quand jamais la Ferte marche, vous verrez que toujours Marcin marchera contre lui, et souventefors on trouvera, que Marcin marchera devant que la Ferté se mouve tellement, que Marcin a par tout occupé la post on la passage, on la Ferté a l'intention pour effectuer quelque dessein, tellement que la Ferté toujours vient trop tard pour faire bien reussir son dessein, ce que deja est arrivé cette campagne quelque fois, et peut estre que la suite nous le monstrera encore plus clair. Icy et par tous ces quartiers alentour a courru un bruit que la roy de France feroit mort, et presque toute le monde le croit icy, dont on espere d'avoir quelques changements du desseins de les ennemis de ce pais. Mais je suis bien asseuré, qu'il n'y a en nul autre assurance de cela, que seulement don Carolo campe a escrit de Gravelines, qu'il estoit tres certain, que le roy estoit fort malade, et qu'on l'eust fait tirer du sang trois fois, et qu'il y avoit un bruit, qu'il feroit mort. Charles Stuart est retourné depuis trois on quatre jours a Brusselles: le duc d'Yorke est dedans Neiuport avec le marquis de Caracena, et le duc de Glocester est ici a la cour de don Jean. Tous les matelots (mentonez en quelques de mes precedentes) leveez a Anvers pour estre imploiez sur la mer, sont tous fuiez par manquement de l'argent. N'ayant pas d'avantage pour present demeurera a jamais

Vostre serviteur.

Gene-

General Monck to secretary Thurloc.

A.D. 1658.

MY LORD,

In the possession of the rt. hon. Philip lord Hardwicke, lord high chancellor of Great Britain.

I Have nothing to trouble you withall at this present, butt with the inclosed, which is the copy of a letter, which being abroad this day, some letters were left with the officer of the guard; and amongst the rest this. I have kept the originall, because I would trye, whether I could finde out the partie from whence itt came, by comparing it with other letters. I did nott thinke fitt to trouble his highnesse with itt, being I conceive it is a knavish trick of some Scotchman or other, which you may understand by some phraes in it. Butt in case this nation should breake out againe, such as take Charles Stuart's part, I hope God will foe enable mee, as I make them smart for this roguery, and the former reporte which they have made of mee. The other day captain Hutton, commander of the Norwich frigott, which is one of the shippes appointed for those coasts, had chase of an Ostender, called the Plate-mill, of six guns, the commander captain Bartholomew Boute, had a commission from Don John of Austria. The shippe was splitt uppon a rock in the pursuit neere Aberbrothwicke, butt hee saved the men, being 54, who are prisoners at Leith; and rescued fowr masters of merchants shippes, who they intended to have kept prisoners till they had ransomed themselves and shippes. I have written to the commissioners of the admiraltie about the prisoners, and I shall take care they shall be well secured; and have 3 pence a day for their allowance, till the commissioners of the admiraltie shall dispose of them, which is all at present from

YOUR LORDSHIPP'S

Most affectionate humble servant,

Dalkeith, 3^d July, 1658.

GEORGE MONCK.

Inclosed in the preceding.

SIR,

In the possession of the rt. hon. Philip lord Hardwicke, lord high chancellor of Great Britain.

HERE was a general report of late, that you, and your whole army had declared for king Charles your lawful sovereign, which made all good and honest hearts rejoice; and myself as much as any, or rather more, having some relation to you. I hope it is a presage of what God will put in your heart to do: and truly, Sir, you cannot do any thing, that will more advance your salvation, nor bring greater honour to yourself and family, for you may be any thing as great as you desire; and what any wise man should study more than that, I know not. And this I know, that if the king be restored to his undoubted right by your means, as I know he may, if you do that which is in your power to do, you may, I say, make yourself and family what you desire, which is more than you can hope for from that tyrant, who keeps faith with none; for when his own turn is served, he cares not, if his instruments were hanged; nay he very often hangs them himself. And this I believe you are not ignorant of. Look upon Lambert, and several others of his creatures, how he hath served them. Think it may be your own turn next. Therefore to prevent it, let me beseech you to lay this my advice to heart, and be a glorious instrument of re-establishing of our good and lawful prince, who, I am sure, never disobligeed you, or if he have, he will make you a large amends. And this I will tell you, if you do not do it, you will not be long safe in that government. If you were of a morose ill disposition, I would spare this pains; but knowing you to be of a good, sweet, and honest nature, I cannot but promise to myself good return of this my friendly advice, which if you follow, you shall live happy and honourable in this world, and enjoy eternal happiness in the world to come. If you knew the gallantry, and the sweet and good disposition of the king, you will need no other motive to stir you up to restore him to his crown; for you cannot demand any thing of him for your own good and your families, but he will grant you. Therefore let me beseech you as a friend, to think of it in time, before it be too late. And what you do, do it suddenly; for your time will not be long in that government else, for that great monster is plotting how to remove you. If you knew who I were, that writes you this advice, you would easily give credit to it. I have ever loved and honoured your family, and it would much rejoice me to see you to be the raiser of it, as you may do to what height or dignity you please. Therefore if I may but know what it is you desire to have, and it shall be granted, and sent you signed and sealed under the king's own hand, therefore let me receive your answer as soon as possibly you can, and direct your letter thus; For Mr. John Johnson, to be left at Mr. Thomas Marten's at the arms of Scotland upon the Schedam-head at Rotterdam. You must be sudden, for there are forces raising to send down against you;

you ; but if you declare for the king, you will have friends enow to second you. I beseech A.D. 1658. the Lord to put it into your heart, and then I doubt not, but God will bleſs and prosper you. I muſt conclude and reſt,

SIR,

Your moſt affectionate friend and ſervant,

Rotterdam, April $\frac{18}{28}$ 1658.

JOHN JOHNSON.

Sir, you need not fear or doubt any thing from whence this comes ; for be aſſured, it cometh from one that wiſhes you much happineſs, and has the honour to be well known to you here in Holland. And if this advice of mine may take any good effect, I ſhall ſoon diſcover myſelf to you.

Vera copia

Superſcribed, For General Monk at Dalkeith in Scotland.

EX. WM. CLARKE.

A letter of intelligence.

The 4th July 1658.

THE lord Ormond and his ſon are both ſtill in town. There is now gone for England Vol. lx. one Robert Swan ; he is the ſon of one Robert Swan, who was poſt-maſter of New-P. 31. caſtle ; he was ſerving man to Charles Stuart in his eſcape from Worceſter, and no other ſervant but he. He ſtaid by the water, while Charles took ſhipping, and brought his horſes back again, and came to London. He is now gone to London, and is to found commonly about Covent garden. He hath long black hair and a little curling ; his noſe fall'd flat to his face, of ſomewhat ruddy complexion ; he is ſent over about buſineſs, he went with the laſt fleet from Flushing.

There is one major Weekes, a little old man, grey haired, he lies about Sheer-lane, and is gone over with the ſaid Robert Swan. Here is one in the Hague, who went with my lord Ormond and Nich. Armorer, and the reſt that went over in the laſt plot. They took ſhipping at Sterling, and landed within twenty miles of Colcheſter, and went from thence to London. He hath promiſed to dine with me to-morrow, and to tell me the whole progreſs in that buſineſs, and how they went to London. His name is Rowland Selby, a north countryman. The lord Ormond having heard yeſterday, that the States took notice of his being in town, removed his lodging out of the French quarter. The princeſs-royal went to Hounſlerdike yeſterday, but came back again at night.

Mr. Downing to ſecretary Thurloe.

HONOURABLE SIR,

THE bearer hereof captain Baſkitt, being come with a letter to me from generall Mon- Vol. lix. tague, I could not but by him write unto you, and ſend what I have ready. In the p. 227. incloſed is conteyned what newes I have from Franckford, ſave only what the French ambafſador juſt now ſhewed me in a letter of his, which yet you may before have heard, that it is inſerted in the imperiall capitulation, that the emperor that ſhall be, ſhall give no aſſiſtance to the king of Spaine again the king of France in Flanders, under the pretext of giving it againſt the Engliſh. The elector of Brandenburgh you will perceive by the incloſed, what propoſition he hath by his miniſter made to this ſtate, and what is done thereupon ; ſo that the buſineſs of Dantzick will come upon the ſtage this preſent aſſembly of the States of Holland, and greate joy there is throughout of the hopes, that now at laſt that elector will be wholly drawne to the Spaniſh ſide ; but the king of Sweden being come on this ſide the water (as he is) together with the ſucceſs in Flanders, will probably yet have ſome influence upon him, for he hath not the repute of the moſt conſtant prince. In a word, what you will herein receive concerning that buſineſs, will be matter for his highneſs advising upon, as to his owne comportment in that buſineſs. The Portugall ambafſador arrived at Flushing, and is now come to Rotterdam ; and this afternoone ſent me by Mr. Jeromino de Coſta, a letter from the king of Portugal ; a copy whereof I have heerein incloſed to you. The French ambafſador hath another for him. I ſhall pay the ambafſadors all the civillity and reſpect, and deſire your inſtructions as ſoon as poſſible, in relation to the buſineſs of Portugall ; as alſo how you will have me demeane myſelf in relation to the aforementioned buſineſs of the elector of Brandenburgh. I have made a very full enquiry, according to your command, into the buſineſs of the furniſhing

A.D. 1658. nishing the king of Spaine with moneys for his service in Flanders, by those of Amsterdam; an accompt whereof you will heerein receive in one of the inclosed. I have also gotten a true copy of the octroy itself, signed by the king of Spain; but have not time to make a copy thereof ere the going away of this bearer; and I dare not send it, till I have made a copy, least it should miscarry. I cannot gett another, and I shall not adventure it; but you shall receive it by the next following opportunity. I have herein inclosed to you an accompt of such passages, as are come to my knowledge since my last, concerning Charles Stuart, and his affaires. I did make complaint heere of his being to come to Sevenburg; whereupon as you will perceive in that paper, he was putt to quitt his quarter a little sooner than he intended. His sister and hee had a very great falling out about her entertayning the lady Pelcaris, her lord being as you know, put away from him, and very high words passed betweene them. The princefs came hither the other night with the lord Ormond; shee is since gone to Housler-dike, and Ormond to Amsterdam. I shall speake again to DeWitt about the Spanish foote comeing from Galicia. I am this day informed by one that pretends to know much, that Charles Stuart findeing so cold invitation from Franckfort, is almost of opinion not to go thither, but to pass his time to and againe elsewhere till Michaelmas, and then againe to his busines. No more at present, but that I am,

HONOURABLE SIR,

Your most faythfull humble servant,

Hague, 4th July. 1658.

G. DOWNING.

The other twenty-four men of warr, part of the forty-eight, are fitting out apace here.

The Spanish ambassador's secretary scatters here a report, that the French will besiege Dantzick to animate this state. There is a place called Claessendale, which is not very strong, and which if taken, would hinder all correspondence between Bruges and Ostend; and the taking whereof would in a manner destroy Ostend. I pray let me know what letters you have out of Flanders, and that order, which of those I employ, I shall continue, and which not; for I would not continue such upon charge, as do you not good service.

Since the writting hereof, having considered the lateness of the day, I prevayled with the bearer to stay till morning, and have herein inclosed to you a copy of the king of Spaine's octroy, as also another paper of the 4th of July, concerning passages concerning Charles Stuart; to which you may give good credit.

I was the more earnest to keep the captain, that I might have a sure way to send the water; and have by him sent 100 bottles more of Spawe, and 100 to my lord Fleetwood, who wrote to me for them for his lady; please to let him have them: there is 100 in one hamper, and 100 in another. I caused my secretary to putt them up, and go with them to the frigott for more assurance.

I have writt to generall Montague to dispatch them for London by a safe hand.

Charles Stuart's people speak much of hopes they have of some in his highnesse's fleete.

General Montague to secretary Thurloe.

MY LORD,

Vol. lx.
p. 34.

ABOUT 2 a-clocke this eveninge, I received 3 letters from you; 2 dated the 2d of July, and one the 3d; for all which I most kindly thanke you. I have formerly sent you an account, how I have placed the shippes with mee, which was and is the best course I could devise to hinder reliefe goinge for Flanders; and the same manner I still continue, unlesse I receive any other directions from you.

You must not measure the service your shippes in the streights doe by the profitableness or unprofitableness of there gaires for you. It was a wonderfull accident, that you ever had any; and I dare say (if opportunity serve) he that commands there now, wants not for skill, or mettall, to doe as good service as has beene done there; and you doe not imagine the disappointment the want of victualls and necessaries soe farr from home makes to any thinge, that can be designed. This morning three of our shippes, that were plying in the Narrow, brought into this rode 8 Dutch shippes, come from Cales about a month since, with one Banker, a man of warr for ther convoy. They say, that ther went out of Cales for the Indies, the $\frac{1}{2}$ of May last, about 50 shippes, 4 of them greate gallions, and 8 other men of warr, the rest merchant shippes. Concerning these Dutch vessells themselves, the captains that brought them in say, ther past uncivill carriages amonge them, before they would be searched or brought hither; but they have beene all on board mee, and are now in better temper. I have sent some captaines on board to search them, and they find them full full stowed; some with salt, with other wares; and whether they have any plate or other prohibited matters, noe body can tell, unlesse they be unladed; and cominge from such a porte as they doe, and being bound to Flushing, I thought it too greate a venture for mee to lett them goe on their voyage, without giving account to you, and by your hand to his highnesse, from whom I begg further commands concerning them. If it should be thought necessarye to search them, I pray send persons from London to manage it. I will assist with all helpe, but desire by noe meanes to have the care of it; but if you dismisse them with a little direction to mee, I can easily performe that.

I heare by a Dutchman, that was spoken with in the Channell, that there were two men of warr fitted out at Sebastians, for the reliefe of Dunkirke; but upon the newes of its surrender, they are gone out upon a private account.

I entreate a speedye answere concerninge these Dutch shippes, because there victualls are wholly spent, and a quicke issue, whatever it be, is a kindnesse. Not further to give you trouble, I remaine,

MY LORD,

Your most faithfull and humble servant,

July 4. 1658.

Nasebye in the Downes.

E. MONTAGUE.

One of these Dutch vessels hath noe bill of ladinge, and saies his merchant stayd to longe ashore, and soe he came away with the convoy without him; and sayes his owners are of London, and expects directions from thence how to proceede with his shipp.

Major-general Jephson to secretary Thurloc.

SIR,

I Had by the last post at Flensburgh the favour of two letters from you, the one of the Vol. 1x. second, the other of the fourth of July, newe style; for which I give you many P. 41. thanks, and joy in the good newes you have therein imparted to me; but I am able to requite you but very little from hence; for the king of Swede is but just now calling his army together, and is so wyse as to keepe his designes very secret. It is too true, that the elector of Brandenburg hath made a league with the house of Austria, which being knowne to the king of Swede, hee refused audience to his ambassadours, who are gone away in great perplexity, it being generally beleevd, that he wil be the first man the king of Sweden will fall upon, it being not the usuall custome amongst good souldiers to leave a powerfull ennemie behinde them. There are heere four commissioners from the electorall colledge, whose businesse I suppose to be, to deale earnestly with the king of Swede, not to interrupt the peace of the empire. By the next I hope to be able to give you some probable conjecture, what successe they are lyke to have. I have proposed some things to the king of Swede, to which I am promised an answer this weeke at Keil; after which I intend only to take my leave, and goe directly to Hamborough, and take shipping for England. Sir Phillip Meadowe is not yet come hither, but I expect to meet him at Keil; from whence you shall bee sure to heare more from,

SIR,

Your very affectionat humble servant,

Sleswigh, this 5th of July. 1658.

WM. JEPHSON.

To vice-admiral Goodson.

SIR,

THE losse of Dunkirke, and the consequents thereof, caused alwayes into there coun- Vol. 1x. try an unspeakabel astonishment so wel amongst the grandees, common people, as P. 37. clergiemmen, being now a good counsel very deare, being all their attempts and desseins, wich they did intend to performe, very much altered and come to nothing. Since the said losse hath bin here a meeting of all the generalls and grandees considering the present dangerous constitution of affairs: the adviseing and resolution of Don Jean was, to venture a battle, all the others saying such resolution was to dangerous, and that it was (for the present) no time to assault but to defend by the securest ways, and especially to venture no fight, with some small number of weake and fearful men against a victorious and conquering strong army. Every one insisting on his oppinion, growes some devision amongst them; in the mean time their army is retired unto Nieupoort, and thereabouts, the most part

A.D. 1658. part stragling and stealing themselves away from their army, robbing upon the highways, be want of money, so that the said army becomes every day from little to less, being hereabout such great perplexity, that I verily do believe, if this city was assaulted, there should be very little defence or resistance now. It is the right time to gouverne wel the advantage, and to get more advantage by their disorder. I will not write unto you of the affairs about Wynoxberge and Lyuken, because you know such things better than I: the same doings of the French and English army caused here and hereabout great perplexity, and great flight and flying, as well from Nieupoort, Ostend, Wynoxberge, Veurne, and Dixmuyde, as from the country round about towards there city, being come here already about 200 families out of that parts, and comminge constantly every day more and more with their cattle and other goods; whereof some do stay here, others go toward Sluys Gand, and other parts. No more for the present, I rest,

SIR,

Your servant,

Bridges the 5th of July 1658.

S. V. O.

For vice-admiral Goodson, about Dunkirk.Resolution of the States-General.

Lunæ, the 15th July, 1658. [N. S.]

Vol. lx.
P. 39.

BEING once more had in deliberation, what is to be further resolved and done, in regard of the further ordered equipage of ships of war to be equipped by this state, it is thought fit and understood, that forthwith without any delay, serious letters shall be writ to the college of the admiralties, that they and each of them will equip their respective contingencies without intermission, and so soon as is possible get them sail ready to be sent to sea, and employed in the service of this state; and especially to the admiralty at Rotterdam, that they, besides the six ships already equipped, will make ready one ship more, or otherwise advise their high and mighty lordships why not, or whether any of the said six ships may be counted for double ships in the admiralty at Amsterdam, that so they may supply the defect, if there be any in the extraordinary equipage of the 24 ships with the required number. To the admiralty in North Holland, that they do give such order and take such care, that the two ships of the repartition, being already set forth to sea, may at all times, and when required, be in a readiness to repair to such place of rendezvous, as shall be appointed by their high and mighty lordships. To the admiralty in Zealand, that besides the three ships equipped by them and employed in the service of the state, the four remaining ships, being the number of their share, be forthwith made ready, without any further delay. And lastly to the college of the admiralty in Friezland, that the three ships equipped by them, be sent to sea by provision, that so they may be in a readiness to repair to the place of rendezvous, which shall be assigned them, and to be employ'd where the service of the state shall best require it; and to the end the above-mentioned and all that doth belong unto it, and that the good intention of their high and mighty lordships may be observed and effected, there be a conference held by the lords Schoock and others their high and mighty lordships commissioners for the affairs of the sea, with the respective commissioners of the said admiralties, that so they may consult together about the appointing of a place of rendezvous for such ships as are ready; as also what ships more at this conjuncture and constitution of time and affairs are judged necessary to be equipped and set forth, besides the number of ships already equipped, that so when the same is understood, they may be further resolved about it, and where to employ them.

Mr. Downing to secretary Thurloc.

HONOURABLE SIR,

Vol. lix.
P. 231.

Yesterday arrived heere captain Baskitt in the Wakefield friggat, who brought me a letter from general Montague, by whome the last night I wrote back to the generall, and therein inclosed a pacquett to yourselfe, in which was a resolution of the States of Holland, for sending a letter to their principalls for instructions, what to doe in relation to the memoriall given into them by the resident of the elector of Brandenburg, intimating, that Dantzick was blocked up by 11 men of warr of Sweden. A letter from ambassador Beuningen at Copenhagen, newes from Franckfort and Brussels, also a particular account of of furnishing the king of Spaine with money, by the Amsterdammers, for the service in A.D. 1658. Flanders; newes from severall parts with severall resolutions; letter from Franckfort the 30. June; newes from Charles Stuart; letter to me from the king of Portugall; also an oſtroy from the king of Spaine to some merchants of Amsterdam touching the finances of Flanders. The pacquet was so big, that it was impossible for me to make copyes to send to-day; but I hope, that what is sent will come to you e'er the post. I have this morning sent my secretary to Rotterdam to complement the Portugall ambassador, who is there putting himselfe in order for his coming hither. I have herein inclosed a copy of one of the papers sent in the aforementioned pacquet; and am,

HONOURABLE SIR,

Hague, 5th July, 1658.

Your most faythfull hnmble servant,

G. DOWNING.

I have also sent by captain Baskitt two hampers, in each of which is one hundred bottles of Spaw water; one whereof is 100 for yourself, and the other 100 for my lord Fleetwood, who wrote to me for itt for his lady.

The inclosed paper, signed G. le Cœur, was delivered to me by the Danish resident, who saith, the young man in prison in the Tower is innocent, and that the information against him is out of malice, and earnestly intreating, that I would write to you on his behalfe. Truly a little civillity to the Dane will go a great way now they are here.

They speake of putting officers in the heads of all their companyes, during this assembly of the states of Holland, and to pres with all earnestness the hastening out of the 24 ships now a fitting.

Extract of the secret register of the states of Holland.

Le vendredy, le 12. Juillet, 1658. [N. S.]

AYANT esté derechef remonstré à l'assemblée la constitution presente des affaires de Vol. lx. p. 19.
l'Europe, & notamment de celles du Nord; il a esté dit et resolu, qu'avant que de s'y resoudre finalement, on attendra l'avis du sieur de Maesdam, ambassadeur extraordinaire de cet estat, se trouvant à present aupres du roy de Suede, touchant ce qu'il y aura effectué en suite des ordres reiterez de leurs hautes puissances, et en particulier de leur resolution du 29. Mars dernier sur le subject de la conclusion finale du traité, qui a esté signé à Elbing en Prusse le $\frac{1}{11}$. Septembre, 1656. entre les commissaires du dit sieur roy de Suede d'une, et les ambassadeurs extraordinaires de cet estat d'autre part; et sera derechef escrit au dit sieur de Maesdam, qu'il aura d'y travailler incessamment pour sçavoir en bref l'intention finale du roy de Suede, et en donner avis à leurs hautes puissances; et on fera aussi sans aucune perte du temps tant aupres du roy de France, que Monseigneur le protecteur de la republique d'Angleterre, Escoce, et Irlande, les offices contenus dans leur resolution du 1. du mois passé; et à cette fin on requiert le sieur Nieuport ambassadeur de cet estat aupres de son altesse d'entreprendre ce voyage sans aucune delay: à cette fin on escrira sans remise au siege de l'admirauté de Rotterdam, qu'ils auront de tenir prest un vaisseau de guerre pour son transport, et d'en faire responce à leurs hautes puissances. Le dit seigneur Nieuport aura aussi soin de bien faire comprendre à Monseigneur le protecteur l'intention de leurs hautes puissances contenue en la dite resolution du 9. Juin dernier, d'en sçavoir en bref la responce ou intention finale, et de la venir rapporter en personne, veu que l'estat y est grandement interessée en la constitution presente; et à fin que son altesse en puisse declarer avec plus de confiance à Messieurs les estats. Et cependant on travaillera avec toute diligence à ce que les forces du pays soient par mer et par terre dans une posture tres considerable.

Lockhart to secretary Thurloe.

May it please your LORDSHIPP,

UPON saturday last Mr. Turenne, with 2500 horse and a 1000 commanded foott, Vol. lx. p. 43.
went as far as Bruges; and the soldiers (seeing a great many horses and baggage within the counterscarpe of some of the farthest advanced works) fell upon the counterscarpe, and broght of to the number of 500 horses, and pillaged a great deale of baggage. Don John was in the place, and had no cavalerie with him, save his owne guards; so that Mr. Turenne's party returned to the camp yesterday, well loaden with plunder. The

VOL. VII.

P p p

body

A.D. 1658. body of the French army lies betwixt Dixmude and neare Nieuport, behind the channell, that goeth betwixt the two foresaid places. They are forfeiting Dixmude, and by stone redoutts intend to make a comunicatione betwixt it and Furn. I have, with much adoe, got a battalione from the army for the garrison of Mardick. Mr. Turenne's last letter takes notice of his sending them, as if it were a favor, and pretends his highness is oblig'd by treaty to keepe constantly in the French army 4000 effective men, with some other storys, that I shall not trouble your lordshipp with. He sent lykwise two partys of horse lately, the one to Calais, the other to Bologne, with positive orders directed to the commander in chiefe in Dunkirk, to suffer them to passe thorough the towne, and lodge in the counterscarpe, if they (I mean the officers commanding the parties) should see cause for it. I have taken the libertye to disabuse him as to all those particulars, but have endeavoured to doe it in so oblidging terms, as I hope it will not occasion the sending over any complaints against me: if it doe, I am confident, his highness will see, that I have some reasone to give some little cheques to their boldness; otherwise I believe they should have the impudence to lay claime to all that's heare.

I sent last weeke a proportion of shoes and stockings to the forces, that are in the field; and I am forced to norrish all their wounded and sick heare, which amount to above 400. I am building at a watter-mill for draining the moatt of the Fort-royall, to the end that ditch (which is not at present above 4 feet deep) may be broght to its trew depth, and that the bastions and curtaines may be raised to their height, by the earth that's taken out of the ditch. I have sent your lordshipp a course plann of the forts. I shall keepe all things at Mardicke in the same conditione they are in, till I receive your lordshipp's further comand about it. Wee have so greatt need of horse heare, that one captaine Parkson was upon satturday either killed or taken betwixt Dunkirk and Mardicke; and neare the same tyme the officers at Mardicke had most of their horses taken, when they were at grasse, by a partie of horse from Graveling; one of their servants killed, and another will dye of his wounds. If the pallisados be not shipp'd, I desyer they may be stopp'd; for I have spoake with a man, that undertakes to furnish me to the number of 20000, if I need them, for 25 gilders, which is 2l. 1s. 8d. the 100. The pallisado is to be 16 inches about, and 11 foot long; and I shall at this rate have them at about 5d. a-piece. I have inclosed heerewith abstracts of the foure regiments heare; they were mustered by one Mr. Broune, who is a very honest man. I was at the muster myself, and I think I may undertake, that there was no false mustering. I give them out provisions according to their respective rolles; but I shall not give them any money, (when it comes) till I know your lordshipp's pleasure, whether they shall be payed the first month, according to the abovesaid rolls, or appoint a new muster for it. I received a letter from his eminence yesternight, which sayeth, he intendeth to see me at Dunkirke before the king parteth from Calais. If he come heare, I shall endeavour to settle all matters concerning the contributione. I have transacted with some work-masters for repairing of the counter-scarp. I find that I save mony by letting it out by the rood. The undertakers cut the foddys in the fields, and bring them in carts to the counter-scarp. When I imployed soldiers, and gave them 10d. per day, the work went much flowlier on, and what was done was nothing neare so good worke. I have had no answere from your lordshipp to what I have formerly troubled your lordshipp with, touching the copy of our oath of alledgance, and a commission to administer that oath to the magistratts and inhabitants; as also concerning the deputing one from this place to his highness touching the frigatt in the harbour, which is in dispute, the settlement of the deputie-governor, the receiver of the customs, the towne-major. In all these particulars I humbly begg your lordshipp's pleasure may be signified to,

May it please your LORDSHIPP,

Dunkirke, July $\frac{5}{17}$. 1658.

Your most humble, faithfull, and
obedient servant,

WILL. LOCKHART.

The state of the garrison of Dunckerke.

A.D. 1658.

Vol. lx. p. 12.

The under-major of Dunckerke.

	s.	d.
1 commissary of the musters,	at 5	0	per day.
1 commissary of the hay,	at 2	6	per day.
1 the commissary of the provisions at	}	0	8 per day, } what is establish'd.
1 the clerke to the commissary of provisions at 2 labourers to the said commissary, each at			per day, } what is establish'd.
1 commissary of the stores and ammunition,	at 5	0	per day, } what is establish'd.
1 assistant to the said commissary,	at 2	0	per day.
commissary of coales	at 2	6	per day.
1 quarter-master of the draught horses,	at 4	0	per day, what is in the estab ^t .
2 waggoners, under the said quarter-master,	}	1	6 per day, the same in England.
each at
1 fire-master,	at 6	0	per day, }
2 mates to the said fire-master, each	at		per day, } as p. the establish ^t .
6 assistants to the said fire-master, each	at		per day, }
1 master-carpenter,	at 2	8	per day, }
1 mate to the said carpenter,	at 1	6	per day, } as the estab ^t here.
3 gentlemen of the ordinance, each	at 2	8	per day, }
22 gunners, each	at 1	8	per day, } as per the establish.
29 matrosses, each	at 1	0	per day, }
1 chirurgeon,	at 2	0	per day, } as in the establish-
1 turner to the traine or carpenter,	at		per day, } ment at Mardicke.

In my lord's regiment of foot, and collonell Alsop's.

2 collonells, each	at 12	0	per day, }	all according to the establishment in Engl. 3d. above soldiers pay none in the English e- stablishment, 7 d. per diem; 1 coat, briches and stock- ings, and shirt; 2 pair of shoes per the year.
2 lieftenant collonells, each	at 7	0	per day, }
2 majors, each	at 5	0	per day, }
20 captains, each	at 8	0	per day, }
20 lieftenants, each	at 4	0	per day, }
20 ensignes, each	at 3	0	per day, }
40 serjeants, each	at 1	6	per day, }
60 corporalls, each	at 1	0	per day, }
20 gentlemen at armes, each	at 1	0	per day, }
40 drums, each	at 1	0	per day, }
1749 private soldiers, each	at 0	7	per day, }

Staffe officers of the said regiments.

2 chaplains, each	-	-	at	5	0	per day,	} as in England, none in England quar- ter-master and marshall executed by one, at 4 sh. before each had 3 sh. 4d.
2 chirurgions of the two regiments, each			at	4	0	per day,
4 mates to the said chirurgeons, each			at	2	6	per day,
2 quarter-masters, each of them being also			}	4	0	per day, marshalls,
2 gunsmiths, each	-	-	at	1	0	per day,
2 marshalls, each	-	-	at	2	0	per day,

The regiment of horse.

1 collonell,	at 12	0	per day, }	as in England.
5 captains, each for himself, and two horses,	at 14	0	per day, }
6 lieftenants, each 6 s. 4 s. for two horses,	at 10	0	per day, }
6 cornets, each for himself, and two horses,	at 9	0	per day, }	5 d. above soldiers pay.
6 quarter-masters, each for him, and 1 horse,	at 6	0	per day, }
18 corporals, each	at 2	8	per day, }	as in England.
13 trumpets, each	at 2	8	per day, }
581 private troopers, each	at 2	3	per day, }

A.D. 1658.

Staffe officers of the regiment of horse.

1 chaplaine,	-	-	at	per day,	} as in England. none in England. 2 s. 6 d. in Ireland. none allowed. 3 s. 4 d. usuall.
1 chirurgeon,	-	-	at 4 0	per day,
1 chest horse,	-	-	at 2 0	per day,
1 chirurgeon's mate	-	-	at	per day,
1 marshall,	-	-	at	per day,

Five companies at Mardyke.

1 lieutenant collonel,	-	-	at 7 0	per day,	} one coat, a pair of hose, stockings, shirt, 2 pair of shoes, p. the year.
5 capitaines, each	-	-	at 8 0	per day,
5 leiftenants, each	-	-	at 4 0	per day,
5 ensignes, each	-	-	at 3 0	per day,
10 serjeants, each	-	-	at 1 6	per day,
15 corporalls, each	-	-	at 1 0	per day,
5 gentlemen at armes	-	-	at 1 0	per day,
10 drummeers, each	-	-	at 1 0	per day,
361 private soldiers,	-	-	at 0 7	per day,

Quære, whether one penny per diem be not to be deducted from the non-commissioned officers of foote.

Mr. Downing, resident in Holland, to secretary Thurloe.

HONOURABLE SIR,

Vol. lx. p. 48. I HAVE herein inclosed to you a copy of a letter, which I received by yesterday's post from Flanders, which I have done for more sureness, though I doubt not, but that the same person hath given you the same account. I have also herein sent you a copy of a resolution of the states of Holland; and my lord Nieuport tells me, that he is resolved to be gone the next weeke without takeing his lady with him. Not more at present, but that I am,

HONOURABLE SIR,

Hague, 16. July, 1658. [N. S.]

Your most faythfull humble servant,

G. DOWNING.

To-morrow the Portugall ambassadore makes his entry.

The information of Benjamin Borrow of Leeds, cloth-worker, taken upon oath, at Leeds, the sixth day of July, in the year of our Lord 1658, before Francis Allanson esquire, alderman of the said borough, Thomas Harrison esquire, high sheriff of the county of York, major Owen Cambridge, William Adams, George Byard, John Stanhope, Joshua Horton, esquires, John Thoresby and Martyn Eyles gentlemen, by virtue of an order from his highness to them directed.

Vol. lx. p. 58. WHO faith, that upon the sixth day of May last, he this informant, being then working at his master's Robert Hickson's shop, one Mountaine (Francis Brigg's man) brought the paper of dangerous consequence against the commissioners of excise to the said shop, and threw it down upon the shop-board; whereupon, he this informant took it up, and heard it read by Roger Wise his fellow-servant; after which this informant, with the rest of his fellow-servants, sent it by Robert Ramsden, a boy in the shop, to one Barret's: and he further faith, that the same day, before the said paper came, Thomas Edge (a datal servant with the said Robert Hickson) told him, that there was a note in agitation about pulling down the excise, and said Richard Willson's fellows told him so; but faith, who were the authors or contrivers of the said paper, or ringleaders in that design, he knows not; and being asked, what discourse past amongst him and his fellow-servants, after the receipt of the said paper touching the same, faith they had discourse about it; but he doth not at present remember what it was, or which way it tended.

BENJAMIN BURROW.

The

The information of Thomas Edge, servant to the abovesaid Robert Hickson, A.D. 1658. taken upon oath as abovesaid.

WHO being asked, how the said scandalous paper above-mentioned came to his said master's shop, faith, that one Francis Brigg's man (whose name is Montayne, as he hears) brought it thither; whereupon he read it over, and he and his fellow-servants sent it away to another shop; and faith, that before the said note came to the said shop, one Robert Browne (Richard Wilson's man) told this informant thereof; and said, such a note or paper would immediately come to their shop; but did not tell him the contents thereof, only he said it concerned the excise; but who were the authors or contrivers of the said papers, or ring-leaders in that design against the excisemen, he knows not; only he faith, Andrew Lister, apprentice, the same day, two hours before, read it to this informant, and the said Robert Burrow.

THOMAS EDGE.

The information of Robert Browne, servant to Richard Wilson, taken upon oath as aforesaid.

WHO faith, that upon the 19th day of May last, Stephen Edmondson's apprentice boy brought the scandalous paper before-mentioned to his master's shop; whereupon he read it over, and afterwards he and his fellow-servants sent it away by their apprentice boy to Andrew Lister's shop; but who were authors or contrivers of the said paper, or ring-leaders in that design, he knows not.

ROBERT BROWNE.

The information of Samuel Jackson, apprentice to Stephen Edmondson, taken the day and year abovesaid.

WHO faith, that upon the 19th day of May last, Edward Blackbrough's apprentice (whose name he knows not) brought the scandalous paper before-mentioned to his master's shop; and being read by his fellow-servants, who dislik'd of it, they appointed this informant to carry it back again to the said Edward Blackbrough's shop, which accordingly he did; but the servants would not receive it, but caused him this informant, to bring it again to their own shop, which he did; and afterwards his fellow-servants appointed him to carry it to Richard Wilson's shop, which he did.

SAMUEL JACKSON + his mark.

The information of Thomas Booth, servant to Mr. William Busfield, aged eleven years or thereabouts, taken as aforesaid.

WHO faith, that upon wednesday the 19th day of May last, the scandalous paper above-mentioned (as he heard) was brought to his master's shop, by whom he knows not; which was read by Marmaduke Hebden, one of the journeymen there; whereupon he heard all the journeymen in the shop, namely, Thomas Bawne, Marmaduke Hebden, Richard Hynde, John Falkinor, Ambrose Hargrave, Thomas Deyne, and William Watson of Kirgate, after the note was so read, they all rejoiced, and said, they would rise all the next morning against the excisemen; and that they would cuff them, burn their books, and put them out of the town: and faith, they all prayed him to carry the note to William Coldcall, which accordingly he did: and faith, he heard Marmaduke Hebden say, that the note came out of the Kirgate, from some house below Mr. alderman Allan-son's.

ROBERT BOOTH + his mark.

The information of Richard Hynde, servant to Mr. Busfield, taken upon oath, as abovesaid.

WHO faith, that the dangerous paper above-mentioned against the commissioners of excise was, upon wednesday the 19th day of May last, brought to his master's shop, but by whom he knows not, nor hath heard: and further faith, that Marmaduke Hebden, one of his fellow-servants, openly read the said paper amongst them all, which was the first time he saw it; and being asked, whether any of his fellow-servants rejoiced upon reading of the same paper, faith, for his part he did not, but hath not the tongues of other men in guiding: and faith, he heard some of them (but which of them, he knows not) say,

A.D. 1658. say, that the next morning they would rise in the market-place, and beat the excisemen; but who were contrivers or authors of the said paper, he knows not.

RICHARD [R.H.] HYNDE his mark.

The information of John Falkinor, servant to Mr. William Busfield, taken upon oath, as abovesaid.

THIS informant saith, that the dangerous paper above-mentioned against the excisemen was brought to his master's shop, but by whom he knows not, nor hath heard; and saith, he heard Marmaduke Hebden above-named read part of the said paper, which was to incite the journeymen and apprentices to a rising against the officers of excise; but saith, he knows not the authors or contrivers thereof, nor from whence it came.

JOHN FALKINOR.

The information of William Mounteyne, apprentice to John Kent of Leeds, taken upon oath, as abovesaid.

WHO saith, that upon wednesday the 19th day of May last, about eight of the clock in the morning, the dangerous paper before-mentioned against the officers of excise was brought and delivered to him (this informant standing in his master's door) by a young man, whose name he knows not, nor where he lives, nor whose servant he was; only he thinks he has seen his face before, who desired him this informant to carry and deliver the same at George Kendall's shop to his man Thomas; whereupon this informant immediately carried the same to the said shop, and delivered the same, as he was appointed, to the said Thomas (whose surname is Illinworth); but who were authors or contrivers of the said papers, he knows not, nor at any time hath heard.

WILLIAM MOUNTEYNE + his mark.

By order from the gentlemen before-named, signed by John Lunde, town-clerk for the borough aforesaid.

Thomas Harrison, &c. to the protector.

May it please your HIGHNESS,

Vol. lx. p. 60.

IN obedience to your highness's order and command, we have called before us sundry of the inhabitants of this town (whose informations and examinations we have herein inclosed). It is very evident to us, that a very considerable number of journeymen and apprentices here did conspire and intended by strong hand to drive the sub-commissioners of excise, and their agents, forth of this town; but it doth not appear to us, that they had any further design, or that they corresponded with the Popish or malignant party, or any of those people commonly called Quakers, though we have used our utmost diligence to search into the bottom of this business, in regard the intended combustion here should have been on the same day the insurrection was to have been at London (to wit, the 26th of May last). And we do further humbly certify your highness, that we are credibly informed, that certain Quakers hold their weekly meetings in and about this town by several hundreds at a time, to the great offence of the well-affected inhabitants there, which may occasion the disturbance of the peace; and that one John Hall (one of their speakers, a scholar and traveller in foreign parts, whom we look upon as a very dangerous person) is lately fled southwards.

MY LORD,

Leeds, the 7th of July, 1658.

We are your HIGHNESS's obedient servants,

THOMAS HARRISON. OWEN CAMBRIDGE.

GEO. BYARD.

JO. STANHOPE.

WILL. ADAMS.

FRAN. ALLANSON, ald.

JOSHUA HORTON.

JOHN THORESBY.

MARTIN ILES.

H. Crom-

H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland, to secretary Thurloe.

SIR,

7. July, 1658. A.D. 1658.

YOU seem to wonder, how any one should boggle at the address Dr. Worth brought over; therefore I shall acquaint you, that a letter was sent hither from a late member of parliament in England, which I conceive (by the persons to whom 'twas directed) to be Mr. Weaver, complaining of the dissolving of the late parliament; alleging there was no cause for it, but that it was done upon a mere arbitrary power, or groundless fears, &c. This letter was notably improved here; and happening at that juncture, when the addresses were in hand, made those honest men, who dissented, desirous not to be pre-engaged, if a difference betwixt his highness and parliament should be stated, like that of the late king and parliament, and fear, lest it should encourage his highness to break parliaments; and therefore some of them say, that if an angel from heaven had offered it then, they would not have signed it. But by this time the well-meaning part see, they were over-reached; yet now some here endeavour to make the rest believe, they have no retreat; that they are represented into England as malignants; and this something prevails upon Dr. Winter, and such credulous weak men amongst them, who are easily deceived. They all agree to represent something into England by way of excuse, but differ in the manner, the factious part desiring only thereby to asperse and lessen those, who already made the addresses, and keep up a difference; the rest to heale and compose. I must make one further observation, that these things do not come from these men, but as they are acted; for some, whom I think of the most heady temper, and particular favourites of ———— did at the first motion of the address passionately embrace it, and said, he was no Englishman, that would refuse it; but not many hours after were in the other extreme. I wonder (because I think you mistake as seldom as another) that you should think the principal interest and natural disposition of our great man would have led him to other counsels than he now follows. It may be his highness knew him better, and therefore sent him for Ireland. For my part, I never took him to be a serious man; and certainly he is compos'd of so much craft and affectation, that he wants artifice to cover it. He is now endeavouring to engage me in private conferences (as he pretends) to open his heart to me, and chooseth whole afternoons for it; and indeed I know no other way he hath left to find matter to work upon, and give some colour to his late letter. When you see by mine, of the 23d of June last, how much I was aware of him in the like little contrivances, you may well blame me, if I am satisfied now, though I cannot be wholly free from danger, in regard, as I have hitherto, so I still intend to carry myself towards him with such respect and observance, as is due to his highness's minister, employed in such an eminent place. You see in what danger we are of being overwitted by men of great reach. I am glad you are past the danger of your junto. I remain, &c.

Memorandum in the copy-books of the letters of lord deputy Cromwell.

MEMORANDUM, that his excellency intending at this time chiefly to make observations of the state of things under his immediate charge, went a progress to Cork, and from thence visited all the harbours upon the western coast as far as Bantre; and, going from thence by Limerick, came to Portumna, where he met with the news of the death of his sister the lady Elizabeth; and having nothing of great emergency before him, gave the more way to melancholy thoughts and recess. This is the reason of the intermission of entry of letters, till the news, that his highness was dangerously sick, gave fresh occasion.

A letter of intelligence.

SIR,

IN me letter of the 14th I have omitted, wich was passed the day before, (viz. saturday the 13th) because I was forcet to finish the same letter be want of libertie to have longer a chamber, or a roome privie or allone for to dispatch me businesse. The same 13th in the mourning, about 9 horses came before Bridges, (at a place called Stautschip) about one half mile off from the citty (where was pitched some tentes of vivaudiers, or sellers of meate and provisions, and especially a great quantity of provisions of all kinde of cattle, being noe soldiers there, but only some Spanish and Condee's horsemen passing be, and refreshing themselves there); a matter of about 60 French horses, of the marshall de Turenne (saying to be of the prince of Condee's men.) About half an houre thereafter came at the same place about a 100 horsemen more, and one quatero an houre

A.D. 1658. 300 horsemen more, saying all to be the prince of Condee's. Having bin there about one houre, they killed the Spanish and Condee's men, which they found there; and tooke all the cattel away, driving the same cattel away untill 2 English mile of from the said city, where they have made an embuscade of some horse and foot. Just when these newse came into Bridges, Don Jean was riding out of the city out of another gate towards Gand (being of intention to goe towards Brussels, for to visite there the holy sacrament of mirakel, for they doe speake heare); and as soone he understood the said noise, did run back againe into the city for fast he could drive, having with him about 50 troupers of his gard. The common speech thereof is, that the said French did intend to surprize Don Jean. But I am confident they knew nothing of his voyage towards Brussels; for if they hath known the said voyage, without any doubt Don Jean should have bin prisoner, because they, perceiving some troupers of the enemy, (being of the gard of Don Jean) did advance upon them; but they escaped into the city, getting onely 5 or 6 mulets, charged with some of his baggage (some will say, the said mulets were charged with his plate, or some silver service of his table); whereupon Don Jean his voyage is referred until better opportunity. Within Bridges are noe soldiers (except the gard of Don Jean, being about 100 troupers) the city being watched of the citizens, because they will suffer noe soldiers there; and I am most confident, if the French army (cum suis) came before the said city, the presence of Don Jean should not be able to hinder the surrendering: and I doe marvelle, for what reason they doe not venture upon, here and every-where, into these parts. They doe not doubt of the death of the king of France, wherewith the hopes of their deliverance is strenthened very much, of which death we have confirmation out of severall parts (but not from Paris or Calais) with abundance of circumstances and particulars, whereof I doe hope you have better information. Wherefore I doe think it to be to no purpose to mention more of those false and invented noises. Some others will say, there should be some hindrance into the French and English desseines, because there should be a great division between the French and the English, and infinite such or de like fancies; but however, there must needs be something, because since the begining of the sickness of the king, they undertook no attempt of consideration, whereof you will be well informed from other parts. Since the surrendering of Dixmuyde, the army of the French and English undertook nothing of any importance, but plundering at severall places, and taking the cattel away: after they took the cattel away from before the city of Bridges, they assaulted a castel called Winandale, being some 3 Dutch miles of from Bridges, belonging unto the duke of Nieuburg, (which castel is very strong; wherefore all the gentlemen and country people hath brought and secured all their goods therein) the which (after some defence) they have taken, and found about 200,000 gilders of money and plate therein, besides all the moveables or household stuffe, cattel and other goods, at Bridges, and every-where into these parts is a generall discout as against Don Jean; and truly his entrance, or first coming into Bridges, was no better for his side. When he should enter into Bridges on monday the eighth of this month, he passed be some horse and foot of his men, saying in his passage, Courage, courage, gentlemen; we shall advance ourselves very shortly of the enemy. Whereupon they cryed altogether, No fight, no fight; we will fight no more without money. Whereof Don Jean was not well contented, but affright and amazed; and received at Bridges no better welcome, because being come at the gate, the citizens did refuse him the entrance into the city; whereupon some of his gard did draw their pistols, the citizens crying unto her, Go, go, you cowards; draw your pistols against the ennemy, from whom you runne away; and did shote upon his gard and followers, killing his trumpetter, one of his gard, and one of his archers or hellebard-men, wounding also some horses; wherefore Don Jean was faine to retire him with his men from the city, untill the magistrates came at the gate, and invited him to come into the city. The governor of Ostend send out of the towne all the women, whose husbands are at sea, into the service of the king of Spaine, but kept all their goods within. All the seamen lately rosen at Antwerp, for to be employed at some sea services, did runne away be want of money. This day marched through this city towards Damme 300 new rosen men or thereabouts, and 1500 should come out of Breban, all drawne out of the garrisons thereabout; but they are not able to raise new forces be want of money. All things are untill now into the same estate like I have mentioned heretofore; as also, into me last of the 14th; and seeing no other motion for this side at hand, I shall undertake a poast some necessary voyage towards Holland, hoping very shortly to returne here againe or hereabouts, according as the oppertunity of busines shall require; remaining for ever,

SIR,

Gand, the 17th of July

Your most humbel and faithfull servant,

1658. [N. S.]

JERONIMUS VON ABSBACH.

The plague and famine begins together with the warre into these parts, so well amongst cattel as men. Vale.

Mr.

Mr. Downing, the English resident in Holland, to secretary Thurloe.

HONOURABLE SIR,

A.D. 1658.

Vol. ix. p. 50.

YESTERDAY I wrote to you by the way of Zeland, and so for Dunkerk in a cover to my lord Lockhart, and therein inclosed to you a copy of a letter, which I received out of Flanders, tho' I hope you will have received the same account from the same party directly yourselfe. I also therein sent you a copy of a resolution of the states of Holland; copyes of both which are also herein enclosed. You will perceive by the sayd resolution, how much the states of Holland doe presse my lord Newport to be gone; and indeed I doe perceive, that de Witt, and the rest of them, are a little angry at him for his having delayed so long about his private affaires. The businesse of the traffick of the Baltick sea, and the feare of Danzik in particular, toucheth them very neerly. They say it cannot but be verry bad for them, that that sea should be in a manner in the hands of one man, and much they are concerned about the instance, which is made by the ministers of the king of Swethlandd at Copenhagen for the exclusion of all forreigne men of warre out of the Baltick sea, which they say may as well concerne England as this state. I

^{de W i t} your letter, shewed 263 160 67 145 that passage in 511 361, wherein you write, that his highnesse would be willing to adyise with this state in relation to his signes abroad; at which he expressed a very great satisfaction and contentment; and if you can, by turning the king of Sweden from Dantzick, which is, I think, the best way upon all accounts, or otherwise, give them content in relation to your intentions and desires as to the Baltick sea, truly I think you may by little and little have your minde of this state; and that having contentment therein, it will be a meanes, and I think an effectuall one, to keepe them for any kinde of engaging against you upon the account of Flanders. But if they have not contentment therein, and that the treaty of Elbing, with its elucidation, or something like them, be not confirmed, and above all, that the king of Swethland be not kept from attempting Dantzick, I feare the consequences; and that upon the coming of the Muscovian, Polonian, and Hungarian ministers, of which I formerly gave you an account, being wholly at an uncertainty with the king of Swethland, they may by little and little

^{de W i t} be drawn into and engage in other counsells, which 263 502 151 protests he will doe his endeavour by all meanes to his utmost to avoyd, and that nothing but this can bring it about. And the jealousy, which the king of Swethland gives of his intentions to besiege Dantzick, by sending shippes before the towne, doth great hurt here. In discourse lately at large with the forementioned party about the present posture of affaires, he sayd, that my lord protector did wholly manage the counsells of the king of France to the advantage of England; for that, sayth he, France can get nothing by this alliance soe considerable as to counterballance the hazard they run by giving the English a footing upon the continent; but on the contrary, that the king of Swethland did wholly manage the counsells of his highness to his advantage, and the prejudice of England; for that it could not possible but be against its interest, that any one person should be so powerfull in the Baltick sea, whereby, in case of rupture with Swethland, England shall be put to such extremities for the commodities of that sea, beside the danger of invasion from him, when so powerfull at land and sea. And he further added, that in case at any time hereafter a difference should happen between England and France, that it was to him past all doubt, that Sweden, by reason of its common interest with France in Germany, (which is Sweden's most considerable interest) would take the part against England in France; and consequently the greater the Swede upon the sea-coast, the more dangerous for England; and withall added, that if the king of Sweden would goe up into Germany, that for his part he should wish him bon voyage against Austria. This was the substance of what he sayd to me, which I thought my duty to let you know; to which I returned him in answer, that if the king of Swethland had gained more in the Baltick sea than well pleased them, that the fault was not in my lord protector, but in themselves, who had hindred the making a separate peace between the kings of Swethland and Denmark, whereby affaires came to be driven to the extremities they are now at, which, had they had a confidence in the advices of his highnesse, had been prevented. As for Dunkerk, he sayd, that it was true, that, while it was in the hands of the Spanyards, by piratry, it had done great mischief to particular persons; but more than that it could never doe, the king of Spain being very weake at sea; but that being in the hands of English, who have such a navell strength, it might in time, in case of a rupture, become dangerous to the very foundations of their state. I told him, that if they would quit their new maxime of ballancing all the world, with which they have thriven very ill, and keepe to their old maxime, which their first prince of Orange left them, of continuing well with and depending upon England, that instead of all these feares they would find nothing but matter

A.D. 1658. of rejoyceing and strength against their old enemy the Spanyard, by Dunkerk being in those hands it now is. They speake of increasing their militia, and compleating their officers. It was printed the last weeke in a gazette here, that the Zelanders were treating with those of Flanders for the putting of Dam, and another place thereabouts, into their hands. Here hath been a report, that Charles Stuart was one night at Amsterdam; yea, a gentleman told me, that another told him, that he saw him there; yet I cannot believe it. I have obtayned an order of the counsell of state, that the English ministers here doe pray no more for Charles Stuart, and Mr. Beumont, who did before declare to me, that, as he could not leave off the doing thereof without command, (being bound, at his entrance into that place, to make no innovation or change) so having now received a command, that he shall very willingly give obedience thereunto. Indeed I have stirred in this businesse to my very utmost, for that this way of praying, with its dependances, made this place a meere nursery of cavallierisme; and you may be sure, that by the doing thereof I have greatly offended many, and much enraged them against me, which doth not trouble me; but there is one thing, which indeed I am concerned in, to wit, that the queen, and many other English, who were a great reliefe to the poore and to the ministers, will now withdraw themselves, and thereby both one and th'other want that support which they had; so that I must humbly beg, that in this you would be pleased to take consideration, and that his highnesse and counsell would be pleased to order the committee for tythes to order the payment of about 150 l. per ann. for such time as they shall think fit, towards the mayntaynance of the two ministers here. Truly it would be a very great good work, and greatly for his highnesse honour, there being allowed by the states here only 500 guilders for the mayntenance of the ministers in this place, and the rest of their mayntenance came by collection, which will now arise to very little; and this will not extend to be made an example to other places, for that in other townes there is a very plentiful allowance given by the states. The other minister, who was assistant to Mr. Beumont, a Scotchman, is so much a cavallier, as that hereupon he declares he will continue no longer in this place; and Mr. Beumont hath hinted so much to me, and withall let me know, that he is very willing, that I should get another out of England to be joyned with him; so that I trust, by the mercy of God, here is now a very happy doore open of doing very much good in this place, which I doe seriously lay before you for your helpe herein both as to the first point of mayntaynance, and also as to the providing of a person of piety, abilities, prudence and modderations; for any other would set all a fire, instead of being an instrument of good; and I trust, by this means, it shall in a little time come to pass, that whereas the vilest of our nation flocked hither, pleasing themselves with the notion of praying for their king, as they call him, and having the church at their command, that now there shall be encouragement for good men and goodness. I have sent this by captaine Plumleigh, commander of the Reserve frigate, who, I doubt not, will take care of the safe sending thereof to you, as also of six dozen of bottles of Spaw water, which I have herewith also sent. My lord Nieuport tells me, he intends to be gone about the middle of next weeke for England. He leaves his lady here behind him, being, as you will perceive by the enclosed resolution, himself speedily to returne, so much they look upon themselves interested in his errand, and in a speedy and thorough account thereof. I know not what to doe about his present: his final answer is, that he cannot receive it without leave of the states; and I find de Witt still passionately bent against giving him leave. I intend once more to speake to him; and if I can do it without angering him, to put in a memorial to the states generall about it; but it would not doe well to anger him about such a thing, and especially at this time, and be denied to boote. I have herein inclosed to you a copy of my memoriall given in to the states generall concerning the ship Postillion. De Wit hath promised me to take care of that businesse, and that the master shall be forthwith released, and all possible expedition about the other merchandise. As soon as I have the answer, I shall send it to you. No more at present, but that I am,

HONOURABLE SIR,

Hague, 17. July, 1658. [N. S.]

Your most faithfull, humble, &c.

G. DOWNING.

You must expect no more Spaw water in haste; for I have bought all in this towne.

*The marquis of Cugnac to Stoupe.*Ostend, the 17th of July, 1658. [N.S.] A.D. 1658.

I WRIT to you in haste the last time. I do not think we shall stir from hence so long Vol. ix. p. 62.
 as the enemy continueth in the posts they be in. A trumpeter, who came yesterday from Calais, assured me, that he saw my brother there. I wonder he should stay there so long, and not go for Paris, to dispatch his business. In my mind, his business doth require haste. There may some things happen, which may give him trouble enough hereafter. I wish he would remember me; for I assure you I am brought very low, and at this very moment I live upon a horse, and have not past three pistoles left; and when that is gone, I must eat another, if we do not meet with some good fortune.

Major general Jephson to secretary Thurloc.

SIR,

SINCE my last of the 3^d instant, I have made noe progresse in my journeye, very little Vol. ix. p. 256.
 in my business; for I have found the king soe busy with his father-in-law, as I have thought it uncivill to trouble him with business. Nevertheless, yesterday I had some discourse with him, and he told mee, that hee would set forward this day towards Olden-sloe, from whence hee would speedilye dispatch me. Thither I am beginning my journey, and there I hope I shall meete Sir Phillip Meadowe. It is a towne within a day's journey of Hamburgh. When I received my last letters from thence, the English post was not come, but I had intelligence from my correspondent, that the Maidstone frigatt was safely arriv'd in the river, lying there ready for my transport; for which I give you my very humble thanks, and doubt not (by the blessing of God) but I shall be there the next weeke. I heare it confirmed, that the business, for which the commissioners were sent from the electoral colledge to the king of Swede, was to use all meanes possible with him to keepe his armye out of the empire: to which he hath given this answer, that he will begin noe warre in the empire, but will march directly into Prussia to defend his interest there; in which march hee shall bee forc't to passe through some parts of the empyre, where, if any body shall fall upon him, hee hopes the electors will not take it ill, that hee defend himselfe, nor impute it to him as the beginner of the warre. 'Tis reported, that part of the elector of Brandenburg's forces are joyned with the Poles and Austrians in Prussia, to attempt something upon the king's garrisons there; but I find they are confident here, that their garrisons are soe well provided, that they cannot hurt them; so that it is believed the king will not (or rather cannot) march farre with his armye, untill the corne begin to be ripe. If it shall please God to blesse mee with a fair wind, when I come to Hamburgh, I hope I shall not need to trouble you with many more letters from these parts, but shall have the happinesse to shew you at a nearer distance, how really I am,

SIR,

Your most faythfull, and affectionate humble servant,

Sleswick, 8th July, 1658.

WILL. JEPHSON.

Intelligence.

July 18. 1658. [N.S.]

THERE are none at present going for England of those, who are the suspicious persons; Vol. ix. p. 78.
 but the lord Gerrard is very busy in engaging for another trouble in England. It is to be thought, that when any thing comes to the birth, the lord of Oxford and lord Cambden will be deeply engaged; for the lord Gerrard hath very great influence upon them. Charles Stuart is now at Brussels, also my lord Gerrard. Charles is much troubled to find himself debarred of going for Frankfort. This week there came back two officers, which he had recommended to prince Rupert for employment at Frankfort; but when they came there, they had much difficulty to get in, the gates being shut to all strangers; and the prince told them, he could not help them to any employment there, and sent word to Charles, that there was no coming for him thither. They came out of Frankfort the tenth instant, new style, at which time there was no time appointed for the election, though the king of Hungary and all the electors were there. The chancellor lies still at Breda. Dr. Whitaker stays in the Hague, having taken a house here. Charles hath turned off Sir Henry de Vic, who hath all along been his agent, and followed his business

A.D. 1658. nefs at Bruffels, he having lately had a falling out with the chancellor. Sir George Lane, an Irishman, lately made a knight by Charles Stuart, is put into his place. There is captain Holmes and captain Golden have gotten commissions, one from the king of Spain, and another from Charles Stuart, for each of them to set out a man of war to take prizes; and they are suddenly to go away to St. Sebastian to that purpose.

Several things offered in behalf of the inhabitants of Dunkirk, for the preservation of the town, with its concerns.

Vol.lix. p.181. MAY it please the reverend and noble Mr. Peters, at the prayer and instance of the noble burgomaster and sheriffs of the town of Dunkirk, to take a favourable regard and reflection upon the points and articles following, to represent them, and to recommend them, to all such of their superiors and chief governors, whom they may concern, properly serving for the preservation of the town of Dunkirk, and the inhabitants of the same.

First and foremost, that all well-ordered and regulated cities are maintained through two points.

The first is religion, and the second is good policy in worldly affairs.

Concerning the first; it is desired, that the Catholic Apostolic Romish religion peaceably may be maintained, as from old times it hath been, neither more nor less, as it is also bespoken by the capitulation.

Concerning the second point, which is policy, the same consists of divers parts:

First, upon the fact of lodgments of soldiers, that the same, for so much as is possible, may be put in the barracks made for that purpose, the town or burgh furnishing them with pailliaffes or dust-beds, with coverlet, and no more.

Secondly, that the lodgments may be made by the direction of the magistrate alone, because they know the faculty of their burghers, and that no officers may meddle with it.

Thirdly, that the aforesaid town hath no other means nor revenues but the ordinary excise-rights, which consist in a certain right upon every quartele of wine, and barrel of beer; and that no man may claim or enjoy any liberty hereof, as heretofore hath been observed, as well in regard of the militia, as other, according to the capitulation.

Which rights or dues, now found to be corrupted wholly by the importation of so notable a quantity of English and outlandish beer, which daily are seen to be cellared, without paying any the least duty or right, yea even without entering it at the comptoir, and without the accustomed beer and wine-carriers.

Desiring therefore and beseeching, that promptly, and without loss of time, the same may be redressed, in regard of the future; and, for so much as concerns the beer cellared, that thereof an inventory may be taken, with order to pay the duty accustomed.

For otherwise, without the due observation of the said rights, the same town cannot maintain herself in her old government, but would instantly fall to decay.

Fourthly, touching the commerce, that the same ordinarily requires liberty and freedom, not only in regard of the lodgments, but also in imposing upon the goods and merchandizes the duties at coming in and going out.

Praying therefore that the merchant, as well in regard of the one as of the other point, may therein be obviated, as much as is possible; and particularly, that upon the goods conveyed hence into the country little or no duties may be imposed, because that otherwise commerce cannot be nursed here, and that the same would be driven away to other places.

For advance and the benefit of commerce, the following (under correction) is convenient and conducive.

First, that the customs upon goods imported and exported be, according to the Spanish and Hollandish list, moderate.

Item, that all things coming from sea, under the fort of Mardike, or upon the road, may break bulk, and only pay duty for such goods as shall be taken out of them, and that the same ships, with the rest of their loading, may sail to other places, without paying any duties for them.

Item, that all goods coming from the allied towns and places in Flanders, and going thither as well by water as by land, may be free of all rights, as from old it hath been observed.

Item, that all passages to and from allied places may be free of all troubles, hindrances, and exactions.

Item, that the commerce may be free, with the correspondence upon all places; and that, to this end, permission may be granted for messengers or posts to travel.

Item, that no man in the ships, lying at the key, may vend any goods in small, or by retail, in prejudice of the inhabiting merchants and shopkeepers of this town.

Lock-

Lockhart to secretary Thurloe.

May it please your LORDSHIPP,

A.D. 1658.

I COULD not suffer our worthy friend Mr. Peeters to come away from Dunkerke, without a testimony of the greatt benefitts we have all received from him in this place, wher he hath laid himself forth in great charity and goodnesse, in sermons, prayers, and exhortations, in visiting and relieving the sick and wounded; and in all these profitably applying the singular talent God hath bestowed upon him to the two chief ends proper for our awditory; for he hath not only shewen the soldiers their duty to God, and prest it home upon them, I hope to good advantage, but hath lykwyse acquainted them with their obligations of obedience to his highness government, and affectione to his persone. He hath labour'd amongst us heare with much good will, and seems to enlarge his harte towards us, and care of us for many other things, the effects whereof I desyn to leave upon that providence, which hath brought us hither. It were superfluous to tell your lordshipp the story of our present condition, either as to the civill government, works, or soldiery. He, who hath studded all these more than any I know heare, can certainly give the best account of them; wherefore I comitt the whole to his information, and begge your lordshipp's casting a favorable eie upon such propositions as he will offer to your lordshipp for the good of this garrison. I am,

May it please your LORDSHIPP,

Dunkerke, July $\frac{8}{18}$. 1658.

Your most humble, faithfull, and obedient servant,

WILL. LOCKHART.

My lord, Mr. Peeters hath taken leave at least 3 or 4 tymes; but still something falls out, which hinders his return to England. He hath been twyce at Bergh, and hath spoak with the card. three or four tymes. I kept myself by, and had a care, that he did not importune him with too long speeches. He returns loaden with an account of all things heare, and hath undertaken every man's businesse. I must give him that testimony, that he gave us three or four very honest sermons; and if it were possible to gett him to mynd preaching, and to forbear the trubling of himself with other things, he would certainly proove a very fitt minister for soldiers. I hope he cometh well satisfied from this place. He hath often insinuated to me his desyer to stay heare, if he had a call. Some of the officers also have been with me to that purpose; but I have shifted him so handsomely, as, I hope, he will not be displeased; for I have told him, that the greatest service he can doe us is to goe to England, and carry on his propositions, and to own us in all our other interests, which he hath undertaken with much zeale.

Lockhart to secretary Thurloe.

May it please your LORDSHIPP,

UPON tuesday last I went out to meett his eminence betwixt Gravelinns and Mardick; and tho' I observed him with all the respect I could, by putting both garrisons under armes, and fying of our gunns, yett I could not perswade him to dyne with me, nor indeed to give me any measure of that countenance he hath been accustomed to afford me. He spent the most of the tyme I was in his coach in making complaints, and, as I thought, treated me a little too severely, especially since most of what he had to say was either that which could not be helped, or that which was mistake; for the weaknesse of the forces in the field, upon which he insisted first, is occasioned by the hard service our regiments hath been putt to; and I told him truly, that it would appear our regiments had held out as well as any of the French army; and he having taken notice, that the gunns I promised him for his share were not yett delivered, and that the officers of the artillery were not satisfied for the bills, I shew him these things had not been refused, and the cause of their delay proceeded more from the indiscretion of those, that looked after them, than any backwardnesse in me to perform what I had promised. The last complaint was, that Peter Minks (who pretends to be proprietor of the frigatt in dispute) had sold that frigatt for eighteen thousand livers to one of his gentlemen, and that I had hindred the delivery of it. I told him, that when the proprietor had cleared his interest in the frigatt, I should be so farre from hindring her being sould to his eminence, as I should take care he had the first offer; but finding all I could say would not doe, I took leave of him so soon as I had broght him through this towne.

VOL. VII.

S f f

Upon

A.D. 1658. Upon wednesday I waited upon him at Bergh, where having a fitt opportunity for it, I told him, that I beleevd some had done me ill offices, and had misrepresented me unto him. After some pause, he said he had some little quarrells with me; but least he might doe me wrong, he would declare the grounds of them. The substance of his accusation was, I had threatned to hang a priest; I had taken a pulpitt out of the church, and had made use of the town-house to preach in without the magistrate's consent; and some other frivolous things, not worthy your lordshipp's trouble, of which I easily cleared myself; but he stuck mainly upon two particulars: The first was, my order of the return of these companys his high. sent after the battle, saying, it was long of me, that his high. had not as many of his old troopes heare, as would have been a sufficient garrison for this place; and so the six regiments might have kept the field. The second was, that I had writt to major-general Morgan, that our principall worke was the conservation of this place; and that our farther conjunctione with the French was but a businesse upon the by. I confesse, being nettled after 2 orders sent to the major-general for a regiment to put into Mardicke, the third time I writt a little sharply; and I dare not say, that what I then writt would not amount to this; but I did not think it would have mett me, and I am confident its doing so proceeded rather from the major-general's inadvertency, than ill intention. I satisfied him since, I had reason to doe the first, when I told him, that his high. out of kyndnesse to him, had sent upon the suddaine so many of his forces from London, as, till other regiments could have been brought up from the countrie, his own person was in some danger. And as to the second, he knew, that any, who had command, did not love to have their orders disputed; and I meant nothing els to the major-general, but that he, who is under my immediatte command, should not, upon any consideration whatsoever, neglect the obeying of positive orders; and added, that I would not trouble him with my complaints in that businesse, tho' I had, after three letters for a regiment, recieved only a battallian, and in a way that held forth, I gott that rather by favour than right. And in conclusion, I besought him, when any such storys came to his eares, that he would doe me the favour not to condemn me, before he heard what I had to say for myself.

My lord, this being over, he resum'd his old way of kyndnesse, and told me, he had not resolved upon any thing to be undertaken by the army, till he had advised with me; and then proposed all his difficulties, which certainly are many and great. His army at present is more numerous in horse than foot, and the service of this country requires a great many more foot than horse. If they have the post they are now in, he will goe near to loose Dixmuyde and Fern; if he ly still their, he may fortifie Dixmuyde, but not so as it will be able to hold out against a considerable seige. The enemy hath no place on the fronteer of France, which the army might not, in all probability, carry, provided they could withdraw the foot they needs must leave in Bergh, Fern, and Dixmuyde; so that they have a fair opportunity to doe some considerable and handsome action this yeare, if their infantry were in good condition. Upon the whole, I tooke the boldnesse to offer to him, that, as things stood at present, it was best to slight Dixmuyde and Fern, and keep Burgh as their advanced post this winter; doing which, the army might be hidd either before Cambray, Hesdin, or St. Omer. I told him, the slighting of a place was not at all dishonourable; he that would be master of the fiede next spring, would be master of them; and in the mean tyme the army might be employed advantageously, and the expence of the defence of the foresaid places saved. This advice did not please, tho' it was honestly the best I could give, and I feare they may be put to follow it, or doe worse at a more unseasonable time. The card. proposed to me, that in lieu of his high. obligatione to besiege Gravelinns by sea, that 3 or 4000 foott may be sent over by his highnesse, who shall be bound to serve for the space of 2 months or 10 weekes, and noe longer, and maintained by the French during the tyme of their said service. Withall, he would have into the bargaine the loan of ten frigotts at some seasonable tyme, by giving two months advertisement to prepare them. The time, for which the foresaid number of frigotts is to be employed, shall be limited. If this cannot be, he desyres his highnesse to send him 1000 foot for 2 months tyme. He would have sent over one of his favouritts, count Morett, to have pressed this and some other things; but I diswaded him, knowing that such visitts are both troublesome and expensive. In the next place he overtures, that his highnesse and his majesty of France may send a fleet of 20 men of warre to waite upon the returne of the Spanish plate fleet, which he sayth will be exceeding rich. The king shall furnish 10 ships, the least whereof shall carry 36 or 40 gonns: his highnesse is desyred to send the like number; the pryzes made to be equally divided. The ground of this offer, as I take it, is, he hath not taken his measures right touching his designs in the Mediterranean; and having now his ships idle upon his hands, he would willingly undertake any thing, to be a pretext to the world, that the mony he hath expended upon this fleet is not throwne away; for by the best information I can find here, the Spaniards have changed their method in that businesse, and all all their shippes from the West-Indies come home by 2, or, at most, 3 in company; and A.D. 1658. that, which confirms me in the opinion, that he is rather seeking worke for his ships, than that he has any great hopes to raise a benefit from such a voyage, is, when I spoke to him of the orders captain Stokes had to keep company with and assist his fleet, he gave his highnesse many humble thanks for the favour and honour done him, but his designs were there subject to so many charges and uncertainties, as he durst not give his highnesse the trouble of waiting longer; and so your lordship may order captain Stokes to follow his own businesse, without minding the French any more. The returne I made to the foresaid overtures was; I assured him, if his highnesse did not answer his desires in any or all of them, it would be, because he could not doe it upon so short a warning, and not because he was unwilling to give his majestie and him all the proofs imaginable of the firmnesse and sincerity of his friendship. He replied, that he doubted nothing of his highnesse's goodnesse, and your lordship's kindnesse; and was confident, if I push'd it with that earnestness he expected, the greatest part of his desires would be granted. There is soe little probability, that his highnesse, were he never so willing, that he could performe these things, as I gave so little encouragment to his eminence, that I believe he is half jealous, that I am not so zealous for him, as he supposeth I should be. Hearing there were some Holland shippes coming from Cadiz stopped in the Downs, and not knowing what the consequence of it might prove, I founded his eminence as to his intentions towards the Hollanders, in case any misunderstanding should happen betwixt his highnesse and them. I found him (as to profession) willing to break with Holland, whenever his highnesse should think fitt. After all this had past, and I had assured his eminence of the necessity, that lay upon me to serve him, both upon the account of my master's commands, and my owne inclination, I tooke leave of him, and he told me at parting, he would see my wife next morning, and would be beholden to her for his breakfast. He was as good as his word, and my wife made him and his traine the best cheare this place could afford. I brought him on his way towards Gravelinne so betymes, as he would with ease reach Calais that night. The king begineth his journey to Compeigne on monday next. The cardinall is devyded betwixt the desires of accompanying the king, and staying behind to manage the businesse of the army. There is nothing resolved upon concerning the settling of the distribution. It's delay'd till the army withdraw from these quarters. The enemy within this three days have gott up some 3 or 4 regiments to strengthen them. Their whole forces are at Newport, Ostend, Burges, and Ypre; they can draw together in 24 howers time, and I feare the French will coole their courage by lying so long at Dixmuyde. Haveing lost so much of your lordship's tyme by this long story of what past at the cardinal's being heare, I shall mention nothing touching the particular affairs of this place, but shall leave it till the next, and rest,

May it please your LORDSHIP,

Dunkerke, July $\frac{8}{12}$. 1658.

Your most humble, faithfull, and obedient servant,

WILL. LOCKHART.

Intelligence.

SIR,

Cologne, $\frac{9}{19}$ th July, 1658.

I HOPE to God we shall shortly have a glass of wine to the new emperor, who was certainly chosen yesterday. An expresse past this day to Brussels, to signify as much to Don John. In haste I rest

Yours, &c.

Mr. Downing to secretary Thurloe.

HONOURABLE SIR,

UPON wednesday last I wrote to you, and sent to capt. Plumley, comander of the Reserve friggat, then before the Maes. I also sent to him 6 dozen of bottles of Spaw water; which packet, together with the said bottles, I doubt not will be speedily conveyed to you, so that I have little more to trouble you with; and I am the rather desirous, if possible, to send what I have by such wayes, then by the post, considering the present lying of the armyes in Flanders, and the greate danger of intercepting letters.

They are in a most miserable distracted condition in Flanders, the people runing all away from their houses; and I am certainly informed, that lately the lower members of 304 160 134 379

A.D. 1658. Flanders

Bruges

90 20 286 140 408 47 355 105 34 286 141 being lately at dinner together at 20 447 changing of their masters;

55 287, there publique discourse was of 25 319 104 53 339 53 468 68 131 371
pr. of Condé,

139 145 286 140; and one of the company saying, that if it had not bin for 571, over-run

they had bin all 112 152 286 447 105 some yeares agoe, the others answered, that he had done them nothing but greate mischief in leangthening out their paine, whereas otherwise the busines had bin long agoe over; and so farr as I can finde, they would much bee under the English then France, liberty rather 231 519 547 468 104 549, could they be assured, that they should have 362 of religion.

231 133 475 408 132 40 362 312 412. When maresshall de Turenne came upon saturday last neare Brudges with a party of horse and foote, he might very well, had he had intelligence thereof, snaped Don Jean; for he was then without the towne, with onely

There is no garrison in Bruges,

50 of his life-guard. 468 132 346 395 308 133 393 140 412 339 19 447 53 287, you do not attaque it, or Damm, and it is much wondered, that 510 270 395 146 221 70 148 416 260 88 379, and with them Newport and Ostend must fall;

500 468 89 390 160 431 135 150 207 112 142 149 282 386 298 82 87; and we to keep Dunkirk,

also thinke heere, that you will have much to doe 477 350 284 582, without haveing Winox, Berg, out-garrisons.

also 502 395 163 231 133 55, and some other 418 308 133 393 459 107 141.

Heere hath bin much debate in the assembly of the states of Holland about the increase of their militia, and the putting officers on the head of the vacant companyes; but in fine have resolved to resume this debate about the middle of August. They are very loath, if they could help it, to increase their militia; but yet it is probable, that, in fine, that they will doe it. There is a letter come from the admiralty of Rotterdam to the states generall, making greate complaint, that our ships lye before the mouth of their harbours, and search their ships. I told the president of the states generall, that his highness had reason to looke after his owne safety, but that none of his shipping had orders to doe any of theirs any wrong, nor would. De Witt spoke to me this weeke about the title, (Dominationum) which his highness gives them in the subscription of his letter, which I lately gave them. I told them, it was the same that he had given them in all other letters, which I had tendered to them. He saith it should be celsitudinum. At the beginning is, celsi & potentes domini. I told him I would give an accompt of what he said, and shall

You may heerein see their also give you an accompt, how the king of France his letters are. 510 377 324 131 pride.

339 552 468 67 137 121 441 263. By the last letters from Frankford they write, that the electors intended to enter into the colledg as yesterday, and that probably yesterday or to-day would be the choice of an emperor. By mine upon wednesday last I gave you an accompt of what I have done in relation to the praying any longer for Charles Stuart in the English church here, at which many of the English, Scotch and Irish heere are infinitely enraged. The queene of Bohemia declares she will come noe more. I hope it will be a meanes of a great change in this place. I pray your serious consideration and help, according to what is hinted in my forementioned letter; for it is of great importance.

Sir John Marlow his son was this day with mee;

141 71 134 72 116 64 109 371 133 365 161 327 462 488 469 261 500 379; he his father trust me,

come hither,

saith, that 327 300 would very willingly 480 379, and 255 325 468 134, before he money;

he cannot stirr without fourtie pounds to pay his landlady, receive any 384 393; but that 324 347 395 148 142 475 132 136 500 418 304

159 135 475 431 154 107 34 142 477 423 327 355 108 27 355 267, who without ready money will not suffer him to stirr;

135 40 12 267 384 393 503 395 148 142 155 48 50 286 326 477 141 475 134 not to come,

leave his ladie and children

137 44; and he is resolved 395 147 477 255, rather than to 358 14 155 42 327
355 267 207 25 325 82 33 136 42 107 to be affronted and abused, as in that case they will certainly be; and that, if he knew how in the world to doe it otherwise, he and his son offers to go aboard Arive ship;

would not desire this; 207 327 462 409 144 477 314 180 206 256; for surely I told that hee should come hither first;

him my orders were, 467 324 141 328 13 35 255 325 468 132 302 133 140 147; but he telling me, that it was impossible, I promised to give you an account thereof, and by the returne of the post to let him have your finall answer, which I desire I may have.

I beleeve

I believe the thing may be considerable; I have no answer as yet from the States to my A.D. 1658. memoriall, concerning the ship Postilion. Heere is a report, and the States have advice of it, that generall Mountague hath stoped in the Downes 8 or 9 ships of this country; and its said, that it is upon the accompt of this ship Postilion, and not to lett them goe till he have satisfaction therein. Noe more at present, but that I am,

HONOURABLE SIR,

Your most faithfull humble servant,

Hague, 19 July, 1658. [N. S.]

G. DOWNING.

I pray let me know how many pacquets you receive from me every post.

Yesterday the Portugal ambassador made his entry into this towne. The princess Royall went away a day or to before. I have heerein inclosed to you a memoriall of Monsieur Appleboom, concerning what is past betweene his master and the elector of Brandenburg and Monsieur Weyman, one of the ambassadors that was now with the king of Sweden, and had audience refused him, is expected heere within these 10 or 12 dayes; and you may very well guess what is likely to be his busines.

The French ambassador and my lord Beverning do earnestly expect his highnesse's picture.

Just now my lord Neupoort came to me, by order of the States Generall, to let me know that they had taken order for the releasing of the master of the ship Postilion, and for the ship and merchandize, that they had put it into a way of examining, so that I doe not see it is like to come to any suddaine issue, unless they be pressed, which they are indeede by the stop of their ships from Spaine in the Downes, which doth touch them, and about which the States of Zeeland have written to his highnes and coll. Montague, and he did desire, as from the States General, that I should write to his highnesse about them; he said also, that the states of Zeeland had written to the States Generall, that they would write to his highnes, but that they had thought fitt not to doe it for the present, but they desire that I would; but he delivered me nothing in writeing, neither concerning the ships nor the Postilion, and I told him, that I did beleve that they could not expect long to enjoy their trade neither in Spaine nor in the West-Indyes, unless they did treat his highnesse's subjects after another fashon in the East Indyes; and I desire him to let Monsieur De Witt know so much, for that I knew noe priviledge they had of tradeing with his highnesse's enemies more then his highnesse's subjects have of tradeing with theirs; and I perceive by my lord Neupoort, that he hath writeing from London this last post, of two English ships more served in the like manner, in the East-Indyes.

Secretary Thurloe to Mr. Downing, resident in Holland.

SIR,

I Understand by your letters of the last post (for those of this are not yet arrived) that the Portugal ambassador was arrived at Rotterdam, which occasions me to send to you these further directions of his highnesse in that businesse; to wit, that you do represent in his highnesse's name to the lords the States Generall, how necessary his highnesse thinks it, as well in respect of their own state, as of their neighbours and allies, that a peace be made betwixt his majesty the king of Portugall and them, for many weighty considerations, which you by your former instructions, and of yourselfe, being well acquainted with the state of affairs, are able to demonstrate. And whereas you did by his highnesse's command, offer his mediation, and friendly interpretation, for accommodating the differences between the said king and states, that being accepted, and his highnesse continueing in the same good intentions, you are as well toward the said state as the Portugall ambassador to use all your endeavours, and to do all good offices for the ending and composing of the said differences; and to use your utmost diligence to obtain in the first place a cessation of acts of all hostility, as a necessary preparative for a finall conclusion. This I write by his highnesse's immediate command, and am

Your affectionate friend to serve you,

Whitehall, 9 July, 1658.

J. T.

To the Venetian agent.

A.D. 1658.

Vol. lx.
p. 102.

Antwerp, 2 July, 1658. [N. S.]

IT is credibly reported here, that the king of France is dead, and that they conceal his death at Calais. We expect every hour to hear of the election of the emperor, the 18th of this month being the day appointed for it: when he is once chosen, he will be soon crowned.

Our army hath abandoned the campaign, and is retreated into such places as are of most consequence, as Ipres, Newport, Ostend, and Bruges; which are as well provided with strong garrisons, and great store of ammunition and provisions.

If once the emperor shall be chosen, we shall have such assistance from him, as will prevent all further danger threatened against this country by the French and English.

Intelligence.

SIR,

Antwerp, 20 July, 1658. [N. S.]

Vol. lx.
p. 104.

THE news of the death of the king of France is now confirmed, and you may credibly report it. Here is great rejoicing, his army is drawn from Newport, and is retired to Cassel; so that it is thought they will make no further progress this summer.

Letters from Franckfort this week, express for certain the election of the emperor to be past, the greatest obstacle being removed, and that he will be shortly crowned. This is look'd upon here as considerable news.

A letter of intelligence.

SIR,

Brussels,

638, July 20, 1658 [N. S.]

Vol. lx.
p. 94.

SINCE my last, we have had different reports concerning the king of France; some will have him dead; others that he is recovered. Of that you may have more certain intelligence than we can. You lost a faire opportunity, when the French horse, 3000 in number, appeared before 637. They might have carried it, the allarm was so strong, if they had gone on, which they would have done, if they had understood the differences betwixt 628 and the burgers, and the peasants, which flocked thither for sanctuary.

There was 628 and 627 in the towne: 627 284 to 638 from 637 the 18 of this monthe, 2 of the clock after dinner. 625 591 very much glad 163 136 381 626 is expected every day, 339 101 61 552 14 337 303. We shal have another 305 154 91 77 121 61 shortly.

Pr. Conde and * ar in Newport, and have 624 239 245 397 468 506 147 161 239 278 effectively 35 60 447 beesydes 277

gers and peasants. You must make no attempt on that town, 247 363 148 155 239 501 156 237 164 150 616 453 443 465 251 552 114 135

166 484 553 563 178 460 the prince of Lynce is at Ipers with his forces, which is sayde to be very strong. Wee heare, 553 628 339 554 296 568 158 are very well accorded, Dunkirk hath them to a good understanding 217 308 54, and that the losse of 638 377 brought 554 116 563 31 369 577 157 549 accord. They intend a levye, of

123 309 78 and 217 554 190 397 552 121 54 32 very suddaine 422 575 481 12 thousand foote. Manie men come daily from Dunkirk to us,

12 560 353 130. 552 441 447 293 303 426 355 635 563 582: the clergy contribute largely to the levying new foote. The losse here was nothing so greates as was reported.

We recruit apace, and hope to be in very a good condition shortly, and try the other bouthe with your English foote. The reporte of the king of France his death gives great hopes here of a change in France, alterations and disturbances, new embroylements. 'Tis uncertaine when C. Stuart will go to Franckfort, some mony hath in readines 595 628 606 366 563 70 150 33 124 354 56 543 451 463 38 37 pro- for his journey so soon as the K. of cured 397 150 61 31 14 91 121 65 159 354 382 91 129 150 126 192 544 Hungary be crowned 249 554 659 shall 266 48 148 128 178 125 68 58 emperor. We assure our selves the emperor will be elected the next thursday, if it be not past last thursday. The marquis

Hollander A.D. 1685.

marquis de Pineranda writt it peremptorily to don Alonzo de Cardenas. A 676 540 went lately from these parts. is hundred tunns, hath 22

610 419 426 355 544 55 497. She 404 two 387 164 168 121 122 61 377 22 pieces of cannon with 2 brass guns in her poupe, where the wild man

502 481 285 484 603 240 147 31 159 370 397 379 506 507 599 554 605 is playing to the beasts of the forest.

108 55 63 439 404 painted 138 108 32 190 91 124 80 563 554 270 481 554 hath 2 ca tai one man name Nash, the brother

521. Shee 372 2 283 p 549 ns, 485 an English 439 458 d 457 154 84 of Holland, named John Rocanfon. give out, is bo

554 489, as 687 458 54 403 524 285 545. Shee 365 s 190, shee 404 275 und for mouth, from the to Newfoundla the to Malaga,

354 Ply 451 554, 355 554 nce 563 468 353 nd, 119 n 355 554 ce 563 438 or some whe about, came knowledge of by one capt. Home

419 360 488 543 599 554 re 214, I 284 to the 415 481 it 274 485 286 383 446
 Iri h man. on page prin Rupert, now

s, an 91 f 48 92. Shee 439 484 ce 498 363 to 135 150 95 126 ce 528 497 lately come Bruges to Bruffels. Ch. Stuart informati on 467 419 426 293 from 637 563 638. 625 gave me command to turne the 397 354 French, f what inte know no On 438 561 484 into 70r 125 48 86 354 594 397 552 nt I 414 461 t yet. 485 major William Harwood Sir Ha y Moo came of 438 e 488 606 374 150 604 and 154 94 151 374 rr 191 551 re 284 out 481

 England in disguise, da gero men. Harwood pafeth, ofte

667 39 311, both 302 n 363 524 us 447 374 150 604 500. 481 552 n a witty man, fa ha red cu led, high nose, ho low eyes,

605 439 long 346 ire 374 i 149 68 297 r 422 54 380 986 465 3801 229
 a ide mo th, ordinary statu

229 w 342 332 605 541 u 554, an 448 309 457 532 15 491 611 68 re. I give you intelligence of his ext returne, when he will hope to 365 616 397 552 429 363 n 289 of 382 461 563, 460 595 606 not make good The came from Gra end Zealand,

465 443 fo 369 a voiage. 554 y 224 355 77 152 34 uf 327 to 678 in the co any of yo gentleme of France, the ma s Be 293 p 238 481 two 616 ng 363 n 553 447, 481 669 554 438 rqui 157 of 266 rce de le ri. them both

289 re and jolly 422 fleur 305 F 422 u 522. I brought 554 115 276 554 to kif Ch. Stuart's ha ds. The to d to Ch. Stu. some 412 s 536 625 374 n 56 159. 554 y 663 l 305 625 44 pritty pleasant storyes that the venture seeing protect. time at Whiteha many 553 554 y 374 d 536 the 654 all fermon 562 251 602 552 374 ll, and 441 tale is one Hin a black such like 449 422 s. There 404 485 380 n, 305 123 38 45 110 216 411 ish man come lately out England, came to Bruffels, has good ho

439 290 419 425 490 of 667, he 284 563 688 619, he 377 brought 3 369 383 ses with him, for Ch. Stuart. About 3 weeks past, came from Eng

r 5 361 603 381, I presume 354 615 214. 3 523 500 he 284 355 657 292 and. Colte cheate Ch. Stuart little hile

l 552. the great 47 84 320 552 presented 625 2 a 426 u 422 602 422 since.
 Last funday Ch. Stuart did to chi that had the king's il. They 420 545 303 625 310 563 uch a 47 380 l 301 553 374 d 554 413 i ev 395 fa have thousand po the yea is about 6

554 y, 534 shee shall 378 a 160 506 unds 554 190 320 re. Shee 404 214 6 yea of ge.

190 320 rs 481 a 363. I should esteeme my selfe very happy to heare from you by the first occasion. I have never yet had the honnor to receive the least of your commands: if there be any thing in these parts that you may either desire for yourself, or your lady, I Resident at the shall take care to obey and satisfie your desires. I have not heard from Mr. 692 251 554

 Hague

685 ever since I came into Flanders; nor have I had the honnor to receive either letter or mony from him, at an extraordinary expence,

488 451 463 355 381, although I have beene 251 337 339 567 488 309 457 522 know no eason for 339 501 289, I 414 465 r 320 541 354 it. I desire you, Sir, to take some care mony to Antwerp, to send me 451 463 327 181 331 501, without putting me to the trouble of running into Holland. can soone go into England has used

397 563 677. I 285 944 r 366 397 563 667 and returne. He 377 not 582 me his Phi p,

324 446 civilly, since I told him truth concerning 382 brother 146 380 lli 139 601, 310

A.D. 1658. which did disco er my bein at the resident's.
 310 304 1 292 u 331 448 266 397 g 255 554 69 21. He hath referred me altogether in the business to receive your orders, which I shall obey as I receive commands from you, which I desire may bee by the next poste, directed to Goris Cuning, next the poste-house in Brusils, at the French ordinary.

SIR,

Your most humble servant,

GORIS CUNING.

Intelligence.

Brussels, 20 July, 1658. [N. S.]

Vol. lx.
p. 100.

WE had news of the death of the king of France the last week, who died at Calais; and it still continueth, and is believed here to be true, the rather because the French with their great army in Flanders do not advance, having only taken Bergen, St. Wynocks, Veurne, and Dixmyden, which were all delivered to them without any resistance. All other places as Newport, Ostend, Bruges, &c. are all well provided, and will not be so easily taken, if their army should besiege any of them; but the king being dead, the duke de Anjou is to be king, who will not be ruled by Mazarin; so that it will require time to settle things: and within two months there will be no staying in Flanders to besiege townes; and it is hoped Mazarin not being sole master, that we may have a good peace between the two kings.

It is generally writt from Franckfort, that the king of Hungary were to be chosen emperor this 18th instant, whereof we expect to hear that it is done, as also when he is to be crowned; which it may be will come to-morrow by the letters of Cologne. This election, and the death of the French king, will make a great alteration. Here is a strange report, how a phantasme appeared to the king when he lay a-dying, in a very fearful manner, with many threats; which I make no doubt but you will have heard from Calais.

Monsieur Fly to Bourdeaux, the French ambassador in England.

MY LORD,

Calais, 20 July, 1658. [N. S.]

Vol. lx.
p. 92.

MONSIEUR Sanguin arrived here this morning. The health of the king doth encrease. On monday next he goeth from hence, his eminence doth not follow the court. It is sad, that he returneth for Bergen, and that he will stay in those parts so long as the siege, which is to be undertaken, shall continue. It is sad, it will be against Nieuport. A few days more will let us know the certainty.

We are very glad here of the staying of those Holland shippes in the Downes, which are said to have silver in them. Some say they had soldiers on board.

Dormifson to Bordeaux, the French ambassador in England.

MY LORD,

Calais, 20 July, 1658. [N. S.]

Vol. lx.
p. 96.

IT is enough to tell you, to confirm to you, the good health of the king; to assure you, that he will depart on monday next, to return into Picardy, and from thence to Compiene, to recover his former strength. His eminence will either stay at Calais, or pass to Bergen, to give vigour by his presence to the execution of the siege which shall be made. It is not yet known of what place, but certainly it will be of some great place. The army of Monsieur La Ferté is upon the march, and was come near to Armentiers. The conquest of St. Omer is very much desired by all the court: whether this is to be taken in hand next, a few days will inform us of the certainty thereof.

Count Brienne to Bourdeaux, the French ambassador in England.

MY LORD,

Calais, 20 July, 1658. [N. S.]

Vol. lx.
p. 98.

I Received your letter of the 5th of this month, just as the post was departing, so that I had not time enough to accuse the reception thereof; and in regard it contained some points, which required the king's orders, I wish I could have gotten them to have sent them to

to you by this post, but the resolution, which his majesty hath taken to depart from hence A.D. 1658. on monday next, to be nearer to Paris, hath suspended all the affairs for the present, which I hope will serve to plead my excuse for not sending an answer to your letter; and I have nothing more to tell you, but that the king doth begin to recover his strength.

To Petkum.

SIR,

Franckfort, 21 July, 1658. [N. S.]

ON thursday last the cries and acclamations here were, Vivat Leopoldus imperator Roma- Vol. 1x.
norum. I believe you will not scruple to rejoice likewise; for it is believed, that this P. 112.
election will contribute very much to the peace of all Christendom. On wednesday last all the strangers were turned out of the towne, and the ambassadors of France went for Mentz, with an intention not to return, not finding their account. About ten o'clock the Spaniards went away, and others, who for the most part did not go above half a mile off, and the lords of the city gave orders to have the gates shut about noon; but it was eight of the clock first before they were shut; and the next day at one of the clock, the king of Hungary and Bohemia was proclaimed emperor.

Mr. Downing to Secretary Thurloe.

HONOURABLE SIR,

WEDNESDAY last I sent a packet and 6 dozen bottles of Spaw water to captain Plumley, Vol. 1x.
commander of the Reserve frigatt, to be by him sent unto you; and upon friday I P. 107.
sent you two packets by the post, so that I have little to add, onely that yesterday I received a letter from generall Montague, by a frigatt which convoyed some merchant ships for Zeeland; and therein an accompt of the dismissing of the seaven ships of this countrey, which came from Cadiz, which newes we have had about foure houres before, by the ships themselves. Upon the newes of their stopping, together with the lying of your men of warr upon the coast, there was a general apprehension that you would seize all their East-Indy ships, and all their ships which are also dayly expected in great number, and with a most vast wealth from Spaine and the West-Indyes, and five men of warr more over and above the five that went out about a fortnight agoe, were ordered toward the Northward for the conveying in the East-Indy ships; and officers and soldiers were ordered forthwith aboard the rest of the men of warr which are fitting out, upon paine of death. Upon friday night the States Generall sent an expresse to Sheeveling, and thence to have gone for England about the 7 ships that were stopt, but the wind was so high, that it hindred the goeing away thereof, a very great, if not the greatest part of the goods of those ships, did belong to people in Flanders. I have made use of this gentle touch of their ships bound from Spaine, to let DeWitt and my lord Nieuport know, that his highness expects in like manner, and with like readines, the releasing of the postilion should be ordered, and such other English ships as I heare are since seized upon the same accompt; and, that unless they doe it, his highness will be forced to treat the ships comeing from Spaine and the West-Indyes, in like manner; and indeede unlesse they doe forthwith discharge them, I know noe other way of remedy; and I finde them much more sensible of this action of his highness, then of all the letters and messuages that he could have sent them. DeWitt gives me very good words, but I have bin so used, so that I am past beleefe of any thing but deeds. DeWitt tells me, they will order the release of the ship with this provision, in case the matters of fact prove as it is represented: but that I take to be a meere evasion, and so I shall tell him; for then there wil be onely a gaining of time, for the getting in of their shipping, which now they expect in great numbers from Spaine and the West-Indyes, and afterward some little cavill shall be found out  the matter of fact from what is represented and f* release of the ship or goods. I was this morning at the English church, where Mr. Beaumont preached, without mentioning the name of Charles Stuart; and withall praying heartily for England's welfare and prosperity; and in such a manner, as to insinuate something also in generall prayer for his highness: the assembly was as full as it hath been knowne, excepting only the queen's apartment, which I found naked and voyd, she having taken away her hangings and cushions. There hath been very great meanes used with Mr. Beaumont not to preach any more in publick, and that they would make his maintenance better then ever it hath bin; but he told them that he was well satisfied in conscience with what he intended to doe, and that they should decist in tempting him any further in that kind, for that it would be all labour in vaine; and if I had not in the way I have gained Mr. Beaumont by kindnesse, the assembly had been broake, which, in endeavouring to doe a good, would have brought another great evil and scandall; but I thank God the business is come to this issue, that

A.D. 1658. onely some few desperate caveleeres are withdrawn, and the assembly continued, and that without the least stirr or disorder; though as to the causeing thereof also, very high endeavours have bin used. The elders came to the church dore, and carried me to Sir William Bosvill's seate. I hope you will be pleased to consider what I have written in my former letters concerning this busines.

Whether it will not be fitt for you to dispatch some instructions to major generall Jephson, or Sir Phillip Meadows, concerning the unhappy busines of the elector of Brandenburg, I humbly submitt to you. The inclosed papers being but just now come to my hands, the bearer cannot stay the translateing of them; therefore not more, but that I am,

HONOURABLE SIR,

Your most faythfull humble servant,

Hague. 21 July, 1658. [N. S.]

G. DOWNING.

Major-general Morgan to secretary Thurloc.

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

Vol. lx.
p. 109.

SINCE the surrendrie of Dixmuyde, there hath been little hapened worth your lordshipp's knowledge, save that marshall Thureine, with a considerable partie of his armie, made a voyage into the countrey over to Brudges, and tooke an exceeding number of cowes and horses, and under the counterscarffe of that towne tooke nighe 300 horses. I had the hapines to waite on him in that expedition.

The enemie have devided their armie into severall garrisons to prevent us from besieginge them, and to keep at the head of there country, unto which we are prettie well advanced alreadie. Marqui De Carascen, and the titular duke of Yorke, have cast themselves into Neiuport; the prince of Conde with a part of there armie into Ostend; and Don John with the residue, and another great Don into Bruges and Ipres: and it is creadible reported by severall of the grandees of the court in this armie, that if the enemie had not so timely devided there armie into the great Towns, severall of them had revolted to marshall Thureine, for the king of France ere this; for I will assure this many yeares the Spaniard hath not been soe heard put to it to defend Flanders as this yeare. About 3 daies since, marshall Thureine went to bargain to meet with the cardinall to consult how to proceed for the rest of the campaignne, and is now retorn'd againe to the campe.

Marshall La Ferté is with his armie within a daies march of our campe; and when I was last night with marshall Thureine for order, he acquainted me, that there would be another towne besieged suddainlie, either by marshall La Ferté or himself; otherwise I had an inclination to waited on the lord ambassadors to settle some busines, touching the 4 regiments with mee in the field; but the uncertaintie of our removall from hence prevents mee. I shall be ready to observe your honour's commands, and remaine,

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

Your very humble servant,

Campe nigh Dixmuyde

21st July, 1658. St. No.

THO. MORGAN.

Lockhart to secretary Thurloc.

May it please your LORDSHIP,

Vol. lx.
p. 114.

BEING desyrus to return this messenger with all speed, I shall touch some of the particulars mention'd in your lordshipp's last. That I sent two days agoe will inform your lordshipp, what the cardinal's demands were to me, and what my answer to them was. Not knowing what his highness's inclinations were, I durst give no other at that time; but if his highness could in any short time spare him 2000 men, for the remaining part of this summer service, I should looke upon it as no ill bargaine, provided, that for this succourse, his highness were wholly freed from the obligation of beseeing Graveling by sea. I should not care, if, in consideration of that advantage, I were commanded to spare him 500 foot from this garrison, which I shall not be able to doe, unless the French army should besiege either Nieuport or Ypres. I cannot at present think upon any thing else, which would be handsome for his highness to demand for satisfaction, for the expence

he

he will be put too, if he send over more forces to the French army; for if his eminence A.D. 1658. should offer Burgh or Furn, which I know he would be loath to doe, I should not as yett think it advysable to his highness to accept of them, for they are not to be kept, unless there be an army to support them; and every day I make soe many new discoverys, of what must necessarily be done, for the preservacion of this place, and the Forts-royall and Mardick, as the forces will be more put to it how to keep them, then they were in acquiring of them; but I say this without any dispondency, for that same God, who gave them, will, I hope, enable us to defend them, tho' not for our sakes, yet for  of his own name, and the good of his people, who I am confident by  experiences will find one day that the Lord's desygn will not be confined to so narrow an imprisonment as Dunkirke.

The 3 regiments and a half, that are in the fields, are above 2000 effective, besyds officers, reckoning in for said number about 400 sick and wounded, who are heare, many of which dayly recover; and this day capt. Battalla carryed up 150 recovered soldiers to their collars, there is in this garrison, and other forts not above 2500 well men; their are many sick upon whom I spare nothing this place can afford; but the feavors here are very dangerous, even soe as the phisicion and chirurgions share in the sickness, and some of the  beginn to sicken. I have caused to refresh all the moatts of the town with fresh water; and we keep the streets as clean as is possible. But to returne to the strength of this garrison, Mr. D'Elstrade, who was governor heare for the French, told me, when the cardinal was heare, that this place could not be kept under 3000 foot and 4 or 500 horse; and I am sure that any who see and consiidered the circuit of works we have to maintain would be of that opinion; besydes this place is so little secured by the places possessed by the French, as they have enough to doe to secure their own convoys betwixt Furn and this, and that not without my assistance: if your lordshipp will cast your eie upon the mapp, you will find that Furn lyeth a great way of the Strand; and that betwixt Newport and this, which is but four houres march, there is nather dyk nor ditch to pass. I may say the mistake is as great in them, who say if the army (which is weakened by its own disorders, and ruined thorough want of discipline) be not recruited by his highness, it might be justly said, it had done nothing but served the interest of England; yet is abundantly known to the world, that the gaining of a battle, and the gaining of three such considerable posts as they now possesse, is to have done more for France, then hath yet been done him any campaign since the beginning of their warr, or will probably be done again, except upon the lyke occasion; I mean a conjunction with the forces of England: but, my lord, this is not all; for if their desyer of grasping too much could be bounded, they might yet take any of the enemies garrisons out, their own frontiers they would pitch upon, but then they must slight Dixmode and Furn; but it will not be fitt his highness give this advice, lest they shoud think he had some privatt desygn in the womb of it. I shall know this night or to-morrow, whether any further resolutions be taken concerning a siege, as also if the cardinal goeth along with the king, or stayeth in these parts: if his eminence stay, he hath a greatt and generous soule both upon that account, and the particular respect I am confident he hath to his highness and family, I cowld wish, that all thats possible might be done for his assistance, but I professe I know not what it is that can be done; for as I understand the state of his highness affairs, it will not be safe to send away any more of his old regiments; and there is not tyme methinks to make new levys: for besydes that the season of the year runns apace, I am bold to say, that a recruit of 2000 men, a month or five weeks heare, will make the French army no stronger then, then it is this day; for in that space of tyme, tho' it lyeth and doe nothing, it will loose as many men as the foresaid number will amount too. My lord, though its said, that 1500 men is enough to this place, yet I must beg the sending over of recruits to the regiments heare, as also the monthes provisions, which I shall keep in store: and tho' so greatt summs of money as wee need cannot now be sent, yett I hope your lordshipp will send us some. It is now near a month since we were heare, and I have yett some credit left, and I beleve by the way I have taken of expressing no overmuch haste to rake into the matters of money, and a contempt for some little mean things, their former governors used to squeeze out of them, I shall be furnished with what they have, soe long as it lasts; but that will not serve turn long; besydes most of the soldiers want linnen, which cannot be had without money. As for Cesi's money, all that is received as yet is 20000 crowns, whereof there was about 6000 crowns payd by order of his highness to Monsieur Westrowe's children. The money I borrowed of the cardinal, for which I drew a bill upon Mr. Wildgoues, amounts to about 7333 crowns; and poor Mr. Agier, who was starving, had some small thing out: so that I believe their will not be above 6000 crowns remaining at most, which I shall take up if your lordshipp thinks fitt to order my so doing. There needs no security to be given to any person for it, I having received it as his highness ambassador for his highness, disposing of it to the interestes according to their respective rights, which were to be judged by the laws of England; but there will be no greatt businesse in so small a parcell as this; for besydes that, the garrison is numerous, the repairing of the works,

and

A.D. 1568. and putting the Fort-rovall in will take a world of money ; and whatever it cost, the counterescarp, and the half-moons without, and the bastion which we attacked within, must be made up now ; the counterescarp in that place upon which we approached, is almost compleated ; but the bastion will not yet be made up in six weeks tyme, for I must goe to the very ground of it, which was all shaken in pieces ; and it must be built 10 foot high, with a brick wall 6 foot thick, because the sea washeth in at every spring tyde. A greatt many armes hath been lost and broken at the siege and battle ; and therefore I must desyre, that a thousand musketts, and as many pikes, may be sent over to ly in magazine. I shall mend and patch up what we have, so as they shall serve turn, till by a siege or otherwise we be putt to a strait. Mr. Gurnett appointed by his highnesse to receive the revenew is heare, he is of a choice spirit, and I am confident will answeare his trust well. He that is to be collector of the customs, must have Dutch and French, so make him never so active, he will be so cheatted, and so unfitt, as his highnesse will suffer exceedingly by it ; but for any thing I know, he may have these languages, or at least Dutch ; and then he shall be most welcome ; for I would willingly have all things in some settled way. There is no present need of a deputy governor ; and if his highnesse be much desyrus to employ the gentleman mentioned in your lordshipp's, as town-major, his place may as to the most material part of it be discharged without any other langwage then his own ; and for other things, he may doe them by the help of a trusty servant. I have made provision of oatts for the horse only ; I shall not know what to do for bedds to the horsemen, the carabins, and good ones, are very needfull to them, for wee must march for the most part betwixt dykes and watter-gauges, and will many tymes be put to use their carabins, when their pistolls will be uselesse. I shall advise against the next, what imployment will be most suitable to the persone your lordshipp gives soe advantagious a character too ; and as to the pilotage I shall doe nothing in it till my brother return ; the towne claimes that and the excyse as their right. I cannot learn that they have any other revennew ; with it they are bound to keep up the magistracy, justice, and all the publick houses, the reparatione of key, and harbor, and the walls and ports of the old towne, and a greatt many other things, by which for this yeare there can be no gainers, for all is out of order : neverthelesse whatever become of the profitts, I am resolved to put ane honest man, and ane Englishman in the place, with allowance of a comfortable fallery out of the profitts of it. I had once some thoghts of captain Groy, but I can find some other employment as good for him, if your lordshipp know of any honest man fitt for that. I have much reason to be ashamed for giving your lordshipp such continuall tedious troubles, but I must stand to your lordshipp's mercy, knowing your lordshipp's readinesse to pardon all the importunities of,

May it please your LORDSHIPP,

Your most humble, faithfull, and obedient servant,

Dunkirk, July 21, 1658. [N. S.]

WILL. LOCKHART.

The inclosed paper will give your lordshipp ane account of the bores of the ordinance : most of their carriages are broken, which I patch up as well as I can ; onely I will have greatt need of 10 new carriages for Demiculverin ; the wheles not too high, nor the carriages not too long. I have spoke with the cheefe merchant of this towne, and finds that tho' your lordshipp order me to send for the rest of Cesi's money in Mr. Wildegoes hand, I cannot raise it heare by giving bills for it : if the cardinal doe not goe I may perhaps gett that same favour from him I did formerly ; and if your lordshipp think fitt, I shall propownd his payment of the whole marfullas debt, which will be a very considerable summe ; but it cannot come in tyme to receive our present necessities, tho' it may prove very usefull in the winter.

Col. Doyley, governor of Jamaica, to —

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

In the possession of the rt. hon. the earl of Shelburn.

THE 8th of May last, the Spaniards made good my intelligence to your honour, by landing thirty captaines, thirty alferes, and thirty companies of foote, at a place called Rio Nova, in the north of this island, who were there about 12 days, before they were discovered ; at which tyme our ships playing up and downe, saw three sayle of Spanish in that bay, and made an attempt to have boarded them ; but being becalmed could not effect it. That night the Spaniards stole away, and a ship came out to acquaint me therewith : I immediately called a counsell of warr, as the affair did importune ; and we debated, whether it were most advantageous to assault them presently, or let them partake of of the distemper and want of the country; and when sickness had weakned them, to attempt them then, though much might have beene and was urged, how invaders were to be used with delays, &c. the exceeding desire of the officers and soldiers to be doing with them, cut of all debates, and termed a sudden resolution to fall on them, before they were fortified; so I commanded out 750 officers and souldiers; and on the 11th of June last, wee set sayle from this harbour towards them, and on the 22d in the morning wee attempted the landing on a bay, which was defended by 2 companies and 2 captains, within half shott of their cannon playing from their fort. Our forelorne went on with such gallantry, and kept into the water with so much chearfullness, that perswaded the enemy they would not be denied entrance, and so they ranne, leaving one of their captaines and about 23 slaine; the other were took wounded, who dyed since. Then we made all the hast, and in an hour landed our men, their cannon playing all the while on us with little successe. That day we spent in playing upon their fort from our ships, though the place being of so vast an height, they they could bear to doe them little harme. The next day understanding their numbers to be more then ours, we were at a stand how to attempt them, having fortified themselves, and having 6 pieces of ordnance, and a river to passe, the depth whereof we knew not. Wherefore after our ladders were made, and other things fitted as well as we could, in the evening I sent a drummer, partly to discover the depth of the river he was to passe, with this summons; "Sir, being here with the forces of the mighty prince, the protector of England and the dominions thereunto belonging, I doe, in his name and for his use, require, and summon you to deliver up the fort of Rio Nova, with the ordnance and amunition therein; assuring you honourable termes and transport to your country; which if you shall refuse, I shall be acquitted of the blood shall be shed. I expect the returne of my drummer in an hower, and am,

Your very humble servant,

"For Don Christopher Arnoldo Sasi, commander in cheife of the Spanish forces.

E. D.

Who was very civilly treated; the generall gave him twenty-five pieces of eight, and sent me a jarr of sweate meates, and this answere.

"Lord generall don Christopher Arnoldo & Sasi, governor for his majestie the king of Spayne, my lord of the island of Jamaica, answering to your letter, wherein you require me to deliver the fort of Rio nova, and what else is therein, I say, that his majestie, whom God preserve, hath appointed me for governor of this island, being his owne property, and hath remitted me unto it a regiment of Spanish infantry, and twenty foote companies to defend it. The forts and castles of his majestie are not yeilded with soe much facility hitherto. I have received noe batteries, nor have you made any advance. I want noe powder, ball, provisions, nor gallant men, that know how to dye before they be overcome. God keepe your honour many yeares in those commands that you desire.

"To the generall Monf. Doyley, governor of the forces of England these. DON CHRISTOPHER SASI ARNOLDO.

Wee made noe more demurrs, but resolved to march the morrow morning; soe I ordered two of our vessels to set sayle leeward, to perswade them. Wee intended to stand on that side of them; the other ships to warpe as neere as they could, and play in them, while wee fell on the other side. Wee marcht as soon as it was light, haveing two arches to goe being through a wood on the back side of them. About a quarter of a mile from their fort, wee mett a party on a worke on a high hill, prepared to obstruct our goeing over ther river, who onely gave us a fruitless volley, rann to their fort, and told them all the world was comeing. Wee clymed that hill with much adoe, refreshed our weariness, and advanced. When wee came in sight of their fort, we found, to our exceeding joy, that the work on that side was not finished to that hight, as that to the leeward. Wee ordered our business with our forlorne ladders and hand-granades, and without any further dispute received their shott, and rann up to their flankers, which in a quarter of an hower wee gained. Many of them made shift to runn out of the works, and ours followed their chase about 3 or four miles, doeing execution. The seamen likewise seeing of them runn along the rocks, came out with their boats, and killed many of them.

In this fort, wee took about ten double barrels of powder, shott great store, six peices of ordnance, great store of provisions, wyne, brandy, salt, oyle, and other provisions for eight months, as they termed it. There was slayne about three hundred persons, diverse captaines, two priests, and their serjeant-major, about one hundred taken, and six captaines, which we have sent home; the king of Spayn's standard and ten collours. The rest, especially the strangers, that are in the woods, must of necessity perish. Though this mercy was very great, yet our joy had some abatement, by the losse of capt. Wiseman, capt.

A.D. 1658. Meers, capt. lieutenant Walker, capt. lieutenant Robinson, and ensign Farror, men for their gallantry rather to be admired then comended, about some twenty-three private souldiers killed, and thirty-fower wounded, whereof some are since dead; some other of our officers slightly wounded with stones. Thus hath the Lord made knowne his salvation. His righteousness hath he openly shewed in the fight of the heathen. I have sent this short narration, because it comes by colonell Barry, who was an eye witness, and principal actor herein, and rest

Your Honour's

Casway in Jamaica the 12 July, 1658.

faithful servant,

EDW. DOYLEY.

A letter of intelligence from blanck marshall.

Bruges,

122, this 22^d day of July, 1658. New Stile.

SIR,

Vol. lx.
p. 115.

IN my last I gave you a perfect accompt of your affairs heer, so that I cannot ad much to this more then was in that. D. John i s f t i l l h e r e. D. of Gl. i s g o n t o Bruffels, r e t u r n e f u d a n l y h i t 75 27 56 52 78 57 112, but is to 70 20 79 81 71 52 21 76 82 14 1 54 46 94 32 37 80
h e r. Ch. St. i n t e n d s y e t k n o w e n. D. of Y.
32 22 72. What 104 38 55 77 18 52 15 73 is not 95 19 78 40 53 59 86 20 54. 106
i s f i x p o o r r e g i m e n t s b e l o n 39 74 with all the 75 35 90 61 59 60 69 70 21 28 36 48 22 55 77 74 6 18 47 56 52 g i n g t o Ch. St. i n N e p o r t, g o m o r 36 53 30 78 57 104 38 52 53 19 62 58 71 79, wher I intend to 27 59 in the 49 60 72 n i n g, 53 39 54 30, then I shall be able to give you full satisfaction, in relation to what goods you p e o p l e h e e r f e a r, c o u have ther. The 63 18 56 64 2 19 31 20 21 69 ar in greate 23 22 2 70, and doth 10 57 83 n t c o n t r y l o f t. r e c r u 54 80 ther 11 58 54 77 71 96 44 58 75 78. I see no apearance of the 72 18 12 69 84 t i n g f o r c e s, h i g h. m e 79 35 55 29 ther 24 59 69 12 19 76, onely they speake 34 36 30 31. The fowr 51 20 m b e r s F l a n d e r s o f f e r e d r a i f e 50 7 21 70 73 of 26 47 3 52 17 22 71 74 hes 58 23 24 18 72 19 17 to 69 4 37 75 20
t w e n t i e t h o u s a n d p a y t h e m d u e l
77 88 21 55 78 38 22 78 31 57 85 76 5 52 17 and 61 1 97 79 32 22 48 14 81 18 44
i e, b u t D. John y e e l d h e h a v e p a y i n 39 19, 8 82 80 105 will not 94 20 21 45 15 unleffe 32 22 34 2 83 18 the 63 3 15 35 52
g a r m y h i m f e l f e, a g r e e.
30 the 4 70 49 96 34 36 50 73 18 46 23 19, of which they ar not lyke to 5 30 72 21 22.
Sir, if any thing I send you miscarry, I intreat you to let mee know, that I may take care to send them by a safe convoy. For newes, wee have non in theise parts. They say the king of France is dead, as lykwys the great hopes wee had, that England will fall out with Holland, although now litle apearance of it. The report goes heer of the crowneing the emperour, but no certainty; and many other stories not worth your trouble. Sir, if you think mee worthy your commands at any tyme, be pleased to direct yours heer according to your last direction, for,

SIR,

Your most obedient servant,

JO. HARRISSON.

The secretary Richard's memorial to the States General.

Left: die Lunæ, 22 July, 1658.

22 July, 1658. [N.S.]

Vol. lx.
p. 145.

THE underwritten counsellor of the king of Spain his secretary, and secretary to his ambassador with the States General of the United Provinces of the Netherlands, thinks it his duty to make known to their lordships the intimation, which he received yesterday from the ambassador of the king his master, now at Francfort, concerning the happy success of the election of the king of Hungary, his apostolic majesty having been chosen and proclaimed emperor the 18th instant, with the unanimous consent of all the electors. He doth not doubt but this news will be most well pleasing to their lordships, not only for the interest they have in the repose and tranquillity of the empire, but for the assurance he can give them them upon good knowledge, that his said majesty will preserve and endeavour to to increase A.D. 1568.

 with this state all friendship, neighbourhood, and good correspondence, in imitation of the emperors his predecessors of glorious memory, and whereof their lordships still have more ample confirmation within a short time on the part of his said majesty. Given at the Hague
 22 July, 1658.

V. RICHARD.

Lockhart to secretary Thurloe.

May it please your LORDSHIP,

I Have received your lordship's letter relating to the gentlemen concerned in the ship Vol. ix.
 Endeavour. I see your lordship's sense (conforme to his highness's own judgement) p. 132.
 is full and zealous for justice and reason, and according to your commands I have written but to his eminence, and to the count de Brienne, the copies of both which I have likewise sent to your lordship by these gentlemen. Having an eye to civility, I have written as effectually as I could, in pursuance of your lordship's most rationall and equitable dictates, to which I wish and hope all good successe; but if it come not, and that speedily, I suppose I need not adde my opinion, that his highness should act according to the advice of the judges of his admiralty in that case. I rest,

My LORD,

Your LORDSHIP'S

Most humble and most obedient servant,

Dunkerke the $\frac{12}{2}$ th of July, 1658.

WILL. LOCKHART.

The information of Edward Lockell, taken by me the 12th of July, 1658, at Workefope, Nottinghamshire, Francis Moore,

SAITH, that about three years ago, or thereabouts, when he was a servant to Sir George Vol. ix.
 Saville at Rufford-Abbey, that he knoweth that all the horses that Sir George and the p. 124.
 lady Saville had, but the coach-horses, which was a dozen in number at least, was all made ready for the design, upon order from three confederates out of Yorkshire; and he saith,
 Mr. Benitt's man brought three horses of Billstrough in Nottinghamshire, and that Mr.
 Wilkinson of Pontifraet sent two horses, and that Mrs. Holder of Wheatly in Nottinghamshire sent one or two horses, and Mr. Kea of Pontifraet in Yorkshire was there that night; and this informant saith, that he saw him charge his pistols, and that one Allen Ostick of Pontifraet in Yorkshire was there that night, and had been kept at the abbey a quarter of a year aforehand for the design, and changed his name for fear he should be known; and one capt. Oadsley staid there a month beforehand on purpose for the design; and several that came from Wakefield in Yorkshire, that was to be mounted on Sir George Saville's horses, or the gentlemen's horses, that were sent into Sir George Saville's house. And moreover he saith, that Sir George maintained them a long time, for the informant saith, he brought horse-meat for all the horses that was kept at Sir George's, and that Sir George Saville, his master, spent 5 or 7 quarters of oats a week, by reason of the number of horses kept, and the constant coming of the plotters; and he saith that on the second of July, 1658, he was talking with Mrs. Forster of the New-inn by Rufford, and she told him, that she knew, that Sir George Saville went to London on purpose to buy pistols for the horse-men, that they might be in readines; and she saith, that the thursday night they should have risen, there was pistols left at their house by gentlemen; and they are there yet; and he saith, that young Gofsling brought a horse that night, and went away himself. And this informant saith, there is hid in several places in the house of Sir George Saville swords and pistols, and brave armour, and the number may be great for any thing he knoweth, for they were hid in a false floor, and that the steward hath now removed them, and hid them in some other place in the house, and that one Browne, servant to Sir George, and another of Sir George's servants went out with either of them a horse amongst them that night, and that Mr. Sisley and Mr. John Couper of Shurgerton, and col. Gilby of Everton, in Nottinghamshire, was constantly coming and going to the Abbey, about the time they should have risen; and he saith, that this Browne, a servant to Sir George, did kill a horse, worth sixteen pounds, in riding about to gather the plotters together; and he saith, that he would have discovered it sooner, but that he would be very certain of what he said, for they durst not trust him; and he saith, that Mr. William Coventree, he that was my lord keeper's son, came

A.D. 1658 came post from London the night before they should have risen; and he verily believes came on purpose to the meeting, and all these things he can prove.

A state of the cash.

July 12th, 1658.

In the possession of G. Duckett, Esq;

Resting in the receipt of the Exchequer

l. s. d.
7210 9 7

Against which

Farmers of excise	—	3885
Fines for new buildings	—	2314	9
Lord Strickland	—	250
Lieutenant of the Tower	—	908	12	4
Mr. Smithsby upon his discovery	—	245	18	10
Captain Orpin upon Mr. Murford's discovery	—	66	13	4
Col. Messieris	—	8
Serjeant's men attending the parliament	—	40

7718 13 6

Ordered more than there is in cash

508 3 11

Besides

Pressing payments, viz.

l. s. d.

Cofferer of his highness's household	—	4500
Surveyor of his highness's houses	—	2000
Treasurers at warr	—	3700
Treasurer of the navy for Mardick	—	1500
Remainder of 3000 l. for Flanders	—	1351	5	8
Remainder of 3000 l. for contingencies.	—	2534	8	0
Remainder of 1825 l. 14 s. 10 d. for contingencies	—	525	14	10
Remainder of 5000 l. for salaries	—	3000
For contingencies	—	3000
For contingencies	—	600
For Sir Thomas Viner and Mr. Backwell	—	1750	4	5
For Mr. Noell	—	2719	3	4
For the commissioners of fraudulent debts	—	800
Mr. Sharp and others for provisions for Mardick	—	1605
Mr. Trapham for medicaments	—	136
Mr. Simon for seals and meddals, &c.	—	1028	5	8
Mr. Hodges for the affairs of Jamaica	—	2900

32650 1 11

Salaries, viz.

l. s. d.

Lieutenant of the Tower for lady-day quarter	—	809	3	9 $\frac{3}{4}$
Sir Oliver Fleming remainder of 1000 l.	—	400
Serjeant Keeble remainder of 1050 l.	—	550
Baron Tomlins	—	1003	5
Masters of requests	—	500
Mr. Fell, keeper of the seale of the Dutchy of Lancaster	—	217	4	4
Mr. Scobel, clerk of the lords house of parliament	—	375
Mr. Smith, clerk of the commons house ditto	—	150
Mr. Darnall, clerk assistant	—	250
Serjeant Birkhead	—	388	13	9
Serjeant Middleton	—	150
Sir Henry Crook, clerk of the pipe	—	188	16	8
Mr. Williams, clerk of the estreats	—	173	6	8
Mr. Satterthwaite, clerk of the vichills	—	80
The secundaries in the pipe	—	80
The sworne clerks in the pipe	—	18	6	8
Thomas Cook, treasurer's remembrance of exchequer	—	830	10	5
The first secundary there	—	25
The secundary there	—	526	13	4

10072 8 1 $\frac{3}{4}$

The

A.D. 1658.

The sworn clerks there	—	45
The secundaries in his highness's remembrancers office	—	32
The sworn clerk in that office	—	30 13 4
Mr. Evelyn, forreign apposer	—	200
Mr. Fleetwood, clerk of the privy seale	—	75
Mr. Whitehead, the like	—	75
Mr. Nutley, clerk of the signett	—	75
Mr. Morland	—	75
His highness's wardrobe-keeper	—	300
Surveyor of his highness's houses	—	82 12 6
Coll. Thomas Kelsey, lieut. of Dover-castle, and other officers of Dover	}	104 1 8
Mr. Brereton, and the rest of the late officers at Haberdashers-hall	}	902 10
Mr. Graves, counsell to the trustees at Drury-house	—	400
Mr. Billinghamst, secretary to the said trustees, and Mr. Smith his assistant	}	937 10
Mr. Vine and Mr. Carvill, tally-joyners	—	20

Annuities and stipends.

King's colledge in Cambridge	20
Eaton colledge	114
Doctor Owen upon 100 l. per ann.	75
Mr. Sterry upon the like	125
Mr. Baron upon the like	100
Mr. Sedgwick upon the like	50
Mr. Dorislaus upon 200 l. per ann.	100
Mr. Haake upon 100 l. per ann.	200
Mr. Blondane upon 100 l. per ann.	75
Mr. Vassall for interest	22 10

l. s. d.

881 10

Payments of sundry natures.

l. s. d.

Sir Tho. Viner Rememb. of 1000 l.	600
Sir John Savile	194
Captain Leverett	2000
Mr. Brayne, executor of lieutenant-generall Brayne, in satisfaction of all arrears	1372
Mr. Brereton, and others, for their service to the comittee of parliament for improvement of the excise and customs	200
Countess of Clanricard for the funerall of her lord	100
Mr. Beecker	333 11
Mr. Palmer	200
Mr. Dunne	300
Mr. Sayer's	70
Mr. Dewy's surplufage	39
Liberates of the court of Exchequer	315 15 11

5728 17 5

101841 1 4 2

A letter of intelligence to secretary Thurloe.

From Hamburg the 13. July, 1658.

HIS majesty of Sweden is come yesterday to Oldensloe, a little towne about five miles from hence, where he intends to stay a fortnight. The two English embassadors, Sirp. 22.
Philipp Meadowe, and major-generall Jephson, are there at present, with the king of Sweden: the one is taking leave of his majestie for to returne into England, and is expected here

A.D. 1658. here everie day for to be one with the French of late come here; the other is conferring with the king concerning his commission sent unto him of late from his highness out of England.

This day morning is arrived at Oldensloe the French embassador, monsieur de l'Umbre, out of Poland, bringing from thence new propositions of peace from the king of Poland to the king of Sweden; for within six weeks before the great parliament in Poland be ended, (not extending it longer, according to the Polish law, above 6 weekes) there must be peace made, or none at all. It happened well, and is verie much à-propos, that Monsieur De l'Umbre hath mett at Oldensloe with the English ambassadour, Sir Philipp Meadowe; it is a fair oppertunity for them both to conferr together about peace betwixt the king of Sweden and Poland; for the time urges the king of Poland, either to make peace with the Swede or the Muscoviter.

The French embassader, Monsieur le chevalier de Terlon, remains yet in Denmark, because of some differences betwixt the two Northern kings, concerning something in the articles of peace; and till it be done, the king of Sweden will not evacuate the towne Frederickfode, notwithstanding the king of Denmark hath evacuated Brehmer Vohrde.

Letters from Riga by the last post mention, that a Swedish party, strong 2000 horse, went out for to pillage in Sameyten above 12 miles; and because they found no resistance there, they took in the country above 3000 cattle beside the horses, and brought them to Riga; and if the Lithuanians doe not provide in time to defend this province, they are neare to loose it.

The Polish generall of Lithuania, called Gonsiewsky, hath written of late to prince Radtzi-vill, that the commissaryes of the Muscovites are come to Wilna (the metropolis of Lithuania) with 30000 men; and not finding there the Polish commissarys according to promise, they was very much displeased; and therefore sent for the Polish generall Gonsiewsky for to come to Wilna, where he cannot but expect a great reproach from the Muscoviter.

Letters by the last post from Mittau in Curland mention, that there is held a general meeting of all the nobility in Curland to consult for the security of their country, as also concerning the demand of the king of Sweden, who demands from the duke of Curland a great summe of money, and provision for the new Swedish army in Livonie. It's feared the duke cannot denye him his demand, for to avoid great trouble. There is in Lithuania, and round about, great feare of the Swedes, because there are great forces coming on to Riga; and field-marshal Duglafs is daily expected there. Concerning the treaty between the king of Sweden and the Muscoviter, there is no certainty of it yet; except the cessation of hostility betwixt them, there is nothing more yet about the treatie; neither are the Swedish embassadors yet returned out of Musco into Livonie, that it may be seen they are at libertye.

The French envoye, Monsieur de Minieres, being sent from the king of France, to offer his mediation to the great duke of Musco, betwixt him and the king of Sweden, is arrived at Narva; from thence he is come up to Musco: we shall soon hear, if the Muscoviter will accept the offer of the French mediation or not.

The Swedish resident, Monsieur Wolffsberg, hath upon order of his master retired him from Berlin, the duke of Brandenburg his court, and is gone from thence; so that nothing but hostility is to be expected.

From Danzig, letters of the 17th of July by the last post mention, that the Swedes have plundered Curland near to the walls of Mittau, and since are fallen into Samoyten, and plundered also there.

The duke of Brandenburg doth garrison Dirshau and Mere upon the Miffett, and suffers no amunition to pass the Pillow's-port for Elbing. A rupture is feared suddenly betwixt the Swede and him.

The lords of the citty of Danzig are to go to the parliament in Poland now houlden. Thorn is belaguered by the Poles and the Austrians: the Austrian generall Sufa desires canon and balls from the citty to force Thorn with; and the Poles desire from the sayd towne provision for 2000 men for to keep and watch the sea-coast, that the Swedes may not land.

Just at the conclusion of our letters, there comes newes from Frankfort by an expresse, that the king of Hungaria is chose a Roman emperor; the certainty of this newes we expect to hear from thence to-morrow by the post.

Extract out of the register of the resolutions of the lords states of Holland, &c. taken in their assembly on tuesday the 23d of July, 1658. [N. S.]

A.D. 1658.

Vol. ix. p. 139.

THE raet pensionary hath reported to the assembly the considerations and the advice of lords their noble great lordships commissioners for the affairs of the sea, who having, in pursuance of their commission of the 20th instant, and a conference with the lords commissioners of the college of the admiralty at Amsterdam, who are here at present, about the subject of the proceedings of the English captains and commanders at sea, plying at present to and again with their ships before the sea-holes of this country; whereupon being debated, and consideration had, that on the side of England here is alleged the staying of the said ships of war before and near to the sea-holes of these countries, that the lord protector hath certain advice, that a good number of soldiers raised upon the coasts of Galicia and Spain, and there embarked, to be transported for the Spanish Netherlands, the design of the Spaniards should be to make for one of the sea-ports of this state with the said men, and so to transport them through this country towards the said Netherlands: it is resolved and understood, that this business shall be directed to the generality on the behalf of their noble great lordships, to the end the said lord protector may have full assurance given him, as well by the lord ambassador Nieuport, as by the lord resident Downing, that there are such orders given by their H. and M. L. and such provision made, that not only the said Spanish soldiers, in case they do happen to arrive in any one port of this state, to hinder their passage de facto towards the said Spanish Netherlands, but besides, that the said soldiers, with their ships, are forthwith to be ordered to put out to sea again, and, if need be, to force them to it, in the same manner as they came in; and that herewith the serious and precise orders hereunto required may be sent to the respective colleges of the admiralty, as also to the council of state, with this addition, that they do hereafter regulate themselves in respect of the passage of soldiers, according to the placart of the 20th of January of this year, published for the same purpose, that for the executing of the above-mentioned, the resolution, which is to be taken by their H. and M. L. concerning this business, shall be sent to the lord Nieuport, and likewise shall be delivered by commissioners to the said resident, with order to desire of the lord protector directly, as also of the resident, that since by the said assurance given the cause doth come to cease, which his highness might have had for the keeping of the said ships of war before the sea-holes of this country, that thereupon he would be pleased to cause the said ships to retire from thence.

That likewise there may be very earnestly proposed, as well by the said lord Nieuport to the lord protector, as by commissioners to the said resident, the indecency committed by some English captains in the visiting of the ships of war of this state, which is contrary to the orders given from time to time by their H. and M. L. to their officers, not to suffer any such search to be made, but vigorously to oppose it; from which said orders their H. and M. L. can in no ways go, and to this end to exhibit in specie the resolutions taken by their H. and M. L. upon this subject of the 20th of October, 1628. the 16th and 17th of Decemb. 1649. as also of the 10th of August, 1654. with representation of the great inconveniencies, which in time may happen to arise, by reason of such searches; also with this request, that the lord protector will cause such captains to be punished according to their deserts, that shall be found guilty of the said transgressions, and withal give such order, that the like may not happen for the future.

Mr. Downing, the resident in Holland, to secretary Thurloe.

HONOURABLE SIR,

MY lord Nieuport being this morning to goe away, I could not but take the opportunity to lett you know, that I have as yet received no other answer in relation to the Postillion, then what I sent you by the last post. I did exceedingly press de Witt about it yesterday, letting him know, what must necessarily be the consequences of not giving his highness contentment in this particular. I this day presented the inclosed memoriall. De Witt tooke it with him himself to the states general, and said, he would see that right should be done to the persons injured. The East-Indy fleete is come in, consisting of seven or eight sayle of greate ships. It is said, that the king of Hungary was chosen emperor upon thursday last; and some say, that he was to be crowned yesterday. This news comes not by the post from Franckford, which came away upon wednesday last, but it's said to be come by an expresse to Collen. I have herein also inclosed a letter, which I received this morning from major-general Jephson, as also a copy of a letter from the person

A.D. 1658. son about whom I wrote to you the last post, and concerning whom I expect your answer by the next post. Not more at present, but that I am,

HONOURABLE SIR,

Your most faithfull, humble servant,

Hague, the 23. July, 1658. [N. S.]

G. DOWNING.

De Witt spoke to me yesterday about your men of warre, which lye upon the coast here, searching of their men of warr, and said, that although you doe search their merchant-men, yet that he earnestly desyres, that you would forbear searching their men of warr; for that of many yeares they have had orders not to suffer themselves to be searched by any whatsoever, and that evil may come thereof.

The Portugal ambassador had his audience yesterday with the states general. Having received my lord Nieuport's finall answer, that he could not take the present without leave of the states, I prepared a memoriall to give in to the states general; and going to de Witt to acquaint him therewith, he earnestly desired me not to give it, and that he would take it as a courtesy done particularly to himself.

I told him what my orders were. He prayed me, that, before I did it, I would write once more to know his highnesse's mind, and that I would let him know what had passed between him and me; and that for his part (tho' others might be of another mind) he must oppose it. So I pray your orders what I shall do. Finding it so against de Witt's mind, I thought it best to forbear, till I could know your further pleasure.

I broke open the letter to write this postscript, which I had before forgot.

Inclosed in the preceding.

Vol. ix. p. 151.

I RECEIVED yours, whereby I perceive you have acquainted the gentleman with my letter, and that it appeares to you he is very well satisfied therewith, but cannot furnish me with the money I desired, until he heare again from England; for he is commanded to part with no money, till I come and speake with him, and discover something of moment to their advantage; but if I will come to him privately (and do what they desire) he will furnish me with money, give me a pardon and a passe. I see he is very punctuall in observing his master's commands, and very carefull not to displease him, which I do soe much commend in him, that I will desire nothing to the contrary. I would very gladly waite upon him; but you know I cannot possibly doe it without money; therefore stay you thereabouts (as he desires) until he have an answer from England, which, you write, will be within 14 dayes at furthest. I am confident he will be as punctuall in performing what he doth promise, as he is in discharging his maister's commands; and I am as confident, if his maister and he did know and believe what I can relate for their safety and advantage, and likewise can doe, by way of preventing danger, they would make more haste, and graunt more then I doe or will desire. Present my service to the gentleman, and lett him know I will have patience, and expect his next answer, which I hope will be within the time limitted; and if it fall out that I joyne with them (which shall not faile in my side) it shall appeare, he never did his maister better service; for truly I will as really and punctually performe all I promise, as he doth his maister's commands.

General Monck to secretary Thurloe.

MY LORD,

In the possession of the right hon. Philip lord Hardwicke, lord high chancellor of Great Britain.

I RETURNE your lordshippe thanks for our commission for the councill heere, which yesterday came to my hands; for truly wee could nott sitt, till we had itt. As concerning that letter I sent you a copy of, I have since taken a little paines to finde itt out, whence the letter should come; and I have found out the man, that brought itt from beyond seas. Hee is now in prison, butt will not confesse, who gave him the letter; yett after a little time of suffering (I hope) hee may doe itt. I intend to keepe him in prison a while till he does itt, or send him to Berbadoes, in case I cannott gett itt out of him. Since my last heere is noe newes, that I thinke fitt to give you further trouble with; soe I remayne

Your LORDSHIPPE's most humble servant,

Dalkeith, 13th July, 1658.

GEORGE MONCK.

Secretary

Secretary Thurloe to H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland.

May it please your EXCELLENCY,

A.D. 1658.

I DID not heare of the letter, whereof your excellency's of the 7th instant makes mention, before. There is noe doubt to be made, but Weaver writt it, and yet he of all men could not affirme, that there was noe cause for dissolving the last parliament, but ground-^{In the possession of the right hon. the earl of Shelburne.}lesse feares; for he, and severall other of that partye, made it their buisinesse to perswade to a comonwealth, and were confident, that they should carry it; and the petition, whereof your excellency hath heard, was to be the first occasion for the debate of it in the house; and a cheife man of them useinge arguments to another very considerable person to engage with them for the old parliament, and beinge answered, that it was impossible, because the army was against it, he replied, that he would take it upon him, that the army would declare for it, and that he knew they had beene tryed in it; and there was not a forwarder man in all England in this then Weaver, and therefore, one would thinke, hee should blush to write, that the feares were groundlesse, whenas there was such tamperings as these are to overthrow the government, and bringe us into blood. Truly doctor Winter should be aware of these men, and not manadge himselfe by their informations, if he intends to make truth his guide, and peace his end. And I must needs say, that he and other honest men are weake, and easily deceived, if they are made to beleve, that their refuseinge to signe the addresse hath put them past retreat. Where is the instance of any such proceedings against any one man? I am sure the practice hath beene quite otherwise; men not only refuseinge to make addresses, but openly opposeinge the government, are soe farre from beinge ruined, that they have beene invited after that to ymployment. But this shewes how these men would governe, if they were in place. After I had writt mine to your excellency touchinge the chancellor's * writeinge to his high-^{* Chancellor Steele.}ness about his returne, I received yours, whereby I see he himselfe had acquainted your excellency with it. I should have expected, that he had acquainted you with it before he writt, and taken your advise in it, as a matter that concerned very much both the publique and your excellency in particular, more then it could any one person in the world; and I beleve it were not hard to make hym confesse, that it was an error in kindnes, as well as in many other respects, both to his highnes and your excellency, not to doe it; and that it was an action, which favoured of noe ingenuity at all. And truly I wonder at his carriage in this, and many other things, which (under your excellency's correction) are directly contrary to his interest, and to all those principles, which he professed constantly. Of ail men I knowe, I should never suspect him for makinge an interest of his owne, but under the shadowe of another. But however he is or may be now improved in his politiques, I confesse, of all the daungers you are in, I least of all consider that of your excellency's beinge outwitted in this contest. I would you were well as secured in all other things. I beleve wee are out of the daunger of our junto, and I thinke alsoe of ever havinge such another. As I take it, the report was made to his highnesse upon thurs- day. After much consideration, the major parte voted, that succession in the government was indifferent, wheither it were by election or hereditary; but afterwards some would needs add, that it was desirable to have it continued elective; that is, that the chiefe magistrate should alwayes name his successor, and that of hereditary avoyded, and I feare the word desirable will be made necessary, if ever it come upon the tryall.

His highnes, findeing he can have noe advise from those he most expected it from, sayth, he will take his owne resolutions, and that he cannot any longer satisfie hymselfe to sitt still, and make himselfe guilty of the losse of all the honest partye, and of the nation itselfe; and truly I have long wished, that his highnes would proceed accordinge to his owne satisfaction, and not soe much consider others, who truly are to be indulged in every thinge but where the beinge of the nation is concerned. His highnes is now at Hampton- court, and will continue there for some tyme, as well for his owne health, as to be neare my lady Elizabeth, who hath beene of late very dangerously ill, but now is somewhat better.

The French army in Flanders have made noe progresse since my last; they lye still betweene Newport and Ypres. The cardinall was on friday at Dunkirke, to visit my lord ambassador Lockart. He and the French ambassador here doe very much presse for more foot, without which they are not able to undertake any considerable siege, their infantrie beinge very much diminished. I hope wee may be able to make good conditions with them as to any thinge, that will be fitt for us to have. The enemy is retreated into their garri- sons. Carasene is at Newport, and the duke of Yorke; Condé at Ostend; Don John at Bruges, and have, upon a solemne debate, quitt the field, beinge able to raise noe foot for the feild.

The kinge of Sweden still lyes still. It is to be doubted his first recounter will be with the elector of Brandenburg, those two princes beinge upon very ill termes. His highnes

A.D. 1658. useth his best endeavours to reconcile them, and compose their differences. I begge your lordship's pardon for this longe scribble, and remeyne

YOUR EXCELLENCY'S

Most humble, faithfull, and obedient servant.

Whitehall, 13. July, 1658.

JO. THURLOE.

Mr. Downing, the English resident in Holland, to secretary Thurloe.

HONOURABLE SIR,

Vol. lx. p. 148.

I WROTE you upon Sunday last by captain Cornelis, commander of the Bramble friggat, and upon Tuesday last I sent you a packet by one ensigne Povey, a friend of Mr. Noell's, who went that day from hence to goe for England in the friggat, which carries my lord Nieupoort, who also went the same day from hence, in order to his going for England; and I hope you have long ere this received the resolution of the states of Holland, wherein they enjoined my lord Nieupoort to be gone forthwith, and to returne himself to make report with all speede, whereby they may the speedyer come to resolutions, but especially in relation to Dantzick and the Baltick sea, concerning which they have yet done nothing, nor given any answer to those of Dantzick, who press very earnestly for assistance, nor yet to the minister of the elector of Brandenburg. They would first see what his highness will doe. I have told them plainly, that they can hardly expect much from his highness in relation to the Baltique sea, unless wee have first satisfaction in relation done to him in the East Indyes; and that he will hardly be induced to ^{make any} 376 206 marine treaty, ^{land}

371 441 390 479, unless he have better contentment as to the keeping of the 355 104
 treaty.

32 479. The most of what is considerable, that I have now to communicate to you, is in the papers, which you will heerewith receive. You will thereby perceive, that the ministers of Sweden and Brandenburg heere are already fighting with paper dayly. I have visited them both, to try and sound, what probability there is of doing any thing towards their accomodation. Monsr. Appleboom saith, that his master would be very glad of it; but that the elector hath exceedingly wrong'd him, in not onely deserting him, but in makeing allyances with the kings of Poland and Hungary against him, as you will also perceive at large in the two memorialls of Monsr. Appleboom herewith sent; that he knows noe way of accomodateing them, but by the satisfaction of the treaty of Elbing, in which the elector of Brandenburg is concluded; and that his master is very willing to ratify the said treaty. But that for the illucidations, that he beleeves he will have nothing to doe with them; and the province of Holland seeme to make little regard of the treaty without its illucidations, though (as you may finde in a paper formerly sent you) the states of Zeeland have given their advice, that the said treaty should be ratified and delivered, without insisting upon the illucidations. The whole papers concerning this busines I sent you in the winter. I told Monsr. Coubes, resident for the elector of Brandenburg, that his highness was very much afflicted to understand, that matters are come to the passe they are now at; and letting him know, how much it was the interest of them both not to fall out, he told me, that while his master did take part with the king of Sweden, the said king did use him very hardly, and in particular in desireing the half of the benefitts of two of his ports in Prussen; and that as he then held Prussen ducall of the king and crowne of Poland, that for the future he should hold them of the king and crowne of Sweden, which, he said, his master took very ill, expecting, that instead thereof, that he would have offered to have made him souveraigne in that country. That it was true, that afterwards the king of Sweden did proffer to make him free; but that it was when the king of Poland was growne againe verry powerfull, and the king of Sweden verry low. That when the king of Sweden and the said elector parted, the king of Sweden did desire nothing of him but to remaine neuter; withall promiseing, that if the Poles and Austrians should come to attacque him, he would come to his releif. That accordingly, upon the approach of the Poles and Austrians, he did write againe and againe to the king of Sweden for succor; but none coming, he was inforced to make the agreement he hath made, whereby he is also a greate gainer; for that he is to be absolute souveraigne in Prussen ducall, without any homage to the crowne of Poland, and by which he is not obliged to attacque the king of Sweden, but to assist in case the king of Sweden shall attacque them either in Prussen ducall or royall, or in the empire. I made replies to all this, which would be too large heere to incert, and in fine told him, that his highness would be very glad, if any way might might contribute to a peace between them; which he took very kindly, and said, he ^{A.D. 1658.} would give an accompt thereof to his master; but that he saw little hopes, for that, so far as they could guess, the king of Sweden was resolved not to quit Prussia for any equivalent, and to attack Dantzick; which if so, that it was impossible to disengage his master; but that if the king of Sweden would be contented upon the fore-mentioned ground to have a peace with Poland, that at the same instant also a peace would be betwene his master and him; and if otherwise, that he did not doubt, but that the whole empire would take part against the king of Sweden; and that the Poles, at a meeting of the states at Warsoe, will be necessitated to accord the succession of the crowne of Poland to the second son of the great duke of Muscovy, after the death of the present king; and that thereby that duke will be also absolutely engaged against him; and that he did undoubtedly believe, that this state would take part, rather than ever suffer the towne of Dunkirk to come into the hands of the king of Sweden. I told him, that possibly his master might in the conclusion finde he had missed his measures, as much as the king of Denmark did. And this is the substance of what passed betwene us. I had also this weeke much discourse with ^{the French ambassador.} 468 ^{Portugal.} 532. And as concerning 551, he is absolutely of opinion, that the 551 ^{Portugal ambassador} 202 227 138 449 111 152 132 should, in his first propositions, which he shall make to the commissaries appointed to treat with him, let them know absolutely, restoring of Brazeel, or any part of it, that as to the 133 281 471 134 339 54 408 18 437 174 40 42 82 416 206 422

408 68 146, it was a thing wholly 338 431 140 142 334 358; 244 as to the other satisfaction, such as his master can give, he will be very willing thereunto, and particularly to give them 12 140 518 379 408 384 393 207 12 422 339 468 145 437

263 408 20 437 174 41 42 358. Further he is wholly of opinion, that all means possible are to be used to reconcile the king of Sweden and elector of Brandenburg, and that 468 536 ought not to 221 260 105 146 174 335 350; for that will also undoubtedly engage this state, 41 105 308 311 469 141 663 466, who will very speedily be strongly courted by the 390 160 43 90 426 443 154 135, and the 538, and the 273 408 100 524

155 168, of which I have formerly given you an accompt. In my letters of tuesday last, I give you an accompt of the king of Hungary's being chosen emperor; which newes wee had three or foure houres after the dispatch of my packet upon sunday last. It's said, that the ambassadors of France, having obeyed their desire in the capitulation, did give their consent, that such of the electors as tooke part with them, should give their voyces for the king of Hungary; and so he was chosen by an unanimous voate. But for the king of Sweden, there is no satisfaction given to him in the capitulation; so that he must seeke his satisfaction as he can. As in the said capitulation the emperor is bound not to assist the king of Spaine against the king of France, no not under the pretext of sending it against the English in Flanders or Italie; so the king of France is therein obliged not to invade the empire, though under pretext of assisting his allies therein. For what is further from Franckford, I refer you to the papers heerewith sent. The setting out of the men of warre goes on very fast heere, and they are neare ready. Wee have every day storyes concerning the English shipping, that lye upon the coast. I gave you an account of what passed betwene 263 502 147 207 379 concerning the title dominationum. Truly I cannot think it fitt for his highness to call them celitudines.

150 447 362 70 257 395 147 148 325 107 76 68 147 302 150 305 534 477 245 81 468 102 251 83 457 155 267 107 287. I myself, in all my memorials, 313 468 101 412 362 468 475 149 250 408 140 40 68 53 393 40 153

441 287 339 46 135 43 107 27 60 207 365 136 32 143 325 124 143 339 44 107 57 362 144 66; and in all the letters I have yet received from 534 324 322 412 only styled them dominationum. 362 245 84 87 279 468 103 270 381 387 475 412 287. I am glad that he which writeth to you 162 441 150 287 477 510 by the 388 408 305 36, give you such contentment.

You would not have much 306 326 355 143 150 432 395 136 469; for that 324 hath bin 324 136 207 72 323 12 54 58 136 43 279 500 326 305 304 160 136 hundred pounds per annum: he would not take leis; 332 431 155 109 37 143 426 136 205 108 518 324 161 113 155 84 35 395

149

A.D. 1658.

149 464 358 142 140 43; for 324 450 151 66, that it is very exceeding 260 108 and he hath good meanes, and is very faithfull.
 311 443 524 207 324 322 317 379 205 287 207 346 156 44 441 298 72 149
 He hath received after the same rate for the time past.
 65 50 155 87. 324 322 135 43 251 72 155 279 193 468 437 466 305 468.
 I have discharged Gardiner.
 476 122 14 144 149. 72 323 267 142 30 319 136 57 279 308 134 45 339 him covetous, and his service little; 286. I found 326 extreame 254 155 43 477 524 207 327 143 286 156 71 251 two write to you out of Flanders, 362 151 148 358; so there are onely 148 161 115, which 159 441 466 477 510 who are both faithfull.
 418 408 50 86 207 286 144, 498 213 43 241 149 64 298 71 149 65 50 155 colonel Palmer, enclosed send a paper to 87. And for 254 365 390 86 124 199 101 286, I herein 41 106 26 365 143 you, he sayth, is 279 143 282 16 124 15 426 136 477 510, which, 324 450 850 65, 346 most true; he to write himself; undoubtedly 150 447 42; but 324 will by noe meanes consent 477 162 441 466 he sayth, he writes so bad, as no body can read it; 326 143 44 86 51; for that 324 450 151 66 324 158 441 146 287 459 227 36 he will not run the hazard.
 217 395 241 267 247 135 41 191 73 150; and moreover 324 53 395 150 447
 108 468 319 174 213 36.
 I perceive, that there hath bin a report at London, that I was stab'd; and I finde it very often true, that when the cavilleres give out any newes as done, that they have at that time some designe for the doing it; and this is true, that upon tuesday night last 3 Englishmen about ten of the clock at night, with their haire tucked up under white caps, stood privatly at a bridg neare my house; and a Dutch gentleman going out, my dore was noe sooner shut, but they took him by the collar, saying, Bougre Englishman, what did you there? But findeing him to be a Dutchman, they lett him goe; and the gentleman the next day lett me know what had befallen him, whereof I have given an accompt to Monsr. de Witt. Indeede they are very angry at mee, for that I have, by little and little, extreemly disturb'd and spoyled their kingdome here; and exceedingly angry they are at this last action of mine, in obteyning, that Charles Stuart should be noe more pray'd for heere; and the more, for that I have done it in such a way, as to shake off the Scotch minister, and gaine the good-will of Mr. Beaumont, whereby the assembly is kept on foote, there being the last Lord's day scarce any seates empty, save only the queene of the q. of Bohemia
 Bohemia's; and when noe other devices will take, 468 540 imployed one to me to let me humour her know, that if I would onely 331 384 154 134 62 286 as to the manner of doing it, particular order against Charles Stuart, viz. that it might not be by a 422 71 259 355 134 416 37 286 16 310 572, but general order forbidding to pray for by a 311 390 437 82 416 36 286 305 22 336 267 108 57 477 124 437 170 any foreign prince, that then she would 305 206 305 437 71 56 390 124 441 108 251, 467 468 108 143 324 160 114 come still.
 155 86 38 255.

The Swedish resident to the states general.

Vol. lx. p. 155.

THE under-written resident of Sweden, by his memorandum of the 18th instant, did assure their H. and M. L. of his majesty's good intentions for the observing of a sincere and good correspondence with this state, doth take the liberty to say again to the same end, that he is sorry to understand, that the duke of Brandenburg's minister here doth endeavour to contradict what he said resident did allege in his former memorandum upon the sudden departure of the lords embassadors of the said duke from Flensburgh, as if it were a breach of the laws of nations, under which he doth also spitefully insert the keeping of their H. and M. L. embassadors at Lauwenburgh. Now it is known, that about the ambassador is a common course, first to examine their qualities; as for example, when king Uladislaus of Poland had about the year 1637. married a princess of Austria (being pressed thereunto by his states) instead of another princess (with whom however his majesty was not engaged) and did send his ambassador Rey into England, to excuse the same, yet the same could not be admitted to audience in a long time, and in many weeks, which that king however (though a sovereign and a great prince) did never take to be a breach of jus gentium. In the year 1641. the earl, now duke of Awerberg, ambassador
 of

of the emperor, was kept here for many months; and although at last he received further A.D. 1658. orders, and offered to give satisfaction to this state, yet it was not thought good to hear him, without that the same was held for a violation juris gentium. The ambassador of Portugal, Loufa Macedo, was kept here several months in the year 1651. before he had audience. The Swedish envoy Spiering was likewise kept without audience; and many more like instances might be given. The observing of order, and of common laws, was never styled an observation of jus gentium; and it would be a strange law to oblige kings and princes to an equal admission of ambassadors, whether they come from friends or enemies, although in this his majesty cannot properly be said to have denied audience. Concerning the other, it is therewith beyond all custom, that ambassadors, how high and great soever they be, should go or come from or towards hostile places, much less such as are besieged, without a pass; and in the war the same is narrowly observed; so that the commander in Lawenburgh was excused therefrom by the lords ambassadors of this state themselves, and never any complaint was made about it, at least the same could not be imputed to the king of Sweden, who was far and deep in Poland. The lord rix-chancellor however, (notwithstanding that it could have been otherwise understood) according to the example of king Sigismund of Poland, who rather took it ill, that in the year 1627. the then lords ambassadors of this state should go to king Gustavus before that they had been with him, king Sigismund (being advised of the business) suffered the said lords ambassadors of this state to pass, and afterwards received them with all manner of honour and respect; so also accordingly did his majesty returning back out of Poland into Prussia, and then concluded with their excellencies the treaty of Elbing, at the request and to the content of their H. and M. L. His royal majesty hath been always very much troubled, that through the ill-willers of the good amity and correspondence between his majesty and their H. and M. L. the ratification and exchanging of the same hath been hitherto hindered; and it is to be lamented, that the lords ministers of the duke of Brandenburg do now again de novo play upon that string. Experience hath already taught, that the same hath only served to hinder the navigation, in regard all what could be thought on was regulated by that treaty, and agreed upon. The under-written resident will say for a conclusion, that there is nothing set down in this memorandum but what can be made out to be most true and real; and therefore he is still of opinion, that their H. and M. L. according to their wonted wisdoms, will not hearken to any persuasions, which may in any-wise cool or alter the good amity between his majesty and their H. and M. L. and consequently no longer delay or hinder the exchanging of the ratification of the Elbing treaty, upon all which he is yet expecting a favourable resolution from their H. and M. L.

Hague, 25th July, 1658. [N. S.]

H. V. APPELBOOM.

*To Mr. Stouppé.*Ostend, 25th July, 1658. [N. S.]

AS for us here, we are still in our old posts, and we have made here a second counterscarp, and have put this place into a condition not to be assaulted by force without great difficulty. I have not been at Newport of late; but I hear they have also provided that place with all things imaginable. The enemy is still in their posts, and no action hath passed since my last. I am still very poor.

Lockhart to secretary Thurloc.

May it please your LORDSHIPP,

I AM earnestly desired by some friends of mine (whose requests ought to be prevalent with me) to minde your lordshipp of a business depending in the court of admiralty at London, wherein one Monsieur de Quesne is very much concerned, and to beg a letter from your lordshipp to the judges of the said court, not to do justice, (for that they have done by a sentence already given) but to expedite the effects of their judgments. The reasonableness of this motion seems to plead sufficiently for itself, and not to stand in need of an advocate; but because good decrees do sometimes loose the greatest part of their virtue by the slowness of execution, therefore I humbly beseech your lordshipp's assistance to remove such obstructions as retard the case in question, that the judges having already gotten the reputation of just, may also gain that of good, and I your lordshipp's pardon for using thus freely that power you give me by being,

MY LORD,

Your lordshipp's most humble and most obedient servant,

Dunkirk, the 25th of July, 1658. [N. S.]

WILL. LOCKHART.

VOL. VII.

4 A

Lock.

Lockhart to secretary Thurloe.

A.D. 1658.

Vol. lx. p. 163.

May it please your LORDSHIP,

THIS bearer lieutenant-colonel Pepper comes into England for a little time, being to make up some accounts that concern their regiment, and having beside some private affaires of his owne. I should have given your lordshipp a more large and particular account of busines by him, but that I am to goe to-morrow to Bergues to his eminence, who is there to meet the marshalls de Turenne and de la Ferte, and it will be the next day before they have taken and made the full measures for the remainder of action this summer. The result of their conference I shall send to your lordshipp by my brother, immediately after it is concluded.

This lieutenant-colonel is truly a very good, sweet gentleman, and not a little helpfull in this place; but I believe the two old regiments have some longings homeward, not that their condition is ill here, but perchance England is more suitable to their dispositions. If your lordshipp finde, that he moves to have them called back, I shall humbly desire we may be supplied with as many other before these be taken away; and that his highnesse would be pleased to remember those recruits he promised us; for in earnest, what by sicknesse, and other occasions, our numbers are so thinne, that we are put to duty every third night; and if the enemy were in any posture to looke towards us, we should be constrained to do it every other night.

Here is a troope of horse come to an anchre this evening. The captain, called Bronex, is ashore, and hath been with me. He is a pritty man; but if I may speake my thoughts of him out of the experience of one converse, he seemes to promise no extraordinary matters. He expects armes from me, which truly I have not in the least measure, and without them his men will be but an uselesse burthen; besides, their not going abroad (as till they be armed they cannot) will encourage the enemy to believe it is from some other cause prejudiciall to our reputation, which opinion ought by all meanes to be avoided at the first, and therefore I beseech your lordshipp give order, that they may be forthwith provided with pistolls and carbines; defensive armes may be forborne a little longer, if they be not ready.

I have sent your lordshipp a copie of what goods I have bought dureing the siege, and since I came hither: the last article consisting of oates, and amounting to 670 l. 8 s. 0 d. is still entire in the stores, and the greatest part of the first, being 190 l. 13 s. 00 d. the middle provisions onely are spent, coming to 737 l. 5 s. 2 d. For bread I have hitherto made shift, partly by what we found in store, and partly by what I have bought. Some rie I found here, and have bought wheat to put to it, by which I hope we may have bread for a fortnight or three weeks longer. I must earnestly beg of your lordshipp to supply us seasonably and librally with money; for in truth my credit begins to suffer, considering the extraordinary expences for many unforeseen contingencies, but specially for the works during this season, which is onely proper to make them up, and if I should lett it slip, they would cost much more, and not be half so well done; but I comfort myself with this perswasion, that his highnesse will have such a regard to his subjects here, and your lordshipp such a particular care of us, that we shall not want any thing convenient, much lesse that which is so absolutely necessary for us. In which confidence I shall still goe on in such chearfullnesse, patience and constancie, as becomes his highnesse's most devoted subject, and,

MY LORD,

Your lordshipp's most humble and most obedient servant,

Dunkirke, the 25th of July, 1658. [N. S.]

WILL. LOCKHART.

My lord, I have made bold to say so much by Mr. Cooke's hand, and shall add no more, save that the provisions I have bought and given out shall be deducted from the soldiers pay. I shall doe the same by the oates to the horsemen, for whose winter provision I have bargained for a sufficient quantity of hay, and will have it for about 18 shillings a load.

Mr. Downing, resident in Holland, to secretary Thurloe.

HONOURABLE SIR,

Vol. lx. p. 167.

BY the enclosed memorialls you will perceive what further progresse I have made for the recovery of the ships seised in the East Indies by the ships of the East company of Holland, as also for the regulation of that trade for the future, that his highnesse may not be continually troubled with complaints of that nature; and I have herein enclosed to you a resolution of the states, which was this day sent me in answer. I have in private dealt very plainly and roundly with Mons. de Witt, and others, letting them know the fence his highnesse hath thereof, and that he will not be mocked nor satisfied with words. They have promised me a categoricall and positive answer, as soon as possibly they can get information out of the ships, which are newly arrived out of the East Indies; and that I shall finde, that they will not feed me with words, but deeds, which I shall believe, when I see it; for the East Indy company hath a mighty interest in, and influence upon the state. Betweene this and the next I hope I shall be able to give you some farther account, and am,

SIR,

Hague, 26. July, 1658. [N. S.]

Your most faythfull humble servant,

G. DOWNING.

R. Gerbier Douuity to secretary Thurloc.

May it please your HONNOR,

I DOE make bould to fend to your honor a memorandum on such concerns of papers, as I have left with his excellency the lord ambassador, and generall Lockhart att Duynquerque, and with the lord protector his serene highnesse resident in this place; the which may witnesse that, which I doe zealously professe, having further no designe to be troublesome, save in consequence of that zealous profession to say, that the men, whose doe make proffers, doe incessantly instance to know, whether I have made their proffers knowne; iff they are reflected on, and so please, as may appeare by resolves, which may enable them to performe their said proffers; which shall be according to the zealous wish of

YOUR HONNOR'S

Haghe, the 26. of July, 1658. [N. S.]

Most humble and obedient servant,

R. GERBIER DOUITY.

Memorandum on such papers, which Sr. Balthazar Gerbier hath left with his excellency the lord ambassador, and general Lockart gouvernor of Dunquerque, and with the right honourable the resident Downing at the Hague.

FIRST, the certayne Dutch commanders (now at the Hague) proffer to surprize such a place poynted by the Spaniards, as would put under contribution all the land from Gulick to Colen, to the gates of Aquisgrana, the land of Limbourgh, Liege, and Little Brabant, as Thienen, Diest, Weert, Loren, Machlen, Bruxels, and other places, to the gates of Antwerpe, besides a revenue of a considerable custome on merchandises transported by water.

That they can make the enterprize with 60 men lesse or more, and with great probability of successe.

That they can maintayne the place with a small number of men.

Secondly, that two severall associations of Dutchmen proffer (on conditions mentioned in their petitions, incerted in the above-said papers) to declare certayne (never heretofore practised) expedients, whereby a greate annual stock of money would be rayfed with ease, advantage, and applause of the people, which, untill the same could be established by act of parliament in England, it might be put in practice in Flanders, where the English forces have taken their station.

Thirdly, to introduce at Dunquerque a certayne negotiation with cent. per cent. gaine, and where number of men, women, and children may be employed.

Fourthly, Sr. Balthazar Gerbier offers to use the same meanes, which he formerly put in practice during the siege of Mastricht, and to move the states of Brabant (Flanders, Arthois, and Haynaut) to shake of the Spanish government, so secrecy be kept, and better then it was when late Francis Cottinghton betrayed that business.

As also the said Sr. Balthazar Gerbier offers to endeavour in person the destroying of any port of the Spaniards by a meanes, which is infalible with the Lord's permission.

*A letter of intelligence.*A.D. 1658: S^r,
Vol. lx. p. 173.

SINCE me last letter of the 17th, I have bin into Holland, and returned back againe here, with intention to retorne againe to 615 443 540. I shall 323 499 267 137 119 131 436 606. In the meane time I doe find no greate alteration of affaires into these parts since me said last letter, but all the busines in such fashion like I did write unto you the 14th; only the election of the emperour of Germanie gives some hopes of assistance from that side unto these countreis, because the said election is come upon the king of Hungrie; besides another hope they have, (the which they doe keepe most certaine, and without any doubt) the king of French should be dead, whereof they have such abundance of particularities and circumstances, that they doe say alwayes openly, that all them that will not believe the said death must be absolutely mad, hoping the consequences thereof to produce a generall changing and alteration in the French and English designs, be reason duke d'Anjou should be a greate enemy unto the cardinall Mazarin and his designs, as also of the conquests of the English into the Flanders, makeing also ruine a noise (for the encouragement of the people) the new-chosen emperor should send for their assistance 20,000 men horse and foote, and the like fancies. In the mean time they have mustered all the countrey-people, and given order to provide them of armes, to defend every one his own countrey; but nevertheless the said countrey-people still continue to retire away into the next citties and fortified townes (soe well belonging unto 642 as unto 632) all their cattle and other goods, the Spanish and Condeer doing nothing else than to plunder and spoyle the countrey round about, like the French and English doe the same about Neuport, Ostend, Bridges, Dixmuyde, and Ypres, and doe undertake nothing of greate concernment or importance, for soe much I can heare hereabout. Some French troupers of about 3000 should have bin betweene Bridges and Gand, and taken som cattle away. Just now comes a poast from Gand, reporting the French should have made a conjunction of all their forces for to undertake againe some feige, whereof the presumption is upon Ostend, Ypres, St. Omar, or Armentiers, the wich we shall see very shortly; and because I am sure you are well informed from other parts of the motions and doings of the French and English, and that I cannot give true information thereof unto you before I shall be 232 499 269 137 119 131, I shall give only unto you a relation of the constitutions of these countreys, the wich are partly in manner aforesaid. On the other parts, the ecclesiasticall or clergimene doe endeavour all their possibel to make new forces of footmen, whereof they are in great want of, having brought together in severall small bodies some 2000, being well newly risen men, but nothing else but straglers from their garrisons, under the wich are some, that put themselves 5 or 6 times into new service for to get some money, and doe runne away into their old comissions, as soone they come about their former garrisons. The inquisitions of all strangers doe continue still here, and round about the countrey, being here 17 Englishmen apprehended and put into prison, the wich shall not be set in libertie againe, but onely upon witnesse of 603. At Gand, Bridges, Bruxels, and into severall other citties and townes, is the like inquisitions, and also some French and English apprehended and put into prison. The states generall of the United Provinces have given order to change all their garrisons into the Flanders, and draw out the said garrisons all the English and French, and send them into other garrisons farre of from these parts, for to put or send Ditch garrisons insteade of the said English and French. No more for the present, remaining for ever,

S^r,Antwerpe, the 26th of July, 1658. [N. S.]

Your dutifull and faithfull servant,

JERONEMUIS VON ABSBACHE.

The superscription,

For Mr. Thomas Johnson, at the signe of the Leg, in Crooked-lane, London.Commissioner Pells to the states general.

H. and M. L.

Dantzick, 27th July, 1658. [N. S.]

Vol. lx. p. 185. MY lords, we believe here, that Thorn being still besieged by the Austrians and the Poles, under the command of the generalls de Souches and Sappia, will be forced to yeeld very suddenly, being vigorously assaulted on both sides.

General

General Charnitzkey is marched with his army towards the frontiers of Pomerania, and A.D. 1658. marches to the assistance of the duke of Brandenburg, in case the Swedish armies should be designed that way.

A vessel lately come from Riga bringeth news, that the Muscovite was advanced with an army of 20,000 men 10 miles beyond Riga.

Extract out of the resolutions of the lords states of Holland and West-Friesland, taken in their noble great lordships assembly upon Saturday the 27th of July, 1658. [N. S.]

Exhibited the 1st of August, 1658. [N. S.]

THE lord pensionary Van Slingelant hath reported to the assembly the considerations and the advice of the lords their noble great lordships commissioners having, in pursuance of their resolutions of the 14th of March last, pondered and considered the report made upon the said day to their H. and M. L. of what had passed and happened in the generality in the business of the princess Van Zollern, concerning the carrying away of the princess Louisa, daughter of the queen of Bohemia: whereupon being debated, it is resolved, that on the behalf of their noble great lordships, the business shall be referred to the generality, to the end the resolutions of their H. and M. L. of the 19th, 16th and 30th of January last respectively, by which the said princess Van Zollern is ordered to desist by provision in the appointing of magistrates in the town of Bergen up Zoom, with the consequences thereof, till such time there shall be otherwise disposed by their H. and M. L. and moreover the droffart and the aldermen should take upon them the judicature in the name and behalf of their H. and M. L. also in their name and behalf, as formerly, administer right and justice, with all what is concerning the same, may be looked upon as void and of none effect, as if the said resolution had never been taken, the council of Brabant being to take notice of this, and to proceed according to the rights and custom formerly used by them: that to this end the complaint of the said queen of Bohemia, together with all the proofs, papers, and informations belonging to that business, shall be sent, without any delay, to the said council of Brabant, with express command and precise order to take the said business in hand before all others, and to determine the same by their definitive sentence within some certain time peremptorily set down for the dispatch thereof.

A letter of intelligence.

Brussels, 27. July, 1658. [N. S.]

AS I wrote you the last week, the king of Hungary was chosen emperor the eighteenth of this month, and is to be crowned upon tuesday next. We had the news by expresses from Franckfort upon sunday last.

The bishop of Mentz, and the bishop of Triers, and the Palsgrave, did not oppose him, but the other five did. If the king of France were dead, you would see great alterations in Christendom.

The French army is not yet laid down before any town in Flanders.

To the Venetian agent.

Antwerp, 27th July, 1658. [N. S.]

WE have no news. The French army is drawing towards Ypres. That place is well provided; but yet, I believe, it will not hold out long, if once besieged.

They write me from the emperor's court, that his majesty is resolved to send assistance hither this campaign. Unless some do come, it will be a hard matter to keep the French from over-running most part of the country.

Lockhart to the protector.

May it please your most serene HIGHNESSE,

THEIR being several vacancies of field-officers in the regiments heare, I esteem it my duty to give your highnesse an account of them, and have taken the bouldnesse to offer a list of such persons, as I can judge fittest for the vacant employments. I humbly submit the whole to your highnesse pleasure, and shall interest myself no further in that affaire

A.D. 1658. then to begg, that if the persons I offer be not agreeable to your highnesse, that such as your highnesse shall judge more fitt may be sent over with all possible speed, because the regiments will suffer by not having all their field-officers present. I have informed my brother of all things relating to all the present posture of affairs heare: he will give himself the honor to offer your highnesse an account of them, at such convenient time as your highnesse shall appoint. He hath begg'd a company in my regiment, which did formerly belong to one captain Sherwine. I have given him no assurance of it, unlesse he bring a commissione for it from your highnesse. The haste I am in to dispatch him by this tyde must be my apologic for the rudenesse of this humble addresse your highnesse doth receive from,

May it please your HIGHNESSE,

Dunkerke, July $\frac{17}{27}$ 1658.

Your most obedient subject, and most faithfull servant,

WILL. LOCKHART.

A list of vacancies.

Vol. lx. p. 68.

THE lieutenant-collonell's place of my own regiment, for which I humbly offer lieutenant-collonell Fleettwood.

His place to major Kingwell.

Sir Bryan Cockrane's lieutenant-collonell's place to major Hinton, major to my regiment.

Major Kingwell's place to collonell Umphrais, lately sent over a captain, and recommended by your highness for preferment.

Major Pickering's place to captain Battalia, eldest captain of that regiment, and a deserving man.

The major's place of my regiment to captain Coats, eldest captain, and a deserving gentleman.

Collonell Jones, lately a prisoner, and now gone for England, is offered to your highness's consideration, as one of great meritt, in case any of the forementioned doe not please your highnesse, to whose pleasure the whole is humbly submitted.

My brother hath prevailed with my wife to command me to importune your highnesse for a company in my regiment, which did belong to captaine Sherwine.

Lockhart to secretary Thurloe.

May it please your LORDSHIPP,

Vol. lx. p. 66.

YESTERDAY his eminence gave a meeting to both his generalls at Mont Cassall.

This morning he sent for me, and acquainted me with what was resolved upon, viz. that Mr. Turenne shall keep the fiede, and observe the enemies motions with the greatest part of his army; and mareshall la Ferté in the meane tyme shall forme the seige of Link and Graveling with his army, to which are joyned some forces, that came from France, and as many horse and foott as can be spared from Mr. Turenne. I have desyered the English may be employed in the field as most propper for that service; and have given them hopes, that when all the horse come over, I shall lend them my own regiment (which hath got reputation amongst them) for a fortnight or three weeks tyme. I have satisfyed his eminence, that the body of our fleett being in the Channell and Downes road, their will need no more of his ships before Graveling, than 2 third-rate ships in the road, and 3 sixth-rate frigatts to ly closs under the shoar. I have writt to that purpose to my lord Montagu, and I hope this siege shall pass without any extraordinary expense to his highness. I have advysed the cardinal to stop the mouth of the river of Graveling with a double row of strong pallisadoes, which he resolves to doe; and then that place can have no succoure by sea, tho' we had neare a vessell in the road. His eminence prayeth, that since he is so willing to lessen his highness's charge by sea, that his highness would doe something considerable for France, by sending over 2000 foot at so seasonable a time as this will be: he alledgeth a promise to Mr. de Crequi, that will amount to as much; and sayth, it may easily be done by commanding a company out of each of his highness's old regiments. I told him, I doubted not but his highness would keep all his promises; only I thought it would be ahead matter for him to draw so many men together upon the sudden, daine, and for the way he proposed, it was impossible to doe it that way; for his highness's A.D. 1658. regiments lay at so great a distance, as before the companys drawn out of them could be joyned and embarked, I hoped the seige would be over: however, I undertooke to move his highness, that some foott be sent over; and considering that the seige of Graveling is lyke to goe off so easily upon his highness's account, I think it would not be disadvantageous to his highness's other interests here to spare them 1000 or 1500 foott, provided they may be raised or drawn out without weakening his highness's forces about London too much. The cardinal (whether to conjoyle me or not, I know not) was very kind to me, and tould me he hop'd ere long to close a traitty with me, that should be no lesse honourable for his highness then that of Dunkirk had been; and hinted something touching Ostend. I dare not say he did it without ends, I mean to spur me on to pushe his designs with the more earnestness; and yet I durst undertake, through the Lord's assistance, to bring him to agree to it upon reasonable terms, if the particulars for the generall peace have not gott a better interest with him, than I can yet believe they have. He informs me of a great victory the Portugalls have gott over the Spaniards: his news of it comes from England, and since your lordshipp doth not mention it, I dare not believe it, though I could wish it were trew with all my soul. I had long disputes with his eminence concerning the settling of contributions: I have been earnest in it, not because I expect any thing considerable this year; for the enemy's army and ours must eat up all in this country, before the seige of Graveling be ended; but what shall be agreed upon now will be pleaded as a rule for the future, and the French doe generally so envy our settlement here, as Mr. de Turenne was not ashamed to argue this day, that two of our principall stores here, that are within our works, belonged to the government of Bergh. 'Tis true the distinction of de Mains and Castellnaries was observed, when these places belonged either to the king of France, or the king of Spayne; and they might make what divisione betwixt their subjects seemed good to them; but when they come to be divided betwixt two sovereigns, the rule will not hold; for whether the sluices belong'd to the government of Dunkerke or Bergh, it was all one to the kings, because they belonged to them upon either of the accounts; but his highness cannot pretend to Bergh, and therefore must justifie all that he possesseth in Dunkerke, as belonging to him in quality of a free and soveraign prince, without dependance on any other power or person whatsoever. Many other things past concerning the contribution, of which at present I shall give you no further account save this, that if the cardinall did not moderate and brydle the humours of the French, I am confident we should have been by the ears ere now. I gave his highness an account of the considerable vacancies, that are heare, and have offered my humble opinion concerning their being filled up with able and well-quallified officers, all which I submit to his highness's pleasure; and shall omitt what further I have to say to my brother, whom I have as fully informed in all particulars as I could, in the short time I have to dispatch him; and shall give yourself no further trouble, save to assure you, that none can be more faithfully yours, then,

May it please your LORDSHIPP,

Dunkerke, July $\frac{17}{27}$. 1658.

Your most humble and obedient servant,

WILL. LOCKHART.

The enemy at Nieuport and Ostende have made bonfyers, fyred all their guns and small shott, for the joy they pretend to have, because of the electione of the new emperor. We cannot heare, that there is any such electione; but I believe they use that stratageme for feint, to encourage their dejected and despairing party.

Instructions from the king of Sweden to his ambassador in England.

Oldefloo, the 18th of July, 1658.

WHAT concerneth Dantzick, you know sufficiently how to answer it; and for the elector of Brandenburg, it is thus: he hath not only departed from that alliance, in which he was bound to us, manned Frawenburgh with his garison against that agreement, that we had made with him in that business, prosecuted our people in Prussia to his utmost power, taken away in the Pillaw divers times the ammunition we had sent for the maintenance of our garison in Prussia; but concluded an alliance, first defensive, after offensive, against us, tanquam contra communem hostem, with Austria and Poland, as well in the empire as in Prussia, dealing before-hand amongst themselves our provinces as a prize; and afterwards laid their counsels, how they would utterly rout us out of Germany; had private intelligence with Denmark, assuring them of several diversions, strove to hinder

A.D. 1658. hinder that peace; cast obstacles in the assembly of the Lower Saxon circle, when they were treating of the guarantee against the Danish eruption into the dukedom of Bremen; and lastly, endeavoured, in the highest manner, by his inventions, to bring upon us the hatred and jealousy of all states; and had long since fallen out into an open rupture against us, had not the continued success of our righteous arms, by God's assistance, hindered and deterred him from his intended resolutions. Notwithstanding all this, to shew our inclinations in friendship and good correspondence with the elector, we gave him to understand out of Gothenburgh, that if he would lay aside and compose all past misunderstandings, we should be found on our side very ready to do it. But when his ambassador came to us in Flensburgh, in place of making an accommodation, (as we hoped) we found the contrary, that in aliena causa, as concerning the Austrian and Polish business, he would impose laws upon us, or denounce war against us, in case we would not submit to their wills; upon which grounds we could not give them audience: but they declared themselves better, ordaining certain deputies, who should in the presence of the ambassadors of Brunswick, Lunenburg and Hessen, confer with them; in the first place, to compound our own differences, then could we the better hear what they had more to propound; for neither could we except the elector for a mediator, so long as he is a federatus cum hoste, neither could we endure threatenings before our eyes from our enemies. The reasons we desired the before-mentioned ambassadors at this conference are these; that the Brandenburgs in the presence of witnesses could not wrest words, or delude us with contradictions, and not stand to what was once determined, as they often used to do heretofore; and herein did notoriously in the new Brandenburg treaty. But this they would not understand, but rather to avoid it departed thence secretly, in all haste, before we understood the least of it, all which you will more fully see out of those inclosed deductions placed orderly after the alphabet, so that you can sufficiently demonstrate to the lord protector the great injuries we have received from the elector, without the least cause given; and that he hath thus wholly combined and joined himself to the Austrian party, contra rei evangelicæ et communis libertatis bonum.

A letter of intelligence from Blanck Marshall.

SIR, Newport, this 28th of July, 1658. [N.S.]

Charles Stewart and the duke of Gloucester is in Antwerp.

It's thought Charles Stewart will

Vol. ix. p. 187.

104 4 52 14 123 35 73 36 53 2 54 77 31 86 18 69. 61 37 78 74 79 32 56 go to Culien to see the emperor crowned.

81 33 80 104 87 38 44 45 27 57 19 to 10 82 46 47 39 55 77 58 75 20 21 the

Prince Rupert

22 48 62 59 70 60 71 11 72 56 83 52 18 15. 63 69 35 53 12 70 84 64 4 71 expected with seven thousand from Germany;

71 is presently 19 90 75 60 20 13 79 21 16 88 37 80 32 76 22 4 84 18 54 77 prepara-

34 58 85 76 5 55 17 23 72 59 49 28 19 69 50 5 52 94; there is noe 62 70

tions

here

raising of any forces.

20 64 1 71 2 78 35 56 53 76 makeing 33 21 22 72 for the 69 3 95 73 36 54

Don John is in Bruges,

Conde in Oitend,

30 56 24 4 55 96 26 58 70 10 18 74 105 37 75 38 52 111 11 59 53 17 19

Duke of York and Caracene is here,

39 54 60 76 77 20 54 14 106 1 55 15 12 2 71 3 73 21 35 52 22 36 74 34

dayly a seige.

place is well pro-

18 19 72, and expects 17 3 97 47 94 4 76 20 37 14 27 21. This 64 44 2 13 vided;

four thousand

22 39 73 89 18 45 46 61 70 60 85 36 15 16 19 17; there is at least 23 56 81 horse and loot in it;

71 20 78 34 57 82 73 5 52 14 32 58 72 73 3 55 17 24 59 60 79 35 54 36 officers soldiers are starving.

80; yet the 56 25 26 37 10 21 69 and 74 57 47 15 37 22 70 38 75 76 77 5 71 day the duke of York went our, beat in

81 39 55 30. This 16 3 94 106 89 18 52 77 58 82 79, and 6 19 3 79 35 53

French guards, took some few prisoners.

the 23 72 20 54 12 27 4 70 14 73, and 78 59 60 40 75 83 51 24 21 86 64 71

credit leave

35 75 76 56 55 22 72 76. I cannot with 10 69 18 14 35 77 44 19 1 84 20 place beleiged;

the duke of York doth

this 2 16 7 21 73 22 36 15 18 16; neither doe I know how 106 16 60 80 31 intend to dispose of me.

37 53 77 19 54 17 78 56 14 38 73 61 57 74 20 58 26 48 21. I am afrayed

I cannot send you those things you expect, if that bee; but I shall use my best indeavour.

Sir,

JOHN THURLOE ESQ. &c.

281

Sir, when you think fit to lay your commands on your servant, direct as I desyred in my A.D. 1658. ^{consider my want} last. Sir, unless you please to doe me that favour to ^{horfe} 11 56 52 73 35 14 18 69 48 94 ^{will become of mee.}
 86 1 552 79 of a 31 57 70 44 or two, I know not what 88 37 44 45 7 19 11 58
 49 59 23 50 20 21. I humbly beg pardon for this bouldness, and reste,

SIR,

Your most obedient servant,

B. M.

General Montagu to secretary Thurloc.

MY LORD,

I UNDERSTAND just now from my lord embassador, that the French are resolved ^{Vol. lx. p. 79.}
 to beseidge Gravelinge; and that he hath sent 2 of the small vessels I left with him, and hath sent for 2 fourth-rate frigates from captain Blake before Ostend, which, he saith, he hath perswaded the cardinall is sufficient, whilst I ride here in the Downes, and I think it unlesse it be for keepinge a continual boates in the mouth of the river, which, it may be, may be too hard duty for them, and is as considerable as all the rest. I desire to know, how I shall behave myselfe, whether I shall faile thither or noe.
 I cann ride there with securitye (through God's mercye); and, if I be there, is it of soe great concernment to you, that I should be at any chardge to synke vessells in the river's mouth, or other extraordinary matter, more then guards as good as can be kept? or is it better for mee to ride her, as my lord Lockhart intimates? Your next, I hope, will full advertise me of all these; in the meane tyme I remaine,

MY LORD,

Nasebye in the Downes,
 July 18. 1658.

Your lordshipp's most faithfull and humble servant,

E. MONTAGU.

Mr. Downing to secretary Thurloc.

HONORABLE SIR,

ACCORDING to your order, I have furnisht the bearer heerof, collonel Blackfall, with ^{Vol. lx. p. 188.}
 a passe for himselfe and his friend Dr. Sutton; but in the passe he is under the name of collonel Henry More, and his friend under the name of Jean Johnson. Himselfe will acquaint you with what he hath to say, and not more, but that I am,

HONORABLE SIR,

Hague, July 29. 58. [N.S.]

Your most faithfull humble servant.

G. DOWNING.

General Montagu to secretary Thurloc.

MY LORD,

THIS afternoone I have received two letters from Mr. Downinge, which import little ^{Vol. lx. p. 196.}
 save that the ships I stayed here had plate in them, and much of their goods belonged to Flanders. He hath written the inclosed pacquett to you, which I suppose will informe you at large what he knowes. I also inclose two intelligences I received from Flushing from an unknowne hand, such as did formerly correspond with vice-admiral Goodson.
 They have not much in them, but I thought it requisite to send them unto you, hearinge that the French army is come before Gravelin; and judginge, that the ships my lord Lockhart wrott unto before Ostend, could not soone come there, I sent 2 frigates out of the Downes thither to assist them, untill the other come, and then to returne to mee againe.

VOL. VII.

4 C

I was

A.D. 1658. I was willing they should see wee would not neglect theire affaire, after wee had been served ourselves. This is all the trouble you shall receive at present from,

MY LORD,

Nasebye in the Downes,
July 20. 1658.

Your lordshipp's most faithfull and humble servant,

E. MONTAGU.

General Fleetwood to Henry Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland.

MY LORD,

In the possession of the right hon. the earl of Shelburn.

THE acceptance, which you were pleased to owne from my wife and selfe, in our desires to serve my lady Reynolds, is an obligation upon us. She being a person of such true worth, may challenge from us, upon her owne accompt, our readinesse to serve her ladishipp; besides the relation she hath to your lordshipp and my lady, that is enough to induce our uttmost to be serviceable in what may concerne her. She is a person truely deserveing your lordshipp's affection and care of her; but of this I may forbear to mention, your lordshipp being soe tender of her. Be pleased to present my humble services to all those noble relations. His highnesse and counsell hath considered of your lordshipp's desires, in order to the securing of the trade; and have accordingly ordered Kingfale to be the victualling place; and doe thinke it necessary, that your lordshipp and counsell should have the whole management of the sea affaires, concerning which some of the councill are to conferr with some of the commissioners of the admiralty, how it may be effected; which probably may prove of more security to the trade, and lesse charge to the publique, if you can be from hence supplied with moneys to answer that occasion. We are at a vast charge in maintayneing the fleete; and yet there are very greate complaints amongst the marchants, of their losses. My lord, I must intreate you would excuse my not being my owne penman, being under some phisicall observations; and therefore shall only add, that I am

20. July, 1658.

Your most affectionate brother, and humble servant,

CHA. FLEETWOOD.

Secretary Thurloe to H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland.

MY LORD,

In the possession of the right hon. the earl of Shelburn.

I CAN adde very little to what I have formerly writt about affaires here, noe resolutions being yet taken as to the maine question, which cannot now be longe delayed. Our great necessities, which much encrease every day, will necessitate to fix somewhere, though perhaps some had rather be still fluctuatinge. Your excellency shall not want the knowledge of what passes here, soe farre as I am capable of informinge you thereof; but truly I have nothinge at this tyme to informe your excellency of.

I wonder, that the letters about the thanksgiveinge day came not in tyme. I have spake with the clerkes of the counsell about it, to whose care it was comitted, who assure me, that the letters were dispatched that very night. In the meane tyme, that which your excellency did about it was very necessary.

The letter which was writt to his highnes about the guards of shippinge for the coast of Irelande, was read this day in the counsell; and it is positively ordered, that the ships, that shall be appointed for the guard of that coast, be victualled at Kingfale, and that more ships be appointed; and I will doe the best I can for to procure effectuall orders from the admiralty for that purpose.

I had a simple and malicious paper about doctor Petty, which truly I sett nothinge by; and I hope your excellency will not thinke, that any thinge of that kinde can stick with me after soe good a character given of the person by your excellency; and my freedome with him since that will, I trust, evince it to hym; which I shall continue, till your lordship forbids it.

The French have at last resolved to besidge Gravelinge; and as I think they invested it saturday last, as alsoe a fort neare Bergen, called Linke. These sieges are to be managed by mareshall la Ferté, and Turenne is to keepe the field with the best parte of his army, to attend the motion of the enemyes, who is yet in their severall garrisons; but

Don

Don John is endeavouring to draw into the field, hoping to get some foot out of his A.D. 1658. garrison, after the French are fixed upon one place. My last letters from Germany speak, that the election of the king of Hungary was to be two days after the date, and the enemy in Flanders made 2 bonfires days since for the election; but the truth of this will want the confirmation of the next letters. The king of Sweden hath not yet declared any designe. The Dane and he are yet disputing about the performance of the last treatie; and some are of opinion, that he will never quit Denmark. A warre is alsoe very likely to fall out betweene the Swede and the elector of Brandenburg; and that will drawe on a warre alsoe between hym and the Dutch; soe that in appearance things stand as ill stated as to the Protestant cause as can be, it beinge very probable, that they will be involved in warr one with another; and in the meane tyme the house of Austria, Poland, &c. doe not only unite amongst themselves, but drawe in some of the Protestant party into their confederation, as Brandenburg, and I feare the Dutch alsoe. But I truste the Lord will better dispose of things. I rest

Hampton-court, 20. July, 1658.

Your EXCELLENCYE's most obedient,

and most humble servant,

JO. THURLOE.

My lady Elizabeth continues very ill. My lord Fauconberge was very honourably received in Yorkshire; above 1000 horse of the gentrye and others met him neare York, besides the mayor and aldermen of the place.

Dr. Thomas Clarges to H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland.

May it please your EXCELENCY,

BEING lately to attend the commissioners of the customes, in order to summe directions from your excellency and the councell, they told me, your excellency had lately written to their officer at Chester, concerning some seizure or seizures lately made there of mony belonging to some gentlemen or other persons transporting themselves to plant in Ireland; in which, they say, they cannot comply with your excellencie's desires, in regard, by the law, all summs above a proportion limitted to be carried into Ireland are to be forfeited; and till a parliament provides to the contrary, they conceive no relief can be given to any in such cases, but by privy seale from his highness. Yet they entreated me to acquaint your excellency, that they think the law too strict in such cases; and till a remedy can be obtained, it might be well for your excellency to move his highness in it, that privy seales may be graunted accordingly, as occasion shall require. By the last from Dunkirk, we heare that marshall de la Ferté has besieged Gravlin with that part of the army, which he commanded; and that the town was compassed on saterday the 17th instant; and that another part of the army continued at Dixmude. And the feild army under marshall Thureine was observeing the motions of Don John and the prince of Condé. Letters from Holland mention, that the Portugall ambassidor made a very magnificent entry into the Hage, the 8th of this month, according to our account. His business is to endeavour an accomodation betwixt that king and the states of the United Provinces, which will scarce be effected. The king of Sweden has desired audience to the Brandenburg ambassidors, which will be ill resented in Germany, and makes their differences hardly reconcileable. There is yet no certaine newes of the emperour's election; but rumours are very strong. Haveing had at this time some little affaire to make knowne to your excellency, I hope you will pardon the length of this paper, which, though it brings you nothing more of newes then what I have written to your excellency and the councill in a joynt adress, will neverthelesse in some small proportion testify the duty due to your excellency from,

May it please your EXCELENCY,

London, this 20th of
July, 1658.

Your excellency's most obleiged, humble servant,

THO. CLARGES.

Secret. Extract out of the resolutions of the lords states of Holland and West-Friesland, taken in their assembly, upon wednesday the 31st of July, 1658. [N.S.]

A.D. 1658.

Vol. ix. p. 205.

THE pensionary de Witt hath reported to the assembly the considerations and advice of the lords their high and mighty lordships commissioners for the affairs of Sweden, having, in pursuance of their resolution of the 30th instant, examined and considered of the letter of the lord Frederic Van Dorp, lord Van Maesdam, extraordinary ambassador of this state to the king of Sweden and Poland, written at Oldensloo the 24th of the same month, containing amongst the rest, that he the said lord ambassador, as well by the king of Sweden as his ministers, according to the received commands of their high and mighty lordships, had laboured in all earnestness and vigilance, to the end the treaty concluded at Elbing, on the 11th of September, 1656, might be perfect and effected; at least that he in short should get to understand the inward and final intention of the king about it; and having particularly discoursed at large about it, with the lord Slippenback, the conclusion on his side was, that his majesty would first expect and see, how that their high and mighty lordships would fully satisfy and quiet him concerning his enemies, who were by name the house of Austria, duke of Brandenburg, and the city of Dantzick; that they will not assist or uphold them by any indirect means in their hostilities; and that then his said majesty was ready to treat with their high and mighty lordships, or their ministers, for the good of the commerce, and to the advantage of the inhabitants and subjects of the United Netherlands. Whereupon being debated, it is thought fit and understood, that on the behalf of their noble great lordships this business shall be referr'd to the generality, to the end there may be returned an answer to the said lord ambassador's letter by their high and mighty lordships, that their high and mighty lordships do conceive it altogether unreasonable, that on the side of this state there should be first made or given the said desired promise or assurance, without that at the same time, from the side of Sweden, the desired assurance be received upon the business of the commerce and otherwise, according to the said Elbing treaty, as also the further elucidations and interpretations formerly projected upon the same; but we should afterwards treat about all the same, in the manner as is above-mentioned in uncertainty; and that he be also ordered clearly to declare and demonstrate to his majesty the notorious inequality of the said request, and to cause him to apprehend the same, with representation, that his majesty himself, by perfecting the said Elbing treaty, will effectually obtain the desired satisfaction, and with assurance, that their high and mighty lordships, after concluding of the act of elucidation and further interpretation upon that treaty, will not assist or uphold directly or indirectly the said or either his majesty's enemies in their hostilities against his majesty, but so behave and regulate themselves concerning the same as in all other points, according to the tenor and disposition of the said treaty; and that he the said lord ambassador, under benefit of the said assurance, do earnestly insist by his said majesty, to the end the said elucidations, and further interpretations, may be at last finally agreed, and thereby the Elbing treaty finally perfected and effected; or otherwise, that their high and mighty lordships might know the final resolution of his majesty concerning the same, without further loss of time, that so they may know how to govern themselves accordingly.

General Montagu to secretary Thurloc.

MY LORD,

Vol. ix. p. 199.

YOURS on the 20th, by the messenger, is come unto mee this evening; and I shall endeavor to carry my self towards the seidge at Gravelin according to your directions. Just now here arrived a catch from our shippes, that ride there, who saies, that on Sunday last there was above 50 pieces of ordinance shott off from the towne, and that every day some are fired; and towards the night, the French horse alwaies come up neere the shoare, within a quarter of a mile of the towne; but as yett there are noe bilanders or futlinge vessels come to attend the campe, soe that it is probable the armye is postinge itself, but as yett the line is finished. Our next messengers will surely bring certaintye of newes. The ordinarye occurrents in Holland I have from divers hands; but if there happen any thinge of great importance more difficult to be knowne, you will oblige me very much to impart soe much as is fitting. It is indeed a very sad thinge, that the Protestants are like to be in armes one against another. I wish our affaires at home were in a fittinge posture to enable us to moderate amongst them; and truly I thinke, unlesse by treatye or forces you prevaile for better deportment and friendship from the Dutch, a warr (if you could tell how to support it) were better then a peace with them. If all Flanders were

were ours, what signifies it, when their whole country serves for a nest to shelter rogues, ^{A.D. 1658.} that interrupt our trading? They receive the enemies men of warr in, with their prizes, and suffer them to sell them, and refitt and mann themselves, and to sea againe, and convey all the Spaniards money and goods for Flanders. Excuse mee for troubling you with this impertinent discourse, which shall be extended noe further. I am,

MY LORD,

July 21. 1658. Nasebye
in the Downes.

Your lordshipp's most faithfull and humble servant,

E. MONTAGU.

Lockhart to secretary Thurloc.

May it please your LORDSHIPP,

I KNOW multitude of businesse was never a sufficient excuse to exempt your lordshipp ^{Vol. lx. p. 200.} from attending the acts of goodnesse and justice, which consideration hath encouraged me to recomend to you a person and a cause, to neither of which your lordshipp is a stranger. Mr. Augier and his perplext concernment for and in the debt of Monsieur Cezy, needs not to be explicated or laid open to your lordshipp's knowledge. I shall onely beg, that considering the character of the said Augier, a man worne out in publick service, reduced to great extremities, as well in his faithfull and long attendance upon that, as in the particular prosecution of the cause in question, a man of exemplary goodnesse and piety, and one that hath stood fast and firme in the worst of times, he may by your lordshipp's influence find as good measure of justice and equity in his highnesse's counsell, as he hath already done from his majesty of France, whose decree in his behalf (being built upon such reasonable grounds) may not improperly be proposed as a copie to the lords of his highnesse's counsell. But I look upon them as the originall of justice, and upon your lordshipp as the chiefe instrument thereof, in which confidence I dare promise him a good issue of his businesse, and shall without further importunity rest,

MY LORD,

1st August,
22d July, 1658.

Your lordshipp's most humble and most obedient servant,

WILL. LOCKHART.

Secretary Thurloc to Mr. John Aldworth, consul of the English nation at Marseilles.

SIR,

I Received your last by this post, and shall mind the contents with what care I can. In the mean time I desire you to take care, that the inclosed letter to captain Whetston be sent with all expedition according to its address; and this is all the trouble you shall have at present from

22d July,
1st August, 1658.

Your very affectionate friend.

Secretary Thurloc to captain Whetstone, captain of the Fairfax frigate in the Streights.

SIR,

I Received yours of the $\frac{4}{14}$ July from Toulon; it came to my hands this morning, and am very sorry to understand by yours, that you meet with any disrespect from any of the captains of the fleet. I am certain they do not consult their own interest therein, nor give any great sign of their affection and duty to his highness, by putting any dishonour upon one so nearly related to him. For my own part, I am a very ill judge of what is fit to the wearing of the flag; but truly do conceive, that upon such an expedition as that, wherein the English Squadron of ships was to join with the fleet of another nation, the flag was so to be carried, that it might appear, that the English were not under their command, but their equals. However that question is now at an end; for the French having laid aside their design, there will be no need of any ships of ours to assist them.

VOL. VII.

4 D

And

A.D. 1658. And therefore you are, notwithstanding any orders received from captain Stoakes, or any other, no further to attend upon that service, but so to follow such other orders as you have already received, or shall receive for any other service, without looking after the French. And this I have written to you immediately, believing mine to captain Stoakes will not reach him so soon, he being, as I understand, at Tripoli. I cannot further enlarge now; but if you please to let me know your condition, I shall not be wanting to serve you in whatsoever I am able, and rest

22d July,
31st August, 1658.

Your very affectionate friend and servant.

The French have besieged Graveling.

Nieuport, the Dutch ambassador in England, to the states general.

H. and M. LORDS,

Vol. lx. p. 201.

MY lords, upon tuesday the 23d of July last, I received your high and mighty lordships commission; and thereupon, having taken my leave of your lordships, I went on board with the next tide of the ship of war, under the rear-admiral riding in the mouth of the Maze. Upon the 28th of the same month, the wind coming southerly, we did what we could to get out to sea; but in regard the wind came too much westerly about, we were forced to return to the place where we formerly lay; but upon wednesday last, perceiving that the wind was gotten northerly, I endeavoured to further my voyage for England, although the vessel with my coach-horses and baggage was not got out; and it graciously pleased our good God, to give us such good wind and weather, that we arrived here this night well and safe. The first night out of sight of the sea-coast of Holland, we met a great English frigate of war called Newcastle, with a lesser, who made towards us, and understanding that I was transporting for England, gave us several guns; the same honour I received to-day from a captain of another English frigate call'd the Charington, who had been plying too and again about the north; so that as yet we have received no other usage but of honour and amity. Now I intend to hasten to London, to effect with faithfulness and diligence the commands and orders of your high and mighty lordships.

Gravesend, the 2d August,
1658. [N. S.]

W. NIEUPORT.

Sir Thomas Bendyshe, ambassador at Constantinople, to the protector.

SIR,

Vol. lx. p. 153.

ALTHOUGH I may justly feare, that my last, of the 28th of May (which presented your highness with a long story as of our owne particular affaires, so of publique occurrences here) hath much cloyed you; yet could not I resist the temptation of this present opportunity; the faireness whereof might well rise up against me for my neglect, if I tendred not with my humblest service what here hath hapned since my former, as in particular the sodaine and unexpected dislodgment of the vizier from Adrianople hath; and how before that, it was accorded betwixt the German resident and him, on behalf of their masters; that as he on one side should not possess himself of any other place in Hungary or Transilvania, than hee already hath, or prosecute farther than the chastisement of the three princes, Ragozi, Wallachia and Moldavia, who are all in Transilvania; so, on the other side, that the king of Hungary should not any way assist the Transilvanians, or permitt those princes shelter in any his territories; and much about the same tyme, an extraordinary from Poland (whose chiefe errand was, to sollicite the Tartars assistance against Muscovite and Sweden) was heard and dismiss'd by the visier with much honour and satisfaction, who on the day before he rose, which was June the 14th, confined the aged ambassador of France, (who for reliefe of his imprisoned sonne, secretary, and others, had taken a journey to Adrianople) to his house, guarded by severall chiauses, in which condition hee as yet remaines, and as far from the comfort of his son's company, as if he had still remained here. Mean-while a chiaus is sent to France, as reported, to lament against him, and urge his revocation. That he hath been very serviceable by his advices and endeavours to the Venetian, is more than bare suspicion, the want whereof at present keeps them at the castles in a vaine expectation of a fleete coming out, whereas here is not the least intent of sending any.

The visier was no sooner up, but all concluded his designe to bee upon France, the issue whereof is here much doubted, the Transilvanians being in a posture (assisted by the Cro-batts and the Swedes, say some) rather to seeke him than expect him, having, since the defeat A.D. 1658. of the bassa of Temiswar, besieged the citty itself; and the visier himself, though he hath lately flighted their proffers of 1500 piafes, (each valued at 500 dollars) and of doubting their tribute, and of choosing prince, in case he would make peace, and pardon the three princes lives, seeming now to abate somewhat of his first confidence, slackening the fury of his marches, and deliberating where, how, and what forces to sett upon them, whom formerly hee thought hee could dare into submission. But what fate soever attends that poore prince and countrey, his ambassador and resident here, I feare, will weare their lives out in prison, whence the height of this people is observeable, who, contrary to the law of nations, doe at this time hold imprisoned the publike ministers of three potent, at least not contemptible states, as of France, Venice, and Transilvania. The grand seignior himself, having countenanced the visier's designes, and shewed himselfe a well-wisher to feates of warre, had taken a resolution to retire to Bursia on Asia-side (the former seate of the emperors before the taking of this citty); but the vizier, out of jealousy of a danger, which now faceth more boldly, diswaded him; for Hassan Bassa, bassa of Alepo, one very popular, and a reputed soldier, is advanced on Asia side, within fixe daies journey of this place, with a grosse and daylv growing army; attended by many bassa's and other persons and name, breathing not only discontents at the visier's misgovernments and tyranny, (as in making the grand signior page to all his designs, and in building his owne absoluteness upon the oppression and slaughter of others) but threats also against him, and against the grand signior himselfe, in case he submitts not the visier to justice, having first affronted the command; (sent from the grand signior for his repayre, with what forces he had, to the confines of Persia) tearing it in pieces, in head of his army, by them provoked thereunto, who refuse obedience to any order, that forbids their coming on; and then having made stop of such presents as he had sent for compliance sake to some chiefe officers at court, and lately having, by his cunning correspondencies here, made the chiefe officers and people of this citty so much his fautors, as that they vent not the wares more openly and freely than they do their disgusts against the present government, and their expectation of a sodaine revolution; so that, where the grand signior will seeke his safety, if this proves true, (which I somewhat distrust) whither here (where some sodainly expect him) or at Adrianople, where hee yet is, or with his visier and army, as yet intent upon Transilvania, is not easie to conjecture. Mean-while it is much fear'd he may be driven to the unnatural policy of this empire, and for his own security cutt off his brother Solyman present with him; and no lesse hoped, that this may divert the visier, and occasion the reliefe of Transilvania, otherwise hardly besett; for who knowes but God may please to turne the prayers of this people (which are for continuance of dissentions among Christians) upon their owne heads, and call them back, who are gone to destroy their neighbour's house, to quench that fire, which is ready to devoure their owne? The Venetians, for want, I think, of an enemy at sea, practice hostilities upon their friendes, as lately upon the Lewis frigatt coming hither, which not being able by reason of much wind, bad anchorage, and worse shore, to come presently to an anchor, was furiously shott at by them; and even while she was endeavouring it, they so multiplied their shott, as much endangered both ship and men, insomuch as she was forced for her preservation, having received some shotts, to befriend herself with her sayles; but still is threatned by the generall, as she had not dared (unless I had encouraged her, by my intercessory letters to the generall) to make her returne; for redresse whereof, and such-like grievances caused by them, to the no small prejudice of our trade, wee humbly apply ourselves to your highness, whose care is never wanting for the just protection of your people. Nor are all our troubles from without us; some are, as I may say, from amongst us, and from within us, occasioned by a generation of people crept in unawares, called Quakers, three whereof not long since arrived here from Zant, by way of the Morea, whom I suffered with tendernes, so long as their comportment was offencelesse; but when, at length, becoming scandalous to our nation and religion, (which upon this occasion was censured and scoffed at, by Papist, Jew, and others of a strange faith) and insufferable also by reason of their disturbances of our divine exercises, and severall notorious contempts of mee and my authority, I friendly warned them to returne, which the two women did quietly; but John Buckley refusing, I was constrained to shipe him hence upon the Lewis. I have presumed to derive so much of the trouble (which this people have put me to) upon your highness as to give you an account thereof, esteeming it my duty to make my acting and proceeding here knowne unto you, from whom I am chiefly to expect an approbation of them, without which nothing willingly shall ever be attempted by,

batts

SIR,

Pera di Constantinople,
July 24th 1658.

Your HIGHNESS's faithfull servant, and most obedient subject,

THO. BENDISHE.

Intelligence.

Intelligence.

A.D. 1658.

Vol. ix. p. 209.

From Bruffells, the 3d of August, 1658. [N. S.]

HERE is advice come from Ostend of the 26th of the last month, that the prince of Condé, during his abode there, hath so strengthened that town, by the means of good order, and strong fortifications, and hath so provided it with all manner of provisions of war, (as also the marquis of Caracena hath done the like at Nieuport) that the same is now almost impregnable. The advice from Bruges of the 27th of the same month, that Don John had been in person to visit the fort of Blanckenbergh; and having conferred a while with the prince of Condé at Ostend, he returned back to Bruges, there to consult further with the four members of Flanders, about a further defence of the Flemish posts, and preventing of the further designs of the French. They do with very great longing expect here the assistance promised out of Germany. Here have been very great fires made for joy of the election of the emperor: in some places they made bonfires for three nights together.

Dormesson to Bordeaux, the French ambassador in England.

MY LORD,

Calais, 3d August, 1658. [N. S.]

Vol. ix. p. 211.

I KNOW no other news to write to you by this post but the return of his eminence from Bergen with the gout, yet without much pain: he arrived here yesterday at two of the clock, and notwithstanding his distemper, he giveth all the orders for the furnishing of the army with all provisions, and to put it in a condition to begin incessantly the opening of the trench.

Monsieur de la Ferté doth not lose one moment of time; and every one disposeth himself to reduce Graveling under the obedience of the king.

The marshals of Faber and Mondejeux are declared, and the king hath sent them their expeditions. If this favour be not yet publick, I can assure you that it is true, and that I am, &c.

Fly to Bordeaux, the French ambassador in England.

MY LORD,

Calais, 3d of August, 1658. [N. S.]

Vol. ix. p. 213.

HIS eminence arrived here yesterday with Monsieur de Tellier. They take great pains and care for the siege of Graveling, where the waters do incommode the camp: they endeavour what they can to prevent it. I will advise you by every post of all what passeth.

The king is in perfect health; we had this news from him to-day.

Mr. John Biddle to secretary Thurloe.

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

Vol. ix. p. 226.

HIS highness was pleased, when I was under restraint in the isle of Scilley, by his letters of privy seal, to allow me ten shillings per week towards my maintenance; but since I have bin restored to my liberty, as I do with many thanks acknowledg his highness's bounty towards me, so would I be very loath, that the intention thereof should be perverted; and therefore I beseech your honor to certify his highness, that my hope is, that I shall be now otherwise sufficiently provided for. I am

London, July 24th, 1658.

Your humble servant,

JOHN BIDDLE.

Intelligence,

Intelligence, sent from Holland by resident Downing.

Embassador Isbrants from Wismar, the 4th August, 1658. [N. S.] A.D. 1658.

ON saturday last, having had audience of the king, I did begin my proposition, in representing the reasons, for which on the part of Poland, the assembly of Braunsburg had been hitherto refused, to wit, to give no fear to the allies, as I have formerly given notice to your lordships from Posen; and, because that it cannot be agreed upon, unless there be some assurance, that when the treaty is in hand, it will indubitably be brought to a good issue; therefore, praying his majesty that, for the taking away that obstacle, he would please to declare the sum of money he expected for the restitution of Prussen-royal, or to trust the communication thereof with the mediators, in which case I hoped that their good offices and endeavours would be of such consequence in Poland, that the preliminaries should not only be obtained to the content of the king, but that Poland would be induced to a satisfaction in money, if his majesty would demand but according to the present constitution of Poland, proposing to this purpose, if it would please his majesty, that we should negotiate in Poland for one million of rix-dollars, which would be at present so much the more proper, in regard the diet is yet assembled at Warsaw; and because there is not yet an open rupture between his majesty and the elector of Brandenburg. The king answered, by shewing divers reasons to demonstrate and shew, that the hinderance is not on his part, why the treaty hath not been concluded long ago, his commissioners having been long at Stetin to attend the assembly to that purpose; and as for the declaration, which Poland demanded, he answered, that he cannot judge it to stand with the reputation, or the present state of affairs, that he should be constrained to that, and that he was not obliged to quit Prussia; and therefore, they should present him with such a sum of money as may make him consent to the quitting of it; and as for the million of rix-dollars to Poland, to leave Prussia to him. In the affair of the elector of Brandenburg, his majesty spoke with a great animosity against the alliance, which he had made against him with Denmark and Hungary, and that he should be obliged to give him a due satisfaction for it; concluding finally, that seeing my propositions was to the same effect of Mr. de L'ombres embassador of France, he would also give me the same answer, which he commanded the count Slipenback to give me; and he being retired, the said count made known to me the said answer, which was, that his majesty demanded, that Poland should renounce all pretension to the kingdom of Sweden, &c. that he should wholly grant Livonia, not only as the Swede now enjoys it, but with the rest of the lands which the Polanders hold of it; and that as a dependant thereof, the sovereignty of Courland shall be added to it, to belong to the Swedes from henceforward, as now it doth to the crown of Poland; that the duke of Courland shall be recompensed by the Samagists for it. For the restitution of Prussen his majesty demanded ten millions of rix-dollars, but came afterwards to eight, and at last to five millions; upon which he insists, upon condition that he will not be obliged before the treaties are begun; and that the kingdom of Poland shall neither be given in succession to the emperor, nor to the Muscovites, that so Prussen being potent, and enemies of his majesty, fall not into their hands. And secondly, that his majesty will not quit Prussen, before the money to be agreed on, on both sides, be paid. That his majesty continues to name Brandenburg for the place of the assembly; and to that purpose would send his commissioners with all speed into Pomerania, to attend the resolution of Poland; also, that the passports and plenipotentiaries, which shall be sent thither, shall be without the title and arms of Sweden in the seals. I have upon this made known the difficulties, which I believed would be alledged of Poland against their particulars; and particularly concerning the pretension of Courland; that in Poland it hath been always held to depend of Lithuania and not of Livonia; and furthermore, that Poland cannot dispose of any other satisfaction than in money; and seeing that five million is a great sum for Poland, it would be counted an impossible condition, and that it would be to be feared, that these would agree with the Muscovites, to cut off the hopes of a peace with his majesty of Sweden. The said count answered me, that his master was not affrighted with the desperateness of Poland; and the treaties with the Muscovites were nothing but tricks; for the Polanders would never choose the great duke for the king; but his majesty giving way to such counsels, had ways to put the Muscovites in possession of that succession, which the Polanders had promised, which might be done by delivering into the hands of the great duke that which would oblige him to favourable conditions, to the advantage of his majesty; and as for what concerns the demands of the five millions, he told me, that Poland having insisted upon a declaration of his majesty ought to be contented that his majesty hath not demanded more than five millions of rix-dollars, and they must not think that his majesty would insist upon it opinionately; but that there is inclination to rebate somewhat of the said five millions, if Poland would agree in other conditions. With this answer Monsieur

A.D. 1658. de L'ombres is gone away this morning towards Warsaw, taking Stetin in his way. I will follow him to-morrow by Berlin, to pray the elector of Brandenburg, that he will please to contribute his interest, that an assembly may be begun as soon as may be.

Ambassador Dorp, from Wismar, 5th August, 1658. [N.S.]

IT is thought here, that the king will go hence this week; and that he will embark himself for Keil, where are nine ships of war already, and the rest of the fleet are there expected. I understand, that at Keil there was embarked, in several barks, six or seven thousand foot and horse; for the maintenance of whom, Lubeck is desired to furnish them with bisket and hay, in considerable quantity. It is said, that the king will go in person with this fleet, to enter Prussia or Pomerania, and there attempt some enterprise.

Dantzick, 31st July, from the Agent Pells.

By reason of the ill weather the letters from Koningsberg are not come; so that nothing of Livonia, or the affairs of Courland, Prussia, or the diet of Warsovia is known. The envoy of Muscovy goes hence to-day towards the marquis of Brandenburg's. It is believed also, that Thorn is surrendered.

Extract out of the register of resolutions, &c.

9th August, 1658.

The states general have added to the resolution of 31 July last past, touching the treaty of Elbing

After these words:

But their high mightinesses will in this, and all other points conform themselves to the tenor of the said treaty.

Is added,

So that there shall be no alteration nor diminution of the clause of the said treaty of Elbing, touching the conclusion of the kings, princes and estates therein-mentioned, and particularly of the elector of Brandenburg and city of Dantzick, to whom liberty shall be given to accept thereof within a certain space of time, after the signing of the elucidations, the ministers on both sides shall have given them notice thereof, of which an express is given by this order to the ambassadors of this state.

The last clause is,

And Mr. Huygens and the other deputies of their high mightinesses, for the affairs of Sweden, to acquaint the resident Appleboom herewith, in answer to the memorials he has presented the 5th and 7th of this month; and that they communicate the same to the minister of Brandenburg and Dantzick to serve them for information.

The deputies of the provinces of Guelderland, Zealand, Frise and Groninguen, persist in their former declarations.

To Petkum.

SIR,

Franckfort, 4th August 1658. [N.S.]

Vol. lx. p. 222. ON sunday last we saw the solemnity here of the coronation of the emperor Leopold: the ceremony was performed by the elector of Cologne, and the other two ecclesiastical electors, assisted him; as also at least twenty bishops and abbots more. The emperor doth intend to go from hence on thursday next for Vienna; the electors depart one after another. The elector of Saxony will accompany the emperor to Vienna. I am not yet certain what I shall do with myself; but I intend to remove from hence very suddenly. They have yet some hopes here of making the general peace; I know your prayers will not be wanting to it.

The

The Swedish resident to the states general.

5th of August, 1658. [N. S.] A.D. 1568.

THE under-written resident of Sweden having received and well considered the resolution of their high and mighty lordships, delivered to him upon the first instant, by their high and mighty lordships commissioners, in answer to the memorandum delivered by him upon the 18th of the last month, cannot omit herewith to represent to their high and mighty lordships, that he did expect, that their good pleasure would have been somewhat to have expressed themselves in their said answer about the chief subject of the said memorandum, concerning the duke of Brandenburg's transactions, and the succours which are endeavoured to be obtained on the side of the said duke of their high and mighty lordships, against his said majesty; which yet his said majesty is expecting from their high and mighty lordships amity and high discretion, the more in regard by the inductions and sinister persuasions formerly brought by the enemies of his majesty, it hath so happened, as if they had a design to hinder the commerce; for since the conclusion of the treaty at Elbing, and renovation of the antient amity and alliance between his majesty and their high and mighty lordships, many things have past on the side of their high and mighty lordships, which do not altogether agree with the good meaning and intent of that treaty; and in regard his majesty's enemies do still pursue and continue their so well successful practices, by exciting and setting on their high and mighty lordships to send fleets and succour into the East-sea, for the defence of the commerce, which his majesty never intended to hinder; wherefore the said resident doth friendly and earnestly desire in the name, and according to the received express commands of his majesty, in regard he is willing to ratify the treaty of Elbing; their high and mighty lordships will be pleased first to satisfy his majesty therein, and sincerely to declare, that they will not give directly nor indirectly any assistance, neither to the duke of Brandenburg, nor to the city of Dantzick, nor also to any other his majesty's enemies, nor back them in their hostilities against his majesty; but, on the contrary, observe and regulate themselves according to the contents and disposition of the said treaty. All which sincere and round declaration the said resident is expecting with the first from their high and mighty lordships, to make report thereof afterwards to his majesty, to the end the said treaty may at last be brought to a final conclusion.

H. APPELBOOM.

Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland, to secretary Thurloe.

SIR,

THE bearer, Mr. Sandford, hath bin a long and faithfull servant to my brother Fleetwood, and in that and other services, meritted well from the publique. I understand by him, there is about 600 l. due to him from the state, which being as yett in noe way of satisfaction, hee intends an application to his highness, that hee may have some forfeited undisposed lands in Ireland in satisfaction thereof. Though it be unusuall with mee to recommend such applications, yett hee being one for whom I have a respect, and should be glad of an oportunity to shew him kindnesse, I doe particularly intreate your favourable countenance and assistance to him in the adresse, that he may have lands accordingly sett out unto him in satisfaction of the said debt. Assureing you, that the furtherance of his suite shall be esteemed a respect unto

Your affectionate friend and servant,

July 26, 1658.

H. CROMWELL.

Lord deputy Cromwell to secretary Thurloe.

SIR,

THE bearer, Sir Matthew Thomlinson, being desirous to goe for England upon his private occasions, I have thought fitt to give him the trouble of this letter, to the end hee might give you a fresh accompt of such publique affaires as you should be desirous to enquire after, he is able to say much having bin very active and industrious in the management of the imployment as a member of the council here. I may spare myself the labour of saying more, because whatsoever I can write may be more perticularly said, and better employed by him viva voce. I know not the perticular of his busines, neither have I cause

A.D. 1658. I cause to think him so unhappy, as to need either my recommendation, or your favour; but as I surcharge the one, so I doubt not but you will as easily offer the other. I remain,

Your very affectionate friend and faithfull servant,

July 26, 58.

H. CROMWELL.

Intelligence sent from Holland, by resident Downing.

Copenhagen, 6 August 1658. from ambassador Beuningen. [N. S.]

Vol. lx.
p. 242.

THE Swedish ambassadors persist in their demands, and leave no hopes, that they will abate any thing of 400,000 rixdollars, which they demand for the damages, which the Swedes have suffered in Guinea, having rejected the proposition that hath been made to be content, that a certain sum be named, but after the examination no more would be paid than what the damages amount unto. Here is great expectation of the fruit of the French ambassador's endeavours, to see if it may bring the king of Sweden to some moderation, they being more and more astonish'd at this uncertainty, since the army of Oldenslo doth not yet march; but also, that some troops return thither that were in Jutland going away are retreating toward Wonsuffel, and that they fetch contribution from Sampson, an isle depending on Zealand, and the equipage of the fleet is very forward at Stockholm. The ambassadors of Sweden say, that this week it will be ready to go to sea; and it is rumoured, that it will come before this town, and in the Sound; and the more because it came from general Wrangel. It will consist of forty ships, when those of Holstein, and other places, already at sea, shall be joined with it.

Paris 9th August, from ambassador Boreel.

Here is a great discontent in the kingdom, principally amongst those of the clergy, because the city of Dunkirk is delivered up to the English, which hath induced the court to cause an apology for the same to be printed. The great heat hath spoiled the corn through the kingdom, and the vines are in great danger. I have not had opportunity to require redress of the piracies, that are committed on all the sea provinces, under pretence of from Portugal, and that more than ever. From Rouen it is wrote, that the pirate Collard, convoying some ships of Caen, hath met a bark of Zealand, going from Nantes to Flushing with blue tiles, or slate, to cover houses, and keeping the master two days, he agreed with him for a thousand livres. I am told, that the said Collard doth distribute such a number of commissions of Portugall, of which there are so many in Bertagne, that the poor merchants going out are caught by French shallops, when they least think of it.

From St. Sebastian 28 July, 1658.

If order be not taken, every ship that sails will be taken. This week again there was taken two ships of Rotterdam, laden with sugar and comfitures; the one came from Madare, and the other from Portaport.

Ambassador Dorp from Wismar, 8 of August, 1658.

It's said, that the king of Sweden hath received letters from Stockholm, that the 16 men of war, which his majesty had formerly given order of the equipping of, were now ready to go out to sea. That 19 regiments of infantry, amounting to five thousand men, shall be distributed upon the nine ships, which are before Kiel, which are victualled for three months. The colonels and other officers are required upon pain of cashiering, to present to his majesty a true list of them. His said majesty intends to imbarck himself this evening, if the wind be fair, and the voyage is to Kiel, to cause the said regiments to be imbarcked; and I believe within 10 or 12 days he will be returned hither again. The king is not yet parted. I am told, that an express is come from Kiel, and, among other things, brings news, that yesterday morning a galiot put forth to sea from Kiel, with order to bring in thither all the unladen ships she met, to be employed for the service of his majesty.

Extract of the register of the resolutions of the lords states general of the United Provinces.

Martis, 6 August, 1658. [N. S.] A.D. 1658.

WAS once more produced in the assembly the letter of the lord protector of England, writ at Westminster the 25th of June last, and the petition therein inclosed, with the memorandum of the resident Downing, delivered by him on the 26th of July last; the said letter, petition, and memorandum, containing a complaint and grievance, how a certain ship, called the Postillion, and afterwards two ships more, the one named the Frederick, and the other Francis and John, all belonging to subjects and inhabitants of the said commonwealth of England, being put into the harbour of Bantam, and there having taken in their lading, in their return were taken by some ships of war, belonging to the East-India company of this state, which were riding before the said harbour of Bantam, and were carried to Batavia: that likewise another certain English ship called Bantam Isaac, was also taken upon the west coast of Sumatra, by the ships of the said East-India company; and also having heard upon the same the information of the said East-India company of this state, and ripely examined the deduction with the papers belonging thereunto, delivered by those of the said company, about the said subject, to the lord Huygens and others, their high and mighty lords commissioners; whereupon being debated, it is resolved, that in the name and behalf of their high and mighty lordships, as well by the lord ambassador Newport to the lord protector, as by the said lordships commissioners to the said resident Downing, very earnestly shall be complained about the unhandsome usage and proceedings of some of the English nation in the above-mentioned parts, and especially about the bitterness, envy, and malice, which the president Frederick Skinner residing in Bantam aforesaid, as well by his actions and behaviour, as by unsufferable and villainous expressions, which he hath shewn from time to time in his letters against those of the Netherland nations, and in specie also against the general and council in the said Indies; as also about the odious informations formerly given to the lord protector, how that a certain ship of the said East-India company of this state, by name the Orange Tree, about the cape of Bona Esperance, should have committed against an English ship, called the Society, barbarous cruelties and outrages, where on the contrary it doth now appear, and is made out by undeniable arguments and papers, that those of the said ship Orange, did behave and carry themselves no otherwise towards the said ship's society, about the said cape, than with all civility and courtesy, with serious representation of the ill effects, will thereupon come to arise by an unavoidable abalienation of the minds of both the nations; also with this very earnest request, that his highness will be pleased to recal the said Skinner from thence, and to supply his place with another fit person, which may have abilities and inclination to cultivate and increase all good amity and correspondence between both the nations. That likewise on the behalf as aforesaid, and in the manner aforesaid, there shall be declared to the said lord protector, and his said minister, that those of the said East-India company have declared the said three ships, the Postillion, the Frederick, and the Francis and John, to be good and lawful prize upon the ground, that the said town of Bantam must be looked upon as besieged by this state, and especially also for the evil council and assistance, yea for the hostile actions themselves, which the commanders and ships company of the said three ships at Bantam aforesaid, did use and commit against this nation; and the said ships of those of the said East-India company, which had block'd up the said place.

And although therefore be reason enough to use further and vigorous proceedings against the said commanders and ships company, yet their high and mighty lordships are contented to cause restitution to be made of the said three ships, and their lading according to the specifications and inventory taken thereof, to the said proprietors or interested; provided however that their high and mighty lordships may be assured, that on the side of England, in the like occasions, also in this manner, in regard of this state, and the inhabitants thereof, there shall be proceeded as well without as within Europe; and that to this end there be agreed on both sides the points formerly drawn up to this purpose, and comprehended in their high and mighty lordships resolution of the 23d of the last month.

And what concerneth the said fourth ship, it is found the said complaints to be abusively made concerning the same, and the said ship to have been civilly treated by those of the said company, and also civilly dismissed.

Extract of the register of the resolutions of their high and mighty lordships the states general of the United-Netherlands.

A.D. 1568.

Martis 6 August, 1658. [N. S.]

Vol. lx.
p. 232.

WAS once more produced to the assembly the proposition or presentation made by the lord ambassador of Portugal, to the lords their high and mighty lordships, and delivered by him in writing; whereupon being debated, it is thought fit, and understood, that by the said lords commissioners there shall be given in answer to the said lord ambassador, that their high and mighty lordships having considered of the said proposition, with the offers and presentations formerly made to this state, on the behalf of the crown of Portugal, do find that by this proposition there is not offered by a good deal so much, as was formerly offered; and that their high and mighty lordships could not receive the same without strangeness and excessive admiration, considering the serious declaration, and re-iterated protestations of the said lord ambassador, made in the name of the king and crown of Portugal, of his majesty's earnest desire and sole inclination for the obtaining and effecting of a peace with this state; and that therefore they will expect from the said lord ambassador a further overture and larger offer, whereby there may be perceived, that the inward meaning and intention of the said king and crown of Portugal doth agree with the said declaration and protestation: that their high and mighty lordships also besides this did observe, that the said proposition was only drawn in general terms; and that therefore they expect to see not only a further and larger, but also a more specific presentation; and the said lords commissioners are to make report of what shall pass upon this.

The marquis of Cognac to Stoupe.

Ostend, 6 August, 1658. [N. S.]

Vol. lx.
p. 236.

WE are still here in our old passages, and the army of Monsieur De Turenne in his, except what he hath sent to the siege of Graveling. In the mean time we have put this place in such a posture, as not to be assaulted by force, but with great difficulty; and the works, which the prince of Conde hath caused to be made here, are the best that ever were seen. They will be quite finished within a few days more. The like works are making at Neuport, which will be also well provided with all necessaries.

Borcel, the Dutch ambassador in France, to Ruysch.

Paris, 6 August, 1658. [N. S.]

Vol. lx.
p. 234.

THE business of the edict, and monopoly of the train-oil of whales, &c. doth proceed in all appearance. There is now also spoken of an edict and monopoly to be erected of the sugars; and if the first take effect, it is certain that the second will follow. Such great and powerful partners are interested in both, who under pretence of raising thereby for the king, some sums of money for the increasing his majesty's decreased finances, will be able to find their particular inestimable advantages; and it is said, that it will not rest by the two said species, if so be the first be not laid aside; upon which their high and mighty lordships, and the provinces, and the towns, which are most interested therein, will without doubt, take the same into consideration, and resolve upon such necessary representations and remedies, which are required in so considerable a business, of such dangerous consequence.

Here are no ears, that will hearken to oppose the same; and I am told, that they say now, that they have long enough had in consideration the interest of the commerce and navigation of foreigners; and that they will now take to heart above all the interest of their own nation.

Secretary Thurloe to H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland.

May it please your EXCELLENCY,

In the possession of the right honourable the earl of Shelburn.

HIS highness's constant residence at Hampton-court, and the sickness of my lady Elizabeth, which hath been, and is a great affliction to him, hath hindered the consideration of those matters, which my former letters mentioned, that very little or nothing hath hath been done therein for these 14 days, which makes (as I perceive) all men to stand at A.D. 1658 a gaze, and to doubt very much, what will be the issue; and I think they feare more than they need. I doubt the thinge most to be feared is, that some men, who oppose, and, I beleeve, will certainly disappoint such a settlement, which others can positively advise, doe not knowe what they would have; and it may be account it the best way to fix no where, but to fancye themselves in the condition of Israel in the wilderness, who knewe not overnight which way their journey was to lye the next morneing. And truly I should rejoyce to be in this condition, if these gentlemen had as sure a guide as the Israelites. But it is good for a man both to hope and to wayte for the salvation of God; and truly, my lord, had it not been for this hope, my spirit had been overwhelmed within me longe agoe; and I think I had given over in the playne feild: but hitherto the Lord hath helped, and, I trust, he will at last shew unto his highnesse a right way.

Wee are at that passe for money, that we are forced to goe a begginge to particular aldermen of London for 5 or 6000 l. to send to Dunkirke, and I feare we shall be denyed. I did suppose my lord Broghill had given your excellency an account of his going over into Ireland; otherwise I had not omitted to acquaint you, that he goes over a little to put his own affairs into some order, which he sayth were almost ruined by his long absence, intendinge to be backe againe by the parliament, where I verily beleeve he will doe his highnesse all the service he is able. The seige of Gravelinge proceeds very hopefully, whilst marshall Turenne keepes the feild with his army to attend the motion of the enemye, who begins to come forth againe with forces somewhat considerable. Its noe newes, that the kinge of Hungary is chosen emperor. France was in a great measure satisfied in all its pretensions before the election, viz. that he should not send any forces into Flaunders, upon pretence of assistinge Spayne, or the Stuarts, against England; but Sweden was in noe sort satisfied upon any of his demaunds, but is left to take his owne satisfaction by the sword, which I verily beleeve, he will endeavour to doe, if he can finde himselfe at leisure; but the conjunction of Brandenburg, Poland, and the emperor together, gives him great trouble. His enemyes have undertaken the siege of Thoon, but I doe not heare, that the Swede hath yet undertaken any thinge. Yesterday morning the Dutch ambassador arrived here: he comes with very sweet words in his mouth, but I beleeve that his highnesse, nor the concerned merchants, will be satisfied with words for their carriage in the East Indies, where they make nothinge of declareinge enmity against our men, takeinge their ships, and imprisoning their persons; and if very good satisfaction be not given here for those things, it will very much shake the peace between the two states. I am,

Your EXCELLENCY'S

Most humble, faithfull, and obedient servant,

Whitehall, 27 July, 1658.

JO. THURLOE.

General Fleetwood to H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland.

DEARE BROTHER,

I Have received yours, whearin you desire to understand the condicion of my lady Elizabeth, who was in a very hopefull condicion, till within the 3 or 4 dayes shee hath bine exceeding ill, and very much weakned, and brought low, but hoped shee is agayn upon the mending hand. Shee hath bine troubled with great paynes in hir bowells, and vapours in the heade. The truth is, its beleeved the physitians do not understand thoroughly hir case. Shee is now advised to tak Tunbridge waters. It hath bine a very sore and sharpe tryall; yet being a father's hand, I hope we shall have all of us advantage by it, for sure it is a voyce to all of the relations. I neade not tell you the great sence both their highnesses have of this dispensation. Ther is nothing wanting of care or skill, but the blessing of the lord must make all effectuall. Shee hath many prayers going for hir, a return of which will make the mercy double. Both their highnesses and family are at Hampton-court. His highnesse takes the waters, and they agree pritty well. We have little newes. The French are about Newport, though I think not closely beseiged. Wee have no resolution as to our great busynes concluded upon. It's now without much of disadvantage as to present affayrs, that the showld be so long deffered, but the Lord can soon make up that losse, by manifesting his presence, which it may be the life of all our desires and longings after, is the desire of

In the possession of the rt. hon. the earl of Shelburn.

Your most affectionate brother, and humble servant,

[July, 1658.]

C. FLEETWOOD.

Mr.

Mr. Downing to secretary Thurloc.

A.D. 1658. HONOURABLE SIR,

Vol. lx.
p. 193.

HEerein is inclosed another memoriall, which I gave in on monday last concerning some ships brought into these countreyes by Franders men of warre, with so much answer as is yet made, to witt, a resolution of the states of Holland, which is not yet come to the states general, nor given to me.

In the said memoriall is also another touch concerning the East Indy English ships taken coming out of Bantam; and heerein is also the answer of the states generall, wherein is the order and restitution of the ships and goods. Truly never in my life did I putt farther, nor yet was more putt to it in a business. De Witt and I were once going to fight in his house about them, so high wee were both, and so hard it was to do any thing in this kind, especially in the East-Indyes. The directors of the East-Indy company declared playnly, that it were much better to have a warre with England, then to restore these ships, and are returned to Amsterdam in great rage. Truly De Witt I was extremely at last obliged to in this business. I pray that such men of warre as come to the states, may have order to give me notice of their coming, that so I may by them have opportunity of writing to you, it will be very good to examine the complaints of the states general in this inclosed answer against him of Bantam, and that I may have a word from you to assure them, that his highnesse will take care therein, and that his subjects shall comport themselves with all fairenesse towards the Dutch in the East-Indies. The post will only lett me add, that I am,

HONOURABLE SIR,

Your most faithfull humble servant,

Hague, Aug. 9, 58. [N. S.]

G. DOWNING.

I did consider in the prosecuting this Bantam business the strictness of his highnesse's orders to me, and how singularly the city of London had of late shewed their affection to his highnesse.

*Mr. Downing to secretary Thurloc.*Vol. lx.
p. 192.

 them doe waite. I am very heartily glad, that you have bin pleased to take so much to heart that business concerning the maintenance of the ministers here, as that his highness and councill have bin pleased by your moving of them to allott 150 l. per ann. towards the maintenance of them; and I thinke the best way will be, that it should be quarterly paid at the Hague, either equally the one moiety to the one, and the other moiety to the other; or otherwise such a proportion to the one of them, and such a proportion to the other of them, as either his highness and councill shall thinke fitt; or as he that shal be the publick minister of England here shall thinke fitt, and that the money paid immediately to the ministers themselves and their acquaintance to be a sufficient discharge. I have lett Monsieur DeWitt know, that without fayle he shall have Hemflets pass by the next post, which hee and the French ambassador doe both take very kindly; and as for the pictures of his highness, truly you can hardly imagine how impatient the French ambassador and Prevering are for them; and truly I wish with all my heart that I had them; if his highness have not time to fitt for them both, I think it might doe well enough, if Cooper or some other very good hand did draw a copy of it, which is taken by his highness. I am,

HONOURABLE SIR,

Your most faithfull humble servant,

Hague, 9 August, 1658. [N. S.]

G. DOWNING.

Extract of the register of the resolutions of the high and mighty lords, the states general of the United-Provinces.

Veneris the 9th of August, 1658. [N. S.]Vol. lx.
p. 260.

WAS once more produced in the assembly, the project of the placarte, against the selling of ships and goods, which are taken by private men of warr, from neuters or friends, and brought into these countries; whereupon being debated, the said project or draught draught is resolved and agreed upon, and consequently the same shall be printed, also sent away to such places where it may belong, to be published in all places according, and in conformity of the order of this state; likewise the said placart shall be sent to the lord ambassador Nieuport, with order to use endeavours with the lord protector of England, to the end the like placart may be also put forth there; and the lord Downing shall be desired by the lord Huygens to second the endeavours, which are to be used by the said lord Nieuport with his; as also the lord ambassador of France shall be desired by the lord Van Gent, to use all good offices, to the end that the like placart formerly published in France, may receive its due effect, and executed according to its form and contents, to which end, and also to further the same, a letter shall be writ to the lord ambassador Boreell.

Agreeth with the said register.

SPRUYSEN.

VAN GANT.

To Nieuport the Dutch ambassador in England.

MY LORD,

Hague the 9th of August, 1658. [N. S.]

UPON the notification of the lord Maurits from Franckfort, that the emperor was resolved to send an envoy to their high and mighty lordships, and that he therefore desired to know, whether their high and mighty lordships should not think fit to give him leave to pass a compliment in their name upon the emperor; there is writ unto the said prince to let him know, that their high and mighty lordships were very well pleased with his advice and advertisement, and did thank him for it; and that he should by provision congratulate the emperor in the name of their high and mighty lordships; also upon that occasion declare unto him, that the resolution taken by the emperor of sending a minister hither was highly acceptable to their high and mighty lordships.

At the instance of the lord Appelboom, that their high and mighty lordships will first declare themselves, that they will not give any assistance to the enemies of the Swedes, namely to the house of Austria, duke of Brandenburg, and the city of Dantzick, in which case the king of Sweden will be very ready to ratify the Elbing treaty, upon which is desired the declaration of the provinces.

Resolution of the states general.

Veneris 9 August, 1658. [N. S.]

THE letter of the lord Maesdam, extraordinary ambassador from this state to the king of Sweden and Poland, written in Oldensloo the 24th of July last past, being propounded containing amongst other matters, that he the said lord ambassador, having seriously with all vigilancy laboured according to the commands of the said lords the states general, as well with the king of Sweden as with his ministers, to the end that the treaties concluded at Elbing on the 1st of September 1656, might be brought to effect; or at least that he might understand the intrinsic and final intention of the king concerning the premises; and having thereupon had particular many and long discourses with the count of Slipenbach, the conclusion on his the said count's side hath been, that his majesty would first expect, and look for, that it would please the said lords the states general to secure and to set him absolutely at rest, that they shall by no indirect ways countenance his enemies, namely the house of Austria, the elector of Brandenburg, as also those of Dantzick, in their hostilities; and that his high renowned majesty would then be ready to treat afterwards with the said lords the states general, or with their ministers in all conveniency, for the best benefit of the commerce, and for the profit of the inhabitants and subjects of the United Provinces. On deliberation it is thought good, and ordered, that it shall be written to the lords extraordinary ambassadors of this state to the high renowned king, that the said lords the states general do hold it wholly to be without reason, that the said desired promise or assurance shall be made or given on the side, or on the behalf of the state beforehand, and without receiving at the said time from the side, or on the behalf of Sweden, the desired assurance concerning the commerce and other matters, according to the said Elbing treaty; as also the nearer illucidations and interpretations drawn upon the same heretofore, but that there should be a negociation or transaction with uncertainty upon all the same in the afore-said manner, with an order and charge to demonstrate clearly to the high renowned king, the notorious injustice of the said desire; and to represent, and make him comprehend, that by the perfectionating of the fore-mentioned Elbing treaty, his said majesty will con-

A.D. 1685. secute, and have effectually the said desired security, with assurance, that after the conclusion of the known act of illucidation, and nearer interpretation upon the same treaty, the said lords the states general, will not directly nor indirectly countenance or strengthen his majesty's enemies in their hostilities against the same his majesty; but will in that particular, as also in all points, regulate and behave themselves, according to the contents and disposition of the said treaty, in such sort that thereby be not altered, nor in any part labefacted the clause in the said treaty comprehended, concerning the inclusion of the kings, republics, princes, and states there mentioned; and especially of the elector of Brandenburg, and the city of Dantzick, to whom shall be left the faculty, that they may accept of the said inclusion, provided they do declare themselves thereupon within the time of one month after that notification, of the signing the said act of illucidation, shall be made by the same, included by authorised ministers on both sides: the speedy procuring hereof is herewith specially commended and enjoined to the said lord ambassadors; and that under the benefit of the said assurance, the said lord ambassadors shall with all zeal and diligence insist, and urge it to the end, that his renowned majesty may give order, that the said illucidation and nearer interpretation may at last be finally agreed on; and that so the said Elbing treaty may be brought to effect, and a final perfection; or else that the said lords of the states may understand his said majesty's final intention in that particular, without any further neglect of time. And Monsieur Huygens and the other commissioners of affairs of Sweden, are desired to give that which is abovesaid, in answer to Monsieur Appelboom, resident of Sweden, upon his memorials exhibited to the said lords, the states general, on the 5th and 7th of this instant; and to communicate, and give likewise notice thereof to the here abiding ministers of the high renowned lord elector of Brandenburg, and of the before-mentioned city of Dantzick.

Nieuport, the Dutch ambassador in England, to the states general.

HIGH AND MIGHTY LORDS,

Vol. lx.
p. 262.

MY lords, upon the 2d instant in the night, being come into the river Thames, and perceiving that I, by reason of the calm, could not get to Gravesend with the ship of war till the next day at noon, I thought good to send away my son with the chalop to signify to the lord secretary of state, and the master of the ceremonies, my arrival here, and to deliver to the first a letter written to his lordship, to the end that it would not be judged unseemly, that I should return without publick reception to your high and mighty lordship's house, which I left furnished the last time I went from hence. My son being come to London, and understanding that the lord protector was residing at Hampton-court, and that the said lord secretary of state was not returned from his country-house two miles out of the city, rid presently thither, and meeting the said lord by the way, delivered my letter to him: his lordship told him, that the lord protector had notice sent him of my arrival the day before, and that he had given order for my reception, desiring that my said son would come into his coach and ride with him to Whitehall; where the said lord caused presently a barge of his highness to be made ready to be sent to me, with a gentleman called Marvell, who is employed in the dispatches for the Latin tongue. In the night, my son came and brought me to Gravesend a letter from the said lord secretary, dated in Whitehall the 24th of July, old stile; wherein he writ me word, that the said gentleman was expressly sent unto me, to salute me, and to speak with me concerning my reception, and that he would say nothing more concerning the same, that it would be most acceptable to his highness, as it could best express and declare the great esteem which he hath of your high and mighty lordships, and that he would not willingly omit any opportunity, to declare his good intention to the same, although it were but in point of ceremony; and desired therefore, that I would take such resolution concerning my coming to London, as I should judge would give the most content to your high and mighty lordships. The next day came the said gentleman before the sermon in the morning, to bid me welcome in the name of his highness the lord protector, and to present me a publick reception with barges and coaches, and also an entertainment, such as is usually given to the chiefest ambassadors. But understanding, that the lord protector and the whole court was in great sadness for the mortal distemper of the lady Claypole his highness's daughter; and considering that I must have stay'd some days out of this city, and afterwards have also lost time much time with the further ceremonies, I believed that it would be most acceptable to your lordships, that I hasten to dispatch their orders and commands given me by your high and mighty lordships resolution, and therefore I came to London with the said gentleman in the barge in the night season, where I was told that the lord protector would come from Hampton-court to sit in council the next day at Whitehall; but the said lord secretary told me upon the 6th inst. that his highness was

was so very much afflicted with the sickness of his said daughter, that he would not part A.D. 1658. from thence. Afterwards he undertook, with great expressions of good affection to the state of the United Netherlands, to further my business, that I should suddenly have audience of his highness, promising me to give me notice of the time and place, which his highness should appoint for it; and thereupon the said lord last night, by the master of the ceremonies, that notwithstanding the domestick inconvenience at Hampton-court, in regard of the said sickness of his highness's said daughter, he had thought fit to give me audience there at half after three of the clock this afternoon. Thereupon the master of the ceremonies came to conduct me about eleven of the clock: we went from hence with three coaches of six horses each to Hampton-court, where I was received at the second gate of the first court by the secretary of state, and brought into the lodging of the lord protector, who told me, that his own indisposition, and other domestick inconveniencies, had hindered him from coming to London, and to speak with me there. Having answered to this with due compliments, after that, he had caused the company to withdraw, and only with the lord president, Laurence, and the secretary of state, and the lord Strickland being stay'd by him, I did distinctly declare to him all that your high and mighty lordships had commanded me concerning his interposed mediation about the differences with Portugal; as also the marine treaty; as also the affairs in Eastland, for as much as concerneth the freedom of navigation and commerce upon and about the East sea, by reason of his highness's indisposition, I did not think fit to trouble him with a large discourse. To the first, he said, that he had offered his mediation with a sincere inclination, and that there is nothing, which he would more willingly see, than that your high and mighty lordships should receive reasonable and just satisfaction and reparation, but that he did not seek to be judge of it, but an admonisher and adviser to a good accommodation. To the second, he said, that he would order the former commissioners, or others, to resume the business further with me; and that the business should be so managed, that the differences being removed, the work shall be brought to a good conclusion.

And upon the last, having discoursed somewhat in general terms, said, he did not find himself well to speak further about it, but that he intended the next week to return to Whitehall, and that then he would be glad to hear what I should think fit to propose to him, in the name of your high and mighty lordships, concerning that or any other affair; where-with, taking my leave of him, he would conduct me to the door of the ante-chamber, from whence I was conducted by the said three lords through several galleries and chambers to the coaches.

Westminster, 9th of August, 1658. [N. S.]

W. NIEUPOORT.

Intelligence sent from Holland by resident Downing.

From the Dutch ambassador Isbrants. Berlin, 10 August, 1658. [N. S.]

THIS morning I arrived here with an intent to communicate to the elector what pass'd at Vol. 1x. the Swede's court, touching a treaty with Poland, and that I have sent to their high- p. 274- nesses plenipotentiary by mine of the 5th instant, wrote to the clerk of the assembly; and to entreat the elector to endeavour, by his authority in the Polish court, that consent be had for commissioners to meet at Braunsberg, to begin there the treaty with all good speed, chiefly on the hopes that I have from the Swede's court, that the sum of money demanded for the restitution of Prussia might be yet diminish'd; and that so at length a good peace might be obtained between the two crowns; but his electoral highness being not at home, I shall not have opportunity to speak thereof till to-morrow.

Wismar, 12 August, from ambassador Dorp.

The 9 ships of war of Sweden at Kiel are increased to 20; and it is believed, that they are those that were before Dantzick. The fleet expected at Stockholm, when ready, will amount to 40 vessels of war joined with the said 20, besides the 5000 men that shall there be ship'd, there will be 4000 horse ship'd upon merchant-ships, which are all along on the coast press'd by a galiot, whereof there are already a 1000 at Kiel. The king went hence a thursday last very late, the wind coming about unexpectedly; and it is thought he was next day at Kiel.

Dantzick, 7 August from commissioner Pels.

The Swedish ships being retired from the Pillaw and this road, have foundered in several parts upon these coasts, probably to land some men, whereof there is several news. The Swedes in Prussia, to the number of 900 or 1000, have made a bridge of boats 2 leagues above the Dirschaw, where they suddenly passed the Wissell, just over-against the point of Mantalm,

A.D. 1658. Mantalm, there lodged in a fort, and thence making of excursions, which cannot yet be hindered (the Dantzick forces being not strong enough) general Czarnesky goes towards the frontiers of Pomerania, and general Grudinsky towards Thorn, and the Brandenburg dragoons towards the dutchy of Prussia. No other news yet of the dyet of Poland.

St. Lucar in Spain, 7 July.

These 20 years not so great riches in the West-Indies as at present. It is thought, there are 30 or 40 millions ready for the king's part, besides what is ready for private persons.

Wislar, 15 August, from ambassador Dorp.

The king lately arrived at Kiel, and embarked 5 or 6000 men, whereunto some horse will be added; every horseman to carry only his arms, and herein is used all diligence imaginable.

Dantzick, 10 August, from commissioner Pels.

What is negotiated at the dyet of Poland is carried very close; no man there sitting or entering, but those who have commission and took the oath. The archbishop of Guesse went yesterday from Koningsberg thither; the prince Bogislau Radzevil is to follow; the deputies of this city arrived there the 6th of this instant; Lombres and Isbrants, ambassadors of France and Holland, being on their way from the Swedish court thither, their report is desired to be known, as well as the report of the deputies of Poland, who are at Vilna, with those of Muscovy, to treat there absolutely. The agreement between the Cossacks and Poland is reported to be made, which hinders the treaty of Muscovy, offering sixty thousand men because they enjoyed many privileges in the Ukraine. The army of Muscovy, which marched on the frontiers of Lithuania, is not of any importance, since that all their forces must be employed against the Tartars of Astracan, who make progress in Muscovy, and have there gained a great victory. The Turks are marching towards the frontiers of Poland, to enter into Hungary and Transylvania, there to revenge the victory that Rogotsky hath got upon them. The envoys of the electors of the Empire have had audience of the king at Warsaw; their propositions are principally to dissuade the attacking of Pomerania, to insist upon a suspension of arms between Poland and Sweden, and offer their mediation in the mean time for a peace. On the other side, there are complaints, that most of the Swedish troops are composed, or commanded, by the princes, officers, and subjects of the Empire, who have heretofore done so much mischief to the crown of Poland, which they may do again, if not recalled by a strict command. Overbec, the Brandenburg envoy, hath often private conferences at Warsaw. The Swedish troops are still above Dirfaw, fortifying themselves, and finishing their bridge over the Wisell.

Ambassador Isbrants from Berlin, 13 August, 1658.

According as I writ in my last, I was last Sunday after sermon at an audience with the elector, making known to him all which had passed at Wislar concerning the treaty of peace with Poland, and endeavouring to induce him to use his interest for the advancement of the assembly of Braunsberg, seeing there is no hopes to induce the king of Sweden to declare himself farther as to the treaties; and on the other side, his declaration lately made, though it did exceed the expectation of Poland, was, notwithstanding such as it could not be seen, after what manner and under what pretence the said assembly should be longer treated of, without incurring the supposition of not being inclined to peace; whereupon I find the elector inclined to advance the assembly of Braunsberg, at the court of Poland, as much as he can, but that he fears that the treaty of Muscovy is so far advanced, that it will be too late to speak of that assembly. In regard his letters say, that the king and the states of the kingdom, have given such instructions to the commissioners of Poland now at Vilna, that nothing is expected from thence but the conclusion of the said treaty; also, that it's resolved to end the dyet in a few days, in regard the court will retire from Warsaw, because of the plague. I thought fit, in regard of the importance of the affair, to send by an express, which the elector hath at my desire dispatch'd to the king and queen, and to the palatine of Posen, chief plenipotentiary in the treaties of Sweden, to advertize them of all particulars, and to press the said assembly, intending, when I know in what part the court will reside, to go thither with all speed to use my endeavours; and, I hope, in the mean time the elector will have employed his good offices. Saturday last arrived here an envoy from Muscovia, which had his publick audience of the elector yesterday. I shall endeavour with all speed, to give your lordships notice of what shall pass there.

Ambassador Beuningen from Copenhagen, 10 August, 1658.

Since my last, of the 6th instant, the ambassadors of Sweden have desisted from their instance to this crown, for equipping certain ships; so that the great difference, that retards the conclusion of the treaty, is again, as I understand, concerning the reparation of the damages which the Swedes have suffered in Guinea. It seems they attend here the success of the good offices which Mr. Terlon promised to imploy with his majesty of Sweden, in favour of this crown; but they are not yet effected. He is here obliged to consent to 400000 rixdollars, which are demanded; and the principal difficulty will consist in the security of the merchants of Hamburg, and the furnishing of a quarter of the said sum in ready money, and the other three are to be paid at 6 and 6 months. I am informed as from one of the Swedish ambassadors own mouth, that their masters hath obtained for his subjects from the protector of England, that they might traffick yearly with five ships, within the English colonies in the isles of Caribbee. I know not whether the English, in exchange thereof, will gain any advantage in the navigation of Sweden; however, in the Sound, it is observed this year, that more English ships have been fraught in the ports of Sweden than ever. The count of Oldenburg hath demanded to be included in the treaty of peace with the two kings of the North; but the Swedes refuse him. An envoy from the said count is arrived in this court, and will have a private audience this evening: his proposals or orders are not known. No other news of the Swedish fleet.

Another of 13, from the same.

The senators of the realm being assembled since my last, of the 10th, deliberate every day to make an end of the treaty with Sweden, without waiting for the French ambassador's endeavours with the king of Sweden; for the business of Guinea, they have agreed to pay 400,000 rixdollars, for which the senators offer to be obliged; but that contents not the ambassadors of Sweden, who also demand an act of amnesty. The man of war, which the admiralty sent by one of your highness's plenipotentiaries to transport me home, arrived here yesterday, upon which I hope to go on board before the end of this week.

Frankfort, 11 August, from prince Maurice of Nassau.

Upon receipt of your highness's plenipotentiary's letter of 31 past, I demanded audience of the emperor, and in your high mightinesses name did compliment him, and assured him, that your high mightinesses should be glad to receive his extraordinary envoy appointed to be sent speedily, which I perceived was very acceptable to his imperial majesty, who commanded me to salute your high mightinesses in his name, to assure you of his affection, and that he desires to live in good amity and correspondence with your high mightinesses. Since I understand that it will be taken notice how the envoy is received by your high mightinesses, and accordingly, if it be liked, there will be sent after an ambassador from his imperial majesty.

The information of Edward Cockhill, servant to Sir George Savil of Nottinghamshire, one of the grooms of the stable, taken by Samuel Morland, the 30th of July, 1658.

THE informant saith, that he hath been a servant to Sir George Savil and his father about 21 years, and the occasion of his leaving him now, is no other than upon the account of his discovering what he knows of that family's being engaged in the insurrection in the year 1654, which is as follows: Vol. 1x.
p. 268.

Upon that thursday night, which was the time intended for the insurrection in Nottinghamshire and those parts, one captain cooper of Thurgerton, who was formerly a captain in the king's army, and who had frequented Sir George Savil's house, at least half a year before that time, brought a cart-load of arms to a certain place between Sir George Savil's house and the inn which is called New-inn, about half a quarter of a mile distant from the said Sir George Savil's house; the which arms the said captain Cooper conveyed away the next morning, when he found the business did not take effect.

Moreover the said informant saith, that as near as he can remember, there were that very night in Sir George Savil's stables at least 27 or 28 horses, (some whereof were brought in a month, some a fortnight, some a week, and about that very night) besides 7 or 8 of Sir George Savil's or his lady's horses; all which, being about 36 in number, were by the orders of Sir George Savil's steward and his other gentlemen, ready shod and fitted with saddles, bridles, and other accoutrements for service; among which there were six new

A.D. 1658. troopers saddles and bridles, bought about a month before, of one Mr. Hawkins of Nottingham, by Sir George Savil's steward; and about the same time, several cases of pistols and holsters were brought by some of Sir George Savil's servants at London, with swords and other pieces of armour.

About 10 of the clock at night, the said informant with another of the grooms, viz. Robert Merrington (who lives now with Sir Henry Sydley of Licesstershire) and the huntsman, viz. Thomas Elvis, and a fourth which was a footman, received a very strict charge from Sir George Savil's steward, and other of his gentlemen, by no means to go to bed that night, but to sit up in the stable, and to be ready at a quarter of an hour's warning to clap on all the saddles upon all the 37 horses; for which end they were commanded to hang every saddle and bridle behind the horse it belonged to, for the better expedition.

Of these horses the said informant saith, one Mr. Benisman of Bilstrop, about two miles off Sir George Savil's house, sent in 4 horses; on the thursday night Mrs. Holder of Wheately in Nottinghamshire sent in two by her nephew the wednesday before; Mr. Key of Doncaster about 3 or 4 days before, brought in one horse himself; Mr. Wilkins of Pomfret sent in two about a month before.

The design, for which these horses were made ready, was, (saith the said informant) to join with the other horses, that were at the abovesaid New-inn, that came out of Yorkshire, Lincolnshire, and other places, (to the number of about 200) that very night, and so to have marched away to York with all expedition, which was (as the informant saith he heard from divers) to have been surrendred to them.

Moreover the said informant saith, that the steward, viz. Mr. Sherbourn called the said informant to him, and told him that he must be ready to go with them that night; the said informant asking him, whether he must go? the said steward told him, about 40 miles. The said informant making him answer, that he was not well, and could not conveniently go, the said steward bid him be sure, that he should not speak a word to any living body, what he, the said steward, had then either asked or told him; because (saith the steward) I am warned by all the gentlemen of Sir George Savil's house, to be sure not to tell Edward Cockhill (the said informant) any thing of their said design; for as much as they think him disaffected to their cause.

Besides, the said informant saith, that at the same time, when the said steward called him up into his chamber, there was there in the said steward's chamber one Mr. Key of Doncaster (who had brought in a horse into Sir George Savil's stable a little before) charging his pistols.

Further the said informant saith, that the same thursday night between 10 and 11, Mr. Sherbourn the steward sent him the said informant, into the house to enquire for Mr. Davison, one of Sir George Savil's gentlemen, and to know of him when they must go; but Mr. Davison was then gone to the inn to the rest of the company, who received intelligence about eleven of the clock out of Yorkshire, that the design was broken for that time; whereupon, a while after the said Mr. Davison came back to Sir George Savil's house; and about one in the morning, orders were given to the said informant and the other groom, with the huntsman and the footman abovesaid, that they should go all to bed, and lock up the doors, and put some of the horses out into the grounds about the house, and to set all the saddles and bridles by, some here, some there, and not to let them hang in the order they were before hung up.

Further the said informant saith, that he asking Thomas Elvis the huntsman next morning, what was the reason that there were so great preparations over night, and all upon a sudden dashed, and come to nothing; the said Thomas Elvis made him answer, that he knew the reason of it; and upon condition, he the said informant would keep his counsel, he would tell him something, which he accordingly did; namely, that those in Yorkshire, who should have risen on thursday night, could not be ready before sunday night; and that upon sunday night there would be as great preparations at Sir George Savil's house, and the New-inn as before, to rise and go to meet them.

Further the said informant saith, that Mr. Sherbourn charged them the morrow after that thursday night, that if any soldiers or others should haply ask of him, what all those horses in the stables and grounds were appointed for, he should make them answer, that they were bought for cart horses.

Further the said informant saith, that about half a year after, he being at the said new inn, the landlady of the house and her daughters told him, that about a fortnight before that thursday abovesaid, there came to their house 3 gentlemen, which they did verily believe were, Charles Stuart, the duke of York, and the duke of Gloucester, or the duke of Buckingham; and that Charles Stuart went in the habit of a groom to the other, the which said gentlemen had sack and claret brought from Sir George Savil's house to the inn, by John Child, one of the grooms of the chamber.

Further

Further he saith, that the said landlady told him about a month since, that Sir George Savil had dealt so hardly with them about the assessments, that she could find in her heart to discover all the rogueries, that were done that thursday night (and half a year before) at which time should she, the gentlemen that were at their house, seeing their design frustrated, gave her and her daughters several cases of pistols to hide in the ground, which pistols said she are yet as good as ever they were, tho' their holsters be rotten.

Lastly the said informant saith, that in case it be so ordered, he will be a guide to any officers, that shall be sent by his highness to discover and examine all the abovesaid particulars. In witness to the truth whereof he hath set his hand the day and year abovesaid.

EDWARD COCKHIL.

Further the said informant saith, that William Wilson a sawyer, John Blayton a carpenter, and Robert Moore a carpenter, told him, that as they were removing some work about the house, they saw under a false floor a great heap of pistols and other arms, and some others behind the back of a chimney in Sir George Savil's house.

Lockhart to secretary Thurloe.

Dunkirk, August 10. St. No. 1658.

May it please your LORDSHIPP,

I Have closed accounts with Mr. De la Valle the last month, and find that the profits of the Vol. lx. harbour, including that they call droit de gouverneur, amounteth to no more then 8000P. 276. livers. Their is some odd money, but that goeth to the defraying of the charges of the collection of it. I must say he hath been very diligent, and is very desyrous to give your lordshipp, or whom you shall think fitt to appoint, a full and exact informatione of all things relateinge to the customes heare. I have spoake to him concerning the form of them, and the advancing of money upon that account. After he hath spoake with some of his friends at London, he hath promised me his answere, onely he and I doe differ exceedingly touching the tyme; for he would (if he and his partners farme at all) to have a lease for 3 years, and I think one yeare sufficient; my reasons for one yeare are, trade will not begine to fall in its course for some considerable tyme; and in the present confusion of things, their will need so many officers, who must all be maintained upon falleries, as they will eat up a great part of the profit, besydes their being strangers to the people, and customes heare, a great many things will escape them; whereas if farmers undertooke them, they are usually more diligent and active for their own interests, then those employ'd upon salary are, they will cleare all the chanells, that are now under many obstructions, and will stretch all the prices to the greater hight, and the odium of all will not ly upon his highness and the government, but upon the particular undertakers; and the people once brought into custome to pay, they may be continued at those rates, without noyse or grudging. My reason against the farming of them above one year is, that if it please God to bless us, the vallew of them will much exceed what they are now worth; and then the collectione of them will not be attended with the difficulties forementioned. I have given your lordshipp all this trouble, to the end, that if you be moved in any such thing, you may know all that I can informe in that businesse, touching which I shall say no more; but if they will come up to fifteen thousand pistolls, and advance five of them, I think your lordshipp may venture upon it, as an advantageous bargaine; and am likewise of opinion, it will not be fit to bate them much of that. I send your lordshipp hearwith an account of the weights and ballance in English, and the tariff I must send in Dutch, their being no English and Dutch dictionary heare, without which it is impossible to translate these hard words. De la Valle hath promised to gett the tariff Englished at London, and will be able to cleare the state of that whole businesse more distinctly, then it can be done by,

May it please your LORDSHIPP,

Your most humble and obedient servant,

WILL. LOCKHART.

A letter of intelligence.

A.D. 1658.

SIR,

Vol. lx.
p. 269.

SINCE me last letter, of the 3d, we have here notice, that the French have had an attempt or dessein for to passe with force the river between Ostend and Plassendale, but beaten back after some skirmish; whereout all the generalls did judge they had some intention to besiege Ostend and much more, because the grandees here have bin informed the French hath made a conjunction of all their forces, indubitabel to undertake some important busines; wherefore they are in feare, that one or another place of consideration and consequence should be assaulted or besieged: wherefore here hath been a councill of warre, or a meeting of all the grandees hereabout (viz. don John, the prince of Conde, the marquese of Caracena, don Estenan de Gamarra, and others) with communication of the states here meeted now also, where hath bin done a proposition (after a prolix relation of the doings and motives of their enemies, of their conjunctions with all their forces, and several points dependinge thereof) how to gouverne the present affairs of warre: and because (after due examination of their forces) they did find themselves unable to appeare into the field, they have taken the following conclusion; first, that all places, the wich are in danger to be besieged, should be diligently (and in all possible heast) provided of all necessities of provisions of warre, and all kind of victuals; and that before all buisenis Ostend must be provided, for wich they have the greatest feare; wherefore is send thither (except and besides the former provisions lately send thither) great store of all kind of victualls, and there above to place or institute within the said towne of Ostend the great magazin, consisting in a great quantity of all kind of necessary provisions, for the preparation or equipage of ships at sea, the wich hath bin heretofore at Dunkirk; also are parted from hence yesterday all the officers of the king of Spain (viz. proviadors, viadors, et condedors) dependeing of the said magazin, under the conduict and command of don Joseph de Castillo, great marshall and proviador-generall, being the prince of Conde, againe within the said towne of Ostend, and also all the other grandees in the places mentioned heretofore. Secondly, they have found goods and concluded (after great deliberation) to make open all the fasses or fluses (being things or instruments wherewith they have the command of the water) for to make an inundation, and to put all the country round about Nieupoort, Ostend, Damme, and this city under (or into the) water; which resolution and conclusion they have put also into execution drowning also about 240000 akers of the best meadow ground as that are in Europe (makinge therewith the catel very cheape, and the butter very deare) thinking by that way to preserve Neiupoort, Ostend, Damme, and there city from a siege. Thirdly, to ordaine and order all soldiers, horse and foote, stragling up and down the countrey, to come againe into their old companies or regiments within 8 days, or else to be hanged for it.

Fourthly, to disband all the new risen forces, and to defend their selves with the water, in manner aforesaid.

And unto this I say, that as soone as the third point was put into execution, the fourth did follow of it selfe; because all the new risen forces consisted out of straglers, and as soone the straglers came into their old companies, the new risen forces are come to nothing. The solution and conclusion aforesaid was communicated unto me not above 3 houres after my last letter of the 3d was parted; and you should have hath it, with the same letter, if we hath not met that inconveniens, that we could finde no place (for that time) where to communicate it.

Here hath runned some noice 3 or 4 days, that the French (after the inundation about Nieupoort, Ostend, Damme, and this city) are marched toward Graveling, and made first a blockade before the said towne, the wich was not accepted to be true, because we gott dayly great informations the French did appeare with great bodies of horses beyond the inundated grounds (like heretofore) about Dixmuyde, Ypres, and every where into that parte: but since (viz. the night betweene the 3d and the 4th) is come here certain newes unto the court, that the French and English (after the aforesaid inundations) are marched, with the greatest part of their army, towards Graveling, and surrounded, and surely besieged that towne; neverthelesse keeping still a body of cavallerie of about 6000 horses, betweene Dixmuyde and Ypres, and thereabout beyond the drowned meadows, for to observe the motions and doings of the Spanish and Condeeer. Upon which changeing of affairs, here is called againe a meeting of all the generalls for to keep a counsel of warre, and to consider the present changeing of affaires, hoping to give unto you with the next a relation of their deliberations and conclusions.

Having written this farre, I receive informations, that the prime counsel of warre have hath two meetings; and there was made the first proposition (because the enemy hath surely besieged Graveling, and drawed the most part of their forces thither) consisting therein, that the countrey ought to be made dry againe about these parts, for to give a little consolation unto the pouer countreyemen, and their cattel; whereof most part dyes for want of feed:
and

and then to draw out all the garrisons, and to make againe a body of an army. But this A.D. 1658. proposition was quickley contradicted, because the newes came, that La Ferté hath besieged Graveling; but nevertheless the marshall de Turenne did keepe still and constantly a great and considerable army about Dixmuyde, being sufficient for to undertake a siege: wherefore they have taken untill now no conclusion at all, but found good first (and in the mean time) to enquire exactly, precisely, and narrowly, of the forces of the said Turenne, and then to take all considerations into deliberation. Yesterday came here some letters to the court (dated within the army of La Ferté before Graveling the 3d of this month) saying, that the same day the approaches before Graveling were not yet opened; and that within the same towne (without any doubt) was great want of all necessary provisions, being counted (here at the court) Graveling sure to be lost. As soone they doe take any other counsel or conclusions, I will not fail to make it knowne unto you, remaining,

SIR,

Your humble, and faithful servant,

Bridges, 10 August, 1658. [N. S.]

JERONIMUS VON ABSBACH.

I perceive they have not so good intelligence within the army of Turenne, like they have within the army of La Ferté: the heretofore said letter of the 3d out of the said army tells . . . that he hath informations out of the towne, from some soldiers the which came out of the said towne, that there is a great want of all necessary provisions, giving therefore advertance unto them of the apparent loss of that towne. Vale.

Lockhart to secretary Thurloc.

Dunkerke, August 10. St. No. 1658.

May it please your LORDSHIPP,

MY last promised, that captaine De la Valle should come away next morning with an account of the customes. He made up his accounts with me that evening, and in the night mett with a sad providence; his wyfe half gone with chylde fell into labour, and continued so for above 36 houres before she was brought to bedd, since which tyme she is in the extremity of danger; and the poore man is so concerned, as I cannot have the cruelty to command him away, till he seeth how it shall please God to dispose of her. All the profits of the harbor this last month did amount to no more than 8000 guilders. When trade encreaseth, it will in all probabilities much exceed what it now is. The tariff and particular rates, by which it is lifted, is in Mr. DeVall's hands for your lordshipp's perusal; as also some overtures for hightning the customes upon all commodities that shall be brought here by Hollanders, or any other strangers.

The cardinall hath sent twyce to me this weeke, desyring to speak with me at Calais; and offering, if I so desyre it, to meet me at any convenient place, midd way betwixt this place and Calais. I shall not give him that trouble, but so soone as I have settled some things here, and sent away the five hundred recruits to the army, I shall waite upon his eminence at Calais. He beleevs, that my delay of seing him proceeds from some pett I have taken, because of the harsh receptione my last addreses to him mett with. I doe not intend to undeceive him, knowing that such apprehensions will rather advantage then prejudice businesse. I had yesterday a meeting with the jesuits, capuchins, and recollects of this place, when the oath I administered to the soldiers and inhabitants was debated. Their maine exceptione was against that part of it, that obligeth them to the defence of this place, and towne of Dunkerke. Upon a serious consideration of what they offered, I think it is just to except their being oblig'd to carry arms, they not being of a profession, that renders them capable of actions of that nature. They did in the next place scruple at their being oblig'd to reveale and discover all plotts, conspiracies, and treacheries, that should come to their knowledge; they urged their oath of secrecie as to all they shall come to the knowledge of by confession. I held forth to them, that their ingadgements that way could have no consideration with us; for if they stayed here, they must subject themselves to that, from which no subject by our law could be exempted; and urged, that the concealing of treason, and acting in it, was one and the same thing. They have taken tyme to consult their superiors in this point, and so hath given tyme to know his highnesse's pleasure concerning the exemption from bearing armes. This day there is a vessell come with armes, both for the foot and horse. It comes seasonably, for I should not else have been able to have armed the 500 recruits I send to the army. I am necessitated to build several stone redoubts in the counterscarp to preserve it

A.D. 1658. from being surprysed. There is such extraordinary need of them, as I dare not delay the undertaking that work any longer, though I know not where to gett money for carying of it on. I begg the knowledge of his highnesse's pleasure concerning the filling of the vacancies in the army. Sicknesse and mortality doth increase heere; the Lord, if it be his holy will, putt a stopp to it. Graveling is not lyke to hold owt so long, but that there will be tyme left for the army's undertaking some new action. It's lyke I shall know what their instructions are when I see his eminence, and then your lordshipp may expect an account of,

May it please your LORDSHIPP,

Your LORDSHIPP's most humble,

faithfull and obedient servant,

WILL. LOCKHART.

General Mountagu to secretary Thurloc.

MY LORD,

Vol. lx.
p. 356.

I Am extraordinarily oblidge to you for your friendly letters, particularly that of the 9th instant by the messenger, and for all I returne you my most heartye and humble thanks. The Dutch shippes I sett free immediately upon the receipt of your letter. Monsieur Sanguien I have sent in the Bridgewater to Calais yesterday morning. Mr. Haines the engineer I sent for Dunkerke to-day about noone; and at this instant have sent your messenger thither in another vessel. Yesterday Sir Richard Stayner came hither to mee from my lord Lockhart, and told mee, my lord Lockhart wished him to informe mee, that the land soldiers intended for Flanders out of Biscay, are landed at Naples; and intended to be marched into Flanders by land. By the commissioners of the Admiralty's letters I finde they are in great perplexity for want of monye, as I doubt other matters also are; yet that must be had, and your necessary affaires carried on; and I make bold to mind you of one, that is in your squadron of shippes in the streights, which if you keepe out, it is necessarye to supplye them with stores, and to change some of them, and send fresh in their roomes. I earnestly beg you would seriously provide for it in tyme; the distance is soe greate to them, and the prejudice soe intollerable, if reliefe come not from England, that I hope you will doe as I request you; and truly I give you an account of a necessitye to change some of them, in respect to the service, which I feare hath been sorely prejudiced by them; and the fleet by that means hindered from beinge before Cales, when the Spanish fleet went out; but it concernes persons, that I had rather should be concealed from my mouth or person; and soe the thinge be done, it will be well enough. It were a good thinge in my opinion, if some paines were taken in consideringe a designe for the meeting with the Spanish fleet upon their returne home. It is generally said, that the Spaniard is ruined, if they miscarrie, both for want of money and ships, they beinge the most they have in Spaine. Not further to give you needles trouble, I subscribe most hartily and affectionately,

MY LORD,

Your most faithfull and oblidge humble servant,

E. MOUNTAGU.

My lord, I understand Sir John Boyes is prisoner upon the account of Cavalliers in Dover-castle; his dwellinge is not far hence, and he was very civile to mee last yeare in divers visites; and his friends also sollicite mee, to see if his libertye may be obtained; wherefore I take the boldness to represent it to you; and if it be granted, I should be glad, but without any great concernment if it should be determined otherwise, or seeme difficult to his highnesse to grant.

Lord Deputy Cromwell to the protector.

May it please your HIGHNESSE,

Vol. lx.
p. 273.

THE bearer collonel Axtel, makes the more haste from hence, to the end hee may receive your highnesse's pleasure in order to some forraigne service, which he tells me your highnesse was pleased to have some discourse with him about, before he came hither. I must must send this testimony along with him, that during his abode heere, his carriage hath bin A.D. 1658. very faire, and hath often expressed himself with much freenes to bee, not only well satisfied with the government, but ready (if need require) to mayntaine with whatsoever is deare to him. If your highnesse have any thoughts of foreigne employments for him, indeed I think he may be very useful.

I take leave humbly to recommend him to your highnesse's favour, and remayne

Your HIGHNESSE

Most obedient son,

July 31. 1658.

H. CROMWELL.

A letter of intelligence from Blank Marshall.

SIR,

Bruges,

111, this 12 August, ft. no. 1658.

I Have in my last given you a full account of your affayres heer; so that its now as then, Vol. 1x. only I p e r c e i v e t h a t a l l t h e S p a n i p. 296.
f h f o r c e s a r d r a w i n g t o g e t h e 74 33 23 56 70 11 21 74 4 71 14 72 5 86 36 53 27 80 57 28 22 77 34 18
r: f o r c e s a d d e d t h e m. w 69: but not any 24 58 70 12 19 75 1 15 20 16 unto 78 34 20 48. They 87 i l b e e a t l e a f t e i g t t h o u f a n d o 38 46 6 21 22 2 79 46 18 3 76 80 19 39 29 34 77 78 32 59 82 73 57 3 53
f t h e m, and t h e y c a n n o t m a r c h o 17 32 60 29 73 20 79 34 21 94 13 2 54 55 56 79 48 3 69 11 35 three 57
f f o o t. T h e y f p e a k e m u c h f o r
25 26 58 29 80 77 31 22 95 76 63 18 3 40 19 49 83 10 32 of 23 60 71
c e s c o m i n g f r o m G e r m a n y, 11 25 73 12 56 50 35 54 30 24 71 57 51 27 21 72 48 3 55 96, but non yet c o m. D. John w i l l l e a v t h i s place, t h e y f a 12 58 49 105 88 36 46 47 44 19 4 81 77 34 37 76, as 78 31 18 96 74 5
y, w i t h i n a d a y t w o. Ch. Stew. i s r e m a 97, 89 38 79 32 39 52 4 14 2 94 or 80 86 59. 104 35 73 to 69 11 48 3
i n e t y m e a t H o g e n f t r a t b e t 36 53 19 for a 78 95 49 20 4 79 33 60 29 21 34 74 80 70 4 77 7 22 77 w e e n e A n t w e r p e a n d B r e d a. D. of Y. an 86 18 19 54 20 5 52 79 31 87 21 71 64 1 53 17 8 72 22 14 2. 106 3 54
d the D. of Glouc. is i n N e w p o r t, P. of Condei n O f t e n 15 123 35 76 36 55 52 18 87 61 56 69 80, 131 37 53 57 73 77 19 54 d, Mr. P r e f t o n l y e t h t h o u f a 15, one 48 62 70 20 74 78 58 55 47 96 20 79 31 with a 77 33 59 84 75 3 n d b o o r s P l a f f a n d a l l: h a l f e 52 16 8 59 60 70 76 at 62 44 3 73 74 4 53 17 4 45 46: it 34 9 47 26 21
w a y b e t w i x t O f t e n d: F r e 89 1 94 6 22 78 86 36 90 79 this and 60 73 80 18 54 14: if the 23 71 19 n c e s h a l f e b l 55 13 20 74 pleased they might gained that, and then this 31 3 44 23 21 7 45
o c k e d u p; O f t e n d N e w p o 56 11 41 22 14 85 64; as likewise 60 67 77 18 55 15 and 52 18 88 61 60 r t: D. York.
69 7°: if you think fit I shall goe with 106. Sir, I intreat you to put mee in that condition, that I may be able to 48 58 59 81 19 2 73 31 18 19 49 59 60 82 20 s; f o o t.
74; for I cannot goe on 24 36 57. Pray, Sir, when you think fitt to honor mee with your comands, direct it here; so craving pardon for this trouble, I rest,

SIR,

Your most obedient and humble servant,

JO. HARRISON.

Lockhart

Lockhart to secretary Thurloc.

A.D. 1658. May it please your LORDSHIP,

Vol. lx.
P. 297.

I Have been soe much importuned by his eminence to give him a visitt at Calais, as I am resolved to answer his desyers (God willing) to-morrow. I intend to see Mr. La Ferté, and that seege as I passe. This afternoon I had a letter from Mr. Turenne, wherein he desyers, that I may spare him my owne regiment, and send him 12000 weight of powther, match, and ball conforme; and gives his reasons for these demands, that the enemy prepares for some notable attempt, that their motion will be upon the suddain. I have by my answer endeavoured to satisfie him, that while things are in such a posture, I dare not expose this place to hazard, either by a further diminishing of the garrison, or by emptying of the magazins of that small quantity of ammunition that is in them. I sent him 500 men two dayes agoe, which is all I could spare; and indeed it is so, for sicknesse hath so diminished our numbers as to men fitt for present dewty, as I have very greatt need of the recruitts intended for this place. I was forced to keep the recruitts for the field regiments three dayes for want of arms. I sent to Calais for 500, and tho' it concerned their own service, they made no greatt haste to send them; and when they came this morning, they brought but 300, with a compliment for the other two. Our own arms came 3 dayes before them, only the collars of bandeliers were forgott; so that I must desyer your lordshipp to order the officers of the ordinance to send over 1000 collars of bandeliers, otherwise the 1000 musquets sent will not be very usefull; and if your lordshipp doe not cause hasten over the 1000 bedds with coverletts, I doe not know what shall become of us; for I can assure your lordshipp, there is not a soldier either at Fort-Oliver or Mardike, that hath a bedd; and above a third part of the soldiers heare have none. At my returne from Calais I shall appoint a tyme for administring the oath to such of the burgers, as were absent at the first ministring. If Peeter de Mincks doe not appeare to take his oath, I shall then be the more free to proceed the confiscation of his ship. I have got 400 crowns more of that money of Cesi's, which is in Mr. Wildegoe's hand; and am promised bills for the rest of it within this weeke. It had been impossible for me to have subsisted heare without the credit of that money; the whole sume was three score thousand livers, whereof their was payed by his highnesse's order 18300 and odd livers to Mr. Westrow's children. Poore Mr. Augier who was starving had 2400 livers, for which I have his noatt to repay it, if it be not allowed; so that their was remaining towards 39000 livers, of which I tooke up 22000 for the cardinal at the rendition of this place, and shall draw bills for the rest; but least I may be sued by the interestes for my soe doing, I must entreat an order from his highnesse and councill, empowering me to dispose of the money for the use of this garrison. Mr. De la Valle, now his wyfe begins to recover, intends to part from hence to-morrow. I have writt my humble opinione concerning the customes by him, and have sent a copy of what the revenues of the harbor arryseth out of. One of the papers is in English, but the tarriff is in Dutch, their being no dictionary to translate it. Mr. De la Valle knoweth one at London, who is able to render it in English. I have spoke with Mr. De la Valle, and hath offered him, if any merchants in London will undertake to lend for the fortifications of this place 5000l. to give them security upon howses belonging to those who have deserted the towne, to double the valew of the money, and to pay them out of their rents 8 per cent. yearly, for the space of two years; after the expyryng whereof, if the howses be not redeemed by paying the money, they shall become their owne inheritance. I am able to make this good, if his highnesse doe approve of it; and methinks it's hard, if their be not so much of a publick spirit amongst the citizens, as will advance so inconsiderable a sum upon such advantagious terms. I beginn to be so pincht with want of money, as I dare not make knownen my straits, least yow should think I am jealous your lordshipp doth not mynd us, of which I am so little guilty, as were it not for my confidence of the contrair, I should be under greatt discouragement. I have made captaine Grey one of the under town-majors: he speaks both Dutch and French, and is prittie active. If his highnesse intend the town-major's place to any person of merritt, it will not be now so absolutly necessary, that he speake Dutch. I shall add no more to this trouble, save that his highnesse's pleasure concerning the vacancies is exceedingly longed for by,

My LORD,

Your LORDSHIP'S

Most humble and faithfull obedient servant,

Dunkirque, August $\frac{2}{11}$ 1658.

WILL. LOCKHART.

Mr.

Mr. S. Disbrowe, one of the council of Scotland, to secretary Thurloe.

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

MR. Robert Hodges being apoynted by his highnes councill here at theyr first coming into Scotland, to bee sollicitor generall for his highnes in all causes relating to his highnes revenue in that nation, in which imployment hee yet continueth; and intending to make application humbly to beg his highnes graunt for establishing him therein, I could doe noe lesse then give him my testimony, having had occasion to know his care and labor in his highnes service before all courts here, wherein he hath acquitted himselfe with much honesty and ability, and is very industrious in whatsoever his highnes is concerned. His salary for himselfe and clarke is one hundred and fifty pounds.

This place of sollicitor is absolutely nefesary, notwithstanding there bee an advocat apoynted; and there was allwayes one in this imployment. I humbly beg pardon for this trouble, and had not the meritt of this gentleman required it, you should not have had it from

Your most humble and faithfull servant,

Edinberg, 2 August, 58.

SA. DISBROWE.

A.D. 1658.

Vol. lx.
p. 294.

Extract of the register of the resolutions of the states general, thursday the 13th of August, 1658. [N. S.]

THE sieur Huygens, and other deputies of their lordships, for the conference with the ambassador of Portugal, have presented to the assembly, and caused to be read, a memorial of the said ambassador, which he had delivered unto them, in answer of the resolution of the 6th instant, concerning the satisfaction, which the king and crown of Portugal should give to this state; consideration whereof being had, it hath been thought fit and resolved, that their lordships do not doubt, but that he hath in his hands the proposition, which Tenhove and DeWitt have lately made in their names in Portugall; and if he have them not, they will forthwith give him a copy thereof; and adding expresly, that their lordships having seen and examined that which hath been offered, do find, that the proffers made upon the said demands have been far greater (with which notwithstanding their lordships could not receive the least satisfaction, as without doubt he will know) than what he makes by this memorial; and that for that cause their said lordships have by the said resolution of the 6th instant demanded a more ample presentation and overture; but finding no satisfaction thereto, they do yet require him seriously, that he will make a peace by an offer of satisfaction; that the sincere intention of the king his master is conformable to the iterated protestations and declarations, which he hath caused to be made of his desire to arrive at a peace with this state; and that their lordships having observed, that his proposition was couched in general terms, they had demanded not only a more ample, but a more particular presentation, which for the said reasons their lordships do yet attend, and that the said deputies may report heereof to their lordships.

Vol. lx.
p. 301.

General Fleetwood to H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland.

DEARE BROTHER,

IT hath pleased the lord, when all hopes wer even at an ende, and the doctors did beleive my lady Elizabeth's condicion was desperat and near expiring, it pleased the lord beyond all expectation, as a return of prayer, as we have cause to say, to give hir a composure of spirits by sleepe; and since friday last she hath bine dayly upon the recovery, and so continues in a very hopefull way. His highnes hath bine for thes 4 or 5 dayes very indisposed and ill; but this night hath had a very good refreshment by sleepe, and is now much revived, his paynes and distemper abated, and is much amended. The Lord sanctefy thes various dispensations, and gather up our hearts by all more to himselfe, that we may have weaned affections from this poor empty world. Thes late providences hath much retarded our publicke resolutions, that it will be October ere the parliament can sitt. Things are under much silence, and I hope more union. Little from Flanders: the siege at Gravelin continues; the Spanyard have their hopes of supplies from Germany. With my most humble service to all deare relations with you, I remaine

In the possession of the rt.
hon. the earl of Shelburn.

Aug. 3, 1658.

Vol. VII.

Your most affectionate brother and humble servant.

4 K

Mr.

Mr. Downing, resident in Holland, to secretary Thurloe.

A.D. 1658. HONOURABLE SIR,

Vol. lx.
P. 303.

I Herein send inclosed to you such newes as wee have since the last post; since which I have been a gain with Ap p le bo on and D e Wi t; time 73 323 232 12 309 500 210 120 358 241 412 207 38 45 502 145; and also for b ro u g h t the m to ge the r.

the better debateing of matters 22 443 152 54 61 150 468 100 477 311 468 133. This the sta. gen. treaty a gainst the K. of Sw.

is certaine, that 535 are as yet not all in any wise engaged by any 479 16 310 468 536 Wi t which how long it may continue so, I am not able to ensure: and 263 502 145 the K. of Sw.

protests, that he desires nothing so much as an agreement with 536; but the king of Sweden demands an assurance, that they will not assist his enemies before the ratification of the treaty of Elbing, as you may see by the two memorialls of Monsieur Appleboom; coppies whereof I sent you by the last post. And this DeWitt sayth, they can never consent unto, but that he wil be willing with all his heart, that this assurance at one and the same time shal be given with the ratification of the said treaty. Monsieur Appleboom saith also positively, that the king of Sweden will not consent to ratifye the ilucidations, and I finde DeWitt very unwilling to quitt them; and both sides doe confess, that there is very little in the ilucidations, which is not in the treaty itself: but Monsieur Appleboom saith, that the king of Sweden for his honour's sake will never ratify them; and in compliance with him, I brought DeWitt to consent, that if the king of Sweden would declare, that as to what concernes matter of trade in the said ilucidation, he would referr it to his highness, whereby they might be assured to have the tolles adjusted afterwards as they are therein, that in that case he would use his endeavour, that the ratification of the treaty might be delivered; and that he would trust the king of Sweden for the rest. For my part I have so little in the ilucidations as that I wonder at the difficulty made, either on the one side in not quitting them, or on the other side in not conferring them. For as to what may concerne the elector of Brandenburg and towne of Dantzick, both sides confess that there is nothing; yea indeed something less in the ilucidations then in the treaty itself; but the king of Sweden saith, that it is a dishonour to him, that after a treaty is agreed, ilucidations should be imposed upon him; and De Witt saith, that the tolles upon merchandises are not sufficiently adjusted in the treaty itself; and that they have had so much experience of the Swedes imposing upon trade, as that they durst not trust him in that point. I did much presse Monsieur Appleboom to write to the king of Sweden, to move him to accept of the fore-mentioned expedient; but he shewed me his orders, which are positive and expresse not to enter into a treaty with them, but to insist upon a positive answer as to his memorialls above-mentioned; and that in case they shall delay to give it, that the king will take such delay for an absolute denyall, and steere his counsils accordingly.

The truth is, the Holland er s the K. of Sw. he is ro u n d with the m; he 106 34 500 468 90; and 324 builds very much upon this, that as I have formerly given you an accompt Zeeland, Friseland, and Groninguen, have declared it as their opinion, that the treaty should be ratifyed without the ilucidations, which is a great advantage to him. In the mean tyme the fleete is preparing heere, and so also is the king of Sweden's fleete; and I cannot finde, that the king of Sweden will goe on jott less then what he now proffers; nor that he is much regardfull in the busines. I thought it my duty in this so greate a matter, to give you this particular accompt. I had almost forgott to lett you know, that arguing the busines with Monsieur Appleboom, and leting him know how greate an evil the consequence necessarily must be (especially as to religion) of a rupture between his master and this state; and therefore pressing him, that he would write to him to move him at least to some such expedient as that above-mentioned; and letting him know, that it was the weakness of this government, that having once taken a resolution they know, not well how to goe about downe right to change it, for that not only every province, but every towne, hath a negative; and that therefore they were in this to be something pittied and indulged: he gave me for answer, that he had already written so much in order to the inclining the king towards them, as that he was half angry with him. The lady Herbert goes for England this passage: Sir John Trevor wrote to me in favour of hir; to whom I returned for answer, that I should be very glad to observe his commands, but that himself being much nearer Whitehall then I, could much better doe it himself; yet this I cannot but confess, that I doe beleve hir voyage to England is onely upon hir owne private occasions, which having dispatched, she intends this way againe so far as I can perceive; and I have done my utmost to make enquiry thereabout. I have herein inclosed a reply of the Portugall ambassador to the answer of the states general to his first proposition, by which you will perceive they doe not manage their buisness to the greatest advantage. The French ambassador is very angry with them; that they communicate not their papers with him, before they deliver them into the states. It had been proper for the mediators to demand a cessation of armes, and he ought not, as wee think, to have said any more about the lands in Brasile; but I finde De Witt not averse from the peace; and if the king of Sweden and this state come to any ill understanding, or to any general fear thereof, that will hasten the composing the business of Portugall. Not more, but that I am,

is

HONOURABLE SIR,

Your most faithfull humble servant,

Hague, 14 Aug. 1658. [N. S.]

G. DOWNING.

Intelligence.

Hague, 16 August, 1658. [N. S.]

THE sieur Pinosky, secretary of the king of Poland, and envoy extraordinary to the states general, arrived here yesterday. He hath not yet demanded audience of their lordships. It's said, that his orders are, first, to thank their lordships for their good will which they had towards Poland during the war with Sweden, which continues yet, having sent a good fleet of men of war into the Baltic-sea for the defence of Dantzic; and by that means to favour their designs.

Vol. 1x.
p. 313.

2. That it would please their lordships to continue their said good will, and contribute by their mediation towards a peace with Sweden upon reasonable terms.

3. That they would please to furnish his majesty of Poland with a good sum of money upon loan; and that they shall be reimburs'd from the revenue of customs, which is put upon merchandises, which come from thence.

4. That his majesty desires to make a treaty of alliance with their lordships for the good of the trade of the Baltic-sea.

Yesterday was presented to the states general a letter to them from the great duke of Muscovy; and because it was in the Russian language, it is sent to be translated. He desires the transporting out of this country 20,000 muskets, and other ammunition, without paying the duty of the country. The said letter is brought by one Mr. Hebton, an Englishman, who is commissary of Russia.

It is not yet known when Mr. Friquet, envoy of the empire, will come hither, who hath order to pray their lordships to be comprised within the league, which the princes of Germany have made.

Mr. Huygens and other deputies of their lordships have been in conference with the ambassador of Portugal, who hath promised, that he will give to their lordships the propositions concerning the satisfaction, which the king his master intends to give this state for the loss of Brasil.

It is said here for certain, that the Spanish ministers considering that their force cannot subsist against two so great states, as France and England, had resolved to use their endeavour to make an accommodation with the protector, in giving him some places in Flanders for satisfaction; and that don Alonzo de Cardenas had orders to this purpose.

It is not believed, that Mr. Opdam the admiral will go to sea this year, because there is no such great number of ships of war ready, as to require a head; but that they shall be commanded by vice admiral DeWitt, and other officers of the admiralty of this state.

Upon complaints of the merchants of Amsterdam, that the men of war of Biscay have again taken two ships of Holland, named the Sheperd and the White Swan, the king of Spain is writ to for the restitution thereof; and the commanders of the men of war are ordered to take their men of war off Biscay.

A letter of intelligence.

MONSIEUR,

AVEC l'ambassadeur de Portugal l'on ne sauroit pas encore bien reussir; car l'on voit qu'il ne veut ny ne peut pas rendre des terres: quant a ce qu'il offre libre traffique, l'on dit, qu'il a fait de mesme aux Anglois; mais quand des navires Anglois sont venus en Brasil, le regime avoit ordonné, que personne n'osoit rien acheter des Anglois, ny rien a eux vendre, & les autres choses de meme l'on ne trouve pas practicables. Jusques encore ne sont pas recherché les mediateurs, car cet stat croit les mediateurs plus Portugais qu'Hollandois, et l'ambassadeur n'a pas encore aussy osé les implorer, de peur de les rendre suspects, et cependant les capres Portugais le multiplient, a sçavoir les Anglois et Francois, avec commission de Portugal. Il est notable, que ceux de Zeelande requis d'equipper contre ces capres Portugais, l'ont excusé, disants n'avoir pas le moien, et de ne vouloir pas ruiner leurs finances, qui ont besoin d'estre relevées et restaurees, et par ces continuels equipages, ils

Vol. 1x.
p. 314.

A.D. 1658. ils ne feroient qu'accumuler leurs arrierages. Au reste l'assemblée de Hollande s'estant separée sans notable resolution, l'on voit assez, que l'on fera le spectateur. L'on fait quelque bruit touchant la ratification du traité d'Elbing, mais en y ajustant les elucidations, ce qui est une raillerie, car il y aura bien plus eluder, estant du depuis nees nouvelles matieres de traiter en Norwege et Dennemarc. Je suis

MONSIEUR,

Le 16 Augst 1658. [N.S.]

Vostre tres humble serviteur.

Mr. Walter Jones, marchand, near London-stone, London.

Mr. Downing to secretary Thurloc.

HONOURABLE SIR,

Vol. lx.
P. 321.

UPON tuesday last I wrote to you by one Mr. Cleypool, a kinsman of my lord Cleypool's, who intended for England with the shipping that are now going or gone; and I therein gave you and accompt at large of what had passed between Monsieur Appleboom, Monsieur De Witt, and my self, concerning the present state of busines between the king of Sweden and this state, whereby you will truly and at large perceive the present state of matters between them; and your wisdom will best guide what is fitt to be done. Monsieur Appleboom hath adventured, at my earnest intreaty (notwithstanding the preciseness of his orders to the contrary) to give the king of Sweden a full accompt thereof. It were strange, if a breach should happen upon so small difference; and I dare say, that ^{De Wi} 263 502 ^{t do t h now} a peace with king of Sweden; ^{the stat. gen.}

145 270 147 61 397 earnestly desire 16 427 500 468 536; and 535 are not yet at all ^{treaties against the king of Sweden;}

engaged in any 479 144 11 310 468 536; but how long this will continue so, I cannot undertake. There is this weeke an envoye extraordinary of the king of Poland arrived; he is yet at Reswick, and yesterday, by his secretary, gave me notice of his arrivall, and that as soone as he came to this place he would give me a visite, whereby I am obliged as soone as he comes to goe see him. The states have also already given order for the preparing their house, in which they receive forraigne ministers, for the reception of the minister, which is expected from the emperor; so that you may see that the clouds are beginning to gather.

As for the busines of ^{Portugall,} 551, I doe not at all ^{put my f e l f for t h} 434 381 140 41 82 47 305 150 61 for ^{for wa r d in g of i t;}

the 305 483 132 33 339 56 408 71 149; nor shall till I receive your particular orders ^{f ec r et instructions}

therein, for that you know you sent me 142 278 134 289 343 so to demeane my self ^{but I do give the Portugal am ba f sad o u r v e ry good} in it, 244 70 270 313 468 551 202 227 141 449 114 157 136 155 43 444 317 ^{w or d s;} ^{instructions} ^{no mo r e the r}

159 416 36 143; but without your further 343 shall doe 395 284 136 44 468 137 ^{in the n I f ha l be for c ed to by the Fr. ambaf. This mo r}

339 468 108 73 143 319 84 231 305 26 279 477 239 468 532. 469 384 133 ^{ni n g I di f p at c h ed h e n ce to you S i}

393 106 55 71 267 141 121 219 26 62 279 63 42 107 251 477 510 143 72 ^{r J o h n Ma r lo w, he and his f on ne have ha}

134 67 111 60 104 371 131 365 158 and 324 207 327 141 412 390 323 319 ^{d of me a thousand gu il de r s; he p ro mi f ed w e}

34 408 379 16 474 318 337 263 134 141; 324 222 443 381 142 287 160 41 ^{l. pe r f en of No r t h um be}

83. This is certaine, that not a 426 132 141 412 408 395 132 146 631 518 231 ^{r l and, Ne w ca f t le, or D u r ha m, hath co r}

132 81 207 390 161 245 142 149 358 416 35 156 136 319 88 322 254 135 ^{r ef po n d ed with C. St. i t is know ne to him.}

132 287 431 106 34 279 500 572, but that 72 151 346 353 390 477 326. He ^{No r the r n man; you f pe ak ki n d ly to}

is a right 395 133 468 131 104 372; if 510 142 426 197 351 106 34 362 477 ^{him, you his h e ar t. De f i g ne ha d}

326, 510 will have 327 60 39 213 145. If the 263 141 69 54 390 319 33 ^{gone on this f u m m er, he was to have gone for Ne w cast}

316 412 469 141 155 90 100 286 324 488 477 323 316 305 390 161 250 ^{le;}

358; and faith, that he doubteth not but with ease to have done his busines there: the ^{com in g away of f u c h a man} ^{England}

255 359 56 223 408 142 156 25 62 13 372 must needs make them in 547 very

JOHN THURLOE ESQ. &c.

313

j e a lo us whom the y trust; his la dy and c hi l d r e A.D. 1658.
70 40 12 365 524 494 468 171 480; 327 355 267 207 26 325 82 33 133 14 n fol lo w by the next occasion. He f a y t h, that the 105 will 304 85 365 159 239 468 391 406 324 141 13 170 148 62 467 468 de f i g ne go es on a ma in a gainst next wi n t er; 263 141 69 55 390 314 287 412 16 371 339 14 310 391 502 108 148 286;
this co u n t r e

and he faith that for certaine some principall persons of 469 254 155 109 149 136 44
y w e r e at with Ch. St. f up p 171 161 43 134 44 219 Sevenberg 500 572 when he was there about 143 522 123 ly in g him with ship s a gainst next wi n t er; 362 339 58 326 500 456 144 16 310 391 502 108 149 286; and that it is upon Ch.St. intend s this f um m er to be at Ho c ke the same accompt that 572 341 142 469 142 48 90 286 477 231 219 328 27 53
f t ra te. he re in in c lo f ed I 142 147 437 466 324 131 539 339 26 365 142 279 68
f end you an ac count from co lo ne l P al m er.
138 282 510 205 184 258 306 254 365 390 87 121 199 101 286.

I received none from you this last post, and Hemflett is putt upon great exigencies, for that the friggott, which is to carry him, is also convoy to many merchant ships, whose voyages also stand still for want of his passe, and I perceive, that the French ambassadour and De Witt take it ill. Noe more, but that I am,

HONOURABLE SIR,

Your most faithfull humble servant,

Hague, Aug. 16, 58. [N. S.]

G. DOWNING.

If it might be that in such cases as your leysure will not permitt you to write, that I have a word from some body else by your orders. I am solemnly invited by the burgo-masters of Dort and Amsterdam, to come to their townes, I desire your advice.

The resident of the elector of Brandenburg came just now to me, to lett me know, that his master is resolved to continue all good correspondence with his highnesse; and that by his letters received yesterday, he had ordered him to let me know, that any endeavours of his highnesse to make an agreement between him and the king of Sweeden would be very acceptable to him. I did endeavour to demonstrate to him the evil of what his master had done.

Neither the French ambassador, nor my selfe, have as yet been desired to be present at the meetings between the Portugall ambassador and the deputies of the states-general.

Mr. Downing to secretary Thurloe.

HONOURABLE SIR,

THE bearer hereof is Sir John Marlow, who hath assured me, he will doe his highnesse Vol. 1x.
great and true service, and that he will prevent and spoyle the design, which hath P. 316.
been, and is yet on foot, in the farre North parts of England, where whatever hath been done this dozen yeares, is wholly knowne to him. His lady is yet at Anvers, but forthwith to follow with her children. I have prevayled with Sir John, not to stay their coming, but forthwith to hast for England to you; and the rather to prevent plotts, which would heer be on foot to stoppe him, as soon as it shold be discovered, that he intends that way. Not more, but that I am,

HONOURABLE SIR,

Your most faithfull humble servant,

Hague, Aug. 16, 58. [N. S.]

G. DOWNING.

Intelligence from Mr. Downing.

Ha gu e

At 319 318 39 16 August, 1658. [N. S.]

Henry Killigrew,

Vol. 1x.

THERE came very lately from England 324 104 441 351 81 358 53 131 39p. 318.
O g le,
158, and one Mr. 111 54 358, who hath three books ready for the press; whereof one Ch. Ste. is to be dedicated to 572, another to the princefs-royal, and another to the prince of
Vol. VII. 4 L Orange.

A.D. 1658.

Orange. You shall have the matter they treat of by the next. There came with them one ^{John} 67
^{Browne,} Y or ke,
 111 61 105 20 443 160 320, cup-bearer to the duke of 170 416 350, and is gone ^{Trafford,} Eb d en, to him. There is one col. 150 437 50 305 38, who treats with one 277 263 108, ^{Muscovy,} a great merchant at Amsterdam, and commissary of the duke of 80 524 254 154 170 ^{Ch. St.} the lord for some assistance of money for 572. Being in private discourse with 468 365 133
^{No r r is,} hence 32 395 136 137 346, he desired me not to go from 324 109 251 to any other ^{England} country, for the business of 547 went on roundly now, and there would be occasion to ^{Ch. St.}
 use serviceable men, and that 572 himself should say so. There is one col. 20 443
^{Barbadoes,} 160 390, in the 227 131 227 270 287, who hath lived there many years, and hath ^{Carlisle's} managed all the lord 245 133 262 140 358 144 business of his plantations there, who ^{island} ^{Ch. St.} carries on a design to betray that 346 355 110 38 to 572; and to that purpose, about
^{John Browne,}
 5 months ago, employed his kinsman, capt. 67 112 64 108 22 343 162 390, to ^{C. Stuart} come over with propositions to 5 72 here to this effect; that if he would countenance him and that party, and grant him commission against shipping trading thereabouts, he would engage to pay ten thousand pounds per ann. by a merchant in Amsterdam, and he should be at no charge, trouble, or hazard; only that he should give engagement under ^{his king do me s,} his hand, that when he come to 327 352 270 379 143, he would pay the said monies, ^{if-} and satisfy such losses as should be sustained; and as for the surprizing of the said 346 ^{land,} 87 207, he said, that it was an easy matter; for, besides the governor, and about ten more, which had command there, they were all for him. Upon their proposition, the ^{C. Stuart} ^{Browne} said 572 returned a writing, by way of assent unto the said col. 24 139 118 162 390 ^{Amst.} and the rest back again by the said kinsman, who had a ship of his own, and went from 566;
^{Barbadoes,} but when he came to 24 213 227 270 287, the governor, having some suspicion of him, apprehended him, and put him in prison; but upon examination, finding no direct ^{Browne,} proof against him, he, upon the intercession of the said col. 23 443 161 109, released ^{Amsterdam} him, and he made so much hast in the business, as that he was back again at 566 in three ^{Ch. Stuart,} months, with assurance of their fidelity to 572, and had so great interest, as that he ^{Amsterdam,} had three ships ready at 566, to have put some part of his design in execution; but ^{C. Stuart} ^{Ch. Stuart}
 572 made him dismiss his ships and lye privately here, until the said 572 made use of ^{K. of Spain,} ^{if-} the 545, to get some assistance from him, and then he would attempt the said 346 ^{land.}
 87 207. In obedience to and expectation whereof he attends here. The said colonel ^{Browne}
 24 443 159 106 allows him at the rate of 200 l. sterling per annum, and to bear his ^{Hy m de n,} charges during his stay here. There is one Mr. 324 103 263 106, of Kent, who came ^{Killegrew,} over with the abovesaid 351 87 358 54 137 45 161, who hath brought over some ^{little black} horses, and is gone to the army in Flanders with them. He is a 362 150 358 23 335
^{Killegrew}
 25 350 man, with a very great mouth, and full of pock-holes. This 351 84 358 59
^{C. St.}
 137 45 162 goes for England very suddenly; he is a very earnest active man for 572.
^{Bruce,}
 There is one 23 447 251, a merchant, a Scotchman, who is here with the said capt.
 23

Browne

23 443 161 106 every day. He hath been in all the courts of Europe very lately; what his business is I shall enquire. Charles Stuart is still at his house at Hoghstraite, and intends to stay there some time.

A.D. 1658.

From Heidleberg the 13 August, 1658.

His electoral highness returned the other day, having the day before, with the elector of Saxony, accompanied his imperial majesty a half mile from Franckfort. At his departure thence, the elector of Mentz will treat his said majesty in person at Ashaffenberg and at Withburg, and will make his estates defray the charge. Taking the way of Norimberg, it is thought that from thence he will turn towards Augsburg, to see that city and Ratibon in passing by; and the rather, because the elector of Bavaria hath invited his majesty to come to Muncher. Franckfort looks at present like a desert, after the departure of such abundance of people as were there, by reason of the election and coronation.

The marquis de Fuentes will follow the imperial court, in quality of ambaffador ordinary; and the count Pigneranda goes right on to Italy, to take possession of the charge of viceroy of Naples.

I do not believe, that the count Brake (who arrived at Frankfort some days before the departure of the emperor) will stay long here after the electors are gone. We cannot understand the design of the king of Sweden, nor what to think of it. It is agreed, at the deputation at Frankfort, that it will be begun again in November. We are at last agreed with the elector of Mentz upon all the differences between us, the treaty being concluded two days before the departure of his electoral highness. He hath let slip many things to testify, that the amity of the elector of Mentz is as dear to him, as his own particular interest.

Mr. Downing to secretary Thurloe.

HONOURABLE SIR,

THOUGH it be the past day, and that I have sent the same by the post; yet haveing this opportunity, I thought it not amiss to send you the inclosed, and am,

Vol. lx.
p. 329.

HONOURABLE SIR,

Your most faythful humble servant,

Hague, 16 Aug. 58. [N. S.]

G. DOWNING.

Since the writing hereof, I thought fitt to keep the bearer till I heard, whether Sir John Marlow had gott passage from the Brill, and this morning haveing received a letter from my secretary, which I sent with Sir John Marlow to the Brill, intimateing that the man of warre, which is to convoy the Dutch fleet which is at the Brill, staves yet for Monsieur Hemfleet, and so the whole merchant fleet stopped, and so no passage for England thence, I have written to Sir John Marlow to go to Zeland, and so on board the Drake friggott, and so for the Downes, and so for London.

Pray let Monsieur Hemfleet's passe be hastened; but I am confident it's ere this on the way hither.

One brought the inclosed letter to his hyghnesse, desiring I would send it, saying its from one lord Tankerville, whom I know not.

Hague, Aug. 17, 1658.

Mr. Downing to secretary Thurloe.

HONOURABLE SIR,

SINCE the writing heerof, De Witt hath been with me, and hath brought me all these inclosed papers, which concerne the businesse of the Postillion and other ships taken by them in the East-Indyes, whereby he saith it will appeare what great reason they had to have kept the said ships; and moreover what reason they have to desire, that he that is factor for the English at Bantam be removed. I promised to send them, and that I doubted not but that highnesse would consider the carriage of the said man. I had much discourse with him about the businesse of Sweeden; he protests he most earnestly desires an accomodation with the king of Sweeden, and for that end that he hath caused the same resolution which passed the states of Holland to passe the states general, whereby the king

Vol. lx.
p. 333.

of

A.D. 1658. of Sweeden may be assured, that they will not assist his enemies. Moreover he said, that if this business be not accommodated, that he felt that such great profits would be made by the Austrians, that it will be hard to keep them from being accepted.

That he sees it will not be possible for them to keepe from being engaged on some side, lest they fall between two stools; that was his expression in Dutch; that for his part, he will never consent that this state joyne with the Austrians, but that he will rather lay down his charge; but that his designe is to joyne with his highnesse the kings of France and Sweeden. I asked him how farre and in what manner he would be willing to joyne with them: he answered, that this was indeed a great question: that they would in the first place absolutely engage not to assist our enemies; that on the contrary, they could not assist us against our enemies, naming the Austrians, and particularly the king of Spayne, for that they could not breake the treaty, which they have with the king of Spayne; but for what could be done without breaking that treaty, that he was willing thereunto, and desired me that to that purpose I might offer him something, and he would be glad to conferre with me about it. I told him, that when I should receive any thing I should impart it to him.

Farther he desired, that I would use my utmost endeavor to accomodate matters betweene them and the king of Sweeden.

So having acquainted you with what is passed, I remeyne,

HONOURABLE SIR,

Your most faithfull humble servant,

Hague, August 17, 58. [N. S.]

G. DOWNING.

Mr. Downing to secretary Thurloc.

HONOURABLE SIR,

Vol. lx.
p. 340.

CHRISTOPHER Claypoole being come back to the Hague, in regard that the Dutch fleet does not stirre out of the Brill for fear of the men of warre with Portugall commissions, and that the convoy stayes for Hemflet, I thought it my duty to lett you know, that Monsieur Applebom tells me, that the king of Sweeden is gone by sea with a considerable force to relieve Thorne, and if that succeed well, that probably he will attempt the Pillowe. I perceive he will not beginne with the emperor; but be upon his guard, taking hold of what they attempt upon him. Monsieur Applebom tells me also, that their ambassadour is now treating with some of the electors, in order to prevent or fortify himself against what may be attempted by the emperor. By a letter for Hamburg I understand, that a man of warre with a Portugal commission hath brought three Dutch prizes into that place. The states having sent to Monsieur Applebom, to desire him to come to the court, in order to a conference with him, and in the conference to give him the resolution (a copy whereof I some time since sent you) to wit, that they would not assist the king of Sweeden's enemies. Monsieur Applebom desired to be excused, alledging, that when they desire the conference, they ought to come to him; whereupon the states have given a copy of the said resolution to others, and printed it, but not given any copy to him. I pray let me have a copy of the treaty with the king of Portugall, for I shall want it; and being most of this afternoon with the Portugall and French ambassadours, I have agreed with them, that for the avoiding any further umbrage in his next paper he should expresse that he will give them such priviledges in traffique in Brazeell as may be given without infringing the treatyes with other princes and states; and in this next paper, which the Portugal ambassador intends to give on monday, he will desire, that the mediators may be present, and in their presence he will particularly expresse what his master can give; his orders are not to give above three millions, which is to be paid in sugar, in salt, and the customes of commodityes, carried from Holland into the king of Portugall's countreyes. I find them here beginning to be very much nettled now that their shipping beginne to be taken by Portugall commissions. Having this afternoon wrote to you once before, which I sent in a packett to Generall Montagu, I forbear farther, and am,

HONOURABLE SIR,

Your most faithfull humble servant,

Hague, Aug. 17, 58. [N. S.]

G. DOWNING.

I pray

I pray God things may goe calmly in the next parliament. It will infinitely settle your affayres at home, and put a lustre upon them abroad. The French embassador is much upon the notion of cantonizing Flanders. Beverning was last winter very hott with me about it. I hope you will extreamly consider the business of the parliament; better none than not a good one, and to purpose. The berer hath another former letter of myne to you. I hope Hemflett's passe will be heer next weeke without fayle.

A.D. 1658.

A letter of intelligence.

SIR,

HOPING that me letter of the 10th this month is come at your hands, these will serve to tell you, that since are come here some deputies or commissioners of the states of Braband (at the present assembles at Brussells) soe well ecclesiastical as secular, and have made a long speech or proposition, soe well at Don John, the greate or chiefeest councill of warre, as also unto states of the Flanders (commonly called the 4 members or limes of the countrey) containing the said proposition or speech, a long discourse of the present states buffenes and affaires, and the last actions of warre, and that with great reason the king of Spaine (seeing the yll government) hath been very near disposed to take a resolution for to abandon the countrey quiet away, and realy expos'd unto the pleasure of the enemye, if the election of the Roman emperor hath not been come upon the house of Austria; and that they have bin already upon the brink of loosing all, if the enemye hath knowne to direct and governe well their advantages and successes; but that God Almighty them hath defended, and protected marvailously with true mirakels indeed, having no men into the field to resist, and be consequence be destitut'd of all humain force, helpes or assistance; and that since some few dayes the affaires and busenis of the countrey was changed very much into a better condition as heretofore; first, because the unexpected death of the king of France; and secondly, because the election of the Roman emperor was come upon the house of Austria, whereof both consequences were very different, but equall advantagious to them, because the said death makes the French and English to loose the advantages of their late successes; and on the other side, the said election will bring great assistance unto them; and that for the present it was no time to neglect more, and much less because the letters lately come unto the court from the count Pegneranda, ambassadour of the king of Spaine at Franckfort, whereby the said ambassadour gives true and most certaine assurances of the said emperor promising to send an army of 15,000 men horse and foote into the Flanders, for their assistance against their enemyes; and that the said ambassadour should be very confident the same promise should be effectually and realy put into execution; and that he (viz. the same ambassadour) should advance very shortly, and as soone as could be possibel, his voyage towards Brussells, for to give a perfect account of the most sincere intentions of the emperor, with the inclinations with the king of Spaine, and his case and common interests, and that already (besides that the scruple into the Roman capitulation for not to assist the king of Spaine was taken away) was found, concerted, and invented a very easy way for to take away alsoe the zealously of some of the electors, or some other princes, so well without as within the Roman or German empire; (viz.) and that therefore the emperor should send his assistance unto 603 for to be commanded under his name against the men of 631, makeing the conclusion of the said speech or proposition (after many and severall protestations and expostulations against the disbanding of the new-risen soldiers, because the ecclesiasticall begin to bring moneys) that they ought to gather, assembl and bring together all the new-risen soldiers, and to muster them, for to know the just number of them; and that already good store of them were in readinesse into Braband, for to make them march where the present affaires should require; and that also in the provinces of Haynalt, Arthois, Namur, Luxemburg, and quarters or countreyes adjacet, were also some new-risen men in readinesse, with an earnest exhortation that every one would observe his duty at the present time and occasion, &c. Whereupon hath been severall communications and conferences, severall particulars as generalls, and at last found good, resolved and concluded (being considered, that no new-risen soldiers were disbanded, or reduced unto their first beings, but only into the province of Flanders) that all the new-risen soldiers out of Braband, Haynaults, Arthois, Namur, Luxemburg, and contryes adjacet, should march diligintly, and without losse of time, into the old countrey of the contributions of the states of the United Provinces between Gand, Bridges, Damme, and the garrisons of the said states about Aerdenbourg, Middelburg, and Maldegeur, for to be mustered there, and knowing their number, then to put them into the severall garrisons, and to draw out all the old soldiers horse and foote, and to make of them a body of an army at some rendezvous betweene Courtricke and Ypres, the wich they begin to put into execution; wherefore the court is makeing

A.D. 1658. preparation to part from hence towards the rendezvous, and to observe there the doings, motions and designs of the marshal de Turenne. They doe bragge here the aforesaid new-risen soldiers should be 10,000 men; wherefore I found good to be present at their muster, and have found them to be betwixt 5 and 6000 men, being a rapsodium of rogues, theefes, baggers, and vagabondes, or highwaymen, the infames and abjecte people, that ever I saw, very able to steale and rob, but not to fight, the wiche shall be put into the garrisons hereabouts, and of the old soldiers (or present garrisons) shall be made a body of an army, wheerewith they shall beseege (according to the foolish imaginations of these people) Dixmuyde, or St. Veuaute, and afterwards Dunkirke. Such and the like scornfull discourses we have here every day, and every one rejoice him, and is glad with severall imagined victories and advantages, with the victory of the ducq of Modene, the death of the French king, the election of German emperour. 1. Theyre above they doe vaper much of a victory of the garrison of Graveling, the wiche should have drowned and killed 1500 French and English; whereupon the seege should be releevd. 2. That the garrison of Valenchein should have beaten a French convoy of 100 Switzers, and some waggons with cloath and ammunitions, and some monies, going from Landrecty towards Queinoy. 3. That the French have bin beaten three times before Lynken; whereof the truth is (as you may know from other parts) that Graveling is yet beseege'd very narrow, and shall be lost within few dayes, where hath beene some skirmish at the first beginning of the seege, and there hath beene some rencounter of some of the garrisons of Volenchien against them of Landrechies, and there hath beene also some skirmish about Lynken; but truly not at the advantage of the Spanish. Above these Spanish rodamentadoes, they do say (without suffering any speaking against it) that the king of French should be surely dead; and that the cardinal Mazarin should be sik of the gout, and keepeing his bed at Winoxbergue; and that his life-guard should be marched into the same towne for his security; because he does trust himself upon them, being Italians of his own nation; and that all his goods are taken out of his court or pales at Paris, and transported or brought at Winoxbergue, for to retire him with all his goods (in case of necessity) towards Dunkirke, under the protection of the protector of England; that the ducq of Orleans should rise men (as also the duke of Anjou) one against another, and both against Mazarin, because (the king of French being surely dead) the said cardinal will make his cousine-germaine queene regente into French, having the said cardinal's cousin already beene married with the king of French about three yeares privately, and should have two children (viz) one son and one daughter, whereof the king should be the father, and abundance of the like fancies, wherewith I would not trouble you, if it was not that I did heare speake such foolish things of some statesmen here. In the meane time I am informed, that very probably we shall have very shortly into these parts some changeing of the government of this countrey, with the comming of the court of Penderanda, the wiche should have comission of the king of Spaine to governe the countrey (in the quality of great prime councillor) with Don Alauze de Curdenas, and the marquis of Caracena, to which end he should take his ordinary residence at Bruxells; and that his highness Don John should be generall of the forces of the king of Spaine against Portugall, and in his place should be generall d'archiducq of Austria Leopold Gulliam, expecting with the next ordinary poast out of Spaine the orders of the king to that purpose. They begin to make the waters deminish hereabout, because Ostend and Nieuport are like beseege'd of the waters, and cannot gett their necessary victualls and provisions. The owners of the overflowed or inundated countrys having agreed and promised to pay some moneys for to make and keep them dry againe, wiche agreement and promise of monies for the keeping dry the lands, hath taught Don John another trick for to gett monies, meaning, or threatening to make overflow some thousand akers groundes more, in case if the owners of the same will not pay unto him six gilders Hollands money, or one Pound Flemish money upon every aker ground hereabout: wherefore and unto such payments the owners doe difficult very much, considering the consequence thereof. The demanded money of the threatened lands should come to a summa of 1,800,000 gilders Hollands money. Don John having received the money for to pay 1200 soldiers newly taken up at the countrey of Waes (betweene Antwerp and Gand) hath spend the same elsewhere for his pleasure; wherefore the same new-risen men are runned all away unto their countrey: probably some others will follow them steps. In summa all goes here untill now very disorderly, the monyes yll mesnaged, and be consequence the commanders of the grandees not respected; wherefore all the new-risen forces will come to nothing very shortly, according to me last letter of the last new-risen forces within the province of the Flanders. Notwithstanding of all the vaperings of the death of the king of French here at the court, and especially at the court of the prince of Condé, are abundance of letters of assurance of the true reconvalescence of the same king. Just now comes a poast from St. Omer, dispatch a purpose unto the court, especially for to make the court know the sad and desolate condition of Graveling, be want of all necessary provisions and victualls, and no hopes at all to gett any assistance, concluding the same same towne shall be forced to fall into the hands of their enemies very shortly ; and I doe A.D. 1658.

 verily believe the said towne will be surrendred before these letters will come to your hands.
 No more for the present, remaining for ever,

SIR,

615, the 17th of August, 1658.

Your dutifull and faithfull servant,

JERONIMUS VON ABSBACH:

Lockhart to secretary Thurloe.

May it please your LORDSHIP,

I HAVE not till now had tyme to wrytt since my returne from Calais. The Vol. lx. p. 331.
 ingeneer's sicknesse hath brought the whole care of the works upon me, and I am necessitated to worke at so many places, and so farr distant are they one from another, as one cannot doe much more than visitt them once a day. I blesse God for it, they goe on well, especially fort Oliver, which will be in reasonable good defence once in a fortnight. After the 4 bastiones are broght to their perfectione, and the ditch is at its true depth, and the draw-bridges, sally-ports, and magazins for amonitione (which are vaults in the angles of the bastions) are compleatted, I shall then undertake the outworkes, and the building of the houses or hutts for the garrison. I doubt not but before winter overtake us, that fort shall be one of the most regular pieces in Flanders, and could wish with all my heart his highness could see what pennyworths he hath for his money. The counterscarpe of Dunkirk, where the English and French attacques were, is repaired, and in much better conditione than ever it was. I may say the same for the hornworke within. The great bastione under the castle (being founded upon wood, which was all decayed) was shaken so with the artillery, as it could not have stood six weekes, which oblidged me to take it downie, and found it upon brick-stone, which will hold out better against the sea then timber can. The wall I build 10 foot high, and 20 foot high of earth above it ; so that bastione which is on the weakeft place of the towne will be a much harder piece to attempt than formerly it was ; and when the stone fort intended at the head of the peere is up, the accesse to it will not prove so easy as we found it. The disorders committed by the horsemen of both armies are so great, as none of the peasants dare appeare ; so that the pallisades I have bought cannot be delivered till after the siege of Graveling. I shall at present shift as well as I can, tho', before the winter come on, I must imploy above 50,000 pallisades. I provyd also to the quantity of one 1000 load of hay, which must be kept in magazin till towards Crissmasse, and then shall be given out to the horsemen by weight, and shall be deducted of their pay. I must have the same care for oats. I shall have both at as easy rates as they are usually sold for in England. The provyding these things will now put me to so vast disbursements, as had not your lordshipp's arrived this morning by Mr. Cymball, I should have writt you a melancholly letter ; but the 6000 l. will be so seasonable a supply, as it will enable me to go on with the fortification cheerfully. My regiment and collonel Alsopp's, with the 5 companies of collonel Lillingston's, begin to cry out for want of money. Their seeing the other two regiments of collonel Salmond and collonel Gibbons receive constant pay, makes their want of it the more grivious to them ; but I know, that nothing of that nature will so disatisfye them as to make them any wayes unrowly. I have lent them upon account all the product of the customes, and shall still, as I am able, refresh them with a little money. I shall be putt to it by the horse when their month of advance is finished ; they will need money, and will expect it, and I must beseech your lordshipp to lett me know your pleasure concerning them. I sent the 70 gunns to Calais for which the cardinal kept such a stirr. The gentleman of the ordinance that carried them is com'd back this morning. He hath bestowed upon him a middall to the value of some 15 l. The gunns were the most I could pick out of all those belonged to this place. Captain Bradnox his troupe had a mischance yesterday : there was 50 horse of them going out to a forage, who fell into an ambuscade, which suffered them to dismount, and goe about their cutting of grasse, before they fell upon them, and the lieutenant being negligent in not obeying orders, which were to keepe a third part in gard or horseback, whyle the other two parts would forrage for the whole, he suffered himself to be surrounded, and before his men could gett to horse, there was fyve of them taken, and three wounded, that gott off. The allarm came to the towne as I was returning from fort Oliver, and perceiving a great many of our horse galloping over the fields, I made up to them, and with much adoe overtooke them. I found them in some disorder, thorrough the too greate haste they made to gett up to the rescue of those had been fallen upon. After I gott them into order, I marcht them

A.D. 1658. them to the place, and sent back for some foote to second them, in case the enemies strength had exceeded ours; but the enemy was past all reach, for by their boats they made their escape thorough a drowned countrey called the La moor. They were, as near as I could at that distance judge them, betwixt 120 and 150 foot. They gott halfe a score horses, some of them being troupe horses, and others of the baggage. It was a mercy, that a man of them gott off; for the lieutenant had engaged himself into such a manner, that the horses could hardly be led thorough into the horsemens hands. I have been a little severe to them, to the lieutenant to be so simply surprysed, and to the troupes for running out of the towne in so great disorder upon an allarum. If I should not deale a little briskly with them after such unsoldierly escapes, wee shall be so farre from being a terror to our enemies, as we should be their contempt and scorn. I shall by a letter apart give your lordshipp an account at what past at my audience at Calais (which, I may say, lasted two dayes); for all the tyme I was there, the cardinall entertained me at his house. I shall add no more save this, that if French money or dollars can be had at easy rates, the money be sent in that specie, otherwise it may come in English money, which passeth here according to the rate of 13 styvers per shilling. I am,

May it please your LORDSHIPP,

Your lordshipp's most humble and faithfull servant,

Dunkirke, August 17th, 1658. [N. S.]

WILL. LOCKHART.

I have received no commands from your lordshipp concerning the vacancies, which I exceedingly long for, being much importuned by the officers to settle them. As I went to Calais, I gave Mr. la Ferté a visitt, and see the siege, which goeth on very well, but with great losse, especially of officers. There hath happened two very remarkable things, the first, one cannon ball killed foure, and slightly wounded the fift; of the fowre killed there was two lieutenant-generalls, and two brothers, the fift was the generall, who had a slight contusione upon his shoulder by a sand-bagg, which the ball beat off the trench. The second was, yesternight a gentleman of good fashion came into the trenches; at the foot of them he gave his horse to be held by a soldier, as the custome is; after that he visited the trenches, and it seems observed which was his best way to breack thorough; and so came back, and tooke his horse, and broke thorough, giving the enemy a signe, who broke downe a palisado, and relieved him. He that did this is supposed to be either Carolto Campi, or Bascourt, who are both brave men. The French take no notice of this; but the enemies thrusting in of this person makes me apprehend they doe not think the reliefe of this place so desperatt a businesse as the French imagine.

Secretary Thurloc to H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland.

May it please your EXCELLENCY,

In the possession of the right hon. the earl of Shelburne.

I WAS necessitated to omitt the writeinge by the last post, being obliged to attend my lady Elizabeth's funeralls, shee beinge this day se'nnight at night interr'd at Westminster, wheither shee was carryed from Hampton-court. Your lordship is a very sensible judge, how great an affliction this was to both their highnesses, and how sadd a familie she left behinde her, which sadnesse was truly very much encreased by the sicknesse of his highnesse, who at the same tyme lay very ill of the gout, and other distempers, contracted by the longe sicknesse of my lady Elizabeth, which made great impressions upon hym; and since that, wheither it were the retireinge of the gout out of his foot into his body, or from some other cause, I am not able to say, he hath beene very dangerously sicke, the violence whereof lasted 4 or 5 dayes; but, blessed be God, he is now reasonable well recovered, and this day he went abroad for an houre, and findes himselfe much refreshed by it, soe that this recovery of his highnes doth much allay the sorrow for my lady Elizabeth's death. Your excellencye will easely imagine, what an alarume his highnes sicknesse gave us, beinge in the posture wee are now in. How farre the danger wee then apprehended will be teacheinge to us of the thinges, which wee hitherto could never learne, is very doubtfull: however, God hath given us a further space, and the Lord give us hearts to make a good use of it. Truly all our worke and buisines for these 14 dayes hath beene only to bemoane the sadd condition of the publique affaires, and to observe the great consternation all sober men were in at the report of his highnesse sicknesse, which in truth was exceedinge great; soe that I am able to give your excellencye noe account of any further progresse made in our buisines. All that will depend upon his highnes highnes perfect recovery, which wee hope will be now within a few dayes. Wee have A.D. 1658.

 not much neither of forreine newes. The kinge of Sweeden hath yet beene upon noe action; but now somethinge of that kinde is expected from hym, he haveinge imbarqued hymselfe with 7000 horse and foot at a place called Kiel, and intends, as they say, for parte of the elector of Brandenburg's countrye, or else to releive Thorne, which is still besiedged by the Poles and Austrians. Gravelinge remeynes yet beseiged. The surrender thereof is expected every day; and certainly it cannot hold out many dayes, unlesse it be relieved, which it seems the Spanyard will endeavour to doe, and for that end is upon his march, and was come within 8 or 9 mile of it, and haveinge got by marshall Turenne, who is close upon his reare; soe that it is likelye to be a very difficult worke to get in any releife without a battle, and a victory too, marehall Turenne beinge able to fight the Spanyard, whilst marehall la Ferté meinteynes the seige.

Your EXCELLENCYE'S

Most humble and faithfull servant,

Whitehall, 17. Aug. 1658.

JO. THURLOE.

Cardinal Mazarin to Bordeaux, the French ambassador in England.

MY LORD,

Calais, 18. Aug. 1658. [N. S.]

I RECEIVED your letter of the 12th of this month. I thank you for the advice, which In the posses-it contained. There are arrived at Dunkirk 500 men for the English body, which is sion of the in Mons. Turenne's army; and there be 600 landed at Boulogne of the levies, which colo- right hon. nel Cooke and colonel Tomson have made. These be all we have had. In the mean Philip lord time we shall want very much some more foot during the siege of Graveling; and I per- Hardwicke, ceive the remainder of the levies will come, when we shall have no need of them. I desire lord high you therefore to hasten them what you can. chancellor of Great-Britain.

The lord Lockhart hath been here about the payment of the English troops, and the three thousand pair of arms, which he told me to have furnished for the use of the three thousand men of the last recruits sent to the siege of Dunkirk. He had full satisfaction given him in all that he desired.

Mons. Fly to Bordeaux, the French ambassador in England.

MY LORD,

Calais, 18. Aug. 1658. [N. S.]

THE siege at Graveling goeth on to heart's content. We believe the taking of it within Vol. lx. p. 347.
 these ten days at the farthest. We are masters of the half-moon upon one side of the place. There hath been no person of note killed since my last.

My lord Lockhart hath been here one night. He returned to Dunkirk by sea. His eminence intendeth to have this place the next week. Mons. le Tellier is to stay here.

An intercepted letter.

DEAR TWO-SHOES,

Newport, 19. Aug. 1658.

WE are all here well, and out of danger, notwithstanding the beginning of the year Vol. lx. p. 352.
 threatened hard. Our hopes are not so crest-fallen, but that we entertain thoughts of visiting you soon. This town hath a very strong garison in it, and well provided with all necessaries to stand a siege.

The superscription,

For Mrs. Hannah Pilkinton.

Leave this at Lyon-key, London.

A letter of intelligence from Blanck Marshall.

SIR,

Bruges, this 19th August, 1658. [N. S.]

Charles Stuart is gone two dayes since to his

104 35 73 27 56 52 77 86 57 14 1 94 18 74 75 36 53 10 78 58 31 37 76 Vol. lx. p. 349.
 country-house near Anvers. The duke of York

11 59 54 79 69 38 19 32 58 81 73 20 55 21 22 70 2 52 12 18 71 74 106
 VOL. VII. 4 N 3

A.D. 1658. and Caracena is still in Newwport,

3 53 15 12 4 71 5 75 19 39 45 2 35 73 74 79 36 44 45 37 55 52 20 87 61 fortifying place. Graveling is gi-60 69 80, dayly 23 56 70 73 37 24 38 39 52 27 that 62 46 2 13. 28 71 3 85 ven for lost here Prince of Conae 47 35 53 29 36 76 30 37 84 18 54 44 56 73 74 33 19 20 72 21. 131 38 74 is still here in Ostend. Duke John and the duke of Gloucester is here, 75 77 39 45 46 36 52 56 73 78 22 54 16. 105 4 55 17 123 36 74 34 19 20 are fieide.
 72 21, and 18 makeing ready for the 25 18 19 44 14 73. They are every other day councill at Ostend. they 15 1 95 at 10 56 85 52 11 18 44 45 35 53 60 76 78 20 54 16. What 77 31 done, winter draws on;
 20 96 do, must be suddenly 14 57 53, in regard the 88 36 54 78 21 70 15 72 2 more force formerly.
 89 92 73 58 55; but there is noe 48 59 69 18 26 60 70 12 then 25 56 71 49 dayly prifoners brought in here; 19 72 47 97. There is 16 3 94 44 95 63 69 36 73 57 52 19 70 74 6 71 58 week, ten English, 81 27 31 78 37 53 32 21 22 72; this last 86 38 13 40, among which 78 18 54 eight them have taken on 19 55 29 47 39 76 33 20 35 29 34 80 of 77 31 50 32 4 82 21 78 5 41 22 52 serve Charles Stewart. prifoners brought 59 53 to 73 18 69 83 104. There is likewise every day 63 70 35 75 76 60 54
 Newport. English come 20 71 78 7 72 56 81 30 34 77 into 55 21 87 64 57 69 78. Some 22 52 30 in voluntary.
 44 36 75 31 10 57 49 36 53 82 58 58 44 45 2 54 79 3 70 37 20. In few hours will with themselves back they 88 59 45 16 89 38 76 31 78 32 21 51 73 22 46 83 18 74 8 4 13 42 againe. Sir, if you think fitt I shall goe that way, I pray you lett me know by the first;
 so beging pardon for this trouble, I rest,

SIR,

Your most humble and obedient servant,

Jo. HARRISON.

A letter of intelligence.

SIR,

Paris, 20th August, 1658. [N. S.]

Vol. ix. p. 354.

FOR publick concernments I am bound in return to the favour, which you did me in your last, to acquaint you with the most important that I know: the king and court arrived here seven days since, and were received with greater acclamations of the canaille or rabble than usually; but the better sort of bourgeois seemed not overjoyed; for they do not comprehend, how it doth advantage the state of France to put the towns, which the French have taken, with the consumption of their men and money, into the hands of the English; besides, they are such weak politicians, as to prefer the interest of the Catholic religion before the enlarging of their dominion, and the weakening of their enemies, considering that the success of their arms serveth only to embolden the first minister in his oppression of the people. However, the apprehension of disorder in the state upon the death of the king rendered his presence, after his recovery from so dangerous a sickness, more grateful than ordinary, which hath been expressed in festivals and fire-works for 6 or 7 days past, until the court went from hence to Fontainebleau. From Graveling it is written, that the besieged do defend themselves very well, and that there be many considerable officers of the French army kill'd before the towne; but Don John is not in a state to secure the place, so that it will in all likelihood be taken about the latter end of this month.
 There is a regiment of the Scotch, under the command of colonel Rutherford, that hath done wonders before Graveling. The subjects of the state of England are in great reputation here, especially the common soldiers.

General Monck to secretary Thurloe.

MY LORD,

Vol. ix. p. 278.

I HAVE received last post the councill's letter touching the testimonie of the presbytery of Jedburgh; but the council having, uppon thursday last, adjourned till the first of September, wee had the gentlemen of the presbytery, that signed the testimonie, before us, us, before wee rose; and wee thought fitt to give them time to consider of the error they had committed, to see whether they would acknowledge their fault; and being wee had not received his highness and council's commands concerning that, wee thought fitt to put it off till that tyme. Att our rising wee had an intent, in case they did not at our next meeting repent, or be sorry for what they had done, to be very severe with them; but now wee shall be punctuall in observing the commands wee have received in the letter from the council. I have sent you inclosed an answer, which was made by an honest Scotchman, to their testimonie. I am very glad to heare, that his highness is well recovered againe from the fitt of the collick; and that my lady Elizabeth is in a hopefull way of recoverie. Wee have gotten a shippe for sending the men to Dunkirke, and got provisions ready; and wee expect men, on monday or tuesday next, when (if the winde serve) they shall sett saile, if it please God. Wee have never a man of warre here at present to goe with them; but I hope wee shall have one come in by that time. I remayne

Dalkeith, 10. August, 1658.

Your LORDSHIPP's most humble servant,

GEORGE MONCK.

Dr. Thomas Clarges to H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland.

May it please your EXCELENCY,

FROM Germany wee heare, that the king of Sweden is with five and twenty thousand men (as it is thought) redy to attempt something upon the duke of Branbenburgh: most of his men are horse, of which there are sixteen thousand, and two thousand dragoons. Mynheer Dorp, the ambassador from the United Provinces, would have made applications, but was refused audience; and the king sent him word by the master of his ceremonies, that if his masters expected to have the treaty at Elbing performed, they should engage to give no assistance to the Poles, Brandenburgs, or city of Dantzwick.

In the possession of the right hon. the earl of Shelburne.

From the leager before Gravelin the letters import, that two of the lieutenant-generalls were shott from the toune by cannon-shott, about monday the 2d instant; and that on saterday last the marquis du Sel, a very eminent commander, was with a musket-shot from the towne kill'd. They are very obstinate upon some intelligence they have received from Don John of Austria; but the marshall de la Ferté expects within a few dayes to be master of the place, though the Don seemes to make as if he intended to offer at relieving it.

His highness by the blessing of God is much amended; and will with his whole traine be this evening at Whitehall. I am afraid your excellency's motions in progresse may make these adresses somewhat troublesome to you; but it is rather an error of ignorance than presumption in me, that makes me (perhaps) over-act my duty, which till your excellency commande me to the contrary, I shall continue to doe, as may become,

May it please your EXCELENCY,

London, this 10th of August, 1658.

Your excellency's most humble and most obleiged servant,

THO. CLARGES.

Mr. Corker to secretary Thurloc.

SIR,

I AM now returned out of the north, and have beene since my coming among our friends here in London. I find them all quiet as to any publike design; but some discourse there is amongst them of murdering the lieutenant of the Tower in his often journeyes into Essex, and yourself in your weekly visit of Kensington. This latter is conceived to be a peice of extraordinary service, especially if his highness miscarry in his health. I believe there are two brothers of the Sheafields, that will be founded, if not made very shortly to informe them of the particulars of your going thither, of the manner of your abode, and returning back. I have promised them to assist them in it, that I may better discover it; so that I am confident nothing will be done, but I shall heare further of it. This I have from Palden, Roscarrock, and one Lister, whome I thinke to be the chief conspiratours.

SYMONDS.

From

From Mr. Kingstonn.

A.D. 1658.

In the possession of Joseph Radcliffe, of the Inner Temple, esq;

SIR,

I HAVE yours of the 26. of July from Antwerp; and if what I have alreddy written be not sufficient to content that incredulous generation, I can now tell them, that my lord Germaine is returned from Compeigne, where the court now is, and saw Louis the French king, who was lately sick at Calles, this very week alive and on horseback. The cardinal is not yet come from Flanders, where, it seems, he hath so composed the difference between the marshalls Thurin and La Farté, as that La Farté hath laid seidge to Graveling, and Thurin keeps the field. Here wee must have it allowed for an unquestionable truth, that Lamboy two days after the coronation of the emperor, which was on the twentieth, is march'd with an army, which is to be wholly disposed of by our king; if so, (as I see not why it should be improbable) and that they will furnish him money to entertaine those of his subjects, that will come of from the enemy, and resort to him from all parts, he will, I hope, be shortly in a condition to doe their business and his owne. He, who writ to you, that he expected not to live long, I beleave, hath made a right judgment upon his owne estate; for he is growne drye and sapeless, and speaks with a hollow voice. A consumption is the disease of his famely, and few of them are said to have exceeded his years.

The brothers were to part from Lions the 26. of July, and to begin that day the progress. Mrs. Philips went before them, so as you may expect them there fourteen days hence.

I have not yet found any conveniency to send your books. The man by whose conveyance you receive my letters, thinks now againe of a journey thether very shortly; and this morning I intend to advise with him of the best means, how they may be carryed.

I can tell you, that how sleight a matter soever you make the taking of my lord of Newborough's horses, our friends at Charnetowne are said to have sung Te Deum for it; and my thought Dr. Cuffins, from whom I heard the overthrow was so great, as I formerly related it, spake with some joy of the matter.

There was somewhat in my wandring letter, and in that I writt last to Mr. Phillips, to which I desire he should returne an answer.

When the young man at Bruxels was sent by the king, with my lord of Rochester, into Germany, I then directed him to attend his charge carefully; and I dispenc'd with his often writing to me, because that if, by the fault of any about my lord, some secret concerning his negotiation should be divulg'd, it might perhaps be imputed to him, that was a raw youth, and writt many letters to his father; and I assure you, that he yet continues to make use of this dispensation, which I will not revoke, though not for the reason I first gave it him; yet not knowing how he may be otherwise imployed, I am content he be floe in giving an accompt of those occurents, that come to knowledg. I have no more to add, but that I am

Paris, this 3. of August, 1658. [N. S.]

Your faithfull humble servant,

The superscription,
A Monsieur monsieur Laurence.

KINGSTONN.

From Mr. Kingstonn.

SIR,

In the possession of Joseph Radcliffe, of the Inner Temple, esq;

I FIND by yours of the 26. that this will not overtake you at Antwerp, where it seems they have little knowledg of what is done in France, since they were so long ignorant of the king's recovery, and as little of their owne, since they thinke, that the French armie sits quiett, and acts nothing, which the Sunday before you writt the letter had invested Graveling. When the duke of Wittenberg, who is said to be in the Pais de Liege on his march with a recrute of three thousand men, comes upp to them, you will perhaps find, that they mean to make quick worke, and to beseige two places at once, so as instead of Lamboy, who the last weeke was reported to have been sent to assist you, Germany by the news of this week encreases the number of your enemies.

I see it verified in that part of my letter, which you understood not, quod dum brevis esse studeo, obscurus fio; for if I had only added Cromwell, and said that La was dispenc'd by Cromwell from the restraint, which he puts upon visits to P. R. you had found, that I only meant to expresse thereby the particular favour he did that La by affording him liberty to see the queen and the P. R. as oft as she list.

The last week there happened a premeditated rencountre in the streets between Monsieur Villequier, sonn to the marshall d' Aumont, whom you have prisonier, and the duke duke d' Elbeuse, wherein the duke is dangerously hurt, Villequier sleighty, and is retir'd A.D. 1658. to his government of Bulloing.

The occasion was some affront, which it seems the duke d' Elbeuse would have donn to Villequier, by sending his harbinger to Bulloing, as he passed that way to take up lodgings for his horses and traine, without acquainting him the governour therewith. The duke of Guise and all the house of Loraine storme at this action; and the parlement hath taken notice of it.

I doe remember to have seen some papers in the hands of ^{Tom Talbott,} ^{the king's} 414, expressing 403 241 20 very great trust in him, and authorities given him, which in his wandring he will not sayle to make use of, unless the papers may be had from him.

They have within these five dayes an extract of the articles of Dunkirke, and of the overture made by the marqués of Leda, extraordinary embassedor at that time for the king of Spain to Cromwell, both in French and Latine, with a French comment upon it. It is very hard to come by, and I wonder at it; but Mr. Clunch hath lit on one copy of it, and sends it to the secretary, so as I beleave it may come to you.

You will receive with these a sixt peece sett forth by the curats of Paris. Certainly these late differences have been the occasion of much good. All they write is edefying and excellent; and this admirable. This copy may be layd by unfullyed, to be added to the rest in the last volume of your books; and you, and Mr. Sidnam, and your freinds may make use of that sent Mr. Sidnam, who lokes not after collections. I beleave the little man, to whom I delivered your books, will take care, that they come safe to you. He is not yet parted henc. I understand that James is yet at Deep.

There is a notable buzzell at Marseils, if it be not yet appeased, which began upon this occasion: the duke of Merceur, who is governor of Provenc, had promised some one in towne, that he should be made sherife, and appear'd publikely in his behalf; but the place being notwithstanding confer'd on another, he was so exasperated thereat, that he drew men out of the garison in that provinc, and sent back for part of the army, which was in its march to Cattalonia, and came arm'd to expostulat the matter with the towne, who return'd answer, that they were resolv'd to defend their liberties. What is become of this, I yet know not.

Sir, shall I beleave, that ^{the king} 403 241, who by driving ^{out of Cullen} 311 308 99 13 38 143 a person, who gave ^{hi s} 207 20 enemies a subject of discours, acquir'd without doubt grace from Heaven, and an advantageous esteem among men, is now misled so farre, as that ^{the king of France} 244 should have cause to say openly, that ^{the king of England,} 242, in his opinion, should rather with tears ^{him} seek to appease the wrath of God, expres'd in depriving ^{his kingdome;} 209 of ^{his amours at Bruxells?} 207 20 247 20; and that he would doe it, if he were in his case, then follow ^{the king of France} 207 20 3 272 22 19 20 46 87? This comes from the mouth of one, that heard ^{Lord Aubeny} 244 speake it. 59 tould me, that some relate this to ^{de-} (100 399 5 19 16 25); but sure that is an invention, perhaps, to ^{fame her,} 122 ^{her} 166 270 207 19, and put ^{Lorain,} 207 19 at distance with ^{amours,} 255 366 228, for some reasons best knowne to themselves; but others speake of ^{he is} 3 272 22 19 20, to which ^{him.} 206 221 ledd by some about 209. If it be so, first, I wish them hang'd for their pains, that doe so; next, I looke with grief upon the condition ^{of all of us,} 308 3 3 38 308 22 20, who certainly cannot expect any earthly happines but by ^{his meanes;} 207 20 275 20; nor can ^{he,} 206, without the hand of ^{him,} Heaven conduct ^{us good,} 209, ever attaine to that condition, wherein he may doe ^{us,} 22 20 191, so as wee must fancy to ourselves such a God, as is not sensible of injuries, or beleave he will ^{make} not doe miracles for ^{use of} 22 20, while we attend him. You best know, how and when to ^{the duty} 269 12 7 22 20 7 308 this advertisement. For my part, I thinke, that besides ^{him,} 403 125 ^{his person,} I ow ^{he} 209, I have so much affection for ^{his} 207 20 325 19 385, that if ^{his} 206 had ^{his} 207 20 birthright, I would with all ^{submission} 386 4 271 20 20 11 16 15 lay ^{his fault before him,} 207 20 166 22 13 21 76 209, nay expect the more favour for it, ^{his} 207 20 disposition considered; and would not doubt, when ^{his} 207 20 excellent judgment came to reflect upon the harme, that followes in all the circumstances of it, ^{he} 206 would execrat their tounge, that whisper it, and their ^{him to loke on such objects.} eyes, that direct 209 401 255 12 7 16 15 388 307 11 7 5 21 20.

A.D. 1658.

^{Lord Aubeny} 59 tould, that it is said at the Pallais Royall, that ^{the king,} 242, when he parted unsatisfied ^{sister,} with his 20 11 20 21 7 19, said to ^{her,} 207, that family of ^{lord Germain} 237 20 was fatall to them; and in good faith, if there was the least thought of any such thing, it is no wonder ^{the} 403 ^{king} 241 should be in a greater passion. God blefs us all. I am

Paris, this 9. of August,
1658. [N. S.]

Your faithfull humble servant.

KINGSTONN.

Sir, I beseech you dispatch this to Mr. Page; for in it is somewhat that concerns my lord of Ossory.

From Mr. Kingstonn.

SIR,

In the possession of Joseph Radcliffe, of the Inner Temple, esq;

I PRESUME I have yours of the 15th; for Mr. Sidenham's inclos'd in it was of that date. I am in truth so farre from thinking you are reserv'd in doing those good offices ^{the king} to 403 241, that when I writt mine, I reflected how ^{his majestie,} 206 20 269 200, upon the debate here of some busines, wherein you were concern'd, acknowledg'd with thanks for it, the freedoms you were wont to use upon such subjects. 59 is very glad to have seen your answer to that particular, and beleave it a thing invented to the ends you mention; ^{the pallace royall,} and the more, (sayd he) that they are lowde in it at 224 369 25 3 13 7, for which, if you please, 323 shall stand in the cipher. For my part, nothing can blast my hopes while wee take care not to make so powerfull a man our enemy; and that you may find my hart is dilated, I will give you an English romanc.
^{Lord Aubeny}

About two years sinc, when my lord Conway tooke shippinge to goe for England, one Balledin, a Scotch priest, hoping to land with the more freedome, putt himself in the same vessel with him; and, being taken at sea by a Dunkerker, was brought into Ostend, where the weight of the ransome layd upon this rich lord made him so uncharitable as to write to the searcher in the port, where Balledin was to land in England, that he was a priest; and if he should permit him to escape, the protector would call him to accompt for it. What can be said in his lordship's excuse is, that he was weyd to the hart, to see that his function and poverty pleaded so well for Balledin, as he found grace in the eyes of those catholique sea-rowers, and was dismiss'd to make his voyadg in a Hollander, then ready to set sayle for England; where he no sooner landed but he was made prisoner, that letter having been delivered to the searcher by a servant of the lord Conwaye's, whom he sent over for a supply; for it was probable the uncivill seamen had disurnish'd him. How the lord Conway was releas'd, I know not: the story only mentions the imprisonment of Balledin for 22 months, untill about five weeks agoe, at which time Cromwell's secretary sent for this Balledin, and tould him, that he had forfeited his life to the law, both by being a priest, and by acting against the government. To the last part of his charge he answered, that he had not heretofore offended in that kind; and that his resolution was not to be guilty for the future of any such crime; but, as to his being a priest, though (as he tould him) he was certaine it could not be juridically proved, that he was one, yet he did freely acknowledg it, which being related to Cromwell, he not only gave order for his being sett at liberty, but sent him threescore pounds sterling, to bring him into France. This Mr. Clifford, a right English preist, who had it from Balledin himself, now in this citty, tould me, and that Cromwell is of late generally indulgent to the catholique clergy: what shape this Proteus intends now to assume, is hard to guesse; but I am sure it will be such a one as he thinkes may best serve his turne.

The same man likewise tould me, that he understands Cromwell is to cry downe all the noblemen made by king James, and sinc, as men that not by merit, but through favour, and by purchase had acquired their titles, to the great blemish of the ancient honnor

honor of England. Some indeed he means to cull out of them, who may be so ignobly submits to his ways, as he will thinke fitt they may owne their callings by his creation.

Lord Aubeny the d. of Buckingham's

Cromwell

59 tells me that 94 sister sayes, and he beleaues hir, that 115 intends to continue the treaty, which is sett on foot for him 403 324 24 270 7 21 7, that soe he may be thought the padomeete,

Cromwell

to be innocent of the hard measure wil be offered him; for 115 is to wary to streighten him or his allies.

Lord Aubeny

the king's foteman

59 tould me, and wish'd me to make it known, that 403 247 20 169 399 269

he

the dues of Ro

15, whom 206 sent with a letter to 403 125 308 369, being knowen and questioned at Messieurs, 46 270 20 20 11 7 19 20, he said he had left his master; and being ask'd, whether he had his pass, he reddely produc'd that, by which he was directed to returne speedely;

fwome

whereupon he was conveigh'd back some part of the way he came; but having 20 23 the river,

Lord Aubeny's house

trunke-

16 14 7 403 368 416 19, he came directly to 59 20 208 22 20 7 in his 21 19 hofe, feare both Cromwell and 22 14 12 7 10 16 383; but he is dismis'd another man; they 172 74 115 43 queene of England;

to have been here

355; for each of them may thinke, if he were knowen 401 210 73 206 367, that some- of busines

she

what 308 79 was in the matter, and so 20 107 might be prejudic'd by the one, and have no quiettness with the other.

Wee are as quicke here in composing of differences, as wee are in rayfing of broyles. Marseils, that ancient collony of the Romans, is now in as perfect repose as those shabo-tiers, who not long sinc kept such a quoile upon the banks of the Loire. Wee leave the pursute of one single matter to dull soules. Our spirits are active; and those who lay mutability to our charge, will not take notice, that our constancy lyes in changing. I shall not take upon me to assure you, that the parlement and prelats in this towne, though there be at this present a very great distance between them, will not be reconcil'd before this can come to your hands; it may well suffice me, that, fall edg, fall back, they still afford me matter to enlarge my letter. Now I give you that part which speaks their animosities, and the subject of them.

About three weeks sinc, when the solemn Te Deum was to be sung for the king's recovery, the great body of the parlement, adorn'd as became so publike a ceremony, came to Nostre Dame's, where the prelats had appointed the more honerable seats should be kept for themselves. The parlement, that nemine contradicente sawe no reason for that, prefer'd themselves, and the place besids, that there was tenn to one odds, was too sacred for a publike contest; however, the advocate-generall, Monsieur Tallowne, not being satisfyed that the parlement sate where they pleas'd, and went in and out at what dore they listed, resenting that privat prelats, who had no authority to represent the clergy of France, should intertain such a thought, did the next day, as to performe the duty of his charge after his ordinary manner, which is always excellent, in presenc of the parlement, bemoane the state of the provinces, not for the desolation which the warr had brought upon some of them, and the heavy taxes to which all of them were subject for the support of it, but that so many seas were vacant, so many millions of soules, which Christ had purchased with his blood, were deprived of their pastors, while those who had the title of bishops, and the revenews of bishopricks, kept their residenc as constantly in towne, as if Paris were the dioces of each of them; and desir'd them to afford a speedy remedy to so great a mischief. The parlement, that, besids the motive of religion, and the good of the people, had not so short a memory as to forgett what was donn the day before, made an arrest, that the bishops then in town should leave Paris within fifteen dayes, and repair to their respective dioces, upon paine of having their temporalties ceas'd. When the king came hether, the bishops complain'd to him; but answer was return'd, that each of them apart was knowen of the king, but that the king knew not the bishops in bodye; upon which answer, they are said to have imply'd one to cardinal Mazirin, to desire, that reparation may be made for the injury done them by that arrest; otherwise threatening that they would joine with the noblesse, in demaunding a good convocation of the estates, and endeavour to have justice donn to cardinal de Retz; but though this latter part be assured me for truth, yet methinks the menace sounds too high for the times. However, rather then the payments of the revenue should be any way obstructed, the bishops prepare to obey. Thus having given you and Mr. Sidenham, who inhabit the same retreat, which you call melancholy,

A.D. 1658. a large discourse made upp of such stuff as you see, I commit you to God's tuition, and remaine,

SIR,

Paris, this 21. of August, 1658. [N. S.] Your faithfull humble servant,

KINGSTONN.

Charls Dillon, and some Irish officers of the garrison of Arras, that were in London, and were brought to Cromwell by the French embassedor, are return'd the last week : though I know nothing more of it, yet it is probable, that was not a journey of pleasure. Some say it was for recruits ; others, to see whether Cromwell, by the mediation of the cardinall's, might be induc'd to restore them their estates, or part of them.

The enclosed is from my lady Muskry to her sonn, who she thinks is now where you are.

Lockhart to secretary Thurloc.

May it please your LORDSHIPP,

Dunkirk, August $\frac{11}{21}$. 1658.

Vol. ix. p. 359. I WAS forc'd to imploy another hand, in wrytting what I trobled your lordshipp with yesterday ; and hearing the vessell I sent it by is not yet out of the roade, I shall add this word, touching the newes of this morning. The enemys are upon their march ; it is not known whether they intend to passe the river Lys, and so enter France, or beseege St. Venant, or some other garrison in these quarters ; or whether they will come by the way of St. Omer, and hazard a battle for the releefe of Graveling. Mr. Turenne marcheth towards Bourbourg by the way of Bergh, and will keep so neare them, as they will find the executing of any of their resolutions very difficult. Graveling is not lyke to hold out above 5 or 6 dayes longer at farthest. Mr. Hains the ingeneer is dead. I endeavoured all I could to cherish him, both before and during his sicknesse ; but the poor man was so desperately mallancholly, as I could not perswade him it was possible for him to live. The march of Mr. Turenne's army (whereof a considerable part passeth this way) gives me so much businesse, as I must leave the greatest part of what I had to say unto some other opportunity ; only before I end, I must begg, that his highnesse resolutions touching the vacancies may be made knowne to,

May it please your LORDSHIPP,

Your most humble, faithfull and obedient servant,

WILL. LOCKHART.

Memorial of the resident of Sweden.

22d August, 1658. [N. S.]

Vol. ix. p. 361. THE underwritten resident of Sweden hath been informed, that an English merchant of Amsterdam, called Hebden, having a commission from the grand duke of Muscovy, hath lately sent to the said duke 10,000 muskets, and other ammunition ; and that he at present is making ready 20,000 more, and ammunition proportionable ; and that for this purpose there is a ship ready at Amsterdam, to sail within 6 or 8 days to Archangel : also, that he searched for divers engineers in these countries, to employ all against the king of Sweden and his countries ; which hath obliged the said resident to pray their high mightinesses, not only to forbid and hinder the transportation of these muskets, ammunition, and engineers, but also to give such orders as may be necessary for the future.

Intelli-

Intelligence sent from Holland by resident Downing.From the resident la Maire from Cronenburg, 22d August, 1658. [N. S.]

A.D. 1658.

Vol. ix. p. 403.

THE inclosed is the copy of a letter, which I sent by a galliot yesterday to your lordshippe; since which the Swedes have again stopp'd divers barks, and Holland vessels before Copenhagen; so that not one vessel of the United Provinces can come thither. This evening there arrived here a Swedish man of war, which was going to anchor in the Sound, and had taken a Dutch flute well laden; which considering, I have endeavoured to write to the admiralty of Sweden about it, (a copy of which letter is here inclosed) to have it restored, and passports for such as are here belonging to the subjects of the United Provinces; but finding no person to carry the said letter to the admiralty without an attestation of the resident of Sweden, I desired him to grant one; but he answered, that he could give none. Upon this refusal I acquainted him with the contents of the letter, requiring him so to do, as that the Dutch vessels be no more stopp'd, or evil treated; but that they may have the passage of the Baltick sea free; but I had no answer. It is said the Swede hath stopp'd about 30 vessels before Copenhagen, belonging to the United Provinces, as they have done thereabout by a Dutch flute and galliot; and it is their intention so to do with all such as they shall meet with, thereby to render themselves masters. It would not be difficult to recover them with men of war, while they lie at sea. I and my family are retired into this castle, seeing that Elsenore being an open place, the Swedes come and take prisoners even to the very gates of the place. The city of Copenhagen is also now besieged by sea and land, and the Swedes work hard to bring their line to effect. I hope the city will defend itself courageously upon the hopes they have conceived of relief from your lordships suddenly, if their victuals do not fail, which will not last above a month, as I am tould. We expect all houses to be besieged here.

Before the sealing hereof I see another Dutch fleet is brought in by the Swede, who will do the like by all that shall come, if that navigation be not prohibited, especially by the Sound; for it is not known, that there are any Swedish men of war in the Baltic.

We hear here incessantly the shots, which the Swedes make against Copenhagen; so that it will be necessary, that the succours, which they do there expect from your lordships, do come quickly, else I fear the place will not hold out long time.

From commissary Pels at Dantzick, 21st August, 1658.

The major Gortsky is passed by here on the behalf of his electoral highness towards the Pillaw and Koningsburg, to put all in defence; for we have no news yet of the Swedes designs: and in case it be against Prussia, the army of his electoral highness is expected in those parts. The Polish marshal Labourisky hath order to come with 24,000 men. His majesty of Poland after the diet is resolved to go in person before Thorne. It is said the dyet will not separate before the news of the event of the negotiation of the Polish commissaries with those of Muscovia in Lithuania, to take their measures therefrom. There are persons named to finish, and conclude and ratify all with the Muscovites; and that 'tis said, that the Poles had no inclination to make peace with Sweden.

Embassador Isbrants from Berlin, 24. August, 1658.

Yesterday we received news by the post from Hamburgh of the design, which the king of Sweden had against Denmark, and of the entrance of Zeland with some troops. I cannot observe, that the said news gives any alteration to the resolutions, which have been taken here; but, on the contrary, his electoral highness is resolved within few days to go from hence towards Prussia. When his army marcheth, the marshal Montecuculy, who commands the imperial army, marcheth thither also.

Embassador Dorp from Hamburgh, 27. August, 1658.

The 21st of this month was received here the first news of the king of Sweden's falling into Zeland at Corseur. There is no other news of it, but that he arrived the 17th day, and the day following he began to march. I have nothing more, but that the ships, which are arrived at Lubec, say, on thursday last in the evening they heard abundance of cannon shot in the Sound, which makes men believe, that there was some skirmish between the two parties. Copenhagen is thought strong enough to resist.

I have given a memorial to the magistrates of this city, wherein I desire they would arrest the Collart, a private man of war, with his frigate, which is in this port, and to endeavour, that the Dutch ships, which he hath taken, may be released; and I attend an answer thereof.

Mr. Downing, the English resident in Holland, to secretary Thurloe.

A.D. 1658.

HONOURABLE SIR,

Vol. ix. p. 372.

SINCE the sealing and sending away of my letters to you, one hath bin with me from the Portugall embassador, to lett me see the draft of a paper, which he intends to-morrow, or upon munday, to give in to the deputies of the states generall, in answer to their resolution, a copie whereof is sent you by this post in one of my other two pacquets, in which he offers two millions and a half of crusadoes, or fifty tun of gold. And as to the clause, which concerns granting them priviledge in the trafique, theis words are added (such as the king of Portugall can grant, without infringing the treatyes, which he hath with the kingdome of France, or comonwealth of England). And heereof I thought fitt to give you this account, and am,

HONOURABLE SIR,

Hague, 23. August, 1658. [N. S.]

Your most faithfull humble servant,

G. DOWNING.

Mr. Downing, the English resident in Holland, to secretary Thurloe.

HONOURABLE SIR,

Vol. ix. p. 363.

HERE fell out this weeke heere a very odd passage; to witt, Mr. ^{Appleboom} 210 358 241 412 ^{ft. generall} being desired by the 535 to come to the court to have a conference with the deputies of the states generall, that so they might at the said conference deliver to him a resolution, which they had taken not to assist the enemies of his master, he made difficulty thereat, alleadging, that it was a novelty, not having bin ever before since his stay in this country summoned to such a conference; and being summoned a second time, and not coming, the states took exceptions thereat, and printed the said resolution, whereby it might come to be divulged, but gave him no copy thereof; which he resenting, gave in the inclosed memoriall, declaring, that he looked upon it as a novelty, and therefore could not doe it; but looking over the memoriall, I found those words in it, which are marked with a stroake drawne under them, which at first reading I thought might very well ^{the l. protector;} admitt of a construction not honourable for 534; and having a little hearkened abroad, and finding that it was generally so taken, I sent my secretary to him, to desire to know, whether the copy I had did agree with the originall; and finding that it did, to speake to him about these words, and to lett him know what construction they might very well beare, and which I did understand was put upon them; and as I was confident it was but lappus pennae, so, for the stoping of men's mouthes, that he would think of some way to redress the business. My secretary found him much surpris'd when he read it, protesting, that he had no evil thought in the doeing thereof, but yet a little unwilling, seeing it was done, to make any alteration. Whereupon, finding it began to be much talked of, and knowing of what consequence it would be among this people to have the least hopes ^{French embassador} of any thing, that might give the least umbrage, I went to 532 to advise with him what was best to do, who forthwith went to him about it; and letting him know, that seeing ^{the lord protector,} the words might have a derogatory construction to the ministers of 534, and consequently ^{the lord protector} to 534 himself; and seeing that de facto the words were so construed, as that the ^{the lord protector} ministers of 534 were in that memoriall set downe as lesser ministers, and declaring withall to him, that for his owne part he did not know how the words could well be otherwise construed; for that the words and other lesser ministers must referr to what went before, ^{the lord protector} and so consequently the minister of 534 was set downe by him to be a lesser minister; and therefore pressing him, that without more adoe (to make it appeare, that he had no evil thought in doeing of it) that he would forthwith resolve upon some reall way of reparation. Whereupon he did resolve to goe the next morning to Mr. de Witt, and to desire of him, that he would be pleased to propose to the states, that, in regard he had found some things in his memoriall, which he desired to rectify, he might have his memoriall back againe, and that it, and all proceedings thereupon, might be rased out of their ^{Appleboom} registers; but about eleven at night, Monsieur 210 358 241 412 his minde a little change-ing,

Fr. ambassador
ing, 532 was so zealous in the busines, as that at 12 at night he sent his coach for a gentleman, who he knew had greate interest in Mr. 210 358 241 412, and sent him forthwith to him to press upon him the necessity of doing what was agreed that night betweene them; which accordingly the next morning he did: and the better to prepare de Witt, I invited him to dine with me; and findeing, that he did take notice of the words, and make the same construction of them that others, I did prevaile so farr with him as to engage him by promise, that if Monsieur 210 358 241 412 should come to him, and make it his desire, that he would press in the states generall effectually, that the said memoriall should be returned, and blotted out of their register, together with their resolutions taken thereupon, and all other proceedings about it; which truly, according to his promise, he did yesterday to the full, though there were others, that, because those words were in the said memoriall, would have had it to have 395 151 232 delivered. And as to the substance of the said memoriall, it was wholly made up of mistakes;

for de Witt did shew to Mr. 210 358 241 412 by their registers of the states generall, that Sir Will. Boswill, while resident heere for the late king of England, and the residents of France and Poland, did ordinarily come to hold conferences with the deputies of the states in their usuall chamber, not only when the said residents did desire to speake with them, but when the states did desire to speake with the said residents, and to conferr with them, and to put papers in their hands; and that it was a greater honour done to their masters when they did deliver them any resolution at a conference, then to send it to them by their agent. And Mr. 210 358 241 412 doth acknowledg, that he was mistaken in that he tooke it as a disrespect done unto him or his master; and therefore, for the future, he will come to the court, when desired thereunto. And besides, it was a mistake in saying, that the resolution of the 9. August mentioned in that memoriall had been given to me by the agent of the states; for that the said memoriall had not at all bin given to me, neither by the said agent, nor any other, so that indeede it was a busines wholly composed of mistakes; and by what is done in takeing up the busines in such a suddaine and full way, it is not to be imagined what a damp is cast upon all them who were making themselves merry with it. And Mr. 210 358 241 412 and I have bin severall times together since, and both of us glad with all our hearts, that the busines is over in such a handsome and quiet way; and de Witt did in plaine termes tell him, that the reason why they had not any time before called him to a conference, was because of the not right understanding betweene his master and them; and that they had not done it at this time, but that 70 did so exceedingly press them to an agreement with 536; and that he did see by 381 carriage of busines, (whatever 527 had alwayes insinuated to the contrary) that it is not possible to 142 39 426 437 466 534 207 536. This busines hath wrought this good effect, that Monf. 210 358 241 412 and 263 160 67 145 are better acquainted then ever they were; and I am confident, that one very greate occasion of all the misunderstanding that have bin betweene 536 207 535, hath bin the want of freedome betweene them two; for that they were wont hardly to see one the other once in a 12 month; but I have made it my busines to bring them together, and make them open their mindes one to the other; and both of them doe confess, that this hath very much changed both their thoughts, and therewith affaires. And Mr. 210 87 277 111 118 104 being with 379 very long 356 394 151, and debateing seriously the whole matter betweene 536 and 535, he protested, that he is absolutely convinced, that 263

502 145 does really desire, that there may be an agreement and good understanding betweene 536; and that he doth beleve in his conscience, that he doth his utmost to incline 566 and other parts of 557 thereunto, and that if he did see a possibility of effecting it, he would endeavour to perswade them to 437 475 302 absolutely the 479 408

44 82 239 110 59, and to 480 wholly the king of Sweden as to its elucidations; but

A.D. 1658. ^{de Witt}

263 502 148 doth protest to me and him, that that is impossible, and that in doing thereof he should onely loose his owne reputation, and advance nothing. He saith, that in the said treaty, speaking of the tolles and payments which are to be paid, there is the word (circiter) in relation to the time according to which these tolles should be regulated, to witt, as they were about the yeares 1640. and 1645. Now, within the space of three or foure yeares of that time, there were very greate differences in the said tolles, they being sometimes much higher then at other; and therefore saith, that he, if wee should ratify the said treaty without its elucidations, which doe particularly set downe what shal be paid, wee should leave the trade of the Baltique sea wholly at a loose in so farr as concerns the king of Sweden; and saith he, this concerns as well England as ourselves, for that his highness is also desired to be included in that treaty; and saith he, that which makes our people more jealous, is the consideration of the greate impositions formerly laid by the Swedes upon trade; and seeing, saith he, that all which the king of Sweden objects is point of honour, in regard that the said treaty was made without the elucidations for the salveing thereof; that, for his part, he would rest contented with the expedient, which I formerly gave you an accompt of, to witt, that as to the elucidations, and what he should

the k. of Swed.

the lord protector,

doe upon them, that 536 would referr them to the arbitrement of 534, and that in order heereunto, and for the prepareing of mens mindes to be contented herewith, that he had

Amsterdam,

himself with his own hand written a letter to the burgomasters of 566; and that in gaining

the k. of Swed.

them, he did not doubt but to gaine others to be contented therewith; but that if 536 would not consent to this, or somethinge of this kinde, that soe greate was the intrest of this country in that trade, as that he saw it absolutely impossible to bring matters to any accommodation. He added moreover, that to this day this state is absolutely unengaged

k. of Swed.

elector of Branden.

as to any treaty with any other prince or state against 536; and that as to 543 himself, all that they desire him, was a month or two time to consider, whether he would be comprehended within the said treaty or not; and that if he would not, he should be left to stand upon his owne leggs; but that he much doubted of the possibility (in case that this busines did not come to a suddaine issue) of keeping this state in the condition now it is; for that they would be so farr sought unto, and such advantageous termes proffered them, house of Aust. Poland, elect. of Brandenburg, by the 544, and 553, and 543, and that such is the bent of this people to the interest of trade, as that his power would in that case be very little. The envoye extraordinary of Poland having by his secretary notified to me his arrivall, I yesterday gave him a affected to the French visite. He is a person 192 46 278 149 279 477 549 upon the accompt of the 129

queene of Poland.

the k. of Poland

156 39 42 390 408 543. He declares how extreemly 468 538 is desirous of a 427 peace with the k. of Swed.

drove him to a peace with the king of 500 536, and that nothing but perfect necessity 36 443 155 44 326 477 17 479

Hungary;

168 503 539; and that he is not at all concerned therewith; and that the reason why little

Prussia against all the last winter and this spring so 362 149 358 hath been done in 122 447 144 141

the king of Sweden,

Brandenburgers

good

71 15 16 310 468 536, is because that the 543 286 144 are not 317 at besieging of done

Austrians,

places, but that it must have bin principally 272 by the 14 524 147 441 205 139, men

put

and that they would have expected consequently, that their 380 should have bin 434

k. of Poland into the places taken, which, saith he, the 538 hath noe minde unto; and therefore he

Appleboom

hath hitherto deferred things, to see whether a peace wil be had, or not. Mr. 14 123

the k. of Swed.

86 277 118 412 45 hath this day given an accompt at large to 536 of all that passed

de Witt

betweene us and 365 502 146 touching the treaty of Elbing, and its elucidations; and

the k. of Poland

he doth earnestly desire, that he would incline 536 to the expedient afore-mentioned, and

De Witt

doth declare himself wholly convinced, that without somewhat of that kinde 263 502 145 will not be able to effect what he sees he is desirous to doe; and when I have said all this, which I thought it my duty in so weighty a busines to give you an accompt of

de

at large. And give me leave to say, that I doe in my conscience beleve, that 263 502

145

Witt 145 346 in this busines is 136 42 199, I dare not say 418 408 365 154 44 408 536
 but out of love of the king of Sweden, between the protector, k. of Sweden, and k.
 244 out of consideration of the present entirenests 231 149 160 40 41 104 534 536 or France; the states general must the k. of Swed. or fall out 542; and consequently that 535 386 either agree with 536, 416 298 81 418 with him and the rest. Truly upon this busines doe in a great measure depend all the affaires of Europe, and most especially of all the protestants, which will all of them be more or less influenced thereby; and therefore God forbid, that seeing matters are now come so neare together, that there should be a punctillo of honour on the one side, and a jealousy in relation to their trade on the other, when both may be so happily and easily accommodated; and if this busines goe right, 548 will not 262 to stand 144 310 468 536, and consequently be saved from much misery, and the 544 will quit all their hopes from hence. I have heerein inclosed to you the speech of the Polis envoy at his audience yesterday, as also a letter of the states to prince Maurice at Franckfort, whereby something will appeare dangers this state is in.

of the 260 105 53 286 469 142 463 466 346 339. The French ambassadors in Germany are yet treating with severall of the electors and princes of Germany the insuring of the observation of the imperiall capitulation; and the Swedish ambassador is trying what can be done among the princes in relation to the affaires of his master, to whom noe contentment was given in the capitulation. I have heere also inclosed to you such papers, as have passed since my last in relation to the treaty with the Portugall embas-sadors; and the reason why I wrote to you to have your orders as to the ceremony in putting the name of 534 unto any paper, was, because I did not know what in that kinde might happen during this Portugall negotiation, and that I thought, that at all adventures it was fitt for me to know your minde, that so I may, as little as possible, doe

 Sir John Marlow

any thing upon my owne head. I hope 140 69 135 72 113 61 104 371 132 365 with you,

158 is ere this 500 510, concerning which I gave you an account in my last. He knowes whatever hath passed in those parts, and is somewhat a rugged man; but with kindness you may draw it out of him. 327 255 267 207 298 381 362 213 40 255

 His lady and family are come to Dort,
 England:

477 270 155 148, and intend for 547 with the first opportunity; and this busines hath Charles Stuart's court, allready made a greates startle in 572 141 254 155 134 145, they not knowing well who to trust; England,

498 89 477 480; and I beleieve it will have have some influence in that kinde in 547, Charles Stuart.

he being a person that hath so farr adventured, and lost all for 572.

As to the busines of the East-Indy ships, the order is not drawne as I did desire; but I did what I could, and it is such as hath raised a most greates discontent in the East-Indy company heere. He that hath to doe with a number of men hath a hard worke, and I am sure I finde it too hard to deale with this people in any thing, wherein they conceive their trade is to be touched; yet I beleieve that order will produce the restoring of the ships, and those that penn'd it, were forced as well to consider how so to penn it, as that it might pass, as how, when passed, it might obteyne the end proposed in it.

Findeing by yours, that you had sent a passe for Mr. Hemseit, but that there was a report of his being arrived with my lord Nieuport, and considering that the merchants fleet did stay for him, and being much pressed thereto by the French ambassador and
 Mr. de Witt, I have adventured to give him my pass, a copy whereof is herein inclosed.

The reason why I told the deputies of the states generall, that they would do well to apply also to the French ambassador, in relation to the removall of the English shipping, that were before their harbours, was to lett them see the strict league and good understanding betweene his highnesse and the king of France, and not to excuse the matter. I told them at the same time, that the ships were in the open sea, where it was lawfull for them to remaine, untill such time as they saw convenient; and the French ambassador tooke it as a credit done to them. And in fine, whatever I can doe, that may make that union appere, I hold it my duty to doe, which indeede is that, that must carry all things before it heere. Heere is arrived one Monsr. le Strade, governor of Bourdeaux, and a favourite of the cardinal's, who, since his coming, hath made it a greates part of his buisnes to declare in all companyes the good understanding, that is betweene his highnesse and the king of France, which hath had very good effect. The preparations of the fleete heere goe on but very slowly. I shall endeavour by the next to give you what accompt I can

A.D. 1658.

concerning Jeremi Van Cullen of Amsterdam, and his company ^{Fr. ambassador} The 532 tells me, that he hath it from a good hand, that ^{k. Spain} 545 intends this yeare to ^{bring home} 18 441 105 54 328 379
^{his treasures,} 327 146 132 42 14 141 154 135 this yeare, not in ^{one fleet,} 413 47 358 289, but by ^{parcels,} 120 ^{in strange bottoms.} 213 251 83 140, and mostly 339 142 148 437 108 311 241 150 477 90 144. I am,

HONOURABLE SIR,

Hague, Aug 23^d 58. [N. S.]

Your most faithfull humble servant,

G. DOWNING.

The reason of the report of Monsieur Hemflett's being arrived in England, must be the arrivall of his sonne, whom he sent before.

I am, and so is my wife, most exceedingly afflicted for the death of my lady Elizabeth. I trust the Lord will strengthen his highness to beare it, who hath with such faith borne so many other tryalls.

I hope you will be pleased to think of the settleing the 150 l. per annum for and towards the maintenance of the English ministers heere.

There is one major Whitefield and three or four more now in this countrey, who are come with designe and order to kill me.

This Whitefield is one of them that killed Dr. Dorislaus. I have given de Witt notice of his being in the countrey, and how and where they may take him, if they please, that so he may suffer for his former horrible wickednesse. I have given him a very sure account. I dowpt whether the officers will do their duty; and if I shold give any paper to the states, he would know of it, and flye.

There is one Ebden, who is an Englishman, and commisary for the duke of Muscovy, who sends this next weeke 10,000 muskets to Muscovy from Amsterdam, together with severall engineers, and severall of Charles Stuart's men goe with them; and he hath bespoke 20,000 armes more. I am.

A letter of intelligence from the Hague.

MONSIEUR,

Vol. ix. p. 364.

L'ON scait, qu'au point d'honneur il y a grande difference; si pour demander ou respondre quelque chose, le demandeur & respondant va voir celui, à qu'il veut demander ou respondre quelque chose, ou s'il le mande & requiert de venir chez le demandeur & respondant. Une haute court de justice sans le cas de crime usera cette courtise, que d'envoyer un député vers une personne, tant soit peu relevée estant question de demander quelque chose. Si cela a lieu envers des sujets, beaucoup plus envers les ministres. Le ^{resident} 125 declare, que depuis seize ans en ça qu'il a esté ici, jamais on ne l'a mandé de venir dans la chambre de retraite, comme ils ont commencé à faire depuis peu de jours. Même l'année passée, quand ils le declarerent mal à propos criminel, ils n'ont pas songé à le mander de venir dans la chambre de retraite. Ils alleguent, qu'une fois ils l'ont fait à l'ambassadeur de Portugall Sousa Contino; mais c'estoit un temps de disgrâce, & le Portugall estoit comme ennemy. Ils alleguent, de l'avoir fait au Sr. ^{vous;} 126; mais ils ont bien fait d'autres choses contre le ^{Cromwell} 128 & 130, dont ils se sont par apres repenty. Il est vray, que depuis la venue du present ^{resident} 125 de 130, ils l'ont ainfy practiqué envers le dit ^{resident;} 125; mais du depuis aussy eu a esté autrement, en luy envoyant la response chez soy. Tant y a que l'est une reigle generale. Comme dans le droit ainfy dans la civilité, l'acteur sequitur forum rei. Si je veu parler à quelcun, il faut que je l'allié voir, & vice versa; & jamais ne se pratique autrement; si non precario chacun peut renoncer juri pro se introducto.

Si quelcun veut estre excessivement courtois, il le peut faire; mais il est permis d'estre incivil, & cette façon de mander introduiroit ou presupposeroit une subjection. Au reste est un point de civilité; si quelcun le veut faire, bon; mais s'il ne le veut pas faire, le feroit rigueur, si on vouloit le forcer, & le traiter en criminel, ou il s'agit de civilité. Et icy il n'est question, que de luy mettre en main une resolution, qui desja estoit imprimée, & divulguée, & desja communiquée à d'autres ministres, chez les ministres par deputé; & on vouloit, que le ^{resident} 125 la vint querir, autrement 105 font aussy mine de ^{les estats d'Hollande} vouloir vouloir careffer le ^{Suede} 141 & son ^{resident;} 125; voyants que l'autre voye leur à beacoup courte sans fruit, & cependant sous main ils travaillent à semer de la zizanze entre ^{Cromwell, France,} 130, 140, & ^{Suede;} 141; mais tout cette flatterie a un faux fondement; car les plus fins de ^{les estats d'Hollande} 105 ne cachent guere, qu'en fin il faudra espouser la querelle de ^{Espagne, empereur} 139 & 143, ou qu' autrement tout ^{Hollande} 105 soit perdu. Je suis,

MONSIEUR,

Le 23. Aug. 1658. [N. S.]

Vostre très-humble serviteur.

To Henry Vey, Gregory Perkin, Peter Betty, William Dom, and to their assistants.

BY virtue of authority of his highness the lord protector, you are hereby required to ^{Vol. ix. p. 374} secure the persons of such as you find to be disaffected, and disturbers of the peace of the commonwealth within the parish of Padstow, and parts adjacent in or nigh the town of Padstow. Given under my hand the eight-and-twentieth day of July, 1658.

GEO. BEVE, jun.

The above-written is the full substance, and, as near as I can remember, a true copy ver- batim of a warrant I granted on the under-written information, for which at the last assizes holden for Cornwall, Mr. serjeant Fontayne, who then sat judge (on the prisoners having sent for me, and taken a copy of the warrant, then and yet in the hands of captain William Braddon) in open court very much inveighed against it, and said I ought (and if I mistake not) should be indicted for the same.

GEO. BEVE, jun.

The ground of the above-written was upon an information given me of fourteen or sixteen men armed in the parish of Padstow, among whom were two or three known cavaliers, formerly in arms; several other persons suspected to be dangerous, whose names were not known. Several outrages in the parish were committed by them. To evidence the truth thereof, two bills were presented in court (at the last assizes held at Lancelston) against them; the witnesses sworn in face of court; the grand jury afterwards dismissed, before the said witnesses were examined by the grand jury to give their testimony to the said bills, although the clerk of the assizes desired it, and the witnesses attended the same.
 This is attested by me

Cornwall, 13. August, 1658.

GEO. BEVE, jun.

Captain Langley to secretary Thurloc.

May it please your HONNOR,

Leith, Aug. the 14th, 1658.

SINCE my last I find, the A. B. disatisfied with —, which was the cause they did ^{Vol. ix. p. 376} not, nor will not, joyne as formerly on those days, that is commanded by &c. Greate stories are told here of the retinue and great state the lord deputy of Ireland takes upon him; they say farr beyond what Strafford did. They recon up his stately march to the church, with maces borne on horseback, the mayor of the cittie, and all other persons of state attending him in great majestie; his sitting above in the church in a statly seate, his wife oppositt to him in as much; the sumtous chaires belonging to those seates with cullor and fringe is not left out. Many such trifles to long to reifite; at all which they seem to take offence, but end in laughter. More vessells is taken by a small roge of two gunns, who lyes nere the frith, and will spoyle traiding much, if not soone prevented. A vessell is sent out hence, manned with soldiers; but will signifye litle. The controuler Stipes is dead this morning. My lord general Monck this day told me, that it had pleased my lord Disborow to move him concerning the bestoweing the commisarie's place upon mee, considering that I was at dayly expences many wayes, and that he was very free to have writ for mee to that purpose, but that he had promised to write for Tho. Fleetwood, lat clark to the controuler; whereupon I tooke the bouldness (seeing his honor pleased to speak of it first) to tell him my lord Disborowe's reasones, and that hee thought to endeavour to gitt Fleetwood the captain's place, which the controuler had in collonel Reade's regement. I starting, when my lord Munck heard that, he told mee, that boath collo-nel

A.D. 1658.  nel Read and hee was ingadged to say something in the behalfe of the captain-lieutenant; but for all that they did neither of them very well like him; and further tould mee, that in case my lord Disborow would write, that Fleetwood might have the company, hee was willing with all his hart I should have the commissarie's place added to me as a reward, &c. and advised to speake to me lord Disborow to write to your honor about it then. I tould him, that my lord Disborow was just gone westward, which hee had forgotten. Then hee advised mee to write myselfe to your honor; which indeede made mee take this bouldnesse. But I tould him, that if he writt otherwayes, I could doe noe good, hee collonel Read's wife being with him at present, and sollicitouse hee might write something of it; but that it should be soe don, that it should signifie litle, and that you should defearne hee did not very well approve him, though hee had ingaged to writ, before hee understood soe much as since hee hath; and desired mee further to send away this night a speedy messenger to my lord Disborow, and lett him also know his willingness, and what hee had sed to mee in it; and that when he spoake to him before, he did not think of that way as to puttinge of Fleetwood into collonel Read's reagiment a captain; so that I presume you shall have a letter by the next post from my lord Disborow, if you think not fitt move in without. But truely, Sir, I hope my lord protector will remember mee, if your honor please be instrumentall in it. It is a busines that lyes right in my way, I being of the same regiment that gards the store in Leith, and shall be thereby inabled to serve his highness more vigorously, not mentioning past things; for truly many months it hath cost mee about half my pay to frequent and, &c. and I have a very large familie to maintaine; but I shall leave it to God's providence, and your goodnes, and am,

SIR,

Your honour's obleidged fervant,

TIMOTHIE LANGLEY.

Lockhart to secretary Thurloc.

May it please your LORDSHIPP,

Dunkirke, August $\frac{14}{24}$. 1658.

Vol. ix. p. 378. I HAVE laid hold upon this moment's opportunity to lett you know, that things heare are in dispositione towards a battle. I am now drawing out my own regiment, with as many commanded men as will make its number a 1000 compleatt, in rank and fyle, besyds officers. These, with 200 horse, I intend to joyne to our regiments in the field. I hope the Lord will be with us; and I shall endeavour to lett Mr. Turenne and the French see, that our body is not so much rebutted, as they by their aspersions would have rendered them; onely I must give your lordshipp this hint by way of precaution, that if the Lord (in whose hands eminently the eventts of battells lyeth) see fitt to give the day against the French, so soone as I can perceive that, I shall studdy, by God's assistance, to make as handsome and safe a retreat to Mardick as I am able. I hope I shall not be put to reduce this resolution into practice; but if I be, I shall stand to his highn. mercy, and shall rather venture the losse of a little reputatione, then expose his highn. interest heare to too greatt hazards. I ame in that haste, as I can say no more; but as God shall dispose of me, I shall either live or die his highn. faithfull subject, and

Your LORDSHIPP's

Most humble and obedient fervant,

WILL. LOCKHART.

I am just now advertised, that the enemy's van past this morning betwixt Bergh and Mont Cassall. Mr. Turenne hath cast himself too far behind; but I hope he will make it up by this day's march.

A letter of information.

SIR,

Vol. ix.
p. [316.]

I SHOULD have waited on your worshipp, if you had bin at Whitehall, to give you notice, that Sir John Marlen is in Axe-yard, and in case it was not exprest in my MS. letter, I sent these lines, that you might send to him. Direct your letter to him, and to be left with John Hawley at major Greenleft in Ax-yard. I am,

SIR,

August 14th 58.

Your very humble servant to command,

JOHN HAWLEY.

-Lord

Lord Fauconberg, to H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland.

MY LORD,

A.D. 1658.

THE sorrow wee all have had for that excellent sifter of your lordshipp's the poore lady Elizabeth, and feare for his highnesse, now, blessed be God, in a hopefull way of recovery, has put a stand to all businesse, and rendred this place barren of any news. But collonel Sanchye's lady acquainting me, she had intentions for Ireland, I prevayled with her to present from mee a poore trifle to your lordshipp. 'Tis a box of medicinall oyles and powders, and was a present of the grand duke's to a brother of mine lately in Italy. It's assured mee, they are the most soveraigne of the kind in the world; and if I beleaved them not such, your lordshipp may be confident I should not have dared to tender them where I doe, that is, to the person the most honoured and esteemed in the world by

YOUR LORDSHIPP'S

Most faithfull, humble and obedient servant,

Hampton-court, August the 14. [1658.]

FAUCONBERG.

A letter of intelligence from Blank Marshal.

SIR,

Brussels,

222, this 26. August, 1658. [N. S.]

On wenedsday Don John marched from hence

56 92 86 18 53 73 14 1 94 105 48 2 69 10 31 19 15 23 70 57 49 32 20 Vol. lx. p. 388; five thousand horse, one

54 11 with 24 35 81 21 77 33 58 82 74 3 55 16 34 59 71 75 22, and 60 52 18 hundred foot. P. of Conde, d. of Gloc. Carafene

31 83 53 17 18 72 19 14 25 56 37 78. 131 123 and 12 4 69 5 76 18 53 19 went He is drawing force

87 20 54 78 with him. 32 21 22 36 73 15 70 1 88 37 55 27 all the 26 58 71 he can together, lies

21 33 22 13 2 52 79 59 28 18 80 34 19 72, and 44 38 20 73 for the present b e ween Omar Graveling. He

6 21 t 89 21 22 52 18 St. 60 50 3 71 74 and 29 72 4 84 45 39 53 30. 31 19 will be least eight thousand

89 35 46 7 20 at 47 21 3 76 77 22 36 27 34 78 79 31 56 85 73 5 52 17 horse. Germain forces

32 57 69 74. They speake much of the 28 20 70 49 1 37 53 26 58 71 10 21 73 Monsieur Crequi to come here; but as yet no appearance of any. 51 59 55 75 18 37 81 72 11 69 39 gone before Newport. D. of York command

40 35 is 28 60 52 from 7 19 23 56 70 20. 106 is left to 12 58 48 2 53 17 Ostend; this Newport strong,

59 74 78 21 54 14; and 79 31 35 75 55 22 87 62 60 69 80 is both 76 77 70 well provided. say,

56 52 29, and 88 18 44 45 63 71 57 81 36 14 19 15. They 76 1 96, they have put three hundred men

31 2 81 20 64 82 78 79 32 71 21 22 33 83 52 16 18 69 19 17 48 20 53 into Graveling. feare los

29 70 3 84 47 35 54 30. They 26 21 4 71 22 much the 44 57 73 74 27 72 Graveling. Ch. Stuart, Ormond, Hyde, and Gerard, ten-

5 85 45 36 55 29 heere. 104 113, 110, 120, 1 52 15 121, and a few a 77 21 danc gon his contrie-hous.

52 16 2 53 13 30 58 54 to 34 37 76 10 59 55 78 69 38 18 31 56 82 73. dewell killed Sir William

117 hes at a 16 19 86 20 45 46 41 39 46 47 21 17 77 35 70 89 36 44 45 37 Keir, fled. combat

3 51 42 22 38 78, and is 26 46 18 14. There was another 11 57 51 8 4 80 betweene madam Barlow, bor Charles

9 18 77 86 20 21 52 22 48 5 17 4 49 7 2 72 47 58 88, who 9 59 69 108 Stuart children, doctor Floid.

104 two 12 34 37 44 14 70 19 53, and 15 60 13 77 20 71 23 45 56 38 16. Hee got worf, gon for Holland.

33 21 22 28 57 78 the 87 58 72 76, and is 29 59 54 24 60 69 34 56 44 45 Hee of C. Stuart his chappins.

5 55 14. 32 18 19 was one 60 26 104 33 38 73 13 34 3 63 64 46 39 52 74. Sir, I entreat you, if any of theise goods I sent you have miscarried, let me know, as

VOL. VII.

4 R

lyke

A.D. 1658. lykewyse your advice in the other particulars. I shall not trouble you further at present, but that I am,

SIR,

Your most faithfull and most obedient servant,

B. MARSHALL.

A letter of information to secretary Thurloe.

MY LORD,

Vol. lx. p. 319.

HAVING written the enclosed on saturday last to have sent your lordshipp, I omitted the sending, seeing my cozen Johnson went to Kinsington, and writt to your lordship from thence; but having now a suddaine businesse happened, I thought it not amisse to send my letter. My lord, here is one come hither, which goes in a darke stuffe shute, with small black lace, black trimming, black filke carmons, a black hatt, portly, of 40 yeares or thereabouts, noe beard. Under what name he goes, I know not; but I know him to well. He is a Franciscan fryar; his name is Thomas Talbott, brother to Sir Robert Talbott, and to the Jesuit Peter Talbott, that sollicitates for Charles Stuart in Roome. He is in almost all places solliciting for him. He is very dangerous, and I conceive he is come to acquaint the great ones, that were in the last plott, that Charles Stewart will bring forrayne power and monyes innough, and that they should persever in their good-wills, and that he will from hence to Scotland, and Ireland. My cozen Johnson mett him accedentially yesternight in King-street, and wondering to see each other, I pray, sayd Talbott, lett noe man know of my being heere, nor I'll tell none of yours, sayd Johnson. I intend to have a pass for Ireland, and hope to be gone in two dayes time. They parted with onely these words. My cozen knowes not of my writeing, nor any els. In this, and many more for his highness's good, I stand in danger, if knowne. Therefore lett me desire your lordship to hasten me away; for in 24 dayes, that I am heere, I never but twice was out of Mr. Temple's house, fearing to be seene heare, and afterwards there. My lord, time will shew, that I am

YOUR LORDSHIPP'S

Reall and humble servant,

16. August, 1658.

HENRY MOORE.

I write Henry Moore; but my name is Henry Blackwall.

Mr. Downing to secretary Thurloe.

HONOURABLE SIR,

Vol. lx. p. 394.

HAVEING notice, that there are some ships, which are ready to goe from Amsterdam to London, I thought it my duty, especially upon such an occasion as this, to omit noe possible way of giving you an accompt of the great and unexpected newes, which wee have heere of the king of Sweden's being landed in Zeeland, and marched directly for Copenhagen, the particularities whereof are in the inclosed papers, wherein are copies of all that is as yet come to this place concerning this business; but it's possible their ships may yet bring you farther particularities; for that there will be another post arrived at Amsterdam from Hamburg before their going away. All men are heere in a great amaisement, not knowing what to say, or hardly what to think. The letters which bring this newes, are dated at Hamburg $\frac{1}{2}$ instant; and I had a letter from Sir Phillip Meadows from Lubeck of the $\frac{2}{19}$ instant, wherein he writes me word, that he had taken his leave of the king of Sweden at Kiel on ship-board, and that he knew not whither he was bound; but that he supposed it was to attempt upon Coleberg belonging to the elector of Brandenburg in Pomerania. Some say, that this invasion of the king of Sweden is by consent of the king of Denmark, to rid him of his rix-rade. Others say, that it is noe more then what they always thought, to wit, that it is to make himself absolute master of the Baltique sea, and thereby to make himself formidable to all, that have to doe at sea. Others, that speake more favourably, say, that undoubtedly the king of Sweden hath found out some under-hand treaty, which the king of Denmark was makeing against him. Yet on the contrary say others, this is hardly imaginable; for that having, in pursuance of the treaty, voluntarily rendered the one half of his kingdom, and the king of Sweden being yet in possession of almost the other half, he would hardly, while in this condition, begin any any such thing. Upon the receipt of theis letters, both the states generall and councill of A.D. 1658. state did assemble, and have ordered all their ships to be brought together to a randzvous as fast as possible; and a letter is written to the states of Holland forthwith to assemble, and to come furnisht with orders in relation to this matter, which so nearly concernes them. I perceive, that the Polish envoye is heartily glad of this news; and it's sayd, that Fricques, the emperor's envoye, is also arrived. I know not what to say further, then that, if it be done, it is the king of Sweden that hath done it. Monf. Appleboom hath noe newes any fore-knowldg of what the king's designe was. Onely the king of Sweden in his last letter to him writes, that he had done very well in pressing the states so positively as he had done in his memoriall of the fifth instant (a copy whereof I have formerly sent you); and although that it was true, that he had formerly promised to agree to the elucidations of the treaty of Elbing, yet that that was in hopes, that the states would assist him against Denmark; but that they not only not having done that, but instead thereof haveing done him all the mischief they could, that he was resolved, that he would never agree to the elucidations; and that he did not doubt but by this present designe, which he was then undertakeing, to sett such a firme footing, as that they would be glad to deliberate long before they tooke any resolution against him; and that he very well knew it was such a designe, as that he very well knew they would be ready with their utmost to oppose; but that he doubted not to have it past danger of their hurting, before they should be in a capacity to oppose it. All this Monf. Appleboom shewed me in a letter, which he received the last weeke, signed by the king's own hand. I had brought de Witt to that pass, as that he was resolved to have gone this day himself to Amsterdam, to doe his utmost to incline the burgomasters of that place to an entire accomodation with the king of Sweden; but this newes coming hath staied him. The French embassador tells, that Monf. Terlon, who assisted in makeing the peace betweene the king of Sweden and Denmark, is, as he beleeves, gone with the king of Sweden; but by a letter, which he received from him the last post, he writes, that he knew nothing of the designe, but that he supposed it was for Prussia. If the winde had been faire, I was resolved to have sent an expresse to you; and not more at present, but that I am,

HONORABLE SIR,

Hague, August 27th, 1658. [N.S.]

Your most faithfull humble servant,

G. DOWNING.

General Monck to secretary Thurloc.

MY LORD,

I AM forrie to heere his highness hath bin so ill lately; but I hope the worst of his sickness is past. My prayers shall be to God to preserve his health; for truly if he should chance to bee called away, before it pleased God he had settled the government, I doubt wee should bee in a very sad condition. For newse heere wee have none, onely our three hundred soldiers for Dunkirke are to bee shipt to-morrow; which is all at present from

Your LORDSHIPP'S

Dalkeith, 17. August, 1658.

Very humble servant,

GEORGE MONCK.

Since the writeing of this, the inclosed booke came to my hands, which I thought fitt to send to you.

Captain Langley to secretary Thurloc.

May it please your HONOR,

Leith, August the 17th, 1658.

ALTHOUGH I have extrem need to crave your honor's excuse for my last broken lines, which was soe hastily writ, that I had noe time to review them, and the generall haveing occasion to keepe me late that night concerning the dispatch of a vessell, and all accomodations for the transporting of the 300 men for Flanders, which is ready to goe out of this harbour to-morrow; yet I should not have troubled your honour so suddenly with lines, but only to lett you understand, that wee have advice from Barwick, that 8 shipes are lately taken betweene Burlington-bay and the place called Listerkirkes.

The

A.D. 1658. The Oustenderds that tooke them are two frigatts, one of 16 gunns, and a smaller. Colonel Atkins his good ship I formerly mentioned, is carried into the Texel. The man of warre sent out here maned with soldiers, stayed not long out; but as soone as come in, the sloop, who hath but fower murderers, came before Dunbar againe, and continues thereabout, which will spoyle the fishing. Smale frigatts of little charge would help all this. They are very ferefull here, that some of the 8 ships taken are of the London fleet belonging to these parts. If soe, will it make sad worke here. A Dutchman lately come out of Holland, tells mee, that besides the frigotts newly sett forth, there is 24 greater frigotts puting upon the stocks, such as they never had yet; they must bee every one 121 foote in the keile; and did avow, that he saw the contracts signed betweene the states and the carpenders. The Scotcs whisper a warre againe with the Dutch. I thought fitt to lett your honour knowe these things, because nothing may pass without your notis. My lord Disborow is gone west to the wells for his health. This day the controuler was burried. I hope my lord Disborow will writ to you about that in my last of the 14th past.

Your Honour's obliged servant.

TIMOTHIE LANGLEY.

General Fleetwood to H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland.

DEARE BROTHER,

In the possession of the right hon. the earl of Shelburn.

THE solemnising of the funeralls of the deare lady Elisabeth occasioned my silence the last weeke. The Lord teach us by that sore stroake, since which his highnes hath bine very much indisposed, troubled with paynes in his bowells and backe, and could not sleepe; but the Lord hath bine pleased to give a return to the prayers of his poore people, and he is now both eased of his paynes, and his sleepe returned to him. This dispensation with the former allso hath bine very awakening in itselke, if we may have hearts to learn therby. Our publicke affayres have bine much at a stande since his highnes illness, which may easily be beleived, when we consider how great a concernment ther was therein. Oh! that we might in soime proportion have futable effects from such a dispensation! It should be much upon our hearts to be earnest with the Lord, that we might be as well instructed, as we have bine corrected. Heare is very litle newes stirring. It is expected we should suddenly heare of some action 'twixt the French and Spanyard, the later labouring much to releive Gravlin, which is of great importance to their affayres; but probably will not be able to hold out much longer. The king of Sweeden is supposed to be gon upon some considerable designe, but not known what it is, unlesse an attempt for the taking in of the Pillow. The Brandenburgs joyning with Poland and emperor will much distract the king of Sweeden's affayres, and I doubt of ill effect to the Protestant party. The Lord can turn all for good, which that we se in this, is the hopes of

August 17. [1658.]

Your most affectionate brother, and humble servant,

CHA. FLEETWOOD.

From Mr. Kingstonn.

SIR,

In the possession of Joseph Radcliffe, of the Inner Temple, esq;

I HAVE yours of the 22d, and in it the sad story of mylord Taaff's killing Sir William Kith. It was an unhappy accident, which the meannesse of the occasion renders reproveable, even among duellers. The tempter, who is always at our elbowe, never forbears to sling such mischiefs in our way; but when his implacable desire to doe us harme is restrained by grace, and without we follow that course of life, which God himself came upon earth to teach us, wee cannot rightly implore, nor have we reason to confide in that assistance. But from this subject of sorrow, and this combate of three parts, I must lead yow to a battayle, in which no worse men then the parlement of Paris, by their archirs and gards, were ingag'd against the Augustin friers of the great convent, at the end of Pontneuff. The conflict was so memorable, as you cannot but expect I should give you the occasion of it.

The ancestors of president de Mesme had founded two burses in this monestary, where the battayle was fought; that is, they had given pensions to maintaine two of the order, untill they did putt an end to their studies, the places to be supplied successively with new commers of the nomination of the heir of the house. Upon a late vacancy, president de Mesme, to whome it belong'd, notwithstanding the vehement importunity of others, and the

the very bad offices donn by some of their owne fellows to two young men, whom he had design'd for bursters, advanc'd them sone after their admission. The chapter was convened for the election of a new priour; and so it chanc'd, that those new men stood earnestly in oposition of him, that carryed it by the major vote, who being now chosen, made it his study, (though his rule might have furnished him with much better imployment) how he might remove those opposits of his from under his roose; and about four months since (so farr of am I forc'd to deduce the originall of my story) he inform'd against them to the court, that they were persons dangerous to the state, such as bare a parte in the intrigues of cardinal de Retz, and held correspondenc with him. The premier minister, who is not deaff of that eare, caused them instantly to be ceas'd on, and to be made prisoners in the consergery, a place in the power of the parlement. Upon searsh of their papers, two coppies of some manifestto, made upon dellivery of Mardick to the English, whereof cardinal de Retz is said at court to be the author, and a letter written by the said cardinal, approving their nomination as archbishop of Paris, which was essential to their admission, was found in their study. The president de Mesme, who was concerned in his bursters, finding them upon examination innocent, dismiss'd them free out of the prison within the verge of the parlement; but as soone as they came from the convent, they were by new orders from court committed to the Bastile; from whence, after much searsh, and no matter found against them, they were directed to have been released, a few dayes before the battayle; but as their good luck was, they stoutly refus'd to accept of their liberty without they were juridically acquitt of the crims objected to them; and said, that as to the copies of those manifestoes, they were redly to produce witnesses of their having been cast into their studies, of purpose to be the ground of an accusation against them. Thus farr goes on the civill procefs, and now wee enter the confinns of the martiall part. The stout priour, who could well distinguish those of the prisoners faction, did in the mean time vexee them shrewdly, by long and irregular confinements, and other expreffions of his vindicative spirit, and want of charity; whereof the parlement taking notice, sent to him to appear before them, and to sett the friers at liberty he had unjustly confin'd. He return'd for answer, that they were not his judges; and thereupon, both parties taking a resolution to fight, the priour made provision of muscetowns, of caribins, of powder and bullet, and gives those arms into the hands of his best men. The rest, that had as much courage, but not so good weapons, tooke stones out of their magazine, and disposed them in the places, where they were to be most usefull.

The parlement deputed two counselors in their scarlet roabs, accompanied with a gard of archers, to demand entrance at first very civilly into the monastery; but the courageous friers, like buffolo's, were enrag'd at the sight of the redd gowns, and had as little reverence for them, as they had apprehension of the archers, that begann with their pick-axes to digg under the wall. Stones flew about from the battlement, and the windowes of the chambers. The noise was hideous, the croude so thicke, that a valiant cut-purs might have made his fortune in an hour's time. Among them the multitude of hands had soone made a breach; and then the undaunted friers, who had reserved their fire-arms for such an exigent, advanc'd their janisaries, who lett flye among them; and it was the fortune of two honest fellows, who had noe other intrest in the quarrell, but that they were caryed in the croude, with an itch of seeing novelties, to be kil'd on the place, and some others to be wounded; at sight whereof, the archers power'd a vollee of shott into the breach, kil'd one of the friers, and wounded three, whereof one is since dead. The defendants then grew thinner, and the unruly souldiers prest hard upon them. While matters were at this pass, a neighbor, whose house join'd to the monestery, from which their lay an obscure passage into the friars cellar, foreseeing the black-coats were like to have the worst of the day, discover'd the blind entry to the souldiers, and deprived the friers of their sole hope of a retreat, in case the convent should be surpris'd. Wherefore, having fought it out manfully, while there was any hope to make good the place, they at length layd downe their arms, and acknowledg'd the parlement party was the stronger. The priour and twenty of his associats were carryed to prison; and it is beleaved, that he and three of them will suffer, and the rest be condemn'd to the gallies. And thus ended that sedg, which continued three long houres. The throng was dissolv'd, and all above-ground was quiet. There now remain'd no noise but what was made in the cellar, where every man drank in the free cost, and prais'd the justice of the parlement. Now, Sir, it might be well thought, that a romanc of this length might be sufficient at a time; yet I must cupple another to it, sinc both of them happened last weeke.

At an act in the colledg of Bauvois, the rector of the university, who thinks himself no mean man, taking it ill, that the coadjutor of Narbonne, monsieur Fouquet's brother, and the bishop of Colances, had placed themselves in the prime seats, removed his chaire, so as it stood just before them. Whereat the coadjutor in a great fume asked, What meant that pedant? The rector, that meant not to put up such an affront in the face of so many of his subjects, stil'd them ignorant, and said in a very audible voice, that they were better

A.D. 1658. to obey the decree of parlement, and goe to their dioceses, then contend with the rector of the university of Paris for that which was his right; and thereupon commanded both the disputant and the professor to leave the chaire, and not to proceede further that day, and so left the roame; and the bishops without hope to hear any argument, unless themselves would dispute one against the other. And to conclude with somewhat that lokes like a romance to me, Rely the primate, Tom Talbot the fryer, and Bodkin the merchand, are all gonn into England. What use can be of them there, is more than I can imagin, other then that the age and the clymat, as England is now handel'd, may favour a bold witt, and a conscienc that is not scrupulous. Now, Sir, I beleave it be time to give over, and to assure you, that I am

Paris, this 28. of August,
1658. [N.S.]

Your faithfull humble servant,

KINGSTONN.

King of Sweden to the protector.

Most serene LORD PROTECTOR, &c.

In the possession of the editor.

YOUR highness may doubtless wonder, what should force us to enter with our armie again into Denmarck, since it may seeme, that by interposition of your highness, wee not long agoe obtained an honorable peace from thence; and therefore wee thought it good, according to that amity and friendship, which is between your highness and us, to send our commissary, John Barckmann, back to your highness, that he being fully informed of affaires now in hand, your highness might bee better acquainted with the justness of our designe; that wee have not undertaken a new warr, but are forced, as it were, by necessitie to continue the former, being taken up with so many other enemies, that wee could willingly have spared this present trouble. For a warr cannot bee said to bee ended, except the conditions, whereupon peace was to bee restored, bee accomplished; and had the Danes with as much alacrity executed what they had agreed on, as they would seeme to have promised with much sincerity and candor, there had been no need of a new expedition in these parts. But wee have had experience, that all their former treaties were intended to no other end, but meerly to retard the then course of our armes, and by giving us the sweetest words, to gaine time, and afterwards refusing to doe execution, with their delays and contradictions to deprive us of that safetie in our kingdome, which wee onely aimed at by the late warr and former treaties. For so it was, that when our armie was readie to march out of Sealand, the evacuation of the strong places in Schonen was made doubtfull, and our garrisons, that were to take possession of the same, had not found entrance, if wee had not then been in such a condition, that our armes might have forced them to it. They did likewise refuse to deliver those soldiers up to us, which they ought to have done before wee quitted Sealand; and after wee had transported all our forces from thence, then did they, under a pretence of making an alliance with us to secure the liberty of trading, undertake either wholly to subvert or undermine all the strength of articles and covenants, and brought the whole business to such a slippery pass, that there was almost nothing left, whereupon wee might build our hopes of security, which was so much desired by us. By all these counter-actings of theirs, have wee bin necessitated with earnestness to urge the execution of what hath been agreed on; for liberty of commerce and navigation hath been no less molested and troubled after the peace was concluded, then before it was by our armes asserted and restored; custom was exacted from our subjects, (a thing that oftentimes hath caused great troubles between the two northern kingdomes) which seemed to have been totally abolished by the late treatie; the island Wenen was cut off from Schonen, and the mannor of Rumsdahl from the jurisdiction of Drunthem: they did refuse to joine their fleet with ours, by virtue of the treatie, to keep off all violence, that might be attempted upon the Baltick sea; they did hinder to resigne over to us such royalties and jurisdictions as were expressly granted us by the treatie, according as they formerly belonged to Denmark and Norway: such ships and goods as were taken from us before the warr was denounced, either by open violence of the Danes, or by pretended private men of war, and should have been restored by vertue of the peace, were partly delayed, and are partly as yet detained; the forces that should have been presently delivered, were kept back a great while, albeit they intertained forrain souldiers enough in Denmarck: there was no reparation made of the damages done to the African company by their robberies at sea, though it was agreed on, that restitution should be made: and a number of the like grievances more, which would be too tedious to recount in a letter, about the deciding whereof our commissioners were almost tired. And each of these things are of that nature, that if they be not brought to an issue, wee may not expect any safetie by this peace, which yet to obtaine wee have been very moderate in giving giving such conditions as were reasonable ; whereas wee thought ourselves not much obliged A. D. 1658. to condescend to any. Besides it is thus with our kingdome, that if wee should not bee secured here, wee should not be able to pursue our warrs abroad ; especially being destitute of assistance and supplies from our friends : For it is sufficiently knowne, not only by precedents of former times, but particularly of late it was manifested, how our successes could by nothing more bee sooner overthrowne, then by a diversion of the Danes ; from whence it is alwayes an easie matter to invade the very heart of our kingdome, and the annexed provinces, as well by their owne, as others strength, which wee had experience of, notwithstanding evident danger, and excessive charges, when wee were enforced last year to come out of Poland into these countries. Wee had indeed hoped, that although wee found the Danes so loath to bring the business to a conclusion, they yet should have had a better care of their own estate, and have closed with us in a nearer alliance, (our forces being drawne out of their countries, if the execution of their articles had succeeded) which they so instantly and so often desired at the treaty at Roskild, with so many contestations, but proved afterwards their words to be of little faith ; and did not onely neglect such conditions of peace, but insisted also on their old and accustomed counsells, whereby they might procure us continual mischief, and preferred the friendship of those, which longe since have used to kindle a flame of division, where they see others at peace and unity ; whereby Denmarck itself in a manner hath been sorely shaken. Hence it was, that nothing could bee obtained from them but against their wills ; and that some time or other (if they should find an opportunitie to breake) they might not want a pretence as being forced thereunto ; and from thence might wee easily discern the greatest danger, that was like to befall us, that if wee should leave things in such a condition, and draw off our armies, wee should indanger ourselves against the same rock, and run the like hazard as formerly wee had done. For since our enemies had begunn to make a head elsewhere, now it seemed time for us to goe and oppose them : all the indeavors of our commissioners for making an end of, and subscribing the treaty, have been to no purpose, our own admonitions and letters all in vaine ; because the Danes supposed, that there lay an unvoidable necessitie upon us (and that against our will) to goe from hence without doing any thing ; and this did they most of all then declare, when we commanded our troopes either to march, or wee ourselves with the main of our armie hastened towards the frontiers of the countrie ; for the more haste wee made to bee gone, expecting they should put a period to the business, the less inclination did they shew to performe articles ; yea putt off to this very day the setting downe in writing that which was once debated, or presumed to revoke the same. They did in the mean while hold frequent counsells with the ministers of our enemies at Copenhagen and elsewhere, continued to entertaine forrain soldiers upon vast expences, and reinforced the militia with new recruits ; which certainly could not have been done in vain. But most of all did the Danes then appeare to delay and bee backward, when they heard, that the king of Hungarie was raised to the imperiall dignitie ; even then, to protract time, did they send their messengers to perswade us to march away from them, re plane infecta ; that in the mean while our ambassadors (being desirous to finish their work) might doe nothing, and time bee prolonged, that elsewhere something might happen in favour of the Danes. When therefore things stood thus slippery, mens minds were wavering, no certainty of any treaty, and delays used, (which caused us no little damage by our other enemies) when they were thus backward, and colluded underhand with the ministers of our enemies, then wee thought all this to bee sufficient warning to provide for our owne safetie and welfare, that being engaged farr off with others, wee might not chance to bee againe insnared by the wonted deceitfullness of the Danes. And truly wee can protest, that before these late few weekes wee never had any thoughts of this expedition ; and if wee should speake according to the truth of the matter, wee might very well say, that wee never engaged in any thing with greater unwillingnesse, then in this. But when no certainty could bee had in writing, nor the matter brought to an issue, wee leave it to your highness's judgment, whether wee ought not to look after our owne safetie by armes, which could not bee otherwise obtained, because the same ought to have been confirmed according to the articles of the treatie. And being reduced to this necessitie, wee are perswaded, that when your highness shall bee informed of every particular by our deputies and the above-mentioned commissary, (whom wee desire your highness would please to give admittance and hearing) that then your highness will not bee unwilling to favour us, and stand up in our behalf, according to our mutuall friendship and common interest, for which wee shall never cease (together with our highness) to imploy our best indeavors upon any occasion whatsoever. To which purpose wee also have given instructions to our ministers, which will bee able to make our intentions more at large known to your highness, whom wee herewith recommend to the protection of the Most High.

Dated at our head quarters, Otterslofft, near Copenhagen,
the 18th of August, 1658.

CARL. GUSTAFF.

EDWARD EHRENSTEIN.
Col.

Col. Gibbon to secretary Thurloe.

A.D. 1658.

Vol. lx.

P. 345.

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

I THIS day coming from Canterbury, one the rode within three miles of Sittingburne, I mett with three or four men; and finding one of them to shunne me, I thereupon suspected the sayed person, and rode up to hem, exfamened hem, what he was. At the last I came to be asured, that it was the ducke of Buckingham. Knowing hem to be a person ferched for, I have secured hem, soe as to bring hem with me to my house near Rochester, wheare I shall detayne hem, till I receive from you his highness pleaser concerning hem. He tells me, he was goeing to Sir George Sandes, to the countes of Penbrock, about the buisenes of reconfileing of her to her lord. I humbely desyer, that I may as soone as possibely know his highness pleaser concerning hem. As yett it is not knowne, whoe he is, that I have secured. I am,

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

Your most humble servant,

Rochester, Aug. 18. 1658.

ROBERT GIBBON.

Col. Howard to secretary Thurloe.

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

Vol. lx.

P. 343.

THE grand jurors of this countey perceiving, that those of some other counteys have made a congratulatory addresse to his highness, thought it their duty to doe somewhat of the like nature, as you may perceave by the inclosed, which they desired me to convey; and I knew not how to doe it better then through your handes. It will be a great favour to me and the gentlemen subscribers to heare from you what acceptance itt getts, and obleidge,

S I R,

Your most faithful and humble servant,

Naward, this 18th Aug. 1658.

C. HOWARD.

What newes you may impart, I shall be glad to heare.

Mr. Downing, the English Resident in Holland, to secretary Thurloe.

HONOURABLE SIR,

Vol. lx.

P. 404.

UPON funday last arrived here an exprefs from one of the ambassadours of this state from Hamburgh, by which it gives the states general to understand, that the king of Sweden, with the forces wherewith he had imbarcked at Kiel, was landed in Zeeland, marcht directly for Copenhagen, the particularities whereof are in the inclosed; and by the ordinary post, which is since arrived, the truth thereof is confirmed, and that the king of Sweden's forces in Holstein had about the same time in the night not only cut off the Danish regiment quartered about Luckstadt, but also attempted Luckstadt, and Krempen, and three other places belonging to the king of Denmark thereabouts; but had failed of his end in them all. Monsieur Applebom hath received nothing as yet from his king, nor is there any manifesto as yet published, that we know of; so that all men are in amazement at this action beyond imagination; and it may well be supposed, that the enemies of the king of Sweden are not sparing in their language against him upon such occasion as this, which hath soe ugly an aspect, the king of Denmark having rendred all places, which by the treaty he was obliged to render; and after that having also rendered the island of Ween; and in relation to the ship taken at Guyne, having proffered one third part in ready money, and to secure the payment of the other two thirds by his own obligation and the obligation of all his rix rade; and on the other side, the king of Sweden having neither quitted Funen, Jutland, nor Holstein, nor indeede any thinge but Zeeland itselke, and now returned thither again; which makes the king of Sweden's enemies say, that the king of Sweden made only a treaty with the king of Denmark to gaine what he could not get by his sword; and that his resolution now is absolutely to ruin the king of Denmark, and render himself himself master of the Baltique sea, to the terror of all Europe, but especially those that are A.D. 1658. considerable in shipping. Those, that desire to defend the actions of the king of Sweden, say, that undoubtedly he hath found out some underhand treaty, which the king of Denmark was making against him; yet on the other hand, that is thought hardly probable, considering the present condition that the king of Denmark was in; though on the other hand, it would seem as improbable, that the king of Sweden should doe what he hath done without something of that kinde, and which may be made out to be more than a jealousy. There are others, that have an imagination, that this is done by the invitation of the king of Denmark to sett him free from his rix rade; but this seemes very improbable, and especially considering the way of the king of Sweden's acting in Holstein. Monsieur Appleboom shewed me the last letter, which he had received from the king of Sweden, which was not onely signed, but a good part of it written with the king's own hand, wherein he commends him for his having very well done in dealing so roundly as he had done with the states, in his memoriall of the 5th instant (a copy whereof you have already received from me); and that it was true, that he had once promised to ratify the treaty of Elbing with its elucidation; but that that was upon consideration, that the states should assist him against Denmark; but that they having not done it, that he was now resolved never to ratify the said elucidations. And he further adds in the same letter, that he did not much care, whether the states did agree with him or not; and that he was now going upon a designe, which he very well knew the states would be desirous with their uttermost to hinder him in the execution of; but that he did not doubt to doe it with that speed, as that they should have no time to hinder him; and that by the doing thereof he should gaine such a firme footing, as that they would well consider, before they took any resolution against him. And there is a man come to Amsterdamb, who takes himself to be a kind of prophet, who went on purpose to the king of Sweden to dehort him from makeing warre with the elector of Brandenburg, or any other protestant prince, and to turne his forces against the Papists; to whom the king of Sweden made answer, that he believed he had offended God in makeing peace with a protestant prince, naming the Dane; whom (said he) alludeing to that in the prophet, God would have destroyed: and that if he should have to do with him againe, he would deale in another kinde of manner with him. The man is come back againe, and gave this accompt of what passed betweene the king of Sweden and himself about ten dayes agoe; and considering what is fallen out, I thought it might not be amiss to mention it. Monsieur Trelon, whose hand is also to the peace between Sweden and Denmark, is gone with the king of Sweden in this voyage; but as he writes to the French ambassador heere, knew not whether they were goeing. I perceive that the Polish envoye is extreemely rejoyced at this newes, and so is also Friquet the emperor's envoye, who is also now in this towne, but incognito, not having as yet notified his arrivall to the states. He is a cunning man, and is yet sounding to finde how matters are like to goe; and unlesse he finds hopes of doeing good, will I believe not make himself known at all: for since the constitution of this republick, the emperor hath as yet never quitted his claime over them, as being an appendix of the empire; and when formerly he sent a minister hither, the stile which he gave to the states was, fideliter delecti, which is the same he gives to the princes and states of the empire; and upon this accompt, his ministers were as yet never received, and he will not quit it, unlesse he sees some good hopes of gaining something thereby. I had upon saturday last so managed DeWitt, as that he was resolved upon monday following to goe himself to Amsterdam, to labour with the bourgemaisters of that place, to dispose them to faire termes towards the king of Sweden, and to be content with some such kinde of expedient as I hinted to you formerly. And indeede as this state is hitherto unengaged from any treaty with any prince or state against the king of Sweden, so having received your orders to endeavour to accommodate matters betweene them and the said king, I had in that little time brought things to that pass, as that Monsieur Apleboom did confesse, that I had done more then he did imagine could have bin done; and that he was fully convinced, that De but Witt did wholly desire a true and reall agreement between this state and his master: 244

the king of Sweden doth not desire it, nor yet with the truth is, 468 536 270 148 69 395 145 263 139 63 132 40 70 148 395 133 169 289

the elect. Brand. nor to quitt Prussia 500 468 543 395 134 477 127 154 71 149 120 447 141 72 17: but to make some propositions to one while he deals with the other.

kinde of 122 443 431 141 72 475 412 142 477 413 161 325 358 324 263 199 287

When he was low and weak, then the endeavours of the 500 468 112 468 133 492 324 488 369 207 489 468 106 468 282 40 14 154 112 156 were welcome; he 136 143 408 434 160 41 132 43 162 45 87 255; but now the time is changed, and 324 looks upon himself as able to subsist of himself, 365 114 75 287 523 326 139 40 82 46 217 179 477 142 153 20 143 346 148 408 326

A.D. 1658.

144 45 87 52; and peradventure in particular 324 may be 71 42 15 365 524 408 534
^{his} ^{against the K. of Denm.} ^{hee} ^{jealous of the lord protector} as to 327 present designe 16 310 468 537, and indeede 327 381 393 142 149 286 144 ^{hi g h,} ^{his ministers speak very} 142 426 198 152 39 441 325 53 60, which made me thinke myselfe the more oblidge to take notice of the passage I ^{you} the last week;
 477 464 395 475 251 408 468 425 15 311 70 gave 510 an accompt of 468 356 490;
^{the K. of Swe.} ^{to gain upon the} and by all I can perceive from from all hands 468 536 desires all occasions 477 309 523 coasts of the Baltic-sea.

468 254 217 146 139 408 468 227 82 475 26 350 140 41 14. There was a gentleman, that was on board with the king of Sweden at Keil, that writes to Monsieur Aplebom, that the king was then sending him some wither, and Mr. Apleboom doth conjecture, that it was for England to give his highness an accompt of this business.

The French ambaf.

the K. of Sweden

468 532 did much complain to me the other day, that 536 did loose very much in the France; ^{acquaint} court of 549; for that he did not 188 them with his designs. Upon the receipt of this Swedish newes, the states general and council of state did both forthwith assemble, and order all their ships of warre forthwith to a rendezvous; and the states of Holland were forthwith summoned, who did yesterday meete, and have ordered, that all military officers doe forthwith repair to their charges; but before they doe take any finall resolution upon this business, doe waite the coming of the deputies of some of the townes, who are not here; and also a full accompt of the grownds, upon which the king of Sweden hath done what he hath done; before the coming whereof its probable, the king of Sweden will have done his business, either by an agreement with the king of Denmark, or by driveing him out of Zeeland, or taking him prisoner; a suddaine unexpected and most considerable revolution, of which I dare make noe judgement, till I see farther, whether it be the minde of the king of Sweden to make some further agreement with the king of Denmark, or wholly to drive him out, which seems the more probable. And indeede this business, and that of the elector of Brandenburg, may cause great imbroilements and unexpected ones; and I cannot but now take notice of what the ministers of the elector of Brandenburg have often sayd to me; to wit, that the design of the king of Sweden was not to have any thorow peace with their master, but to gain the Pillow from him, and for that end to render him suspect to those, with whom he was in friendship; but that always when it came to the point of the king of Sweden's giving him assurance on his side, that the king of Sweden did always boggle at that, but would first have him quitt the allyances he had with the Austrians, and that then he would treat with him: but I cannot beleieve the former part of this story.

Sir John Marlow

140 68 132 69 113 62 106 371 134 369 is, I hope, ere this with you, for that he went from the Brill upon the Lord's-day was a seaven night towards Flushing, there to take shipping in one of his highness's frigatts, which was then at that place; and his family are now at the Brill, and will, I suppose, take the oportunity of this passage. I am confident he can give you an accompt of what ever hath passed theis very many yeares betweene Charles Stuart and any in Newcastle, and the countyes of Durham and Northumberland; and by a letter, which I have received this morning from Antwerp, I finde, that this business makes a very greate noise there. It makes them all jealous each of other; and no doubt must needs have some such like influence in England also, and by little and little, treating

George Lidle,

him kindly, you may draw much out of him. There is one 311 416 311 362 33 358, Sir Francis Lidle,

sonn to 144 73 137 47 437 104 252 139 362 32 358 of the county of Durham, that is come with his lady out of Flanders, and intends forthwith for London. The knight before his going away gave me notice of this person, and that he would come with his lady, and so for London; and understanding by his sonn, that he was come to Dort, I sent for him, and he tells me, that 572, upon suspicion that the old knight was gone for England, sent for him, and talked with him privately about two houres, and asking whether he had noe notice thereof, which he said he denyed. This gentleman confesseth to me, that about carried a letter

Ch. Stuart,

W e e

christmas last, he 245 132 441 279 16 361 from the old knight to one 158 40 41
 f y Ma t f in,

140 170 371 150 59 339, that keepest the corner shop on the Sandhill in Newcastle, on the left hand as you turn to go from of the Sandhill up the side, and that he did deliver the said letter to him, and brought an answer from him to the old knight, and that he went as a seaman, and landed at Hull, and that he went on foote from Hull to Newcastle beging all the way, as one that had been taken by a Flanders man of warre,
 and

and robed of all. This he confesses, supposing, as I could perceive by him, that the old A.D. 1658. knight had before acquainted me therewith; yet withall I think fitt to let you know, that in all his discourses he would not acknowledge, that he had spoken with any of the gentry of those countryes, and that none of them would take any notice of the letter, that the old knight had sent; which yet seems hardly imaginable, considering the friends and relations, that this person hath there among the gentry; nor indeede can I at all credit him heerein, but that considering, that if he should accuse any, he could not escape his own kindred, upon this accompt he would excuse them all. And I am more then half of opinion, that 572 hath put this story into his mouth, and bid him goe over with it according to what he had fore agreed with the old knight, on purpose to weaken, as much as could be, any thing that the old knight should discover against the gentry. But for 371 151 52 339, that he confesseth absolutely; so that as to him you may have enough to deal with him, and an example in those countryes may not be amiss, where none has bin made of a long time, and particularly it may be of consequence in that so populous and considerable towne. I have given him a passe, and a little money, to bring him to you; yet desiring that this proffers

Ch. Stuart

Matfin,

to do you any service;

might meete him, and he 122 443 50 51 286 141 477 270 510 206 138 286

returne

with

153 71 251; and he saith, that he doubts not but to be able to 136 289 155 134 390 such a tale as to take away all suspicion,

500 142 156 27 63 14 463 358 217 477 464 223 199 143 524 429 475 412,

to

t ry

him.

and possibly it may not be amiss 477 150 441 326.

Tom. Howard brother to the earl of Suffolk,

477 88 328 483 131 32 21 443 468 131 477 468 39 11 131 358 408 139

w ho or trusted

154 48 304 84 350, had a 162 328 316 in this country, with which he 480 279 all secrets and papers: falling his 138 39 25 132 289 140 207 123 15 426 135 142: theis two afterwards 298 out, a person in this town got all the 82 362 107 56 418 14 426 134 141 412 339 469 477 160 390 314 149 199 papers from her:

Tom Howard

468 122 14 426 137 144 306 64 286: whereupon 477 100 328 483 133 34 began a suit in law against the said party to the value of 10000 l. and did plead in open court, that the reason why he began the said suite, and upon pretence of so high damages, was, heir to the earl his brother;

because he did not know, but that he might fall to be 63 41 71 135 477 468 39 13 papers 133 358 327 22 443 468 136; and that there were among the said 123 14 426 135 some, which, if discovered, ruin.

140 460 493, 71 51 267 144 254 153 286 279, would be his 447 339. This he prevailed, pleaded in the court, and having notice thereof, have so farr 123 134 41 153 14 170 85 279, as that the originall letter and papers are now in my hands; copyes whereof I have herein inclosed to you; but I am engaged not to part with the originalls, untill, in the first place, I shall, give assurance to the party, from whom I have them, to indemnify him, for that he is affraid every day of being cast in the suite; and if so, he must either flye the countrey, which he cannot doe, or he shal be put to his oath, whether those which he delivers be all, and he can lesse forswear himself. After he had given me a sight of them, he was most vehemently earnest to have them back againe; but I told him, that being papers of that nature, I durst not, upon any terms, part with them, whatever the issue thereof should be: whereupon we came to this conclusion, that he was contented to leave them with me, upon my engagement to him, that I should not part with them out of my hands till he were indemnified. 328 483 131 32 hath offered him 500 l. sterling for them, and rather than sayle, if money would doe it, would give thrice the money; but I have gott them, and shall endeavour to keep them, God willing, in attendance of

Howard

Tom Howard that was in the town;

your farther orders. It is the same 477 90 328 159 213 38 467 488 339 468 477

Ch. Stuart's letter to him into England.

159 286; and 572 361 477 326 refers to that his journey 339 477 547. I be- he go into England:

leeve by some inclings which I have, that 324 is desirous to 314 againe 339 477 547: let him have a passe private what if you should 360 326 323 14 425 (if he shall desire it) as about his 122 affaires, seize him;

441 514 466 192 298 170 134 287, and then 142 44 71 174 42 326; or other- wife

A.D. 1658.

wife that you think fitt, to let the busines lye by a time, as to the ^{making use of it} 376 33 9 54 524 39 against him. ^{known, I have given you this}

408 71 148 14 310 326. But if it should be 353 390, that 72 323 313 108 510 account, ^{he} ^{me killed.}

469 184 258, 324 would endeavour to have 379 351 84 35. f

I have given De Witt two or three times most particular and certaine accompts o major Whitford's lodging first in this towne, and then at Rotterdam, and then at Amsterdam, which Whitford was he that clove Dorislaus's head; but its still 24 houres ere an order can be got out, every towne hath such a daile of privileges, and he never lyes but a night in a place. His busines hither, with some others, was to have served me as they did Dorislaus, and so to have gone for Muscovy, with armes thither from Am-sterдам. De Witt asked me the other day, how I thought his highnesse would take this busines of the king of Sweden's makeing a new warr against the king of Denmark? I told him, it was impossible for me to conjecture, not knowing so much as the reasons wherefore the king of Sweden had done it. This country is certainly most extreemly nettled, and it is scattered up and downe by the Spanish party, that this action of the king of Sweden against the king of Denmark is done by joynt consent of the lord protector and king of France, thereby to render them all alike odious; yet there are of the wiser sort here, that are of another opinion, and who doe say, that they doe beleve his highnesse will make a difference betweene this and the former warr betweene the said two kings; and if the country can understand, that his highnesse will not interest himself, it will goe a greater way in their counccills. Surely by this next post there will come some manifesto, whereby mens eyes may be a little opened; and I cannot be out of hope, that the king of Sweden hath already given his highnesse an accompt of this action, and when he shall be ^{pressed,} 123, then ^{the lord protector's endeavours for him may be more welcome;}

136 287 140 279 468 107 534 282 44 16 155 113 157 136 143 305 326 377
^{my lord protector}

231 384 132 40 160 42 83 255; but yet I doe think, that 534 is interested upon ^{account of trade,} ^{treaty} his own accompt, and upon the 184 258 408 141 437 263, to have a hand in the 479 between ^{the king of Sweden and the king of Poland;} ^{a bad}

231 148 160 42 43 390 468 536 207 538; but its oftentimes 17 227 35 thing ^{too kind.} to be 477 112 351 106 34.

Mr. Claypoole is undoubtedly long ere this with you. I doe not know any thing farther concerning the ship of 16 guns, which was brought into the Texel. I have at last prevailed, that a ship of Yarmouth, which was brought into Edam by a Flanders man of warr, is restored to the owner, upon the accompt that the man of warr was begining to unlade her; and for the doing thereof, I was faine to get an order of the states general, and of the states of Holland, and of the burgemasters of Edam. Yet noe sooner was the ship released, but forthwith a new arrest was clapt upon her, out of the court of Holland, whereby all was dasht, and the poor man cast into a labrinth, out of which there would have bin no getting, but by representing seriously the matter and consequences of it. I have obteyned out of the said court a countermande to take of the said arrest; and the poor merchant is gone himself to Edam with it. And I now hope, that the busines is past all danger, and I am endeavouring the same as to severall other ships, which they were beginning to unlade. For the busines of the East-Indye ships, though the order is not as I could wish, yet I beleve it is more than ever was done in the like kinde, and at which the East-Indy company here are sufficiently troubled, as thinking it too much; and I sent you a whole bundle of papers concerning the whole proceedings in the East-Indyes against the said ships, which were given me by De Witt, and which I sent you in a packet of 17 instant, which I sent by the Drake frigate; in which frigate went also the old knight.
 I have herein inclosed to you a particular accompt concerning Jeremi Van Collen, which is from very good hands, and wherein you will have an account, I think, of the bottome of his busines. I herein inclosed send to you also a copy of the last paper given me by the Portugal ambassador; and I shall, in pursuance of your orders in your letter, which I received by the post this day, demeane my self in that busines as hitherto I have done;

but this ^{K. of Sweden} ^{that treaty.}

244 469 new action of the 536 346 is like extreemly to advance 467 479. I blesse God with all my heart, that his highnesse is on the mending hand, and I hope both he and you will thinke of his children; I mean England, Scotland, and Ireland, what they shall do, if it shold please God to take him away: to leave them in civil warres after his death would be very sad; and more sad, seeing in an ordinary way it may be prevented; and indeed all the other counccills are but little ones to this. Pardon me, I did intend on

Lord's

Lord's-day last, and ever since, to have sent an expresse to you, but the winds have been quite contrary; but this friggatt called the Fame, whereof capt. Wright is commander, I have thought it my duty to write, and to presse him to make all hast, least the king of Sweden shold not have given you notice of what is passed, and probably this may something influence the deportment towards my lord Nieuport, and stoppe some answers, which might otherwise be given him. At this instant, it is strongly reported, that 20 English men of warre are gone towards the Sound, and said to joyn with the king of Sweden in this businesse; and but I have thought it my duty to say, that when the last post came away, his highness knew nothing of this busines, I adde only, that I am,

HONOURABLE SIR,

Your most faithfull humble servant,

Hague, Aug. 29, 58. [N.S.]

G. DOWNING.

Mr. Downing to secretary Thurloc.

HONOURABLE SIR,

Yesterday I wrote to you by captain Wright, commander of the Fame frigott, and de- Vol. 1x.
fired him to make all possible haste, and hope that the same will be with you before P. 418.
this; and although it is possible that Monsieur Meadows, or the king of Sweden himself, may have given his highness an accompt of so important an action; yet I thought it my duty for more sureness to send as soone as I could. We have as yet noe farther accompt of that business, nor any manifest of the king of Sweden's; and its verily beleaved, that he is e're this wholly master of Zeeland; and the queene and prince of Denmark either fled into Norway, or prisoners, or some new agreement made between the said two kings, such as the king of Sweden will please to demand; although most men here are of opinion, that he will drive his business to the utmost, which seemes very strange, and you may be sure doth sufficiently open all mens mouths against him, who are not very tenderly affected towards him. I suppose that by this post you will have fresher newes from Amsterdam than any I can give you; for that wee receive not our Hamburg letters, till the English post be gone from hence; but they come to Amsterdam before the English post goes away from them. I saw a letter yesterday out of Germany, which sayd, that the treaty between the French ambassadors and the ambassadors of their confederates, for making the treaty of Munster and Noremburg, was signed; but I doe not finde, that any other letters make mention of it; so that the certainty thereof must be attended till the next. I have herein inclosed to you an accompt, which came lately to the French ambassador heere from their ambassador, which is endeavouring a peace betweene the great duke of Muscovy and the king of Sweden; and for what further I referr you to the above-mentioned expresse; onely give me leave to add, that all men are extreemly inquisitive here, how his highness will relish this attempt of the king of Sweden, and am,

HONOURABLE SIR,

Your most faithfull humble servant,

Hague, Aug. 30. 1658. [N.S.]

G. DOWNING.

The Polish envoye was yesterday in conference with the deputies of the states, about makeing a treaty of allyance, and about borrowing of money. The states of Holland have sent a Galliot to their ambassador Beuningen at Copenhagen, to understand how matters are there.

I hope you received my last, which came in the ship with my lord Nieuport, wherein I gave you an account how it stands as to my lord Nieuport's present.

A letter of intelligence from the Hague.

A.D. 1658.

Vol. lx.
P. 424.

MONSIEUR,

Hollande

CEUX de 105 se montrent surpris de la descente des Suedois en Zeelande, mais ils savent bien, quel sujet ils ont continuellement donné a 141, car on a vu clair, que 105 auroient recommencé le meme jeu avec 142, sitost que 141 en auroit esté de hors : pour cette fin sont icy ceux de 142, 143, 170, 175, et l'on sçait les menées, que le 124 de 104 a tramé continuellement en 142 ; enaigrissant tousjours les affaires. 139 n'auroit pas esté capable de faire un pas contre tant et de si puissants ennemis, si il n'estoit pas assuré par derniere. En effect les 105 ne se soucient point de la ratification du traité a Elbing ; ayant l'opinion de 141, qu'il ne leur gardera pas parole, mesurant le cœur d'autrui par leur, et neantmoins ils ont depuis quelque tempe commencé a cajoler fort le 125 de 141, luy proposant, qu'ils vouloient restaurer la conference et bonne correspondance avec 141 ; confessants, que l'amitie depuis dix ans n'avoit rien valu entre 141 et 105, mais qu'a present 105 vouloit effectivement retablir la vieille bonne amitie, confiance, et correspondance ; pour quelle fin ? pour induire par ce moyen le 141 a quitter le 142, et son avantage, et par apres luy donner le coup par derriere, comme déjà ils ont fait un fois. Et meme pour parvenir tant mieux a cela, ils ont extremement cajolé le 125 de 130. Le 181 tache a luy donner continuellement des impressions, que maintenant 105 sont fort sincerement intentionnés pour le bien de 130, comme si 130 auroit perdu la memoire, comment des l'an 1652 ils ont conspiré avec 142 a la ruine de 130.
 Toute la haine principale de 105 contre 141 n'estant, que par ce que 141 demeurait amy de 130, comme si 130 auroit oublié comment 105 veulent engloutir tout 179 au prejudice de 130. 104 savent trop bien les discours, que 181, 182, 186, ont tenu et tiennent tant de 130 que des siens. Et si 105 se pouvoient fier, que les autres 104 les suivroient, déjà ils auroient resolu 155 contre 130, 140 pour 139 mais ils savent bien ; que d'ordinaire, il y en a des 104, qui leur sont contraires, et en si hauts affaires, ce que l'un veut, l'autre ne veut pas. Pour revenir a 141, il faut que chacun sache ses affaires, et prenne ses mesures. Et l'interest de 130 est d'approuver ce que ses envieux desapprouvent ; et specialment les 105 : cui non notus Hylas ? et 130 tirera du dessein de 141 s'il reussit, des tres notables fruits ; mais 141 ne sauroit estre capable de rien faire sans s'assurer par derriere. Je suis,

MONSIEUR,

Ce 30 Aug. 1658. [N. S.]

Votre tres humble serviteur.

De Witt

De Witt to Nicuport, the Dutch ambassador in England.

MY LORD,

Hague, 30 August, 1658. [N. S.] A.D. 1658.

YOUR letter of the 23d instant is come safe to hand; you will undoubtedly admire to hear of the descent of the king of Sweden in Zealand, and the enterprize upon Glückstadt, &c. whereof the continuation with the ordinary post from Hamburg is come, as you will perceive by the inclosed copies. The lord states of Holland and West Friesland did meet upon this extraordinary advertisement, and their noble great lordships commissioners have consulted upon the said advertisement, and have unanimously resolved and judged, that this state is obliged by virtue of the alliance powerfully to assist the king of Denmark in his distress: what will be resolved by their noble great lordships upon this said advice, I will inform you in my next.

Vol. lx.
p. 426.

In the mean time I will not doubt, but that the said design of the king of Sweden will have been undertaken, without the knowledge and communication of the lord protector, as the resident Downing did seriously assure me; and that consequently his highness may be easily induced together with their high and mighty lordships to take the business to heart. There is nothing yet resolved upon the lord ambassador of Portugal his further memorandum. The envoy of the emperor is here; but yet he holds himself incognito, his followers not being in order.

The English resident to the states general.

THE under-written resident of England being certainly informed, that about the 24th of June last past, an English vessel, called the Love and Friendship of Burlington, whereof the master was one William Jarrett, and coming from Norway with her lading of planks, was taken by one Peter Thyssen of Ostend, against whom he had formerly made complaint, and carried to Delfryl, in the province of Groningen, where by order of the said Thyssen, the said loading was sold, and delivered to the buyers; and that notwithstanding the order of the magistrates of the said place to the contrary.

Vol. lx.
p. 446.

And being further informed, that about the 29th of July last past, an English ship, called Alexander, whereof the master was one George Oomer, laden with flax and other merchandizes at Middlebourg in Zealand, and sailing from thence towards London, was taken by one Scot of Ostend, and carried by him to Flushing, where he hath taken out and disposed a great deal of the lading and tackling of the said ship: all which being contrary to the neutrality of their harbours, and to the amity of peace between his master and the United Provinces, the said resident doth most earnestly desire, that it would please their lordships to give such orders to the admiralties of Middleburgh and Harlinguen respectively, as that the said vessels with their lading and tackling may be forthwith restored to their proprietors; and the said resident finding no end of complaints of this nature, cannot but at last (though with much regret) make known, that the subjects of his master have upon this only account suffered more in their shipping in, and merchandises by the havens, and subjects of the United Provinces, since the peace made between his master and them, while in open war with them, yea and that the havens of the United Netherlands are from day to day more prejudicious and injurious to them, then the havens of the Spanish Netherlands.

And although that it is true, that it hath pleased their lordships to return fair and promising answers to the many memorials which have been presented to them by the said resident of this kind, yet that it is as true, that the subjects of his master (except in one only case) have not found any real affection, reparation, or redress thereby; yea that instead thereof, some of the said pirates, for he can call them no otherwise, who sell and dispose ships and goods before or without some sentence obtained in some court of admiralty, have not only threatened, but been able farther to trouble and vex such of the subjects of his master, as in pursuance of the resolutions of their lordships have endeavoured to obtain their just rights.

The Danish ministers memorial read 1 September 1658, desiring speedy help against the king of Sweden.

HIGH and MIGHTY LORDS,

The under-written ministers of his majesty of Denmark and Norway, &c. do not doubt, but their lordships have understood as well by their memorial 25 August past, as by the letters and advice which are arrived since, that the king of Sweden, notwithstanding the peace lately made with his majesty, by the mediation of the king of France, and protector of the common-

A.D. 1658. common-wealth of England, &c. hath without any cause, and at unawares, invaded with his army the island of Zealand (not speaking of the hostilities committed in Holstein) to attack Copenhagen, and surprize the said citty with the Sound, so that it will not be necessary to inform your lordship by a more large recital of the unheard-of excesses so much detested by all Christian princes; but that they judge it fit effectually to pray their lordships to be pleased in their great prudence to consider the attempts and enterprises of the Swedes, and what the consequence thereof will be to the absolute ruin of the trade of the United Provinces, yea of the states also; therefore requiring your lordships, according to orders which they have received, not only to take a forcible resolution in conformity to the treaties of alliance of the year 1649 and 1657, made for the assurance of commerce, but for their own interest to assist the king of Denmark for the timely prevention of so dangerous and prejudicial attempts against the crown of Denmark, and to the subjects of this province; and (the fleet being absent) to cause to be most speedily equipped all such ships as are capable, and providing as soon as possible with souldiers and musquets, which may be speedily drawn from the companies to do the more service in such pressing occasions, whereunto we attend a most speedy and favourable answer.

Signed,

H. W. ROSENWING.

P. CHARISIUS.

Mr. Downing to secretary Thurloc.

Vol. lx.
P. 449.

HONOURABLE SIR,

UPON monday last I wrote to you by the way of Amsterdam, and upon tuesday by the way of Rotterdam, wherein I gave you a short account of the king of Sweden entring into Zeland, thinking it my duty to omitt no possible way of giving you notice of so important and unexpected a newes, with the which I had an expresse from Schiveling, but that those small vessels would not adventure to sea, the winde being contrary. Thursday last I wrote to you at large, by capt. Wright commander of the Fame frigott, and did desire him therewith to make all possible haste, not being assured whither the king of Sweden, or Sir Philip Meadows, had given you notice of what had past; and on friday I wrote to you by the post, since which time Monsieur Beuningen, late ambassador at Copenhagen, is arrived here, who sayth, that when he was just ready to set sayle from Copenhagen, newes came thither of the king of Sweden's being landed, and that the king of Denmark was extreemly amazed thereat, but withall resolved to abide all extremities, and not to quitt Copenhagen; and that this invasion of the king of Sweden had made them all in Copenhagen unanimous as one man, but that the place is not strong. He sayth moreover, that some dayes before the king of Sweden's landing, a letter was brought to the king of Denmark, he knew not how, nor was it signed, but the substance thereof was to lett the king of Denmark know, that if he did desire to save his own life and the life of his queene and sonne, that he should doe well forthwith to retire into Norway; that upon receipt hererof the king produced the said letter in his councill with these words, that if any one had a mind to kill him, they might, for that he was resolved not to quit Copenhagen; but he had not any manner of thoughts of any invasion. Since the arrivall of Mr. Beuningen, are come letters to the state from their minister at Elsenor, of the 22d instant, wherein he writes, that the king of Sweden was come before Copenhagen, and had begun to break earth; that they within the towne were resolved to hazard all extremities; that the castle of Kronenburg was in good order, strong, and well provided; and for the towne of Elsenor, that they were resolved to sett fire on it, in case of the Swedes approach; that the king of Sweden's fleet consisting of 19 men of warre was before Copenhagen, and that there were thirteen ships more then coming, which he supposed might be men of warre, but was not certain. Monsieur Appleboom hath not yet one word from the king of Sweden, nor is there yet any manifesto come declaring the reasons of his attempt, which what advantage it gives to the enemies of the king of Sweden is easy to conjecture, and Mr. Applebom knows not what to say or doe, or what to desire of any friend in any kind, in relation to this business. The states of Holland have resolved to assist the king of Denmarke according to their treaty with him, to witt, with 6000 foot, which by the said treaty they are obliged to deliver upon the place; and this resolution hath bin tendered by the states of Holland in the states general; but is not there as yet accorded to to by the rest of the provinces, the members declaring, that they must expect orders from A.D. 1658. their principalls. In the meane while the preparations goe on, orders are given to gett out to the harbour's mouth all the men of warre that are ready, or near ready; and they do count upon 18 or 19 sayle of men of warre, which they can have in a few days ready, besides 3 or 4, which usually are employed in convoyes; and the admiralty of Amsterdam undertakes to furnish 13 sayle more. All this is built upon; but whether the effect will answer the designe, in a few dayes I shall be able to give you an accompt. Divers of the townes of Holland were become very desirous, that matters might have been accomodated between the king of Swede and this state; but this attempt hath changed the face of all things here. If this state and the king of Sweden had been accorded, the elector of Brandenburg must have fallen in, for that this state hath garrisons in several of his principall townes; and indeed even this resolution of the states of Holland might have been hindred at least for a considerable time, if the king of Swede had but done soe much as but written one word or two to Mr. Appleboom, declaring the grounds of this his undertaking; or onely saying, that he had good grounds, and that he would declare them. But as the busines stands, though all this preparation is here makeing, he speaks not a word in defence of his master, though the consequences of what is now doing may be very greate; and I can assure you, that the ministers of the emperor, Poland, Brandenburg, and all their friends, doe keep holyday at this busines; and the king of Sweden declaring nothing, they make bold to declare sufficiently against him. I beg I may have orders as soon as it is possible. I have thought it my duty not to omit writing thus much by this occasion of this expresse, which I heard was going to my lord Newport. I shall only add, that I am,

HONOURABLE SIR,

Your most faithfull humble servant,

Hague, 2 Sept. 1658. [N. S.]

- G. DOWNING.

A letter of intelligence from Bruges.

SIR,

III this 2 Sept. stilo novo. 1658.

Y^e Esterday I came from Newport, where we were Vol. lx. h a f t h a t t h u r f d a y l a s t G r a v l 21 p. 451. 31 2 24 78 32 3 79 upon 80 33 81 71 73 15 4 94 44 5 74 77 27 72 1 82 45 i n w a s y e e l d e d; c o n d i t i o n s w 35 53 88 2 75 95 21 22 46 16 18 16, the 11 57 53 17 36 78 37 58 54 76 89 e y e t f o r c e 19 96 20 79 know not; all the 24 58 72 12 21 that wil be ther wil hardly make t w e n t i e f i v e h u n d e r e d, 78 86 22 55 79 37 18 25 38 83 19 34 83 52 14 20 69 21 15, which will not m a n a g e h a l f e o u t w o r k e s. D. of York i 50 2 53 3 30 22 31 4 47 26 18 the 60 84 77 87 56 69 40 19 76. 106 39 s f t i l l L. Newburg b e t w e e n e D. of Y. h i s l 73 74 78 35 44 45 there. 118 was 6 18 80 88 19 20 54 21 106 31 38 74 47 o d g i n g n i g h t, m e t c a p t 57 16 27 37 55 28 and his owne at 52 38 29 32 77, 51 22 78 with 13 5 62 79 i n A r r i n, c a p t i n s, l a y w a i 39 53 7 69 35 54, one of his owne 10 1 63 80 36 55 76, who 44 2 97 86 3 37 t f o r h i m, f t o b e d d e f p e r a t 77 23 58 70 34 38 48, was 73 78 59 8 18 17 most 14 20 74 63 21 71 3 79 l y h e a d n e c k; b u f e c o t f a v 46 94 in the 32 22 4 15 and 52 18 11 43; his 9 84 26 19 11 58 80 75 5 85 e d b o d y. h e e w i l l n o t r e c 20 16 his 6 56 14 95. It is thought 31 21 22 86 35 46 47 52 56 77 69 18 12 o v e r i t, S i r R i c h a r d M a l i 57 85 18 70 36 78, wear it not for 74 37 71 72 38 13 32 3 70 17 51 4 44 39 v r i e h e k i l l e d H e i s f l e 81 69 35 19 32 20 had 40 36 45 46 21 14 him out. 33 22 37 76 26 47 18 d F r e n c; c a p t i n e A r m f 15 to the 23 70 19 52 10; a day or two before 11 5 64 78 38 53 20 1 71 48 76 t r o n g k i l l e d a t d e w e l l, 80 72 60 54 29 was 41 39 44 45 20 15 2 80 a 16 21 87 22 46 47 117, and h i s c r e w g o n B r e d a. C. Ste. c o n 34 35 73 10 69 18 88 ar 30 56 55 to 9 70 19 17 2. 104 intends to 11 57 52 Vol. VII. 4 X 79

A.D. 1658. t i n u e w h i l e H o g a n f t r a t; 79 36 53 83 20 a 86 34 37 44 21 at 31 58 29 3 54 74 80 71 4 77; but will d e w e l l a r s c o m n e e r h i suffer none of the 14 22 89 18 46 47 4 72 75 to 12 59 51 54 19 20 69 31 37
m. Hyde i s m o f t B r e d a; Ormond f t u d
 48. 120 38 76 for the 49 60 73 77 in 8 70 20 17 14; and 113 74 78 84 14
y i n g n e w p l o t s. f i c k i n G e n 94 38 55 30 52 21 88 61 44 60 79 75. 114 is 76 39 10 43 35 52 29 18 53 d t, w i t h C. St. n o r D. John.
 15 78, and hes not been this long tyme neither 86 36 79 31 104 54 56 69 105. I O l a c m u c h D. John, t h e w h fynd 64 47 5 10 48 85 13 32 offended with 105, and generally 77 34 18 89 31 o l e c o n t r i e; D. John y e f 57 44 19 10 58 55 78 70 39 20; ther is great reason for it, 105 was 96 21 75
t e r n i g h t e x f p e c t e d 79 22 71 52 35 27 34 80 18 90 73 61 19 10 77 20 14 heere, but will not bee w e l c o m. u r a c a d i n g r e e 86 21 44 10 60 48. They are 82 69 3 11 4 15 35 52 30 all the ft 70 18 19 t s n o f o l d i e r s c o m i 78 74 heere, but they will suffer 53 56 75 57 44 16 36 18 71 76 to 12 58 49 37 n; t o w n f m e n.
 54; neither is there any but the 79 59 86 55 73 51 20 52. Wee have it heere, that
D. John h e d b i n d e f e a t e d h e w e n t f 105 31 21 14 6 39 52 17 22 23 80 1 18 19 14 since 32 20 87 21 53 77 24
r o m h e n c. E n g l i s h F r e n c 72 60 51 32 22 54 12. If the 18 55 27 46 35 75 34 and 25 69 19 52 13 bee d o w n e b e f o r e p e r o r N e in condition to lay 14 57 89 53 20 9 21 26 58 70 22 I 62 18 71 59 72 54 19
w p o r t, c a r y i t; p e o p 86 63 60 69 80, they will 10 4 70 94 38 77; for I perceive theise 64 20 56 61 l e c o u r a g e.
 44 21 have lost their 12 60 87 70 4 27 22. I will not trouble you further at present, but humbly begs your advice wher I er: upon my word I have alwayes told you truth. I beg pardon for this boldnesse. I rest,

SIR,

Your most obedient servant,

MARGARET SMITH.

Emperor Leopold to the states general.

Lectum den 3 Sept. 1658. [N. S.]

Vol. ix.
p. 456.

LEopoldus divina favente clementia electus Romanorum imperator semper Augustus, ac Germaniæ, Bohemiæ, Hungariæ, Dalmatiæ, Croatiae, Sclavoniæ, &c. rex, archidux Austriæ, dux Burgundiæ, Stiriae, Carinthiæ, Carniolæ, et Virtembergæ, comes Tyrolis, elect. charissimis amicis nostris generalibus fæderati Belgii statibus, salutem et benevolentiam nostram Cæsaream. Amici charissimi, mittimus ad vos honorabilem consiliarium nostrum et sacri imperii fidelem dilectum Johannem Triquetium, ut de nostro amicitiae et bonæ vicinitatis studio certos vos reddat, prout ex vivo ejusdem consiliarii nostri sermone percipietis, cui plenam in hoc fidem habere cupimus. Vobiscum benevo-lentiam nostram Cæsaream offerimus. Dabantur in civitate nostrâ imperiali Francofurti die 3 Augustii 1658, regnorum nostrorum Romani primo, Hungariæ quarto, Bohemiæ vero secundo.

Vester bonus amicus

LEOPOLDUS.

Ferdinandus comes Curtius,

Signatum,

J. WALDERODE.

Secretary Thurloe to H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland.

MY LORD,

In the possession of the rt.
 hon. the earl of Shelburne.

HIS highnesse continueinge ill hath given a stopp to all buisines: he was soe well upon friday, that wee hoped the worst of his sicknesse was over; but it pleased God, that upon saterday morneinge he fell into a fitt of an ague, and by its course ever since, it appeares

peares to be a tertian. The fitts were longe and somewhat sharpe; but yet the last was not A.D. 1658. soe badd as the former. This beinge the intervall day, he came from Hampton-court hither, all the doctors judgeinge this to be much the better place, besides the advantage, which the change of aire usually gives for the recovery out of agues. And although it be an ill tyme of the yeare to have an ague in, yet it beinge a tertian, and his highnesse beinge pretty well in the intervalls, the doctors doe not conceive there is any danger as to his life. However your excellency will easiely ymagine, how much trouble wee are all under here; and though it shall please the Lord to recover him againe, yet certainly considering the tyme that this visitation is in, and other circumstances relateing thereunto, it cannot but greatly affect us all towards God, and make us deeply sensible, how much our dependance is upon him, in whose hands is the life and breath of this his old servant; and if he should take him away from amongst us, how terrible a blow it would be to all the good people of the land; and that therefore wee should be carefull, how wee walke towards God, least wee provoke him to depart from us, and bringe upon us this great evil. The people of God here pray much for his recovery, and I hope those in Ireland will doe the same; and to have his life spared and his health restored by prayer, is a great addition to the mercy. I will not trouble your excellency with any thinge now: I have noe heart to doe it, untill it please God to heare prayer in this matter; nor indeed is there any great matter of newes, but what is in print. I rest,

Your EXCELLENCYE'S

Most obedient and humble servant,

JO. THURLOE.

His highnes is just now enteringe into his fitt; I beseech the Lord to be favourable to him in it.

24 Aug. 1658.

General Flectwood to H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland.

DEAR BROTHER,

I Gave you in my last an account of his highnes hopefull recovery; but the lord was pleased upon thursday last to let his distemper return, and hade a very sore second fite upon saturday, whic is now turned into a tertian ague. This last fitt was yeasterday, but not so great as the former fitt, and did rest the last night very well, and is in a hopefull way. The physitians advise his highnes coming to London, which is done this day, and to remaine at Whitehall for some time. Jameses-howe is conceived much better ayre then Whitehall, and is preparing for his highnesse's reception; but if the Lord please to remove the presant distemper suddenly, it will be endeavord to get his highness into some fresh ayre, wheare he may have the liberty to use recreation. This dispensation hath indead that in it, which ought exceedingly to awaken us, and to be earnest with the Lord, that we may search for what he thus reproves. Ther is none but are deeply concerned in this, that have a true love to this blessed cause: for the further carying on of the same, the Lord will bring him forth with more vigour, life, and zeale. His highnes hath hade very great discoveryes of the Lord to him in his sicknes, and hath had some assurances of his being restored, and made further serviceable in this worke: this latter is secretly kept, and therfor I shall desire it may not goe further then your own breast; but I think ther is that in this experience, that may truly be worthy of your further knowledg. The counsell have reade your letter, and are at presant in no condicion to answer the contents thereof by any additionall supply, then what is already ordered; the letter is referred to a committee: what we can doe, you may be assured of: in perticuler wherein I can serve you, I hope you will beleive there is none more ready then

Your most affectionate brother, and humble servant.

August 24. [1658.]

Dr. Thomas Clarges to H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland.

May it please your EXCELENCY,

SINCE the takeing of Gravelin, cardinall Mazarine is gone towards Paris; which makes many beleive, the French army will attempt litle more this campagne, though others think they will not loose the occasion of persueing their prosperous fortune. Neuport or Ipren

In the possession of the rt. hon. the earl of Shelburn.

A.D. 1658. Ipre are the next places in expectation to be besieged; and the first of them has bin for some weeks streightned by marshall Thurene. The prince of Conde and Marcin have got together a good body of horse, and are upon some designe, which will be discovered by the next. The calling of a parliament has bin lately delayed by reason of his highnes sicknes; but his recovery, which is in a good measure advanced, will draw on considerations about it. His highnes is this day come from Hampton-court to Whitehall, and the soldiers are to remove from St. Jameses, which is to be præpared for his residence; because Whitehall's scituation is too neere the water. The late disturbance of the minesters in Scotland was only from the Presbitery of Jaddard, who scrupled at the toleration of religion held forth in the petition and advice; but things will be well quieted quickly there, where a servant of your excellency is vigilant and carefull in all occasions. I am,

May it please your EXCELENCY,

Your EXCELENCIE'S

London, this 24th August, 1658.

Most humble servant,

THOMAS CLARGES.

General Monck to secretary Thurloe.

MY LORD,

Vol. lx.
P. 457.

I Have received your letter, by which I understand collonell Ker is at London. Truly I condemne collonell Ker more than any other man for that testimony of the presbytery of Jedburgh, and I shall testifie it to his face, if ever he comes hither; and he had the least reason of any man in Scotland to doe it, being in the condition of a prisoner, and so much obliged to his highness: and this action of his was not according to promise. I had a good opinion of him before; but hereafter I shall look upon him as hee is, as a factious man, and one that is not willing to live peaceable, unlesse things bee ordered according to his minde. I thank you for the good newes you wrote me of his highnesse recovery from sicknesse: I pray God continue itt, and preserve him from all dangers, which shall bee my daily prayers to the Almighty for him; which is all at present from him, who is

Your LORDSHIPPE

Very humble servant,

Dalkeith, 24 Aug. 1658.

GEORGE MONCK.

Monsieur Fly to Bourdeaux, the French ambassador in England.

MY LORD,

Calais, the 4th of September, 1658. [N. S.]

Vol. lx.
P. 463.

OUR last post being staid by those of Hesdin, it arrived here but on sunday, which was the day that his eminence went from hence. He is to lye this night at Abbeville.

The army is gone from Graveling, and is joyned with that Monsieur De Turenne, which we beleive to be at Furnes or Ipre. Monsieur le Marshall de la Ferté is gone with his eminence. There is a report, that Newport will be besieged; a few days will let us know the design. His eminence hath left orders for the repairing and finishing of the workes of Graveling; it is not yet known who shall be governor thereof.

Sir Tho. Bendyshe, ambassador at Constantinople, to the protector.

SIR,

Vol. lx.
P. 467.

I Hope the good lucke of such phisitians, who are entertained not so much for their greater skill as their much diligence in visits and attendance, that although my advices bee not very considerable, or much weighty, yet for the frequency of them, they may be acceptable unto your highness, whom my last of July the 24th humbly acquainted with the proceedings of the discontented bassa of Aleppo on Asia side, wherein he seemes to be confirmed, and hardned rather than to bee any whitt taken of by faire meanes, or checked by foule; so that the profered command of Babilon perswades him not to backe, or threats fright him, and therefore are preparations made to force him. The grand signor, who who still continueth at Adrianople, as hee thinketh himselfe most secure, having issued A.D. 1658. his comands to the newly made bassia of Aleppo, Damasco, and of other places thereabouts, to arme against him on the reere, whilst forces are sent from hence, which passed over some few dayes since Scutary on Asia side, to oppose his advance, proclaiming mean while him and his adherents rebels, and (which sounds with them more odiously) Gowers, the usual reproache for Christians, and their title to wives and all possessions forfeited, the smart of which censures some considerable persons here, fautors of Hassan, have lately felt; but he it seemes is too sturdy to give ground; upon the noyse whereof thinking hee hath reason, justice, and strength enough on his side to bear him out, and endeavours to convince the world sufficiently thereof, by scattering his manifestos, by erecting formall judicatories, by creating all officers both for their religion and state, and exercising an absolutenes over his numerous followers. And the truth is, his greatnes is such, and the danger thereby, is as thought, only controulable by the Vizier himselfe, who therefore (as is the generall discourse) is upon an accommodation, (which I hope some considerations not long since offered and urged by mee upon the vizier will somewhat facilitate) with the Transilvanian; and tis not improbable, but that hee may make a hasty (though slight) cure in those parts, the better to apply himselfe to the more dangerous disease of the bowells. Howe're I am not without my suspicions, that these reports may bee artifice to affright Hassan, and dishearten such as incline to him; but my affection for that good prince, and that people, make me almost beleive the best. If this hitts well, the French ambassador's release (who with his sonne is still continued prisoner at Adrianople) may be hastened; and I have hope (if he succeeds) those longed for Arabian horses for your highness's service will be sent, which by reason of those commotions, as wee conceive, can scarcely be purchased, at least not securely sent. I have scarce confidence to mention them, whilst having so little assurance of them, but rather than be suspected of the least negligence, I will confesse a disability.

The sicknesse, which seems to rage and hath affrighted mee even at my gate, makes mee with God's good protection seeke my security in the country, but not so farre off, but I shall bee at hand to discharge that trust, which your clemency has imposed uppon,

SIR,

Your HIGHNESS's

faithfull servant and most obedient subject,

Pera di Constantinople, August
the 25th, 1658.

THO. BENDYSHE.

Col. Howard to secretary Thurloe.

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

SINCE I sent the addresse from the grand jurors of this county, I received the in- Vol. lx.
closed from those of Northumberland; and I finde generally in these partes the people p. 465.
desirous of a settlement. And these, who have bin against such a one, as you and I think to be the best, are now very willing to submit. I have nothing else, but that I am,

Your faithfull and humble servant,

Naward, this 25th of August, 1658.

HOWARD.

A letter of intelligence from the Hague.

Samedy le 31 d'Aoust. 1658. [N. S.]

LE fleur Beuningen est revenu icy, ne sachant rien du seige, en estant parti un peu devant : Vol. lx.
il aura dit, que Copenhagen est sans danger et bien pourveu. Aujourd'huy est fort p. 428.
harangué de par la Hollande (en corps estant dans les estats generaux) de la necessité d'assister le Dennemarcke, tant en vertu des traites, que par raisons d'estat. Ils ont pro-posé d'aggrandir chaque compagnie de 25 hommes; d'envoyera vers le Dennemarck un secours de six mille hommes, ou moins de 4000, qu'on envoyera 20 mille rixdollars en ar-gent, et 10 mille en necessites vers les villes de Luckstadt et Crempe, pour les conserver :
la Hollande l'avancera.

Dans le Bocht sont six navires; dans le canal six; sous de Witt sont quatre: en Frise

A.D. 1658. trois ; en tout 19. Ceux la font tous mandes a venir icy : en leur place iront du petit vaertuych. De Ruyter avec sa flotte ne bougera pas.

Vers chaque province ira un député pour recommander cecy.

La Frise, secundé de Groningue, ont parlé d'un mareschall de camp, mais les autres provinces n'ont rien dit.

Dimanche le 1 Sept.

Sur une lettre du resident le Maire du 22 Aug. de Croneburg fust a ce matin assemblée, ou le sieur Beuningen de meme fit rapport summaire, que le roy auroit dit : j'ai desja perdu la moitié de mon royaume et ma reputation ; je ne veu pas me retirer ; ains conserver Coppenhagen ou mourir. Il dit, que le garrison estoit de 2400 hommes, 3000 bourgeois, 1400 chevaux, dont toutefois partie servit seclu par les Swedois. Il dit que dans la ville il y avoit ou auroit faute de vivres.

La force Swedoise estoit 10 mille hommes par terre, et 40 navaires par mer. On cannonnoit desja la ville, et Croneburch aussi.

Elseigneur estoit sommée de fournir 307500 livres de pain, tant de tonne de biere, tant de fel, sous de piene de brusler la ville.

L'on acheva la resolution de samedy, mais tout cela n'est que deliberation : car il faut que les provinces consentent. Au soir on besoigna avec le conseil d'estat sur les patentes, pour trouver au moins 60 compagnies ; mais le sieur Beverning dit, que dans Coppenhagen estant disette de vivres, il estoit a craindre, que ces 6000 hommes acheveroient Coppenhagen ; nuicroient plus, qu'il ne profiteroient ; qu'il failloit parler avec les ministres de Denemarck ; s'ils n'aimoient mieux les secours en argent : item de envoyer plus tost 1500 hommes comme dans Danfigk.

Lundy le 2 ditto.

L'on a ce matin mis sur le papier 38 compagnies pour estre envoyes contre la Swede. Le colonel Pichler en fera chef ; sous quatre lieutenants colonels Erentrieter, Mansart, Armanvilliers, et Vane. Et quatre majeurs, Nylant, van Santen, des Ombres, Askyn. L'assemblée des estats de Hollande est separée, pour revenir de demain en huit jours.

Mardy le 3 ditto.

La lettre credentiale de S. M. imp. est lue, et le titre charissimi amici trouve suffisant ; et sur cela accordée l'audience pour demain.

Il y a eu un memoire ou papier de l'ablegat de Poloigne, contenant un plus expresse deduction d'un project d'une alliance pour la defension de la mer Baltique et de commerce.

Le resident de Denemarck par memoire a requis, qu'il plaise a cest estat d'envoyer copie de la resolution de samedy passé a l'electeur de Brandeburch, pour l'encourager au secours de Denemarck : ce qu'on n'a pas trouvé a propos de faire.

Ceux de Hollande et Zelande ont proposé a ce que au roy de Swede soit escrit touchant les navires, qu'il detient au Sont, le requerant de les relascher.

Mecredy le 4 ditto.

Le sieur ablegat de l'empereur a eu audience, conduit par les sieurs de Crommon et Renfwoode ; ayant achevé de proposer en Latin, le sieur president luy a respondu en Flammande, le tout en compliments.

Il a esté requis de baller sa proposition par escrit : il a respondu, qu'il le fera par occasion.

Il y a eu des deputes de l'admiraulté de Amsterdam et Rotterdam ; ils esperent de mettre ensemble 30 navires, et est conclu et resolu, que les 38 compagnies auront leur patentes pour se rendre au plustost sur l'isle de Schelling, et l'on levera des flutes pour leur transport.

Le resident Downing aura faite plainte de certaines 2 navires, qui sont arrestés quelque part.

Il y aura aussi eu un memoire du resident Appleboom, contenant declaration generale de la bonne intention de la bonne correspondance entre le roy et cest estat.

Jeudy le 5 ditto.

Il y a eu beaucoup de contestation contre ceux de Zeelande, qui non seulement font difficulté de faire l'ulterieur equipage, si on ne leur fournit pas l'argent, mais encore aussi aussy ne veulent point la revocation de Cornelis Everts, qui commande dans la Bocht, A.D. 1658. disant que le petit Vaertuych, qu'on veut envoyer en la place de cest esquadre, ne suffit pas pour brider et empescher les depredations; ains qu'il faut des grands navires.

La Hollande aussy fait difficulté de avancer les 30000 ryxdolers pour proviander les fortresses de Holsteyn; mais toutefois est resolu de passer outre; a continuer la besoigne præparatoire en attendant les resolutions des provinces. Le prince Guillaume sera allé en personne de Turnhout vers a Frise et Groningue.

Bref, en attendant l'on ne perd point de temps pour donner maturité a la besoigne et la forme de l'exploit.

Vendredy le 6 ditto.

Aujourd'huy l'ambassadeur de France, aussy bien que le resident d'Angleterre, ont offert leur mediation pour accommoder la guerre entre cest estat et le Portugal.

Le resident de Dennemarck a requis, que provisionnellement l'on veuille envoyer les douze navires, qui sont prests, vers Dennemarck, pour harasser les Suedois; mais l'on ne la pas trouvé bon, ains y aller avec un force suffisante.

Le dit sieur resident aussy a refuté par un memoire celuy du resident de Swede.

Le fils du sieur Boreel a bien eu audience, mais n'a rien dit que choses generales, de l'huile de baleine, des taxes estrangeres, mais a demandé des commissaires. Pour encore son voyage n'a signifié pas grand chose.

Mr. Downing to secretary Thurloc.

HONOURABLE SIR,

Findeing by your last, that the Holland's post was not come in, I am in greate paine for Vol. 1x. all the letters, which I have written since, the winde still haveing bin heare West-P. 470. wardly; and this fall out unhappily to keepe from you the knowledge of so unexpected a newes, as I believe the Swedes having re-entred Zeeland, and having besieged Copenhagen, is unto you; whereof I gave you an account by two letters upon tuesday was a se'night, the one by the way of Amsterdam, and the other by the way of Rotterdam; and yesterday was a se'night, by an expres by captain Wright, commander of the Fame frigot; and this day se'night by the post; and upon monday last by an expres, which was sent from the states to the lord Nieuport, I gave you an account, that the states of Holland had resolved, in pursuance of their treaty with the king of Denmark, to send a considerable fleete with 6000 men for Copenhagen; in pursuance whereof all imaginable expedition is made: but their ships were many of them abroad upon the coast, and in the channell; and they were forced to stay the recalling of them home: and it's generally believed, that Copenhagen will be surrendred, and taken by force, before supply can come. I have herein inclosed to you, copyes of all the resolutions of the states, that have been taken in this particular, to which I refer. Admirall Opdam tells me, that he is makinge all possible hast to make himself ready to goe in person with this fleete; and he regrets much the absence of De Ruyther with that brave fleete, as he sayth it is a very brave fleete, consisting of 22 sayle of men of warre, a list whereof I sent you 2 or 3 months agoe; and young Tromp is at the bottom of the Streights with two men of warre, which is all to the Southward and Westward, farther than the Channel; out of which all are by galliots sent for to come home for this expedition to the Sound; and you shall not sayle of a speedy and exact list of them. No man almost dares now name a Swede at Amsterdam, except with indignation. I have also herein inclosed to you a copy of a letter, which I received thence this morning. I have herein inclosed a memoriall, which I have presented to the states generall the other day, concerning two ships brought into the harbours of this state by Flanders men of warre; and I finde that this memoriall hath extremely nettled them; yet I thought in duty I owe to his highness's service, I could not say less, having before made so many complaints of that kinde, and with so little fruit; and I pray, that upon the receipt of this memoriall I may have some particular directions from you about such like buisnesses. I have also herein inclosed to you copies of memorialls presented by the French ambassador and myself, concerning the present treaty with Portugal. The president of the states generall told me this morning, that the states had received a letter from Hamburgh, wherein it was written, that there was newes come from Lubeck to Hamburgh, that the Swedes had made two attacques upon Copenhagen, but had been repulsed; and that this newes should be come to Lubeck by an English ship, which had bin stopt among others by the Swede, but had privately made her escape from out of their fleete. The Portugal ambassador desired earnestly, that I would shew him a copy of the treaty between England and his master, for that he had none by him, and was affraid least some error might slip him for want thereof; and in particular, in relation to

A.D. 1658. to the trade of Brasile. I pray therefore, that for the prevention of any thing of that kind, I may have that treaty, and the treaty with France, and Sweden, and Denmark; and if you please to send them to my servant John Hawley at major Greenleif's house in Axe-yard, King-street, he will take care to convoy them to me; and that I may have also a copie of the particulars of the treaty marine lately offered to you by my lord Neuport, as also

ld. prot. gu ar ra n ty that I may have orders from you in relation to 534 his 318 213 437 104 475 of the present treaty K.of Portugal and stat. gen. Portugal will be much more scrupulous in it, seeing what is fallen out betweene 536 207 537. When you shall have received my pacquet by captain Wright, I doubt not but I shall have your directions in relation to 572 and 573 there 361 141 477 145 411 328 483 Ch. St. D. of Yor. letter s to T om Ho wa r d.

479 betweene 541 207 555, the 551 ambaffador having already desired it; and that he will be very loath to come to any conclusion without he shall have it; and he K. of Sw. and K. of D.

132 33. I have herein inclosed to you a printed paper come from Franckfort, concerning the business betweene the Swede and the Dane, which I thought it might not be amiss to send, there being not as yet any manifesto come out from the king of Sweden, nor one word to Monsieur Appleboom, since this new attaque. Friquet, the emperour's envoy, had his audience the other day. The title which the emperor in the credentials gave the states was, charissimi amici; but the said Friquet gave not in writing any copy of what they said, nor hath he notified his arrivall to me, nor to the French ambaffador, nor Mr. Appleboom. I have herein inclosed to you a memorial of the envoye of Poland, whereby you will perceive what cloudes are gathering hereabouts, upon the account of this new enterprize of the king of Sweden's, which hath already made so strange and suddaine a change hereabouts, and is like daily to make more, when as things were in appearance like to have come to a suddaine closure, between his and this K. of Swed. ma f t er of Denm.

state. And this is plaine, that when 536 371 140 146 286 408 552, it will be K. of Poland the emperor. thereby clearly in his choice to make peace or warre with 538 and 539. I have this Ch. Stuart day given notice to the president of the states generall, that 572 hath been at Hounfledike, and continues yet within their territories. I have herein inclosed what news I have from his court. The companyes, which are to goe for Copenhagen, have all orders to goe with all expedition to the rendezvous at the Texell, among which are to be six English and six French companyes. I pray, that you will be pleased to think of settling the allowances of 150 l. per yeare for the English ministers here, so as that the first quarter may be paid at Michaelmas, else I shall be quite at a losse in that business, which I hope may be of very great good; and am

HONOURABLE SIR,

Your most faithfull and humble servant,

Hague, Sept. 6, 1658. [N. S.]

G. DOWNING.

Since the writing heerof, I have given notice to the states generall, that Ch. Stuart now at Teeling, and intends to lye there this night; whereupon they have at last ordered the deputies of Holland to take care, that the treaty be observed, which is as good as nothing. If they would, they might take him.

Many of the states generall are now going to Skeeveling, to see some experiments of fire-workes, which are to be sent for Denmarke.

Intelligence sent by resident Downing.

Vol. lxi. p. 35. THERE are now at Flushing one Slingsby, who commanded the great fort of Bristol, when it was taken; he is a little man, black haire halfe turned gray, hath pockholes in his face, and is one of the captains in the regiment of guards to Charles Stuart. Captain Brawton also is there, who is a little man, with long black haire, going a little lame with one leg; he was formerly sent over a messenger in the former plott, but went by the name of Padden, and was taken at Dover with Daniel Oneale, but made his escape. Also Lawrence Ball, a tall young man, pockholes in his face, and light brown hair. There is also collonel Phillips, a fair-haired man, pretty gros, and his face full of pockholes. I beleve he is only there to send Brawton away; but the others will go for England

England by the next passage, and are dangerous persons. Collonel Stephens is now at Antwerp, and will slip to England very suddainly. A.D. 1658.

Charles Stuart was at Hounslerdike yesterday very privately, and this morning he goes to Sir William Frogmorton's, wide of Madstrickt; from thence to Mynheere Swiliston's, near Utrecht, onely to take his pleasure; he hath noe-body with him but the lord Gerrard Armorer, and one who lookes to his cloathes, and the lord Ormond.

Here is now in town collonel Hurry, the chancellor's two sons, collonel Dorsey and the lord Norris.

At Amsterdam, the lord Balcarres, generall Middleton, lord Culpeper, who is newly come from Charles Stuart. The prince's royal resolves to be heere on monday next. Sir Marmaduke Langdale is still at Brussells. The chancellor keepes house now at Breda. secretary Nicolas hath taken a house in Brussells. Charles Stuart will receive a greatesum of money from the Spaniard after Michaelmas, and hath already orders for it.

The lord Newburgh, who was imployed with Middleton for the business of Scotland, is now dying, having been set upon by two Irishmen, and dangerously cutt and wounded in the head, face and belly. Sir Richard Maliverer, who was with him, is also hurt, and lyeth very ill. Sir John Mince, who was imployed for the sea affaires, is gone to Nimeguen. And so they are all disperst up and down. They are in great feare, that the protector should be crowned; for then they give all for lost. Just now I am informed, that Charles Stuart went the last night with the prince's royal to Teeling, where they intend to stay all this day, being the 6th of September, and to morrow the prince's royal intends to returne back to Hounslerdike, and Charles Stuart onwards his said intended journey.

The king of Sweden to the states general.

NOS CAROLUS, &c.

HIGH and mighty good friends and confederates, the castle of Cronenburg being happily reduced into our hands, the resident in Denmark, the noble and sincerely beloved Mair, came unto us, signifying, that he was resolved to goe into Holland to receive new orders, after this change of affairs, desiring of us a passport for his more securely voyaging: wee granting, indeed, his petition should have been glad to have seen, that he would here have waited for orders from his principals, that by his stay in these parts, if perchance any thing had fell out in the traffick of the subjects of the United Provinces by our officers, which should be worthy of our knowledge, care, or remedy, he might be at hand to speake and confer about them; for it would concerne the sincere desire of our friendship, which we shall ever be ready to maintain, as more largely we have expressed in former letters, if so be that in the Danish affairs, or in the business of any other our enemies, you shall no way meddle, but carry yourselves towards us, as the antient and profitable alliance between our predecessors and your common wealth doth require. That for a little time without any damage we detained some Dutch ships, you will not judge or interpret amiss: that is ordinary not only in all nations, but amongst you chiefly in such occasions; and not only your ships, but the ships of other nations, and those of our own subjects underwent the same stop during the hot attack. As we are resolved to maintain sincere amity with your republic, if you by a mutual correspondence will favour the same, and as we know well enough, that you have a special and particular care of the liberty of navigation and commerce, we will earnestly endeavour with you, that you may plainly understand, that we will not be behind you in promoting the same, nor any other in manifesting good will towards the subjects of the United Provinces, with which we heartily recommend you to divine protection.

Your good friend and confederate,

Given at Elsenore, 8 Sept. 1651.

CHARLES GUSTAVUS.

Mr. Downing's memorial for an English ship brought in by an Ostender.

7 Sept. 1658. [N. S.]

THE under-written resident of England, &c. being certainly informed, that a certain English ship, called the Richard and Susan of Dover, whereof one Christopher Dawson was master, coming from London, and bound for Rotterdam, was taken on wednesday last, being the 4th instant, by one Cornelius Bornler of Ostend, and brought into Goree, Vol. lxi. p. 49.

A.D. 1658. where the said ship, together with the said man of war now are; and being farther certainly informed, that the said pirate hath unladen and taken out of the said ship moneys and goods, to the value of above 100l. sterling, contrary to the law and practice of all nations, the present peace between his most serene highness and this state, and their own late placart; the said resident doth therefore earnestly require, that forthwith without any manner of delay, the said ship might be restored to the proprietors thereof, together with the goods and money taken out of her; and that the said pirate may be exemplarily punished, whereby it may at last effectually appear, that their lordships will not suffer these manifest and daily injuries to be done to the subjects of his master in their havens. And if it shall please their lordships forthwith to dispatch their orders for the seizing and securing of the said pirate, with his ship of war, it will be impossible for them, as the winds now are, to escape their hands. Given at the Hague this 7th of Sept. 1658.

Signed,

G. D.

Mr. Downing's memorial against receiving rebels, &c. into this state.

10th September.

The under-written resident of England, &c. having considered the ninth and eleventh articles of the treaty of peace, made between his most serene highness of England and the United Provinces, wherein it is expressly accorded, that the rebels and declared enemies of the common-wealth of England, shall not be received into the jurisdiction of the United Provinces, nor any aid, counsel, lodging, or entertainment, be yielded unto them; and that notwithstanding Charles Stuart with the earl of Ormond, and others of his train, hath been lately at Bosch, Heusden, Suilleston, and other principal places, and towns of the United Provinces, and that Sir Edward Hyde resides now at Breda, where he hath also made his abode for some time; that the lord Taafé, and O Neale, with divers other rebels of the common-wealth of England, are now in the Hague: the said resident finds himself obliged to give notice thereof to their lordships, with desire, that the said treaty in this regard may be observed, and such order taken, that the like may be prevented for the future. Given at the Hague, the 10th of Sept. 1658.

Secretary Thurloe to H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland.

MY LORD,

In the possession of the rt. hon. the earl of Shelburn.

DOCTOR Worth being upon his returne to Ireland; I was not willinge to omit that opportunitie to present to your excellency my most humble service; and to give you an account of his highnes present condition. His fitt upon tuesday night was somewhat more favourable then the former; and the good intervall, which he had after it, gave us good hopes, that his ague was very much upon the decreasinge; especially the fitt, which he is now in, beginninge very favourablye, the cold part of it slippinge over without any observation. But truely the hot fitt hath beene very long and terrible; insoemuch, that the doctors feare he will scarce get through it. However, he is now fallen into a breathinge sweate, which we hope he will come well out of. I knowe, my lord, how much I shall trouble, greive, and afflict your lordship by this newes; but truly consideringe the station you are in, I durst not omitt to lett your excellency knowe, that his last fitt hath rendered his highnes condition very dangerous; and I doubt our feares are more then our hopes. How wee are all like to be left as to outward appearance, I need not mention. I write of it with great perturbation, yea and perplexity of mind; only wee have a sure refuge to flye to, who hath not yet failed us; and I trust he will appeare in this tyme of our need. To-morrow is set apart for prayer by divers ministers and Christians, on the behalfe of his highnes; and wee hope the Lord will heare us, and grant the petitions wee are to desire of him. I have not writt thus planely to any person but your excellency, and I thought it necessary to doe it towards you, that your excellency may be in the best posture in all events, and may have your heart exercised towards God, accordinge to the importance of the buisines, which is the greatest that ever this nation saw. Doctor Worth's application for his owne particular was in an ill tyme, his highnes havinge beene sick ever since he first moved it; but I shall not omit to serve him, if the Lord affordes the opportunity. The kinge of Sweden hath againe invaded the Dane, and very probablye hath Copenhagen by this tyme.

YOUR EXCELLENCY'S

Most obedient and humble servant,

Whitehal, 27 Aug.
2 in the morninge, [1658.]

JO. THURLOE.

Sir

Sir John Copleston to secretary Thurloe.

SIR,

A.D. 1658.

I Heare from my lord Fleetwood, that a shippe is ready at Weymouth for the transporting the men I have now raised. The men will be there next monday, and I hope the day following to ship them. I sent a man away yesterday to see what or whither any provisions were on board for the men: if I am to provide them, it will be at least a day's stoppe to me. I have (but truly with much difficulty) taken uppe of the collectors of the excise and customes here 200 l. and according to your order charged the same on you. I have promised, that you will make ready payment, which I begge you to doe. I doubt this sume will scarce suffice, especially if the provisions, which according to your allowance, is four pence for each, are to be paid for by me. I am sure, the last men I raised as well as these, hath been not only very troublesome but chargeable to me. But if I may be serviceable in any measure to the carrying on so good an interest, I shall be ready, not onely to lay out what I have, but my life also in it. I will hasten away these men, what possibly I can, and ever be,

SIR,

Your most faithfull and humble servant,

August 28. 1658.

JOHN COPLESTON.

General Monck to secretary Thurloe.

MY LORD,

I Received your lordshippes letter of the 27th of July, and as concerning the men that are to go out of the regiments heere for Flanders, upon the first letter you wrote to me, I gave out orders presently upon itt, being the regiments lie at soe great a distance, and there being exprested three or fower hundred men, I made bold to take the lesser number, being I thought itt would be lesse for his highnesse service heere; which orders were sent out before his highnesse letter came for sending of 400; and truly I believe some of the regiments will not be recruited these three years; and besides it takes up a great deale of money from the captaines; and they being nine months pay behind, and like to be more, it will half breake them to keepe those men they entertaine till they come into pay; besides those men wee gott in their roomes will not bee half soe serviceable as those men wee have already, being they are used to the ayre of the countrey, and to hard marches; but I hope his highnesse will not take it ill that I have not sent the full 400 att present; these 300 men will be shipt by the 26th of this moenth, and the shippes sett sayle if the winde be faire.
 I could hartily wish wee had received his highnesse commands concerning the presbytery of Jedburgh, for to-morrow is the day they come before us; by the lawes of this countrey itt is treason to declare against an act of parliament, which I think these men are sensible of now, though they did not consider itt before. For other newes wee have none; this is all at present from

YOUR LORDSHIPPES

Most humble servant,

Edin. 3 Aug. 1658.

GEORGE MONCK.

Secretary Thurloe to H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland.

May it please your EXCELLENCYE,

I Gave you some account by Doctor Worth of his highnes condition, as it then was; In the possesbut least he should delay his journey, or miscarry in it, I thought it necessary to send sion of the rt.
 this expresse, to the end your excellencye may fully understand how it is with his highnesse. hon. the earl of
 This is the 13th day since his ague took him, haveinge beene sicke a fortnight before of Shelburn.

A.D. 1658. a generall distemper of body. It continued a good while to be a tertian ague, and the burninge fitts very violent. Upon saterday it fell to a double tertian, haveinge 2 fitts in 24 houres, one upon the heeles of another, which doe extreemely weaken hym, and endaunger his life. And trulye since saterday morninge he hath scarce beene perfectly out of his fitts. The doctors are yet hopefull, that he may struggle through it, though their hopes are mingled with much feare. But trully wee have cause to put our hope in the lord, and to expect mercy from hym in this case, he haveinge stirred up the saints to pray for hym in all places. Never was there a greater stocke of prayers goinge for any man then is now goeing for hym; and trully there is a generall consternation upon the spirits of all men, good and bad, feareinge what may be the event of it, should it please God to take his highnesse at this tyme: and God havinge prepared the heart to pray, I trust he will enclyne his eare to heare. And that which is some ground of hope is, that the Lord, as in some former occasions, hath given to himselfe a perticuler assurance, that he shall yet live to serve hym, and to carry on the worke he hath put into his hands.

I doe not yet finde, that there are any great stirrings yet upon this occasion; though the cavaliers doe begin to listen after it, and hope their day is comeinge, or indeed come, if his highnes dye. And trully, my lord, wee have cause to feare, that it may goe very ill with us, if the Lord should take away his highnes in this conjuncture; not that I thinke Charles Stewart's interest is soe great, or his partie soe powerfull in themselves; but I fear our owne divisions, which may be great enough, if his highnesse should not settle and fix his successor before he dyes, which trully I beleve he hath not yet done. He did by himselfe declare one in a paper before he was installed by the parliament, and sealed it up in the forme of a letter, directing it to me, but kept both the name of the person and the paper to himselfe. After he fell sicke at Hampton Court, he sent Mr. John Barrington to London for it, tellinge hym it lay upon his study table at Whitehall; but it was not to be found there, nor elsewhere, though it hath beene very narrowly looked for. And in this condition matters stand, his highnesse haveinge beene too ill to be troubled with a buisines of this importance. This day he hath had some discourse about it, but his illness disenabled hym to conclude it fully; and if it should please the Lord not to give hym tyme to settle his succession before his death, the judgment would be the soarer, and our condition the more dangerous; but I trust he will have compassion on us, and not leave us as a prey to our enemies, or to one another. All persons here are very reserved as to what they will doe, in case his highnes should not declare his successor before he dyes, not beinge willinge to enterteyne any discourse of it, either because it is a matter too greivous to be thought of, or because they would not discover any oppinion, which might crosse his highnesse thoughts in his life tyme. And this, my lord, is the whole account I am able to give your lordship of this sadd buisines, which I am sure will occasion much trouble and sorrow to you; but I could not omit my duty, judgeinge it absolutely necessary, that your excellency should understand all that passes or falls out upon this subject, that you may the better knowe, how to direct your prayers and counsells, and stirre up others alsoe to pray for his highnesse and 3 nations in this day of distresse. And as any thinge further occurs (which I beseech the Lord may be for good) I shall suddainly dispatch it away to you, and be ready to answer such commands, as your excellency shall lay upon me, beinge,

Your EXCELLENCYE'S

Most humble, faithfull, and obedient servant,

Whitehall, 30 Aug. 1658.
9 o'clock at night.

JO. THURLOE.

The kinge of Sweden and the kinge of Dennemark are againe in open hostility; the kinge of Sweden landed an army upon his island of Zealand, and is like to possesse himselfe of his capitall citty, Copenhagen, and the Sound. The cause of this new quarrell I cannot now acquaint your excellencye, beinge not informed myselfe.

That about the succession is an absolute secret: I beseech your excellencye keepe it soe.

Lord

Lord Fauconberg to H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland;

MY LORD,

A.D. 1658.

unexprefable greif I now
TIS with 38 27 11 42 31 35 11 34 3 2 23 11 15 35 11 19 10 19 27 26 43 In the poffefgive the lad account of H. H. con- fion of the 15 19 38 11 your lordshipp 39 14 11 34 3 6 3 7 7 26 38 27 39 26 10 Z 7 26 right hon. the dition, which all the phyfitians earl of Shel-27 6 19 39 19 39 19 26 27, 43 14 19 7 14 3 23 39 14 11 31 14 47 34 19 burn.
 have judgd dangerous, 39 19 3 27 34 14 3 38 11 for some dayes 19 38 6 15 6 6 3 27 15 11 35 26 more then ever. Tho' his 38 34, and now 22 26 35 11 39 14 11 27 11 38 11 35. 39 14 26 14 19 34
 lofs carry weight
 23 26 34 34 must needs 7 3 35 35 47 43 11 19 15 14 39 ynough in itfelfe, 47
 yet the miserable poiture 11 39 the confideration of 39 14 11 22 19 34 11 35 3 2 23 11 31 26 34 39 38 hee leavs thefe nations in 35 11 14 11 11 23 11 3 38 34 39 14 11 34 11 27 3 39 19 26 27 34 19 27 is itupendious. to 19 34 34 39 38 31 11 27 6 19 26 38 34. My lord, I hold it my duty 39 26 acquaint you how wee ftand at preftent;
 3 7 30 38 3 19 27 39 47 26 38 14 26 43 43 11 11 34 39 3 27 6 3 39 31 35 leave the further 11 34 11 27 39; and then 23 11 3 38 11 39 14 11 10 38 35 39 14 11 35 31 procted of things to God's direction, 35 26 7 11 11 6 26 10 39 14 19 27 15 34 39 26 15 26 6 34 6 19 35 11 7 and your lordship's wifdome.
 39 19 26 27, 3 27 6 47 26 38 35 23 26 35 6 34 14 19 31 34 43 19 34 6 26 22 11.
 A fuccellor none named, I can 3 34 38 7 7 11 34 34 26 35 there is 27 26 27 11 27 3 22 11 6, that 19 7 3 learn. refolved to prefs 27 23 11 3 35 27. T. has feem'd to be 35 11 34 26 23 38 6 39 26 31 35 11 him in his intervals to fuch 34 34 14 19 22 19 27 14 19 34 19 27 39 11 35 38 3 23 34 39 26 34 38 7 14 a nomination: but whether our 3 27 26 22 19 27 3 39 19 26 27: 2 38 39 43 14 11 39 14 11 35 26 38 39 of apprehenfions to difpleafe 26 10 3 31 31 35 11 14 11 27 34 19 26 27 34 39 26 6 19 34 31 23 11 3 34 him, if recovering, or others 11 14 19 22, 19 10 35 11 7 26 38 11 35 19 27 15, 26 35 26 39 14 11 35 34 hereafter, if it fhould not fucceed, 14 11 35 11 3 10 39 11 35, 19 10 19 39 34 14 36 38 23 6 27 26 39 34 38
 hee has not yet done it, 77 11 11 6, 14 11 11 14 3 34 27 26 39 47 11 39 6 26 27 11 19 39, 27 26
 nor doe I beleive wil.
 35 6 26 11 19 2 11 23 11 19 38 11 43 19 23.
 Wee have had one general meeting 43 11 11 14 3 38 11 14 3 6 26 27 11 15 11 27 11 35 3 23 22 11 11 39 of the officers, and are to 19 27 15 26 10 39 14 11 26 10 10 19 7 11 35 34, 3 27 6 3 35 11 39 26 14 have another to-day. At the laft
 3 38 11 3 27 26 39 14 11 35 39 26 6 3 47. 3 39 39 14 11 23 3 34 39 W.
 and onely praid very notionally
 3 27 6 Berry 26 27 11 23 47 31 35 3 19 6 38 11 35 47 27 26 39 19 26 27 both, and in generals, onely
 3 23 23 47 2 26 39 14, 3 27 6 19 27 15 11 27 11 35 3 23 34, 26 27 11 23 begging of God to goe on to owne 47 2 11 15 15 19 27 15 26 10 15 26 6 39 26 15 26 11 26 27 39 26 26 43 his people, and to keep up their 27 11 14 19 34 31 11 26 31 23 11, 3 26 6 39 26 18 11 11 31 38 31 39 14 harts to doe his work.
 11 19 35 14 3 35 39 34 39 26 6 26 11 14 19 34 43 26 35 18.
 Honeft and were the onely 14 26 27 11 34 39 Ingolfby 3 27 6 B. 43 11 35 11 39 14 11 26 27 11 perfons not summoned to this 23 47 31 11 35 34 26 27 34 27 26 39 34 38 22 22 26 27 6 39 26 39 14 19 meeting; by which you may guefs 34 22 11 11 39 19 27 15; 2 47 43 14 19 7 14 47 26 38 22 3 47 15 38 11 at fomething.
 34 34 3 39 34 26 22 39 14 19 27 15.

A.D. 1658.

Last night I acquainted

with the whole state of our affairs,

23 3 34 39 27 19 15 14 39 19 3 7 30 38 3 19 27 39 11 6 Dr. Petty 43 19

39 14 39 14 11 43 14 26 23 11 34 39 3 39 11 26 10 26 38 35 3 10 10 3 19 the principles and interests35 34 39 14 11 31 35 19 27 7 19 31 23 11 34 3 27 6 19 27 39 11 35 11 of every individuu, which34 39 34 26 10 11 38 11 35 47 19 27 6 19 38 19 6 38 3 23 43 14 19 7 14
I think I now understand indifferent19 39 14 19 27 18 19 27 26 43 38 27 6 11 35 34 39 3 27 6 19 27 6 19 10 well, with my owne opinion10 11 35 11 27 39 43 11 23 43 19 39 14 22 47 26 43 27 11 26 31 19 27 19 what's to be done: to his letter26 27 43 14 3 39 34 39 26 2 11 6 26 27 11: 39 26 14 19 34 23 11 39 39
I must refer you.

11 35 19 22 38 34 39 35 11 10 11 35 47 26 38.

The officers met again to-day,

39 14 11 26 10 10 19 7 11 35 34 22 11 39 3 15 3 19 27 39 26 6 3 47, but nothing debated by them; the2 38 39 27 26 39 14 19 27 15 6 11 2 3 39 11 6 2 47 39 14 11 22 39 14 11 whole time they spent in praier.43 14 26 23 11 39 19 22 11 39 14 11 47 34 31 11 27 39 19 27 31 35 3 19
As any thing material fals11 35. 3 34 3 27 47 39 14 19 27 15 22 3 39 11 35 19 3 23 10 3 23 34 out,

26 38 39, your lordshipp shall be sure to heare from

Your servant,

B.

Monday, August 30th, 1658.

Tuesday, August 31.

is now beyond al possibillity

Z. 19 34 27 26 43 2 11 47 26 27 6 3 23 31 29 34 34 19 2 19 23 23 19 of recovery.

39 47 26 10 35 11 7 26 38 11 35 47.

I long to heare from what his

19 23 26 27 15 36 26 14 11 3 35 11 10 35 26 22 A. 43 14 3 39 14 19 34 intentions are; if I may know,19 27 39 11 27 39 19 26 27 34 3 35 11; 19 10 19 22 3 47 18 27 26 43, I'll make the game here as faire19 23 11 22 18 11 39 14 11 15 3 22 11 14 11 35 11 3 34 10 3 19 35 11
as may be; and if I may have commission3 34 22 3 47 2 11; 3 27 6 19 10 19 22 3 47 14 3 38 11 7 26 22 22 19 34 from I can make sure of lord34 19 26 27 10 35 26 22 A. 19 7 3 27 22 3 18 11 34 38 35 11 26 10 23 26
Lockart and those with him.

35 6 23 26 7 18 3 35 39 3 27 6 39 14 26 34 11 43 19 39 14 19 22.

Secretary Thurloe to H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland.

May it please your EXCELENCY,

In the possession of the right hon. the earl of Snel-
burn.

I DID by doctor Worth upon friday, and by an expresse yesterday, certifie your excellency of his highnesse condition; since which thinges with him remeyne much as they did, if he doth not declyne more and more. Wee are willinge to hope the best; but truly he is in great daunger, and he is soe weake for the present, that he is capable of doeing nothinge respectinge to the publique, that, for aught I see, things are like to be at his H. death (in case that evill day should now come upon us) as my last mentioned. It will be to noe purpose to agravate to your lordship the ill condition of things, it beinge our duty to look up to God, and eye hym; and that, my lord, I trust your lordship will doe, and, in the midst of your owne thoughts, to encourage yourselfe in the Lord your God. I will not trouble your lordship further, but rest

Your EXCELENCYE'S

Most humble and most obedient servant,

Whitehall, 31. Aug. 1658.

JO. THURLOE.

General Fleetwood to Henry Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland.

DEARE BROTHER,

A.D. 658

THE Lord's hand hath bine very sorely upon us in the continuance of his highnes under a very great distemper, called an ague, but mostly his heate gave us the sadde apprehension of danger he was under; and truly litle hopes as to men was, but the Lord is pleased to give some litle reviving this evening. After few slumbering sleepes, his pulse better, his water good all this day, till now at night ther hath bine very great feares, what the wombe of to-morrow might have brought forth.

In the possession of the right hon. the earl of Shelburne.

The hearts of good people have exceedingly bine drawn forth with more sence of this prefant dispensation, then hath bine known thes severall yeares; which surly is an argument for good; and his highnes himselfe hath hade great assurances of his recovery, which, I doe think, hath much in it. The dispensation hath lowdly called unto us to be awakened from our security. It is for such we are thus rebuked. The Lord give us hearts to know every one the evill of our hearts and wayes, that we may turn at his reproofe. I know ther will be many letters com of his highnes condition; but I am just com out of his chamber, wheare both physitians and relations wer much revived at the refreshment, which hath now bine given. This we may say, that his return will be, if the Lord restore him, as life from the deade, and as great a return of prayer as hath bine in a case of this nature known a long time. The Lord give us hearts sutably to be affected to what this providence calls for; which that we may, is the desire of him, who is

Your most affectionat brother, and humble servant,

August 31. [1658.]

CHA. FLEETWOOD.

Mr. Morland to Secretary Thurloc.

MY LORD,

THOUGH the favours, which I have already received from your lordship, are ten thousand times beyond whatever I deserved, and for which I am, and shall be always bound to pray for your honour's prosperity, and all that belong to you, yet your honour having been pleased to expresse your good intentions towards mee, and good acceptances of my poor services at the same time, when you gave mee the moyety of Mr. Needham's news-booke, and that in case I could finde any other thing of greater certainty, you would be my freind in obtaining it for mee, I am encouraged to become an humble petitioner to your honour, to improve your powerfull influence in the procureing for mee the office of clerk of the pells in the exchequer, which is vacant since yesterday, by the death of Dennis Bond, assuring you, that such an encouragement as this should have no other effect then to oblige mee to double my diligence, and to lay out my time, and all the opportunities God shall give mee, during my life, in giving you constant testimonies, how sincerely I am

Your Honour's

31. August, 1658.

Most humble and faithfull servant,

S. MORLAND.

If your lordship find any inconveniency or unreasonableness in this my bold request, I shall for ever desist; but if otherwise, I most humbly beg your honour to give directions about a warrant, which will declare the disposition of it, and put an end to all the suits of others for the same thing.

From Mr. Kingstonn.

SIR,

YOU will remember, that ^{an Irish priest,} ^{named} ^{Spens-} ^{feild,} ^{Brusselles} ^{Breda,} 45 239 17 19 11 7 20 21 299 6 Mr. 20 17 7 15 20 In the possession of Joseph Radcliffe, of the Inner Temple, esq;

177, when you left 37 to goe to 4 19 7 121, met you; and being desirous to speake with you, your hast was so great, as you only let him know, that you expected to returne speedely; but your occasions having kept you absent longer then he could stay in them parts, he desires you should understand by my conveyance, what he then meant to have said to you.

You

A.D. 1658. You have taken notice last summer, and the Lent before, of privat meetings, where the priest Rely, Tom. Talbott, collonel Rely, collonel Briel, and Bodkin, 17 18 11 374, 414 110 4, 374 110 4, 19 11 7 15, 43 70 6 12 228, were the chief heads, and sometimes they cal'd upon many others, upon pretence of nominating Irish Catholiques; agents, and providing for the affaires of 239 117 20; and indeed that was the part of the designe, which was visibie and made knowne to all those, who assisted at those conventions; but, under this coloure, there was a traiterous plott sett on foot by 70 6 12 228, for his coming out of 167 about Christmas last as a broker of some treaty between 113 the k. of Spaine, and 243, showed papers he had upon that subject to 242, pretending out of abundance of duty, that he meant to proceed no further therein, then as he received orders from him. This blindation both secured him from the suspicion, which perhaps might be had of him our court, in 312 111, and got him access to 126 4 13 16 15 385, (for whom, if you please, let 63 stand in the cypher) who of all men hath alwayes had his eares most open to such tideings. Thus being cherish'd, and getting money, he drives on the reall designe intrusted with him by 115, which was to induce the 339 to quitt the service of 403 241, and of 243, and either come into 181, or come with 115 20 forces, upon promise that doing soe, and becoming his liege menn, they should be admitted into 238, have large proportions of land sett out to them, should not be disturb'd in their religion, and that none should be trusted more then they; adding a reason deduced from his owne intrest, because was it said in his behalf, the 239 had been always opprest by 403 241 20 308 161; and that both out of aversion to them and theirs, and by occasion of the benefitt they were to receive by him, it might be well presumed, they would be faithfull to him. The particulars of what is concluded in this, he knowes not; but hopes to understand it; but he knowes, that the primat T. Talbot, and the Marchand, are gone into England; and he beleaves, they will not be scrupulous to do any thing they shall be directed in favour of Cromwell. Bodkin 115. 70 6 12 223 tould all this designe to Mr. 20 17 7 15 20 177, with whom he was very intimat, because P. 374 assur'd him, that he would drawe him to be of his party; but no man execrats this plott more then this gentleman; and to the astonishment of 70 6 12 228, tould him, if he did not desist, he would cause him to be made prisoner. However, hearing him speake of 110 99 382 12 7, as being willing likewise to impart the matter to him, he grew more calme, considering he might by that means have another witness of the designe; and 70 6 12 228 having entreated him to send for the 170, that they there might conferr of it, he agreed thereunto, and posted a letter for him, that when he came to towne, he should keep himself secrett, untill he spake with him; which he did accordingly. And Mr. 20 17 7 15 20 177 having related the cause for which he sent for him, he scars could containe 170 from seeking out 70 6 12 228 to beat him; but being perswaded to hear him out patiently, 70 6 12 228 tould over the same story to him, that he had donn to the other. At length the 170, who could hold no longer, asked 70 6 12 228, what he had observed in him, that should make him thinke, he would be wrought upon to be disloyall and treacherous to the prince he served; and tould him, he would there forbear beating him, because it was in his own chamber; but he would not spare him, if he heard any more of it. Immediately after, the 170 and Mr. 20 17 7 15 20 177 agreed, that the later should informe you of all, which he then intended to doe, when you could not be at leisure to heere him. And because you may with more assurance give credit to what he sayes, and be informed more at large, he sends the enclosed to the 170, who, when you thinke fitt to call upon him, will attest the same, though Mr. 20 17 7 15 20 177 earnestly desires, in the name of them both, that no mention be made of them; which I have promis'd him. And in the case of Mr.

A.D. 1658.

Spensfeild

20 17 7 15 20 177, it is absolutely necessary secreas should be us'd; for such a way of correspondenc is establisht between him and me, as may be usefull. God keep

The character of the enclosed is known to the ^{collonel,} 170, however it be subscrib'd. Direct in it is meant for deteet.

The superscription,

For Mr. James Sidenham.

SIR,

September the 6. 1658.

AFTER I had made up my former, advertisement was given me from such a hand as I give credit to, that ^{Cromwell} 115 hath by ^{Lockhart} 207 desir'd the ^{cardinall} 116 to find a way, that ^{the pope} 340 doe but continue indifferent in the matter now agitated, and he will so order the busines, that the ^{catholiques} 117 20 shall have full ^{liberty;} 254 68 19 21 25; and that ^{Mazarin} 280 hath alreddy sent to two ^{cardinals} 116 20 to mediat the matter; and for the greater luster, intends that ^{Savoy} 312 418 25 should likewise mediat in it. This ^{Savoy's} 382 418 25 2 embassedor tould a gentleman of quality this day, as having it from ^{the cardinall's} 403 116 owne mouth.

The superscription,

For Mr. James Sidenham.

NOBLE COSSEN,

I HAVE written to you hence formerly, but could gett noe answer to any my letters I directed to Bruffels. The primat, Thom. Talbott and Bodkin are safely arrived in England; and (if not tymely prevented) will doe us and ours noe good. I shall attend their motions, and will direct their intentions as much as in me lieth. Adrefs yourself to my lord of Ormond, whom I had not the happines to see before my parting thence. He will give you farther directions. I shall part hence after 20 dayes at farthest. You will direct your letters for me in London, at Mr. Prior's; but writt nothing unto me untill you receave mine thence. I commend my service to your vertuos lady, and shall ever remaine,

SIR,

Paris, 6. September, 1658. [N. S.]

Your faithfull servant,

JOSEPHUS DE STRANGE.

Dr. Thomas Clarges to Henry Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland.

May it please your EXCELENCY,

THE violent sicknes of his highnes fills me with sad apprehensions, that I have skearse sense enough to give your excellency an account of any thing. His disease is a double tertian ague, which at this season, in a person of his age and constitution of body (being much distemper'd by his late grief and melancholly, besides his other infirmities) is a very violent companion.

Yesterday a fast was kept by many of the officers of the army at my lord Fleetwood's house, and some considerations were had amongst them afterwards (as I am informed) concerning the present condition of his highnes, and the posture of our affaires; but the result I know not, but hope it was for the best. I shall ad nothing more, but my prayers to the Lord for his highnes recovery, and the happines of your excelencie's family, shall never be wanting in,

May it please your EXCELENCY,

London, this 1st of September, 1658.

Your excellencye's most humble servant,

THO. CLARGES.

Colonel Barkstead, lieutenant of the Tower, to secretary Thurloe.

A.D. 1658.

Vol. lxi. p. 5.

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

THIS evening late I received the two warrants from the councell for the duke of Buckingham's going to Windsor; and immediately gave him notice of them, that soe he might prepare himselfe for his journey. He tells me, it being soe farr in the night, he cannot possibly be provided to goe to-morrow, but desires he may stay till saturday morning; and both he and his lady make it their earnest request to mee, to give him liberty, as he goeth, to stop at Yorke-house, an hower or two, to see his father and mother. The request seemes very reasonable; yet I have refused hitherto to graunt it, and shall continue soe to doe, if you thinke there may be any thing in it prejudiciall to the publike. I shall not further adde, but that I am,

MY LORD,

Tower, 2^d September, 1658.
9 at night.

Your honour's most affectionate friend,

and reall servant,

JO. BARKSTEAD.

Lord chief justice St. John to secretary Thurloe.

SIR,

In the possession of the right hon. Philip lord Hardwicke, lord high chancellor of Great-Britain.

I RECEIVED your sad letter even now, and am more sensible of the contents by much, then what in the nearest could concerne my person or familie. We heard before of some distemper, but nothing of any dainger. Upon the receite of yours I would not stay for the post, but have sente one of myne owne servants; and what I now write, is upon the suddayne, viz. that if my coming up may be but in the least servisable to any of his highnes familie, I shall account it a great happines, and shall make no delay. Concerning that part of your letter of the desyre of some upon the publike account, I can say thus much; my owne ease or presente concernements, either of life, or any thing else deare, shall not stay me one minute. My owne thoughts are, that if upon any debate concerning affayres, the advise of persons conceived faithfull to the publike interest be desyred, and if I shall be named amongst them, I am most redy to joyne; but to come otherwise, I am affrayd, that it may have a contrarie effecte. I hope the Lord will be mercifull to us, and prevente our feares by restoring and continueing him to us, by whom he hath done soe much. In shorte, I leave all to your discretion, whoe are upon the place, and order me as you shall conceive fitting; and that I may receive the orders with speede and safety, I have sent this messenger; and if theire be any thing you would not comit to a letter, you may by word of mouth safely imparte your minde unto him. I rest 3d September, 1658.

Your most affectionate servant,

OL. ST. JOHN.

Mr. Pierrepont is not now in these parts, but att Tongue-castle in Shropshire.

The superscription,
For the right honourable Mr. secretary Thurloe, at Whitehall, these.

Instructions of the high and mighty lords states general of the United Provinces for James de Wassenaer, lord of Wassenaer, lord admiral of Holland, and W. Frise, going toward the Sound, with a fleet, to execute as followeth.

Vol. lxi. p. 333. I. THE said lord admiral shall first know, that the intention of the state is, that in this expedition he shall deliver and defend the subjects of these provinces, particularly those that trade in the Baltic sea, from all sort of outrages; as also to resist the king of Sweden, who hath lately made war upon him very unexpectedly, in such manner, and with such vigour, as may secure him from this oppression.

II. For this purpose, he shall speedily, with his fleet, that is before the isle of Schelling, sail toward the Sound, there to convoy the forces, which this state sends for relief of the king of Sweden, particularly to raise the siege of Copenhagen and Cronenberg. A.D. 1658.

III. Being arrived near the castle of Cronenberg, he shall endeavour to put in part of his forces, if the governor of the castle shall find it meet.

IV. He shall endeavour to conduct the rest of his forces to Copenhagen.

V. He shall endeavour to recover out of the hands of the Swedes, the ships, and goods, and men of these provinces, which have been taken or arrested by the Swedish men of war.

VI. And in meeting with the Swedish fleet, or any part of them, he shall attack them vigorously to overcome them, if it may be; employing all courage, wisdom and vigour, as occasion shall serve, according to what is expected from him.

VII. And he shall deal according to the former article, with all those, who will hinder him in the execution of what is aforesaid.

VIII. The forces being landed, he shall lie with his fleet in the Sound or thereabouts, to contribute upon all occasions what may serve to hinder the said oppression, and particularly to defend the ships of the subjects of these provinces; and prevent all disorders, sending some ships, if occasion be, to convey them.

IX. And in case the city of Copenhagen, and castle of Cronenberg, should be (which God forbid) surrendered before his arrival, he shall lie with his fleet upon the coasts of Denmark and Norway, in a sure and commodious place, and such as he shall judge most fit for the effect of the eighth article, there to wait for further orders from their high mightinesses.

X. The said lord admiral shall observe all this; yet without holding himself to the letter of this order, but according to the exigencies of affairs, he may act as he shall judge best, to arrive to the effect of the intention of their high mightinesses, and there follow principally the considerations and orders of the king of Denmark, and to whom he shall give notice of his coming, and always hold correspondence with his majesty, or his ministers.

XI. He shall, during this voyage, endeavour, that the ships of this fleet may be treated according to the treaties, and with regard had to this state; and that they use also, with all courtesy and friendship, the commanders of the fleets or squadrons of kings, republics, princes and potentates, who are allies and friends of this state; yet not to suffer any violation of these instructions, either in receiving commands, or in suffering ships to be visited, or mariners to be taken out, and to be hindered in their endeavours; but if they will attempt so much, and no reason will serve, they shall defend themselves against them with all the means they have, and so as they ought to do, according to their order, with charge to every one to carry himself herein as he ought.

XII. If during this voyage any of the commanders come to be killed, (which God forbid!) or to die of sickness, the most ancient officer shall be put in his place, as also the lieutenants of ships in place of their captains, if the said lord admiral hath no reasons to the contrary, which shall take place, when any captains or other officers shall have been cashiered by the council of war, &c.

XIII. He shall keep a journal of all things of importance, and give notice thereof upon all occasions to their high mightinesses, and to the colleges of the admiralties, &c.

XIV. Finally he shall deliberate and resolve in all things, whereof there is no mention made in these instructions with his council of war, that so he may have respect to the service and good of the state.

Made and decreed in the assembly of the high and mighty lords, &c. Hague, 14th of September, 1658. [N. S.]

Captain Langley to secretary Thurloc.

SIR,

Leith, September 4. 1658.

MAY it please your honour, since the writing of my last, fresh desires in the Anabaptists to begin a new propagation, and for that end they have presented many with new bookes, or an new booke, containing all there strongest arguments against pedobaptisme, as they call it. The manner of the binding of the booke is to rowle up like some of your alminakes fit for one's pockitt, that soe they may be ready at guards or elsewhere. That which makes mee give notis of this is, that just at the time when it is whispered, that my lord protector is very dangerously ill, they should thus breake out with these things, in which they have beene silent som yeares, nay resolved, they was not to medle with that controversy any more, but, as they said, let God perswade the harts of men, that soe

A.D. 1658. for all might be free. I add further, that they take noe notis outwardly of my lord's being not well, nor meet nor seek God, though they see the council and judges have don it, which they would not be last in doeing, did it like them: but doubtles, something seemes to put fresh life to there designe, which hath allways been in there eie, though hetherto strangled in the hearts. It is evident to mee they are lifted up with sum dark hopes, that if, &c. which God divert! Here is a ship come com newly in from Borgine in Norway, which brings tidings, that the Sweads are doubtles at Copenhagen; and that the Danish king fled over the water in a boat in the night towards . . . and which is oposit to Copenhagen, as they say. In Norway they permit severall vessels to be taken out of . . . and the man of war to continue there. The post is come. Pardon me. I am

Your HONOR's,

TIMOTHY LANGLEY.

Sir John Copleston to secretary Thurloc.

SIR,

September 4th, 1658.

Vol. lxi. p. 15.

I HAVE been at Weymouth, and shipped there fowerscore and eleaven souldiers. They had a very good wind, and are, I beleeve, (erre this) at Dunkerke. Out of the 200 l. I charged on you I have laid out 132 l. 3 s. So there remains in my hands 67 l. 17 s. which you shall be paid as you shall require.

	l.	s.	d.
The souldiers had	80	0	0
The conductors	20	0	0
The purser for provisions	20	0	0
A platfforme for the souldiers to lye on	3	15	0
For boates to carry them on board	2	3	0
For their quarters at Chard	4	18	0
For bread and beare at their shipping	1	7	0
	132	3	0

I am troubled they fall soe very short of the number; there wee above 240 listed; but a man cannot be certain of these people, till they are shipped, and 'tis noe good time in harvest to raise men; and heere's a report, that the French in a late engagement dealt very tracherously (or cowardly) with the English, soe that many were lost. This was written by Mr. Prideaux and some others.

I am exceedingly sorry to heare of his highnesse indisposition of health. The Lord preserve him to this poore nation, and the interest of his people, is the most earnest prayer of,

SIR,

Your most humble and obliged servant,

JO. COPLESTON.

Secretary Thurloc to H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland.

May it please your EXCELLENCY,

In the possession of the right hon. earl of Shelburne.

I DID by an expresse upon munday give your excellency an account of his highnesse sicknes, and the daunger he was in. Since that it hath pleased God to put an end to his dayes. He died yesterday about four of the clocke in the afternoone. I am not able to speake or write; this stroake is soe soare, soe unexpected, the providence of God in it soe stupendious, consideringe the person that is fallen, the tyme and season wherein God tooke hym away, with other circumstances, I can doe nothinge but put my mouthe in the dust, and say, It is the Lord; and though his wayes be not alwayes knowne, yet they are alwayes righteous, and wee must submitt to his will, and resigne up ourselves to him with all our concernements.

His highnes was pleased before his death to declare my lord Richard successor. He did it upon munday; and the Lord hath soe ordered it, that the councell and army hath receiv'd receiv'd him with all manner of affection. He is this day proclaymed; and hitherto there seemes a great face of peace: the Lord continue it! A.D. 1658.

It is not to be sayd, what affection the army and all people shew to his late highnes; his name is already precious. Never was there any man soe pray'd for as he was dureinge his sicknes, solemne assemblie meetinge every day, to beseech the Lord for the continuance of his life; soe that he is gone to heaven, embalmed with the teares of his people, and upon the winges of the prayers of th' saints. He lived desired, and dyed lamented, every body bemoaning themselves, and sayeing, A great man is fallen in Israel! The Lord double his spirit upon his successor and upon your excellencye, that you both may be famous in your generation, and be helped by God with one heart and shoulder to carry on that worke, the foundation whereof your most renowned father layed, for which posterity will blesse hym! The councell hath given your excellency an account of what is done as to the proclayminge his highnes your brother. I only herewith send the voet of the councell; and though I know not what will be my portion or condition here, yet I shall alwayes be

4th September, 1658.

Your EXCELLENCY's most humble and obedient servant,

JO. THURLOE.

His highnes intends to send a gentlemen to your excellency in the beginnunge of the next weeke, to let you understand fully the state of all things here and of your family; and comanded me to desire you to excuse his not writeinge by this messenger. The truth is, his highnes death is soe soare a stroake unto him, and he is soe sensible of it, that he is in noe condition to write or doe yet. Here is a sadd family on all hands: the Lord support them!

There is a proclamation actually past for keepeinge on foot all comissions, which will be sent by the next; there need be noe scruple in the meane tyme.

Monsieur Schlezer, the elector of Brandenburg's agent, to secretary Thurloe.

HONORATISSIME DOMINE,

EXHIBUI nuper dominationi vestrae per dominum Marvillium serenissimi principis electoris domini mei literas ad gloriosissimum quondam dominum protectorem Olivarium, ac successionis lege ad serenissimum ac celsissimum dominum protectorem Angliae modernum directas, quibus serenitas sua electoralis, pro illa, quam haecenus erga principem vestrum ac rempublicam hanc testata est, amicitia, liberius de serenissimo ac potentissimo rege Sueciae, deque repetita ejus in Daniam irruptione, conqueritur, simulque causas susceptorum armorum suorum serenissimae celsitudini suae probare conatur. Quo genere dictionis illae conscriptae sint, aliorum judicio permittendum est. Pro meo ad pacem ac tranquillitatem publicam, unionemque principum Protestantium, firmam ac synceram continuo nisu ac labore, mihi saltem gratulor, nullas alias in negotio hoc partes mihi demandatas esse, quam ut literas illas tantummodo traderem, quo vultu animoque ea acciperentur, adverterem ac referrem, simulque responsum debita cum reverentia urgerem ac elicerem. Si quid tamen est, quod serenissimo domino electori animum addidit, eo modo ad serenissimum ac celsissimum dominum protectorem scribendi, vel illud praecipue fuisse crediderim, quod dominus Downingius, residens vester in Belgio, ministros Brandenburgicos non semel certos ac securos reddidit, serenissimum dominum protectorem Olivarium bello isti, quod tunc temporis adhuc sub cineribus latuit, nulla ratione se immixturum, sed medium atque utraeque parti amicum permansurum. Illud ipsum quoque serenissimo domino electori ansam dedit, ut consilium caperet, non neminem ex consiliariis status sui extra ordinem huc alegandi, quo tanto magis cum affectum ac observantiam, tum quoque fiduciam suam erga serenissimum dominum protectorem, nec minus quem sibi scopum propositum haberet, ac quam non ulli operae reducendae pacis gratia optimus ipse princeps pepercerit, declararet, ac manifesta ea omnia redderet; nec dubitavit serenitas sua electoralis, quin grata acceptaque legatio haec serenissimae celsitudini suae futura sit, vel propter merita viri multis ingenii dotibus conspicui, ac honoratissimo apud se loco constituti, vel propter negotii gravitatem, in quo intimos sensus principis sui depromere, eaque pariter agere, dispicere, dijudicare queat, quae ad communem rem spectare videbuntur. Alia nonnulla de negotio religionis, deque Lutheranorum imprimis regiae suae majestati Sueciae subditorum odio ac acerbitate, proponenda mihi erant; sed cum ab aliquo tempore nulla mihi occasio data fuerit dominationem vestram accedendi, ex cujus sensu ac arbitrio, vel ad serenissimum dominum protectorem ipsum, vel ad concilium status me applicassem, praestolanda ac optanda mihi fuit valetudinis vestrae integra ac perfecta restauratio, quo ex ore ejus percipere possim, quidnam de supradictis omnibus serenitati suae electorali renunciare debeam. Interim dominationi vestrae

A.D. 1658: curæ fore spero, ne quid eorum intermittatur, quæ more inter principes Christianos omnes recepto (ut proximo nempe a regibus loco serenissimus dominus elector habeatur) ad honorem ac decus ipsius pertinent, utque in privilegii vinarii expeditione ratio tandem habeatur

Honoratissimæ DOMINATIONIS vestræ

Die 5. Sept. S. V. ann. 1658.

observantissimi deditissimique,

J. F. SCHLEZERI.

General Monck to secretary Thurloe.

MY LORD,

Vol. lxi. p. 221

I HAVE received two letters from you, by which I understand his highness is very ill, which truly makes many a sad heart here. The council and some others here on Thursday last kept a private day of humiliation, and seeking God for his recovery; and I hope God will look down in mercy upon us, and restore him to his health, that he may continue a while longer amongst us for the settling of the peace of this nation. I shall take the best care I can to keep all things quiet here, which I doubt not by the blessing of God to do. I desire you will be pleased, when your occasions will give you leave, to acquaint me how his highness does, because we still hear so many several reports, and you will do me a very great favour in it. I remaine Dalkeith, 7th September, 1658.

Your LORDSHIP's most humble servant,

GEORGE MONCK.

Secretary Thurloe to Henry Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland.

May it please your EXCELLENCE,

In the possession of the right hon. the earl of Shelburne.

I DID by an expresse signifye to you the sad condition we are in here by the loss of his highness your father, whose death is lamented by all, but can be repaired by none but God himselfe, to whom we are to look as to our great and soveraigne Lord, that is not to give an account of any of his matters; nor can any say unto him, What dost thou? This bearer Mr. Underwood is a very sober gentleman, was of the bed-chamber to his late highness, and attended him in all his sickness, and can give your excellency a full account of all that past in this sad occasion; to which purpose his highness hath sent him over to your excellency, that you might fully understand the particulars of God's dealing with his highness your father, through his whole visitation.

It hath pleased God hitherto to give his highness your brother a very easie and peaceable entrance upon his government. There is not a dogge that wags his tongue, so great a calme are we in. The Lord continue it, and give him a just and understanding heart, that he may knowe how to goe out and in before this great people, whose peace and libertye he is intrusted with!

But I must needs acquaint your excellency, that there are some secret murmurings in the army, as if his highness were not generall of the army, as his father was; and would look upon him and the army as divided, and as if the conduct of the army should be elsewhere, and in other hands: but I am not able to say what this will come to. I thinke the conceite of any such thinge is dangerous; and if any thinge of this kinde breakes out further, you shall have an account of it, or whatever else can come within the knowledge of

7. September, 1658.

Your EXCELLENCE's most humble

faithfull servant,

JO. THURLOE.

Secretary Thurloe to H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland.

May it please your EXCELLENCE,

In the possession of the right hon. the earl of Shelburne.

I HAVEINGE writt this day already by Mr. Underwood, whom his highness hath sent to your excellency with letters from himselfe, I shall not need to trouble you with any thinge save the enclosed proclamation, which was issued to prevent a failer of justice. I am not

JOHN THURLOE ESQ. &c.

375

not able to see farre into our affaires. If it please God to preserve the unitie, which now is, ^{A.D. 1658.} many daungers, which some feare, will, through the goodnes of God, be prevented. Truly, my lord, I am not in a condition to write you the forreine newes, nor I beleeeve will your excellency take much pleasure to read things of that nature. I am endeavouringe to submitt myselfe to the will of the Lord, and to looke to him in this great stroake: 'tis his hand that hath done it. Afflictions of this kinde doe not rise out of the dust; and I beseech the Lord to support your excellency under it. You had your burdens afore, and truly this is too bigge to come by way of addition. God hath to us all added sorrow to sorrow; but it is the Lord, and therefore we must be silent before hym. I begge your excellency's pardon for this intrusion, and remeyne

7. September, 1658.

Your EXCELLENCYE's humble and faithfull servant,

JO. THURLOE.

General Fleetwood to H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland.

DEARE BROTHER,

THE sadde condition, wherein the Lord is pleased to lay us under by this late grivious stroake, is, I doubt not, com to your hands befor this, though the perticulers thereof is referred to this bearer's relation, who deserves respect from us. Oh! that the Lord would give us hearts to search and try our wayes, and turn to him, who hath thus sorely smitten us! Great displeasur is broken forth: we have cause to lay our mouths in the dust, and to say, We have sined: that we have great cause to bewaile; else there would not have bine such a fore rebuke, as at this day is our porcion. What is don as to the succeffion, is in your brother, and the great quietnes, that is, will be better related, then I shall trouble you with my pen. The Lord keeps the army in a quiet condicion, and have expressed a readynes to what is don, by their attendance and affection in what was required or expected from them, though I think with the saddest hearts reflecting upon what they lost, as ever army did, who have not lost a generall and protector only, but a dear and tender father to them and all the Lord's people. The Lord affect our hearts with such a sense of this, princeps and practise therin, as we may make it our buyfnes to walk more conformable therunto. He hath left us a blessed example for us to walke by: his heart was full of love to the interest of the Lord's people, yea above all other concernments; and made every thing else bow down unto it. The Lord give us that frame to walke by, is the desire of him, who subscribes, what I am

In the possession of the right hon. the earl of Shelburn.

September 7. 1658.

Your most affectionate brother and servant,

CHA. FLEETWOOD.

There will some addresse be made: it is desired all 3 armyes might joyn in one: you shall have it assoone as agreed upon.

Lord Fauconberg to H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland.

DEARE MY LORD,

THIS bearer Mr. Underwood brings your lordshipp the sad news of our generall losse in your incomparable father's death, by which theese poore nations are deprived of the greatest personage and instrument of happinesse, not only our owne, but indeed any age else ever produced. The preceding night, and not before, in presence of 4 or 5 of the councill, he declared my lord Richard his successor; the next morning grew speechlesse, and departed betwixt 3 and 4 in the evening. A hard dispensation it was, but so it has seemed good to the allwise God; and what remaines to poor creatures, but to lay our hands upon our mouthes to the declaration of his pleasure? Some 3 houres after his decease, (a time spent only in frameing the draught, not in any doubtfull dispute) was your lordshipp's brother, his now highnesse, declared protector of thez nations, with full consent of counsell, soldier, and city. The next day he was proclaimed in the usuall places. All the time his late highnes was drawing on to his end, the consternation and astonishment of people is unexpressible: their harts seemed as funke within them. And if this abroad in the family, your lordshipp may imagine, what it was in her highnes and other neer relations. My poor wife, I knowe not what in the earth to doe with her; when seemingly quieted, she bursts out again into passion, that tears her very hart in peeces; nor can I

In the possession of the right hon. the earl of Shelburn.

A.D. 1658. blame her, considering what she has lost. It fares little better with others. God, I trust, will sanctifye this bitter cup to us all. His mercy is extraordinary, as to the quiet face of things among us, which I hope the Lord will continue. I am

Whitehall, September the 7th 1658. [N. S.]

Your LORDSHIPP's most affectionately faithfull and very humble servant,

FAUCONBERG.

Wee think the king of Sweden is master by this time of Copenhagen, and that king his prisoner. The Dutch have embarqued 6000 men for his succour, which, wee hope, will come too late.

Col. H. Smith to secretary Thurloe.

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

Vol. lxi. p. 28. I RECEIVED yours of the 4th instant, with the most sad newes of our great losse of his highness, which saddens the hearts of all good people. The Lord quicken up all our hearts, to bee sensible of this sharpe rebuke, which our owne unworthy walking hath brought upon us.

Sir, his highnes Richard lord protector was this day solemnly proclaimed by the magistrates of this towne, with such solemnity as is usuall in cases of that nature. There is not at present the least appearance of disturbance in these parts. I finde the officers and souldiers of this garrison soe well satisfyed with what is done, that they doe unanimously resolve to stand by, and to live and dy with his highnes, and to serve him faithfully with their lives, against any that shall oppose him, under what pretence soever.

Sir, I formerly writt to you concerning the prisoners, who are under restraint in this garrison, and did intreate you to send mee word, whether I might give any of them liberty for some time, uppon their peroll, or uppon security; but received noe answer from you. I lately received a letter from the high sheriff of Yorkeeshire, signifying that it was your desire, that one Mr. Thornehill, who was a prisoner here, should bee set at liberty, till hee shall bee summoned, which I have accordingly done. Haveing noe more to trouble your honour with at this time; I humbly take leave to subscribe my selfe,

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

Hull, September 7th, 58.

Your most faithfull servant,

HEN. SMITH.

H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland, to secretary Thurloe.

SIR,

Vol. lxi. p. 32. OUR last letters, though they brought us sad newes, (as to the losse of my deare sister) yet put us in great hopes of his highness's health. Wee now receive twoe packetts at once; one whereof is by your express. These give us greater grief then wee are able to beare. The particuler assureance given to his highness, to which his experience on former occasions beares som witnes, gives mee som relief, though most letters fill us with feares. I am glad to heare, that the hearts of good men with you are so powerfully drawn out in prayer; and it rejoyces mee to observe the like here. It were a double mercy, if his highness repreive might bee given us as the answere of prayer. O that our stubborne hearts would lett us say with a true submission, Thy will bee done! But how hard is it to reflect upon the consequences of his highness's death, and yet cheerfully to kiss the rod! If wee may speak as men, if no settlement bee made in his life-time, can wee be secure from the lust of ambitious men? Nay, if he would declare his successor, where is that person of wisdom, courage, conduct, and (which is equivalent to all) reputation at home and abroad, which we see necessary to preserve our peace? Would not good men feare one another, and the world them? Would not the sons of Jeruiah bee too strong, and the wheele be turned upon us, even though the most wise and powerful single person could bee chosen out? Though I know none like his highness, yet hee himself is not sufficient for these things, but by and through his communion with God. It is then God alone; 'tis good to fly to him; 'tis good to call mightily upon him in this day of our distress. Wee are the worke of his hands: let him doe with us as seemeth good in his eyes. Indeed, Sir, I am under so great a burthen, that I am scarce competent to consider the condition I am in, though though I know I must not forget the publique trust in my hand. I desire, Sir, that you would pity mee, and consider the great anxietie under which I labour; and as God shall please to give any hopes of his highness's recovery, pray let me not stay for an account thereof by the ordinary dispatches hither. In the mean time all the ease I can finde is by powreing out my soule before the Lord, which I shall doe uncessantly. I remaine

Dublin, September 8th, 58.

Your very affectionate and faithfull

friend and servant,

H. CROMWELL.

Your messenger had beene dispatcht sooner, if the winde had served.

H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland, to the lord Fauconberg.

MY LORD,

September the 8th, 1658.

ALTHOUGH the last letters brought a very sad memento of mortality, yet I was not well enough prepared to receive yours by this post, without (it may be) too much consternation. I know the highest greifes arising from my natural affection to my dear father ought so farr to give way, as to let me remember my present station; but I see more of this kind, then I am able to practice; and truly when I recollect myself, and consider the desperate distractions, which so nearly threaten us, I am quite lost in the way to the remedy. For I may truly tell your lordship, that either through the design or unfaithfulness of my friends, or through their ignorance and incompetency for a work of that nature, I have never been acquainted with the inside either of things or persons, but sob'd off with intelligence, about as much differing from Mabbot, as he from a Diurnall; so that I can contribute little to prevent our danger, more than by my prayers, and keeping the army and people under my charge in a good frame: I wish yours may be so kept in England. Methinks some begin their meetings very early. It may be they intend to give the law; but if they do not keep to what is honest, they may meet with disappointments. I do heartily thank your lordship for your freedom and confidence in me. I am sure I cannot plead meritt, but shall be glad to cherish that sympathy, or whatever else it is, that makes me yours. I hope I shall be always just to your lordship. Some late letters do a little revive us, and give hopes of his highness's recovery; yet my trouble is exceeding great. I remain, &c.

In the possession of William Cromwell Esq;

The mayor of Exeter to secretary Thurloe.

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

Exon, 8th September, 1658.

I THOUGHT itt my duty to give your honour an accompt, that on monday evening last I received a letter from his highnesse most honourable privy councell, bringing the sad tydings of the death of the most serene and renowned Oliver lord protector; and with it a proclamation for the proclaiming of the most noble and illustrious lord Richard to be his succesor. Uppon receipt of which, I did summon some of the cheife majestates of this citty, and itt being late in the evening, wee agreed for the summoning of all the majestates, common councell, and severall companyes of our citty next morning, being tuesday, by eight of the clock, to be at the Guildhall; where being mett in the councell chamber, I did send about all the streets of the citty the citty-waytes, to give notice to all the commoners and inhabitants, to appeare at the proclayming of the most noble and illustrious the lord Richard. And haveing read the councell's letter and proclamation to a full chamber, (though some absent by sickness, and some out of towne) they all declared with a cheerfull heart for his present highnesse. After that, I made known unto the companyes and commons the occasion of that day's meeting, and they all cheerfully concurred with us. After which, all those that had borne the office of mayor, being in there scarlett gowns and robes, those that had been sheriffes in scarlett gownes, the rest with gownes and habitts, according to there degrees, with sound of trumpett, the city musick contynewally playeing on the topp of the Guildhall, wee first proclaymed his said highnesse before the Guildhall; then marching in like equipage wee did the like in the most emynent places in the fower quarters of the said city (Sir John Copplestone was pleased soe farr to honnor us as to accompany us in the whole worke); att all which we had a mighty concourse of people, with great acclamations, to the rejoycing of my heart, and, to my apprehension, to the great satisfaction of the people of this place; which was alsoe

A.D. 1658. farther manifested by ringing of bells all the rest of the day, and makeing bonfires att evening: that seeing God hath byn pleased to take to himselfe his highnesse never to be forgotten; yett blessed bee his name, that he was pleased to put into his heart to name his successor; and unto yours and the most honourable councell, with the concurrence of the army, citty, and soe many noble persons, soe seasonably to concurre, and speedily to proclayme that most worthy, noble, and illustrious prince to succeed him, in which the nations have such good cause to acquiesse, and give God the glory. I have not else at present, only to desire your honnor to pardon these unpollished lines, and brieft accompt, with the tender of my utmost faithfull servyce, shall ever subscribe,

Your HONNOR's to command in uttmost servyce,

J^A. PEARSE, mayor.

Mr. Anthony Tatenell to secretary Thurloc.

May it please your HONOUR,

Vol. lxi. p. 41. AFTER my humble service tendered unto youe, I have made bold to write these, certyfieing your honour, that yesterdaye the order from oure high sheriffe and bayeliff, with the approved men and burgeses of Andover, did proclaime his highnes lord protector of England, Scotland and Ireland, with all the dominions thereto beeloning, drum and trumpet sounding, and some vollys of shott, with joye of the people, and desire of his happy contynuanee over us. But, Sir, in the midst of this joye, some newes came of his highnes beeing ill, which occasioned sorow; yett we hope God will bee pleased to restore his highnes health, to the glorye of God, his highnes comfort, the good of the nation, and the church of God, for which I shall prayeing rest

Andover, the 9. September, 1658.

Your HONOUR's humble servant,

ANTHO. TATENELL.

Mr. Thomas Errington to secretary Thurloc.

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

Newcastle, September 9th, 1658.

Vol. lxi. p. 43. MY humble service presented to your lordship, the trust your honour have reposed in me craves leave to acquaint your honor with the passages in these partes since the death of his highness the laite lord protector. On tuesday last, upon receipt of the maile, I immediately delivered Mr. Shaftoe, our deputy-mayor, my lord president of your councell letter, with order for proclameing his now highnes my lord Richard protector; and presently the deputy-mayor sent for Mr. recorder, the aldermen, and severall of the common councell, myselfe being one, and did communicate the councell's pleasure, and forthwith his highness was proclaimed in state, and in a very solemne maner, lord protector, and watches sett at every gaite in towne. Mr. mayor and others went the rounds that night, and every alderman goes the round a night, and sees the gaites be well locked in; and the watchmen, 6 at every gaite, doe theire duties. Blessed be our wise God, all these partes are in quietness; and I heare not one person as yet speake against his highnes, nor your lordship's proclamation. If any thing fall out in these partes, or newes, I crave leave to acquaint your lordship, and shall allwayes be redy to serve his highness, or your lordship, what is my power; and rests,

MY LORD,

Your most humble servant,

THO. ERRINGTON.

The councell letters to the high sheriffes of Northumberland and Cumberland came to my hands this morning; and I presently dispatched them away.

Mr.

Mr. Downing, resident in Holland, to secretary Thurloe.

RIGHT HONORABLE,

A.D. 1658.

Vol. lxi. p. 50.

YOURS, which came to my hand yesterday, hath fill'd me with unspeakable sorrow and thoughtfulness; such as I feare I could hardly have boren, but that the Lord is pleased to mingle his chastisements with mercys, knoweing well the weaknes of poore man, and how quickly his fayth is ready to fayle him, even notwithstanding many and signall manifestations of his kindenes. I neede not tell you, what rejoyceing was heere at this news; yet withall, I assure you, the news of the quick and unanimous declaring of my lord Richard doth at their hearts coole their comfort, and men are indeede amased at and doe take it for granted, that all things being so well accorded at London, the like wil be throughout England, Scotland and Ireland. And it troubles them, that he should dye at this tyme, though, dureing his life, they thought every moment thereof too much; yet it troubles them, that he should dye now, when their plotts have bin so lately blasted, and thereby the councell, city and army, made so unanimous, and noe parliament sitting, which in a month or two was expected; and if his highnes should then have dyed, thereby some hopes of changes in the government; and when the Spaniard is so lowe, that he is not able to defend himself, much less to afford your enemyes any succour, and your ships yet able to abide out, if in case any occasion were, and the campaign so farr over, whereby your business in Flanders not interrupted. All theis circumstances, and many more, seeme very remarkable even to your enemies; and I trust, that the Lord, who hath so eminently unanimously raised his highnes, and made him both heir and successor to such a father, in such an eminent manner, will also grant him of his grace and spirite, and to follow his steps, and be guided and counselled by the good and old counsellors, which stood before his father, espousing the same interests at home and abroad, whereby he will become yet more beloved of all good men, and terrible to all wickednes and evil doers; and the government thereby firmly establisht upon him, for the which my prayers shall not cease night and day. Yesterday Reade, that was in the Tower, (the little black prince's royal to Ch. Stewart, man) was dispatched post by 570 477 572, to give him an accompt of this newes; and I have, according to the usuall custome in such cases, given notice to all the publique ministers heere in amity with England, of my lord protector's death, and my lord Richard being proclaimed in his stead; and gave to each of them a copy of the proclamation, together with what other circumstances concerning the same were in your letter, and have caused the same to be printed, whereby quicker notice might come to all persons. De Witt came last night to see me, to condole and congratulate with me, and will this day give an account in the states of Holland of what is past, as also with the president of the states generall; and to each of them I gave a copy of what I caused to be printed. De Witt expressed much joy, that matters were so happily and quietly settled, and thereby such a disappointment to wicked men, enemies, as he said, as well to them as England. I cannot but see a peece of providence, in haveing the week before given the memoriall concerning Charles Stuart and other rebels of England, whereby very many of that sort of people are since gone out of this country, who otherwise had all bin in theis parts at this time.

The inclosed papers will give you an accompt of what we have from Copenhagen, Poland, Berlin, and those parts, whereby you will perceve, what a change is dayly more and more made by this late attaque of the king of Sweden, the consequences whereof I greatly apprehend, and the more for that I doe not yet heare of any overture of peace made by the king of Sweden to the king of Denmarke, noe declaration what will satisfy him; so that there is as yet little appearance of any thing but extremityes, and the fruites thereof. Monsieur Appleboom had a conference the other day with the deputies of the states: a copy of what he then gave in to them is herein inclosed. Admiral Opdam went from hence upon sunday last, and is now at the Vlye with 18 men of warr; and Florisen hath bin dayly expected with six more out of the chanel. The 2000 souldiers are to be carryed in six greate flutes, which are hired to that purpose; and heerein is inclosed a copy of the resolution of the states, authoriseing Opdam to put those men either into Copenhagen or Cronenburg. And the winde is now very fayre, and it's supposed he will be gone in two or three days at farthest. The French ambassadour shewed me his orders by the last post, which were to this effect; that seeing the king of Sweden had not thought fitt in any wise to communicate to his majesty of France this his present designe, although he had his minister with him, that therefore his said majesty was in an incapacity of doing any thing in this business, farther than to make known, that he knew nothing of it, nor had noe part in it; which accordingly Monsieur de Thou hath signified to Mr. de Witt, but withall expressing greate sorrow, that the king of Sweden should turne himself that way.

A.D. 1658. I had forgot to tell you, that de Witt desired me to lett you know, that it is the custome, when any prince dyes in amity with them, that his successor doe by letter signifye the same; and withall, how it hath pleased God to raise him up, and set him in his place.

Sixty sayle of ships, which were stopt by the king of Sweden in the Sound, are since released, and safely arrived in this country, whereby they were furnished with seamen for Opdam's fleete, which before they feared some want of.

The king of Spain's ambassadour

1st, 468 545 202 227 138 449 111 152 131: his business is to end the long debate of the partition of the lands of Outre-Mewes.

Friequaft

2dly, To countenance 46 441 25 126 152 249 in his negotiation, to engage the states general in a league with the emperour.

535 358 11 318 39 500 468 39 88 426 443 152 138.

peace with Portugall.

3dly, To hinder the 427 500 551.

offer their mediation between the protector and the 4thly, To engage this state, if he can, to 409 468 67 132 379 267 220 231 146 king of Spaine.

159 40 41 104 534 207 545.

the states general against England and France;

5thly, If he can, to engage 535 12 310 547 207 549; but however, to obviate any further conjunction with them.

exchange Mæstrickt

6thly, If he can, to 294 26 319 105 54 371 287 146 441 26 61 146 for some garrisons states, emperour other 308 132 393 459 106 140 of the 545, thereby to make the 41 90 426 443 states general succours,

154 133 in a capacity to give the 545 141 154 27 254 155 133 140, without breaking the capitulation;

19 132 42 13 352 468 245 429 150 157 355 475 412; for that that place is out of the Low Countries, and consequently not within the said capitulation.

borrow money;

7thly, To endeavour by all possible meanes to 241 133 443 159 384 393; and for that end to offer to sale the king of Spaine's part of the lands Outre-Mewes, and also

Anvers;

security of merchants in 13 106 154 286 141; and if all this will not doe, rather then security Newport or Ostend.

sayle, to offer for 141 42 259 441 475 390 160 441 134 149 416 112 139 146 282.

Charles Stewart's court:

The inclosed is a copy of what newes I have from 572 254 155 136 151. Yesterday the agent of the states generall came to me, to let me know, that the deputies of the states generall did intend to meet to-morrow, at 3 in the afternoon, at the French ambassadour's; and that they desired my company there, to impart to us the present state of the treaty between them and Portugall. I returned them for answer, that untill I had a new commission, I was not in a condition to meddle in any publique business. I pray, let me speedily have a copy of the treaty with Portugall; for (wanting it) I am not able to help it, if any thing should be agreed on prejudiciall to the treaty with England. Also let me have orders, what I shall do as to his highnesse's guaranty, if desired. I have by this post charged a bill of 500 l. upon Mr. Noell, that so I may have mony for my owne expences; and also as to the forthwith putting my selfe, and family, and house, and coaches into mourning, which till they be done, I am in an incapacity to give or receive any visites according to the custome heer, or to goe to the states upon and in pursuance of any orders, which I may receive from you; and it would not be fitt, that these things should be to be done, when your orders shall come, and therby his highnesse's affayres retarded. When the princes of Orange dyed, this state ordred the like to all their ministers great and small. I will be, as to the mourning, as good a husband as possibly I can. I am,

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

Hague, September 20. 58. [N. S.]

Your most humble servant,

G. DOWNING.

I heare the states, upon the notification, which I had given to them, have ordred my lord Newport to congratulate his highnesse, and to pursue his affayres; but 'tis so late, I cannot gett a copy of the resolution to send this post.

I shold be glad to know what contentment Ford gives you.

Mr. Downing, the English resident in Holland, to secretary Thurloe.

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

A.D. 1658.

BY the post yesterday, I gave you an account of my having received yours, with the most sadning news of his late hyghnesse's death; as also, that it hath pleased God so wonderfully to guid things, as that my lord Richard is with that unanimity proclaymed; a most surprizing astonishing mercy, such as I assure you doth most wonderfully amaze all that heare of it, who expected nothing but confusion in England, after his late hyghnesse's death, and thereby a wide doore opened for Ch. Stuart. The Lord carry you on with the same unity, in pursuance of the good old cause, and the lesse in any thing of change, it will be the more wonderfull. I also gave you an account of my having printed the proclamation, with such other passages as I knew, and given copyes thereof to all the publique ministers, and to the president of the states general, and to de Witt; so that itt's gone every-where, with the news of his late hyghnesse's death. I have also sent a copy to Sir Phillip Meadowes, and to Hamborow; and for what farther, I must referr you to my yesterdays letter by the post; for that the bearer being an expresse sent by the states, will hardly stay the writing heerof. This day 'tis reported, that 9 English friggoths were mett at sea going for the Sound, supposed to assist the king of Sweden. I heare this day also, that the fleet of this state, bound for the Sound with Opdam, can hardly be got ready these 8 days. Severall of their ships are not come in; but, which is more, such as are come in, are not yett fitted and repayred as to the losse of their masts, &c. in the late most terrible storme. I am fitting myselfe with mourning, that so I may be in a condition to obey and execute his hyghnesse's comands, when they shall come; and with my most hearty prayers for his long and happy government, I am,

Vol. lxi. p. 55.

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

Hague, September 20. 58. [N. S.]

Your most faithfull humble servant,

G. DOWNING.

A letter is expected from his hyghnesse, giving notice of his father's death, and God's establishing him in the government. By the post yesterday I gave you an account, that the states had resolved to order Monsieur Newport to condole the death of his late hyghnesse, and congratulate the happy succession of my lord Richard; and that de Witt had been with me, expressing even admiration at the quiete unanimous declaring of my lord Richard; and just now Beverning is coming to give me a visitt, thow I take their visitts as incognito, only in the night, my mourning being not yet done.

The letters from Wismar and Hamburg say, that Croningbergh is taken; but heer is no letters of it from Zeland. Obdam is ordered to sett sayle, as soon as he shall have 16 sayle of men of war, besides the ships, which carry the souldiers.

Intelligence sent from Holland by resident Downing.

Berlin, 14. Sept. 1658. [N. S.]

THE last letters of Poland confirm the rupture of the treaties of Muscovy, and that the Muscovite hath declared the war against the Polanders, and sent an army of 10,000 men into Samogitia, who burn and ruin all on the frontiers of the ducal Prussia; also that marshal Douglas was with 8000 Swedes joined with the Muscovite, and that from Poland order was given to the marshals of Lithuania to go with 30,000 men to meet them, and the king of Poland marcheth suddenly with another army to make an invasion into Muscovy; yet it is hoped, that all may be agreed peaceably, because the Muscovite had been perswaded hereunto by false reports against Poland. The emperor's forces are to-day to pass the Oder. Yesterday came hither Montecuculi, who commands them. After he had advised with his highness, he went away again. The envoy of Muscovy, that had been here some time, went hence yesterday with great content, and hath promised to persuade his master, that Poland is inclined to keep their word with him, and to accomplish his promises.

Hamburgh, 17 Septemb. From embassador Dorp.

There was a report, that Cronenburg was taken; but since came letters from Copenhagen, that they are resolved to hold out to the last, hoping for relief. The cannon, which the Swedes had planted on the river Elbe, are now taken away, so that the traf-

A.D. 1658. sick is again free. The Swedes retire to Kiel, there to wait for the forces of the emperor and Brandenburg. Two days ago arrived here an envoy from the elector of Brandenburg, but his business is not yet known.

Keydany in Samogitia, 7 Sept.

The Muscovites being far advanced into this duchy, last Sunday the nobility of the province of Kowna did swear fidelity unto them, and received safe-guards every-where, and then, by made bridges, passed over Niewiaza, spoiling and killing all that would not submit. General Gasiewski hearing hereof, marched against them, cut some in pieces, and consumed others, and the villages with fire, where they resisted; and the rest put to flight, were many slain by the country people, and so in this Samogitia the Muscovites reign hath ended just as the Swedes did. The Muscovite palatine of Kocchenhausen hath sent to our general to excuse the fact, affirming, that their general called Dolkoruka ventures his head, and that he had no order from the czar to make war upon us, but to conclude peace, and both together to fall on the Swede, who have destroyed all the Muscovite safe-guards in Livonia. Accordingly they have dispatch'd hence a post after our commissioners to call them back to treat the peace, which we hope to have speedily to our great advantage.

London, 20. Sept. From ambassador Nieuport.

The proclamation of the 14th instant, whereby was publish'd the succession of the lord protector, as I sent the 15th, hath been printed; after which the protector caused this inclosed placart to be publish'd, whereby his highness makes known, that by the advice of his council he gives notice to all persons, that have lawfully possessed at the time of the decease of his late highness any offices or places of authority or government civil or military in this country, to wit, of judges, justices, bayliffs, &c. and all other officers and ministers, shall be and remain in their charges and offices, as before, until his highness shall otherwise appoint; and that in the mean time every one in his place shall execute the orders, which he hath already received during the life of his late highness; and that every one, of what condition soever, shall assist the said officers and ministers in their offices; and that his will is, that the orders of the privy council shall be exactly observed.

Tuesday last, the 17th, Sir Oliver Fleming, master of ceremonies, came with a coach and six horses, with some lackeys of my lord protector, to see me; and being entered into the hall of the house of the high mightinesses with a gentleman and page of his highness, he told me, that he had order from the council to tell me, that it pleased God to take out of this world Oliver the late lord protector, and that the lord Richard, his eldest son, succeeded him in the office of protector, according to the petition and advice of the last parliament. I prayed him to thank the lords of the council for the communication made me out of respect to the high mightinesses, assuring them, that I would speedily give advice thereof to your high mightinesses. Since that, I understand, that by advice of the council the lord protector hath resolved, that the body of the late protector shall be embalmed, and carried to Somerset-house; and that at the burial, which will not be these six weeks, the same order shall be followed, as shall be found in the records to have been observed at the funeral of king James. In the church of Westminster a large place is preparing, where the body shall be interred. No news from any parts, but that their mourning is much abated by the succession of the lord Richard; and although all things go very quietly, yet good order is given every-where against all disorder, that may arise. To-day is kept a fast at Whitehall. Messieurs Nye, Cary, Cooper, Hook, Griffith, Goodwin, and Sterry, all famous learned men, preach'd and prayed in their turn.

18. Sept. 1658. [N. S.] Memorial for three English ships brought into Zeland, &c.

Vol. lxi. p. 38.

THE underwritten resident of England being informed, that a certain English vessel, called the Rebecca of Ipswich, whereof the master was George Berkenham, was taken the 4th instant by one Peter Darwelly of Ostend, and carried to Tervere in Zeland, and her best cable sail, and other goods, to the value of about 500 guelders, taken out of her, and offered to sale; also that another English vessel, called the Mary of Ipswich, whereof one Edward Jolly was master, was taken the 18th of August last by one Jacob Zacharias of Ostend, and was brought into Flushing, and a cable, anchor, and other goods taken out of her, to the value of 600 guelders; also that another English vessel, called the Robert of Colchester, whereof one Stephen Smyth was master, was taken the said 18th of August by the forementioned Zacharias, and was brought into Flushing, and grindstones, coals, with other goods, to the value of 150 guelders, taken out of her; the said resident demands, that the said vessels, with their tackling and and lading, may be forthwith restored to the proprietors, and the said Offenders punish'd A.D. 1658. according to the placart of this state, set forth the 9th of August last. Given at the Hague, 18. Sept. 1658.

A relation of the cruelties, sacrileges, and horrible impieties, committed by the English at Pitchan near Winoxberg in Flanders. Printed at Brussels.

19th September, 1658. [N. S.]

ABOUT 800 English came to the parish of Pitchan, where immediately, without any cause given of discontent, these madd men began to massacre all they met, of what age or sexe soever; and having sackt and plundered all the houses, and committed other outrages and excesses, they sett all on fire. Afterwards, to accomplish punctually what they had sworne in their treaty with the French touching holy places, they went to the churches, where the prophanation and breaking in pieces of altars and holy images was the least effect of their fury; they proceeded to the scorning of the most holy and adorable sacrament, and to tread under foot the sacred hostes with blasphemyes, the thought whereof would make hell itselke tremble with horreur, using these execrable words: God, if thou art in these hostes, speake, and make us see it. After which, having carryed away all that could be of any use to them, they sett the church on fire; and at the same time some of these impious people, finding up in the tower the pastor and his chaplaine, pillaged them, beate them, and with pistoll and sword would have forced them to deny God and the sayth, and had massacred them, had not the fire of the church forced them to fly thence. At length these barbarians returned to their garrison with 2000 head of cattell, horses, oxen, cowes, and sheep, &c. the French not daring to complaine thereof, though it be against their own interest, their honour, and their conscience, though those infidels threaten to serve all the holy and catholike places in like manner, so far as they can goe by the assistance of the French.

Remark by resident Downing.

This is a translate verbatim out of the printed newes at Brussells, and great matters are made of it; therefore I thought fitt to send it you, though I believe nothing in it.

Proclamation of the protector Richard in Ireland.

WHEREAS it hath pleased the most wise God in his providence to take out of this world the most serene and renowned Oliver, late lord protector of this common-wealth; and his said highness having in his life-time, according to the humble petition and advice, declared and appointed the most noble and illustrious the lord Richard, eldest son of his said late highness, to succeed him in the government of these nations: and whereas, pursuant thereunto, the lords of the privy council in England, together with the lord mayor, aldermen, and citizens of London, the officers of the army, and a number of other principal gentlemen, upon the fourth of this instant September, with one full voice and consent of tongue and heart, have published and proclaimed the said noble and illustrious lord Richard to be rightfully protector of this commonwealth of England, Scotland and Ireland, and the dominions and territories thereto belonging: and whereas we the lord deputy and council of this nation have been directed and required by the lords of the privy council of England to do the like within this dominion of Ireland: wherefore the said lord deputy and council, in pursuance thereof, together with several of the nobility of this nation, with the mayor, aldermen and citizens of this city of Dublin, the officers of the army, and a number of other principal gentlemen, do hereby also, with one full voice and consent of tongue and heart, publish and proclaim the said noble and illustrious lord Richard to be rightfully protector of England, Scotland and Ireland, with the dominions and territories thereunto belonging, to whom we do acknowledge all fidelity, and constant obedience, according to law, and the said humble petition and advice, with all hearty and humble affections, beseeching the Lord, by whom princes rule, to bless him with long life, and these nations with peace and happiness under his government.

H. Cromwell.

W. Steele, canc.

Ri. Laurence.

Richard Laughlin.

Wm. Purefoy.

J. Bligh.

Jo. Bridges.

Edehort.

Thomas Longe.

J. Waterhouse.

Henry Flower.

R. Hart.

William Amos.

Ant. Morgan.

Francis Russell.

Ed. Watson.

L. Abbott.

Edw. Roberts.

Vin. Gookin.

Hen. Owen.

E. Hughes.

Lan.

A.D. 1658.

Lan. Bolton.
Robert Gorges.
Fran. Russell.
William Bury.
John Nelson.
Je. Sankey.
Theo. Sandford.
Will. Sonds.

Dud. Loftus.
Fran. Aungier.
Miles Corbett.
J. Temple.
Edw. Roberts.
Jo. Hughes.
Thomond.
Meath.

Ranelaugh.
James Standish.
J. Eyre.
Will. Hampden.
Henry Whalley.
John Read.
R. Pepys.

H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland, to secretary Thurloc.

S I R,

11th Sept. 1658. Dublin.

Vol. lxi. p. 61.

YESTERDAY in the forenoon the messenger arrived with the sad tidings of his highness death. In the afternoon my brother was proclaimed his successor. I send you herewith the proclamation, subscribed by myselfe, and the councell, and such of the nobility, judges, officers of the army, and gentlemen of quality, as were in the town, and present when it was produced for signing. You may guess at my condition, and how hard a thing it was within an hower to put off my greife for my dear father, to give directions for a matter of solemnity; but the peace of the nation, my love and tenderness to my deare brother, I should now say my duty to the cheife magistrate, made me cast myselfe before the Lord, and begg earnestly for a support, and God heard my prayer. I went in person to make the proclamation, and therefore am able to assure you, that it was performed, not only with the greatest solemnity this place could afford, but with very great shouts and acclamations of joy, which I am perswaded came from the hearts of the people. This morning I caused the officers of the army to attend me; and having at large acquainted them with the state of our affaires, and their duty, left them together to consider of what I had said, and to offer me their thoughts. They returned an unanimous desire to me, that I wou'd assure his highness of their cheerfull obedience and faithfullness to his highness to the uttermost; and that they would suddainly give more testimony of it by their acting in their severall places. Indeed their temper seems to me at this time better then what I could have expected. I have commanded them all to their respective charges, to preserve things the surer, and to see the proclamation (which are also printed, and this evening sent through the nation) published with the more solemnity, and the acclamations of the soldiers. I intend this evening a dispatch to generall Monke, to acquaint him with our unanimity to strenthen his hands, if he be in any streight. Pray present my humble duty to his highness, and acquaint him with this. I hope God will enable him to beare his greife. If he sinke under it, wee perish; for how can the sheep be safe, unless the sheapheard watch?

Let her highness, my deare mother, know, that my affliction is doubled, when I thinke of her condition. Pray God comfort her. I doe pray for her, and I shall not cease, but shall continue her obedient and affectionate son, whilst I live. I shall not tell you how unexpressible my greife is. God knows what is in the womb of this severe stroke. I am loath to give way to my own fears. It is from his hand, and wee must submit. The Lord help us! I rest

Your affectionat friend, and humble servant,

H. CROMWELL.

Dr. Tho. Harrison to secretary Thurloc.

May it please your Honour,

Vol. lxi. p. 62.

WHAT chequer-worke we had here yesterday, in greife for the loss of our late, and joy for the proclaiming of our present protector, it is the businesse of this bearer to informe you. The streame of my lord deputie's sorrows (which are very great) runs forth cheifely in the channell of prayer, and therefore shall certainly be turned into joy. This water shall be turned into wine. The soule cannot but gaine by that losse, which it labours to think of only for spirituall ends.

My duty to the publike, and to his highness's family, (the wellfare of both lying much in a most strict and firme union and affection between his highness and his only brother) makes me bold to say, that a commission for lord lieutenant would be a most open manifestation of that affection in the one, and a further engagement to a perpetuall reciprocation in the other, and of generall influence and advantage both at home and abroad.

I doubt

I doubt not but God's guidance of his highnesse's spirit hath already prevented me in A.D. 1658. this motion; which yet being upon my heart, I durst neither smother it in silence, nor give it vent in any other way then this; carefully concealing it from all others. I meane well, whether I hitt or misse as to the medium, and hope therefore to be pardoned.

The good Lord make our present settlement like Jabez, more excellent then its brethren, though (like him) it hath bene brought forth with sorrow! The Lord enrich his highnesse with a double portion of his father's spiritt, and make him and his brother, as Jachin and Boaz, strength and establishment to these nations, pillars in and to the house of our God therein, and bear up these pillars now, that our earth is so weake, and all the inhabitants thereof! That the Lord from heaven would direct and bleffe all their and your pious endeavours in order thereunto, is the dayly and hearty prayer of

Your Honour's poor servant in all humility and faithfullnes,

Dublin-castle,
Sept. 11th, 58.

T. HARRISON.

Sir John Copleston to secretary Thurloe.

SIR,

Exon, Sept. 11. 1658.

THOUGH I beleve you have not forgotten how strictly his late highnesse and your-Vol. lxi. p. 65. selfe commanded me to eye Carew, Vernon, and Allen, yet I take the boldnesse to say, that I apprehend there never was more necessity to watch them than at this ticklish posture of affaires. They continue my neighbours; and although I thinke it yet early enough to feare their attempts, yet the contrariety they possesse against his highnesse interest ingagerh me to mind his late highnesse and your commands. I have, I hope, already indifferent good spies among them: they intend speedily a great meeting of their partie. I shall not faile to use my greatest subtlety, and endeavour to know what they doe and resolve on. Certainly they are persons of as much venome and revenge as any whatsoever, and will not spare to adventure on any thing, that may give them the least hope of successe. As for the old enemy, I continue such of them, as I judge most likely to doe mischeife, and th'other are confined to their houses. If this be not strict enough, I begge your commands, which shall be most punctually observed. Tuesday his highness was proclaimed by the mayor and magistrates of this cittie. As soon as I had the warrant for it, I sent to the maior to assemble the magistrates, which was accordingly done. I did this out of a suspicion I had they might sleight it, as formerly they have; but the mayor Pearse (who is my lieutenant-colonell) came to me with his bretheren, and assur'd me they would doe it with as much solemnity as they could; and truly soe they did. I was glad of it, because of the example it gives to all these parts.

On thursday last the proclamation was publicquely read at Honiton, where my troope, 200 militia, there did it as solemnly and with as much ceremony as they could. There were many justices and gent. of the best quality present; and all souldiers and others did engage most faithfully to serve his highnesse, whose affaires yet (blessed be God!) goe smoothly on, and look with a very promising countenance to continue soe. The great and continuall circumspection you have for his highnesse and the Lord's people makes me wary in giving you unnecessary words. I begge a pardon for the tediousnesse of this paper, and that you continue to owne me, what I am in the greatest quality,

SIR,

Your most faithfull and humble servant,

JOHN COPLESTON.

Secretary Thurloe to H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland.

May it please your EXCELLENCYE,

THE last lyne I saw from you was in doctor Petye's hand, which mentioned your In the posses- beinge ill; and that beinge writt neare a month since, and wee haveinge had noe sion of the letters from Ireland these 3 posts, wee are for the present under very great trouble and right hon. anxiety, especially consideringe, that reports flye up and downe, that your excellencye is the earl of dangerously ill, which I hope is but like those other reports, which are now spread in this place, to amuse the people, and to stirre them up, and to adapt them for insurrection. But, blessed be God! wee are all in a very good condition as to peace, and mens mindes enclyne much more to peace and settlement then to trouble; and I hope the army will

A.D. 1658. continue unanimous in their obedience to his highnesse, as they were to his father. As to our other affaires, viz. the procureinge of money, the callinge a parliament, and the like, our trouble and sorrow is not yet enough over to sett close to those considerations; yet thursday next is appointed for the debate of them in the counsell. What the result is, shall be communicated to your excellencye. The army here is upon draweing of a declaration to his highnesse of their fidelity to hym, which is all that is yet on foot in this place.

The last newes wee had from Denmarke was, that the kinge of Sweden was before Copenhagen and Coningsberge, and like to be posselt of the latter in a few dayes. The Dutch are upon their way to assist the kinge of Denmarke with 2000 foot and 24 ships, and are to send 4000 foot more. The elector of Brandenburgh is alsoe marchinge with a good army into Holsteine by way of diversion against the Swede, who, if he be not posselt of Copenhagen, before these enemies come upon hym, he will be much put to it. I remeyne

Your EXCELLENCYE's most humble and faithfull servant,

14. Sept. 1658.

JO. THURLOE.

Lord Fauconberg to H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland.

MY DEARE LORD,

In the possession of the right hon. the earl of Shelburne.

SYNCE my last by Mr. Underwood, nothing remarkable heere, but preparations for doing right to the memory of that great person, so beloved of all, in the solemnity of his funerall, which will assuredly be greater then ever was done heertofore to any prince, tho' never come neere answering either the affections or obligations of this people.

But certainly somewhat

All seemingly weares the face of 2 38 39 7 11 35 39 3 19 27 23 47 34 is brewing under hand.

A

26 22 43 14 3 39 19 34 2 35 11 43 19 27 15 38 27 6 11 35 14 3 27 6. 3

caball there is of persons, and 7 3 2 3 23 23 39 14 11 35 11 19 34 26 10 31 11 35 34 26 27 34, 3 27 6 great ones, held very closely,

15 35 11 3 39 26 27 11 34, 14 11 23 6 38 11 35 47 7 23 26 34 11 23 47, resolved, it's feared, to rule themselves,

35 11 34 26 23 38 6, 19 39 34 10 11 3 35 11 6, 30 26 35 38 23 11 39 14

or set all on fire.

11 23 34 11 23 38 11 34, 26 35 34 11 39 3 23 23 26 27 10 19 35 11. Whatever God sees good for us, hee I trust will fit us to it, but in mercy rather avert us from confusions. Come what will, I am

Your LORDSHIPP's most faithfull

Whitehall, Sept. the 14. [1658.]

and obedient brother and servant,

FAUCONBERG.

General Monck to secretary Thurloc.

MY LORD,

Vol. lxi. p. 71.

MY brother, doctor Clarges, being returning to London, I make bold by these to desire your lordshippe to make my humble acknowledgement to his highnesse for the dispatch of him hither with soe large a testimonie of his respect and affection to him. Hee came hither in five dayes, and had returned sooner, but that hee was staid by the councill, who being upon an adjournment disperst from Edenburgh, tooke some time to meete and prepare a letter of their duty and respect to his highnesse, to send by him. Hee can acquaint you with the condition of affaires in these partes by word of mouth. I shall therefore cease to trouble your lordshippe further, butt take leave, and remayne

Dalkeith, 15. Sept. 1658.

Your LORDSHIPPE's most humble servant,

GEORGE MONCK.

A paper sent by general Monck from Scotland to the protector Richard Cromwell, in the hand-writing of Dr. Tho. Clarges.

Remonstrances of what I desire you to communicate to his highnes.

A.D. 1658.

SINCE by the providence of God his highnes is settled in the supreme magistracy of these nations, it will be necessary for his firmer establishment, that he endeavours to engage to him those of power and interest amongst the people; for which he has a better opportunity then his father, haveing not the same obligations to many disquieted spirits. In the possession of Richard Frankland esq;

The greatest part of the people are not the best part. But of those, that are the best, the most considerable are such as have a great regard to discipline in the church of God; for want whereof we have almost lost religion amongst us, which is crumbled into dust by separations and divisions, and we are become the scorn of our enemies, and the grief of our friends.

I desire therefore you will acquaint his highnes, that it is my humble advice to him, that the first beginning of his administration of government be at the service of God; and in order thereunto, that before or at the same instant he summons a parliament, he also calls together an assembly of godly divines, to agree upon some way of union and accommodation, that we may have unity in things necessary, liberty in things unnecessary, and charity in all; which will put a stop to that progresse of blasphemy and profanes, that I feare is too frequent in many places by the great extent of toleration.

His highnes, by this proceeding, may be confident of the prayers and affections of the most orthodox of the ministry: and what influence they have upon the people, is not hard to deduce. And for a preparation to this great work, it will be good for his highnes to countenance and favour some of the gravest sort of moderate presbyterian divines, such as doctor Reynolds, Mr. Calamy, Mr. Cooper, and Mr. Manton, and to hear them preach to him at Whitehall as often as those of other judgments.

The calling a parliament will require much consideration, and the house of lords, as a great part thereof, will not take up the least care of his highnes; concerning which, in my opinion, it may be fitt to summon the most prudent of the old lords, that have bin faithfull, and some of the leading gentry in the severall counties, as Mr. Perpont of Nottinghamshire, Sir George Booth of Cheshire, Sir John Hubbart of Northfolk, Mr. Hampden of Buckinghamshire, Mr. Bainton of Wiltshire, Mr. Popham of Sommerfetshire, Mr. Rolls of Devonshire, and some such others, whose will be the more encouraged to sitt, when they perceive the good inclinations in his highnes to a settlement in religion.

The great debts upon the nation will oblige his highnes to retrench, as much as may be with safety, the charge of the armyes and navy; to which I shall humbly offer, that, as to Ireland, all the single companies there may be disbanded; which (if I am not misinform'd) are officer'd by persons not of the best affections to his highnes interests; and likewise some of the regiments may be reduced, and in the stead of them a good militia of trained bands set up in the severall counties, whose consisting most of them of persons formerly soldiers, or such old English inhabitants that have bin for the parliament, and suffer'd by the cruelties of the Irish, will well defend that country.

And as to the armyes in England, Scotland, and Ireland, in generall a great expence may be saved, if they be put two regiments into one; whereby his highnes may be freed from some insolent spirits, that may not be very safe to be continued; and this action would be much pleasing to the best men in the nation, whose were not so free to a hearty conjunction with his highnes father, because they conceived the army in hands they could not trust. I beleive his highnes may think this last bold advice, and not safe to be put in execution; but you may assure him, there is not an officer in the army, upon any discontent, that has interest enough to draw two men after him, if he be out of place, as his highnes may remember by a late example. The affections of the army to his highnes may be best preserved, if his highnes will be pleas'd to let every colonel, that is honest, have the nomination of his own officers upon vacancies, whose will be sure to preferre persons of his own principle. But such colonels, as are suspected, may be denied that favour. And when places fall in their own regiments, his highnes may despoise them into honest hands; but the managing of this practice is to be done with warines, that offence may not be taken at it. I am not able at this distance to say so much as I could of the navy, as when I was more conversant in their affaires; but I finde by inquiry many of those brave men, that ingaged their lives in the Dutch warr, out of imployment, which may be of ill consequence to his highnes service, if ever occasion be to make a navall warr. Wherefore, in regard so much of the honour and safety of the nations is concern'd in the well-manning the fleet, I would have you from me to recommende to his highnes esteeme and affection captaine Goodson, captaine Eustace Smyth, captaine John Clark, captaine Peter Mootham, captaine Bernard Gilpin, captaine Plumly, captaine Robert Blake,

A.D. 1658. Blake, capitaine Penrose, to command the best ships, whoe are such as have given eminent proofs of their courage and fidelity in our late ingagements, and have good estates and interests.

There is one Whitehorne in the fleet, that is in a very great ship, by I know not whose favour, whoe is a coward, and unfitt for imployment. And there be many others of no estates, and as litle interest, that are captaines of ships, whoe, I feare, if his highnes should have warr with the Duch, or any potent enemy, if their men doe not prevent and hinder it, they may be apt to betray or sell them.

I am the more free in this busines of the navy for the consequence of it; and I could wish, in all preferments there, his highnes would be pleas'd only to let merritt take place.

If his highnes is not displeased with these results of my thoughts, I desire you to move him to take into his councill, for the execution of them, my lord Whitlock, my lord St. John's, my lord Brohill, my lord Ansloe, Mr. Perpoint, and Mr. secretary Thurloe; whoe I humbly propose in subordination, and with respect to the right honorable the lords of his privy councill.

What I have appointed you to say to his highnes concerning the disposition of Edenbrough-park, and the makeing Mr. Fleetwood commissary, in commissary Phips his place, as also concerning some perticular persons, I leave to your memory.

GEORGE MONCK.

The information of Thomas Bowes of Beedall, innkeeper, taken upon oath the 15th of Septemb. before Matthew Beckwith, Esq; one of the justices of peace for the north riding of Yorkshire.

Vol. lxi. p. 80. HE deposeth, that upon saturday last he coming from York, Mr. Will. Smalwood of Beedall (servant to the two commissioners of the excise) came to his house, and demanded, what news at York, and if Richard were proclaimed. This deponent answered, he was; and said there was expectation of a parliament calling: to which he replied, that if the parliament should sit, Richard's head would or should be taken off; for, saith he, I spoke with two or three troopers going northwards, and he said there would be work shortly.

This is a true copy.

THOMAS BOWES.

Steele, lord chancellor of Ireland, to secretary Thurloe.

HONORABLE SIR,

Vol. lxi. p. 81. YOURS of the 7th instant I received, which, with the sorrowfull relation of his late highnes his departure, brought to hand also something carrying in them great matter of thankfulness to the Lord, as that continued presence of the Lord with his highnes spiritt to him in those ejaculatory breathings of his soule for the blessing of love and union amongst the servants of God, amidst their various administrations, particularly praying for them, that were angry with him, and which, as you well observe, is very signally remarkable, when he left the world, to leave these nations in peace, which had been so much imbroyled in trouble and misery. All which, together with the quiet inchoation and hopefull progresse of our new mercies in the person and spiritt of his now highnes, hath, I trust, already given a double check, th'one to those sorrows, that surpriz'd us by the departure of his late highnes as to the measure thereof, and th'other to the pride and insultings of that enemy, that hoped to see such a day, and then assured themselves of such opportunities and advantages, as they despayred of in the lyfe-time of his highnes, by reason they knew so well his wisdom and vigilancy. The Lord, I hope, will teach his people by such a dispensation both to eye their sinns, and the provocations of these nations in the losse we have received, and withall to magnifye the tenderness and riches of that grace, whereby wee are yet a people and beloved, that deserve to be neither. And if the Lord would now in these renewings of mercy cloth all his servants in their severall capacities with such zeale for his glory, and true love to his interest and image, that they would first and above all seekings study the concernments of our Lord Jesus, and the advancement of his name and truths amongst men, and both esteeme and bee conversant with simplicity of heart and sincerity, which are the life and comfort of all conversation, I knowe not but wee may see a glorious accomplishment at home and abroad of many of those things, as to the ruine of Babylon, and prosperity of Syon, which his highnes long'd to see, and to bee an instrument for in the hands of the Lord. Sir, if it were needfull, as I beleieve it is not, to give you any accompt of affayres heere, it would bee in breife, that his highnes hath been very solemnly and unanimously pro-A.D.1658. claymed; that there is here a generall visible quietnes, but withall, as is requisite, a vigilant eye by the lord deputie here upon the old common enemy. Sic notus Uliſſes. His highnes laſt proclamation to prevent any interruption in the adminiſtration of juſtice or peace of the nation, wee have cauſed to bee proclaymed alſo, and both of them to bee inrolled, though there wanted ſome requiſites as to the manner of their transmitting; but the ſubſtance in ſuch caſes is not to bee prejudiced by any want of circumſtance. Nevertheless it is held adviſable heere, as I ſuppoſe in England, that ſuch principall parts of power, whether by patent or otherwiſe, as are determined, ſhould with all poſſible expedition bee ſupplied. I beleee ſomething tending thereunto will bee otherwiſe ſignified to you. I feare I have already tranſgreſt my limitts, and a ſuitablenes to your great affayres. I would only adde my earneſt and hearty prayers to the Lord, whoſe ſceptre is a ſceptre of righteouſneſs, and who is the king of ſaints and nations, that his highnes perſon and ſpiritt may bee ſo bleſſed and guided in counCELLS and actions in the government of theſe nations, that by the ſpiritt of wiſdome, piety and juſtice, powred upon him, and running to the ſkirts of his garment, theſe nations may reape the laſting fruit of thoſe mercies, that have been and are overſhadowing them. I remayne, Sir,

Dublin, Sept. 16. 58.

Your very affectionate and faythfull ſervant,

W. STEELE.

THERE was due to pay up the forces in Ireland to the 29th of Sept. 1656. the Irish aſſeſments included, 109158 l. 2 s. 6 d. and to pay them from the ſaid 29th of Sept. 56. to the 1ſt of Feb. 1657. at 24027 l. 2 s. 8 d. a month, is required 420474 l. 16 s. 8 d. which makes in all the ſum of

529632 19 2

Whereout there being deducted the pay of Irish forces in England from 29 Sept. to the 28th Sept. 57. the ſum of 22244 l. 13 s.

29267 1 0

500365 18 2

To ſupply which there hath been aſſigned 414705 l. in which is included Irish aſſeſments from 29. Sept. 56. to the 24. June, 57. at 12000 l. a month, and 3 in aſſeſments, being 20000 l. and Irish aſſeſments, from the ſaid 24. June to the 25. December, 57. being 54000 l. and the remainder of the ſaid 414705 l. hath benn aſſigned out of England

414705 0 0

85660 18 2

And to pay them up to the 1ſt of Feb. 1657. is required in one, being 6 weekes, 36040 l.

36040 0 0

121700 18 2

The receipts of cuſtomes, exciſe, rents of lands in Ireland, is 68965 l. 4 s. 2 d. for yeere, ending 25 March 58.

Mr. Downing, the reſident in Holland, to ſecretary Thurloe.

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

I RECEIVED by the laſt poſt Mr. Morland's letter to me, wherein was a poſtſcript, Vol. lxi. p. 94. that you doubted not, but that I had received my credentialls and inſtructions, which you had ſent me by the laſt with the proclamation. The proclamation I did receive, which came in yours by the expreſſe, which the lord Newport ſent to the ſtates; but there came with it no credentialls nor inſtructions, but your letter ſaid, that by the next I ſhould receive them. Where the miſtake is, I am not able to gueſſe; and underſtanding that the ſtates heer did expect ſomething from me, and that it would be 14 dayes, ere a returne to this letter can be had, and poſſibly that alſo your very returne coming by the poſt might be intercepted, and that if I ſhould continue heere ſo long without applying to the ſtate, reports and conſtructions might and would be made and rayſed thereupon, I did on wedneſday night ſend my ſecretary to de Witt to let him know, how it was; who thereupon ſaid, that thow it was true, that till I had new credentialls, in ſtriſtneſſe I was no miniſter, yet that on the other hand the inconvenience might be worſe, if this ſtate ſhould continue ſo long unapplied to; and therefore that he did by all means deſire, I would ſend my ſecretary to the preſident of the ſtates generall, and put a memoriall into

A.D. 1658 his hands, letting him know, how it was happened, and that that was the reason, why I could not demand an audience, according to the usuall manner in such cases; which accordingly yesterday I did, a copy of which memoriall is heerin inclosed. I am able to give you very little account of the inside of businesse, for that since the news of his late hyghnesse's death, I have not been in a condition either to stirre abroad, or let any body come to me, this countrey being very observing as to the ceremonies of mourning; and I have informed myselfe from the residents heer, and particularly the residents of Poland and Denmarke; and being by them and the master of the ceremonies here informed, that at the death of any king or soverayne prince, their residents heer have, by order from their successors, put themselves and whole family and coaches into mourning, and also an appartment of their houses, I have done the like, and have neither exceeded nor done lesse than the constant custome of all heer in the like cases; and there is no court in the world (I think) wher are so many publique ministers as heer, and where a fault in this kind would have been more censured. I have therefore done it without wayting your order, it being a thing here always done; and till it had been done, I must have still remayned close prisoner. To-morrow I shall be, I hope, in a condition to give and receive visitts, but shall not farther adventure to make any further applycation to the state, till I have a commission and instructions. I have endeavour'd to buy the mourning as cheape as possibly I could.

Ch. Stuart and the duke of York, and all the guests are, I believe, now at councell at Ghent, whether they have flocked from all parts since the news of his late hyghnesse's death. He was incognito with his sifter the last week. A burgomaster of Maesland Sluise said the other day, that a person of quality lodged a day and night at his house, and had hyred a vessell there, and was sayled for Scotland.

This week every day hath filled this place with news, as that the lord Lambert was up in the head of four regiments; that the lord Fairfax had possessed himself of the isle of Man; that the duke of Buckingham had escaped out of the Tower; and, to complete all, that his now hyghness was poysoned, and the lord Henry and gen. Moncke stood upon their own termes.

We do not yet heere, that Obdam is gone to sea. The last storme had extreamely shattered many of their men of warre. An expresse, that came from him this day, said, that he was not yet gone, but that he intended that day to sett sayle, but I hardly believe it. Heer is no news from Zeland further than what is in the inclosed, by which you will also have an account of the Muscovites being entred Samogitia belonging to Poland. I am,

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

Hague, Sept. 27. 58. [N. S.]

Your most faithfull humble servant,

G. DOWNING.

The states here sent this day to me to congratulate his hyghnesse in his happy entrance into the government; but I desired to be excused till to-morrow, not having been able sooner to gett things in order as to my mourning.

The inclosed to collonel Clerk is about capt. Muns, the commander of the Vulture friggott, who was driven into the Texell in the last storme, with the losse of his masts, anchors, cables, boats, &c. and escaped casting away very narrowly; and whom I furnished with credit at Amsterdam to fitt out his friggott, and she is already gone to sea, whereas otherwise she had layne till next week, before she could have had an order.

Intelligence sent from Holland by resident Downing.

Extract touching the decease of the lord protector.

20. Sept. 1658. [N. S.]

Vol. lxi. p. 58. THERE hath been again read in the assembly the letter of the embassador Nieuport, dated Westminster the 15th instant, and received yesterday, containing, among other things, that the lord protector of the republic of England, Scotland, and Ireland, was there deceased the 13th instant, and that the morrow the serjeants and heralds at arms had proclaimed, in the presence of the lords of the council, of the lord mayor and aldermen of London, and of the chief officers of the army, in the places where such proclamations were wont to be made, that the deceased lord protector, according to the act made upon the humble petition and advice of the parliament, had named for his successor his eldest son the lord Richard Cromwell; and that the privy council of his highness, the lord mayor, the aldermen and common council of the city of London, as also the chief officers of the army, had all unanimously resolved to cause the said lord Richard to be proclaimed as protector of the republic of England, Scotland and Ireland, with the territories territories thereunto belonging. The president Schulenberch hath also reported, that the A.D. 1658. resident Downing had by his secretary given notice of the said death. Whereupon, after deliberation, it hath been resolved, that it shall be written to the said ambassador Nieuport, that he shall make a compliment of condoling in the name of their high mightinesses to the said lord Richard Cromwell, touching the decease of the lord protector his father of immortal memory, and then another congratulating with him his protectoral dignity, assuring him, that their high mightinesses not only resolved to maintain and continue the antient amity and the last alliance, but also to increase the same for the good of each other by a more strict engagement: moreover, that he shall in the present constitution of affairs pursue the execution of the determinations of their high mightinesses, principally touching those of Sweden and Denmark, and of the marine, with all their dependences, for this purpose, informing the said lord protector, how their high mightinesses find themselves now obliged, by virtue of their leagues, to assist the king of Denmark in this necessity and oppression, praying him, that he will consider, that the present war of the king of Sweden against the king of Denmark hath been made contrary to the treaty, which the envoy of England had also signed; and that he would take care, that the violation thereof may be repaired, and the affairs of Denmark redressed in such manner, that the forces of both kings being equal, peace may be there settled, and the said kingdoms preserved from new troubles, which cannot but be prejudicial to the neighbours.

And new letters of credence shall be sent to the said ambassador Nieuport, as the copy of this resolution shall also be sent to the said ambassador Boreel at Paris, to serve him for information partly, and partly to use the same endeavours with the court of France in the name of their high mightinesses in relation to this war between the kings of Sweden and Denmark, and of the succours of this state. And the letters of this resolution shall be dispatch'd without delay.

Resolution touching an Ostend pirate, called Bomler.

9 Sept.

BEING received a letter from the college of the admiralty of Rotterdam, written to the same place the 8th instant, with a writing in answer of the letter of their high mightinesses of the 7th of the same month, and afterwards information was given of what was in execution of the resolution of their high mightinesses ordained upon the memorial of the resident Downing touching the private man of war, Cornelius Bomler of Ostend, they had dispatch'd towards sea their provost, charged with an order, such as is express'd in the said writing. Whereupon, after deliberation, it hath been found good, that a copy of the same letter and writing shall be sent to the said resident Downing, to inform himself thereby; and in the mean time a letter shall be written to the said college, that they would advertise their high mightinesses from time to time of what they shall do more in the said business.

The forementioned writing followeth.

THE counsellors deputies to the admiralty residing at Rotterdam, having seen by the letter of their high mightinesses, and the resolution with it, both dated yesterday, that a certain English ship, named the Richard and Susanna of Dover, whereof the master was Christopher Dawson, coming from London to this city of Rotterdam, was taken the 4th instant by Cornelius Bomler of Ostend, and carried to Gorée, where he was still with the said Bomler, as also that the same Bomler had taken out of the said Dover ship in money and goods to the value of about 100 l. sterling; and therefore that their high mightinesses would, that they proceeded against the said Ostender, and in behalf of the interested in the said English prize, with all expedient vigor and speed, according to the placarts of the state, authorize and charge hereby their provost Snak to go presently with two of his halberdiers to Helvoet-sluice, and there repair to the commissioner Tong, to the end that, so soon as the said Ostender shall be brought before him by means of the said commissioner, he shall examine his commission; during which examination or detaining of the said Ostender on land, the provost shall go aboard the Ostender and the English prize, and shall inform himself particularly, if the placart of their high mightinesses of the 9th of August last have not been violated or broken by the said Ostender or his men; and having found it to be so, the said provost shall put the said ships in safety and under guard, and shall cause them to be carried to Helvoet-sluice, there to be detained till farther order from this magistrate and the said commissioner; and the watches and keepers of the ships at Helvoet-sluice shall assist the said provost for the execution of these orders. It is so commanded to all and every one not to fail herein.

Made at the assembly of the deputies of the admiralty afore-mentioned, 8 Sept. 1658.

The

The forementioned letter follows.

A.D. 1658. High and mighty LORDS,

AT the same instant that we received the letter and resolution of your high mightinesses, with a copy of the resident Downing's memorial concerning Cornel. Bomler and the English prize, in execution of the resolution of your high mightinesses, we have sent toward sea our provost, charged with an order in writing, as your high mightinesses may be pleased to see more amply by the copy herewith, whereunto, that we may not be tedious, we refer ourselves, promising ourselves, that thereby we shall have satisfied the good intention of your high mightinesses touching the information, which you demand by the said resolution. We pray God, &c.

The counsellors deputies of the admiralty of Rotterdam, &c.

Resident Downing's memorial touching his highness now living.

THE underwritten resident of England finds himself obliged not longer to defer the giving part in writing to the lords the states general of the united provinces of so happy and welcome a news as the succession of the most noble and illustrious Richard, eldest son to the late lord protector of glorious memory, to the protectoral dignity and government of England, Scotland and Ireland, with the territories and dominions thereto belonging; and that he hath been proclaimed and received with an incredible unanimity of hearts and voices, such as was due to such a prince, who was son and heir to such a father.

And as the United Provinces are much interested in the good understanding with England, so the said resident doth assure them, that his most serene highness, that now is, will firmly maintain and conserve the ancient amity and late alliance, and be ready to give new and particular proofs of the zeal, which he hath for their welfare; for which end the said resident will not be wanting from time to time to employ his utmost care and endeavours.

Given at the Hague, 26. Sept. 1658.

THE underwritten envoy of the king's majesty of Poland and Sweden, by letters received from Samogitia, is assured of the great defeat of the Muscovites, &c. and how they are quite beaten out of that duchy by the Polanders, and have desired a treaty for peace, &c. All which, out of the respect to the H. and M. lords states general, he thought fit to signify unto them.

Given at the Hague, 24. Sept. 1658.

Resolution of the states general to hasten the fleet to sea.

24. Sept. 1658. [N. S.]

THERE has been read a letter of the deputies of their high mightinesses, written aboard their frigate in the chanel, dated the 22d instant at nine at night, and another from admiral Wassenaer or Opdam from the Vlie of the same date: whereupon, after deliberation, it hath been resolved, that a letter shall be writ to the said deputies and to the said lieutenant admiral, that their high mightinesses have understood with astonishment, that the fleet is not yet out, as the said lord admiral and col. Puckler have order; and that so much the more, seeing that they had received the order and resolution of the 20th instant, according whereunto the fleet ought to have set sail: wherefore their high mightinesses will again, that the fleet set sail without any delay, and that such a division of soldiers shall be made as is convenient, seeing that the voyage is not for months, but only some days, if please God. That their high mightinesses also believe, that the rest of all necessities are by this time come: however, that they will give order, that the captains content themselves with what they have, and that they will write the colleges of the admiralty to send after by the ships, that follow, all the said necessities.

*Intelligence sent by resident Downing.Resolution of the states general congratulating the reception of the lord Richard to the protectoral dignity.*26th September, 1658. [N. S.] A.D. 1658.

Vol. lxi. p. 87.

THERE hath been read in the assembly a certain memorial of the resident Downing, whereby he communicateth to their high mightinesses, that the lord Richard, eldest son of the late lord protector, hath been unanimously proclaimed protector in the place of the lord his father. Whereupon, after deliberation, it hath been found good hereby to require the deputies Huygens and others of their high mightinesses, that they would charge two of their company to go (in this extraordinary occasion of condoling and congratulating, as also in consideration that the said resident goes not yet abroad) to his house to condole with him about the decease of the lord protector; and then to congratulate about the succession and reception of the present lord protector, in the place of the lord his father, all with such compliments as besit such an occasion.

*Resolution touching the offers of Portugal.*26th September, 1658. [N. S.]

There hath been again produced in the assembly the memorial presented to their high mightinesses the 28th of last August, by the ambassador of Portugal, with two papers with it; being in effect an answer to the resolution of their high mightinesses of the 13th of the same month, touching the satisfaction which is pretended to be given to this state by the king and crown of Portugal. Whereupon, after deliberation, their high mightinesses have declared, as they do now declare by these presents, that they cannot accept the offer made in the memorial aforesaid, or thence receive any satisfaction or content; but to insist upon the demand heretofore made to the said king and crown, in the name of this state. Wherefore the said ambassador is required, that he would make overtures of offers, that are more satisfactory. and such as may be accepted.

*Resolution touching an English ship brought in by Bomler, &c.*16th September, 1658.

There hath been read the report of the deputies Huygens and others of their high mightinesses, for the affairs of the sea, according to their resolution of the 14th instant, having seen and examined the letter of the college of the admiralty of Rotterdam, dated the 18th of the same, with some papers, amongst others a report in writing of John Snaets, provost of the arches, touching Cornelius Bomler, ayant commission de Flandres, and his English prize, which (as it hath been represented by the resident Downing) is entered into Gorée. Whereupon, after deliberation, it hath been found good, that a letter shall be written to the said college, that they would proceed, and cause to proceed, in the business of Cornelius Bomler, according to the placarts of this country; and the extract of this resolution of their high mightinesses shall be given into the hands of the resident Downing, to serve him for information.

*Resolution touching the Rebecca of Ipswich.*18th September, 1658. [N. S.]

There hath been read in the assembly a certain memorial of the resident Downing, containing complaints, that an English ship, called the Rebecca of Ipswich, whereof the master was George Berkenham, was taken the 4th instant by Peter Derwelly of Ostend, and brought to Tervere in Zeland, and there taken out of her the best tackling and other goods to the value of 500 l. and exposed to sale; whereupon, after deliberation, it hath been found good, that a copy of the said memorial shall be sent to the college of the admiralty in Zeland, with request and command, that they would inform themselves of this business, and then proceed according to the placart of the 9th of August last, set forth for the like subject; as also, to advertise their high mightinesses of what they should have done therein. And an extract of this resolution of their high mightinesses shall be sent to the said resident, to serve him for information.

Resolution touching the setting sail of admiral Opdam, &c.

A.D. 1658.

26th September, 1658. [N. S.]

After deliberation, it hath been resolved, that letters be written to the king of Denmark, that the fleet under lieutenant-admiral Wassenauer, or Opdam, together with the troops destined for the succours of his majesty, is ready to go to sea; and that their high mightinesses believe verily, that it set sail yesterday, or at the farthest will this day, if the wind be good, in such order, as their high mightinesses hope, that it may deliver his majesty and his states from the oppression it now lies under; and the said letter shall be given to the college of the admiralty of Amsterdam, to send it by a galliot, and two copies sent to the resident Romer at Hamburg, with order to send it safe as may be; and two more copies shall for the same purpose be given to the two ministers of his said majesty here.

*Resolution touching assisting the king of Denmark.*27th September, 58. [N. S.]

There hath been read a memorial of resident Copes's, whereby he gave notice, that the elector of Brandenburg would depart the 17th instant from Berlin, to follow his army, and enter into Holstein, having first joined with the imperial troops, and there to deliver the king of Denmark; and that his electoral highness hopes, that their high mightinesses will not fail to make appear the same vigour by water as the elector will by land; and since the ravagings, that the Swedes have done in Holstein, shall cause that the armies of the allies will there find but little provision, the said resident proposeth to consideration, whether it will not be expedient to encourage the subjects of these provinces, that with their ships they carry provision to the river Elbe, to sell it there to their profit. Whereupon, after deliberation, it hath been resolved, that letters shall be writ to ambassador Isbrants, now with the said elector; that he shall assure his electoral highness, that their high mightinesses have done their endeavour to make their fleet on lieutenant-admiral Opdam to set sail; that it consists of 20 great ships of war, provided for 38 companies of foot, besides mariners, which are all to be employed for the service of the king of Denmark; and that according to the letter of the deputies of their high mightinesses, dated the 25th at the Vlie, the said fleet was ready to go to sea; and that by the grace of God, the wind favourable, there is no doubt but that it is gone forth, and that the said fleet shall be every day augmented by ships, which are still equipping. But as for the two parts of the said memorial, for provision to be sent to the river Elbe, the states of Holland and Friseland have promised to recommend it to the sea towns of their provinces; and a copy of this resolution shall be given to the said resident, to serve him for an information.

*Resolution touching the fleet, &c. taken after the first sermon.*Sunday, 29th September, 1658. [N. S.]

There was read a letter from the deputies of their high mightinesses, from the Vlie, 26th instant, containing amongst other things the endeavours, that they continue to set forth the fleet under lieutenant-admiral de Wassenauer Opdam, which hath been ready since the 25th; but that, according to the attestation of pilots, it hath been impossible to get out by ill weather and contrary winds; and that they would do their utmost to effect the intention of their high mightinesses. Whereupon, after deliberation, it hath been resolved, that answer shall be sent to the said deputies, that their high mightinesses are pleased with their endeavours, and desire that they continue the same without any delay; and it shall be proposed to them to consider, that whilst there was war with England, it was found by experience, that the ships of war, though the wind was not good, got forth in the night by help of some barks placed near the buoys, and making fires; and that their high mightinesses judge it expedient, that the like way be made use of in this occasion, as they recommend the same to them, in case that before the receipt hereof the wind shall not be good to go forth by day; and the extract of this resolution shall be sent to the college of the admiralty of Rotterdam and Zeland; that they endeavour to set to sea all the ships under them, that they still equip, and to send them to the said fleet; and that they shall advertise their high mightinesses from time to time of what they shall effect; and these dispatches shall be sent away without delay.

Resident

Resident Downing's memorial for restitution of an English ship, taken by an Ostender.

A.D. 1658

The underwritten resident of England, &c. being certainly informed, that an English ship, called the Rachel of London, loaden with Scotch coals, whereof one Lewis Bowlden was master, was taken by one Jacob Zacharias of Ostend, and brought into Medemblic, and there hath been sold, and taken out of her, a considerable part of her lading of coals, besides eight great guns, and some sails, and tackling, wherewith the magistrates of the said town having been made acquainted, have secured the said ship with the afore-mentioned goods, the said resident doth desire, that it will please their lordships (in like manner as in their resolution of the 5th of August last past) to give speedy and effectual orders for the restitution of the said ship and goods to the proprietors thereof. Given at the Hague, the October, 1658.

*Memorial for assisting the army of Brandenburg.*27th September, 58. [N.S.]

The underwritten resident Copes had orders from the elector of Brandenburg his master to salute your high mightinesses, and to give them notice, that he was ready to enter with his army into Holstein, together with the forces of the emperor and Poland, to deliver the king of Denmark from the hands of the king of Sweden, now besieging Copenhagen, contrary to the treaty of peace made by the mediation of France and England; and his electoral highness hopes, that your high mightinesses will manifest the same zeal in so good a work by water, which his highness shall essay by land, to force so dangerous an enemy to a reasonable peace; and that tho' the castle be surrendered, yet that it will not hinder the good intention of your high mightinesses, but rather render you the more vigorous and speedy, that so whilst there is time, the business may be put in such a way, that this enemy may not be able to trouble the public quiet, and render the damage irreparable, as the great hans towns, Lubeck and Hamburg, and the countries about, already feel the cruelty of the Swedes, who burn and plunder, sparing none, but shewing a tyranny and barbarousness unheard of, to make appear, that they have a greater desire to continue the war, than to make peace; these examples of tyranny being without example, never heard of in the former wars of Christendom. And because this will cause, that the armies of the allies will find there little provision, it is put to the consideration of their high mightinesses, if it will not be expedient to encourage the subjects of this state to carry provision to the Elbe, and sell it to their advantage; whereby his electoral highness may deliver those parts from so cruel an enemy, and save so many widows and orphans, who are by the high-ways dying for hunger and other misery, cry for vengeance to God, that their tears may be wiped away by the blood of these inhuman people.

The countess of Ranelagh to the lord Broghill.

MY DEAR DEAR BROTHER,

I MUST owne not to have received the news of his highness's death unmovedly; though, when I consider, I find it's no more than a repetition of that lesson, that I have often bin taught, of the vanety of man in his best and highest estate. And sure he, that shall think, that that very person, who a few days before shooke all Europe by his fame and forces, should not be able to keepe an ague from shakeing him, nor to keepe himselfe from being shaken into his grave by a few fits thereof, even in the midst of victorys and successes, that had raised both great feares and great expectations of him in both his enemys and allies, can't but see, how wise a council that is, which bid us, Cease from man, whose breath is in his nostrils; for wherein is he to be accompted of? And how mortefying a consideration may it justly be to all the greatnes in this world, to think, that he, who kept such a bustle in the world, should not now be able to keepe himselfe from crumbleing into dust; nor after he had commanded soe many vast armys and fleetes, have power to lift a finger to remove those wormes, that his designeing braines corrupt into? Certainly he may justly be esteemed improvident, that after such a warneing, shal make noe better provision for himselfe, than the greatest stock of such vanishing greatness comes too, of which we have had expresse manifestations, both of his coming into and goeing out of his government. And if the common charety allowed to dead men be exercised towards him, in burying his faults in his grave with himselfe, and keepeing alive the memory of his vertues and great aymes and actions, he wil be allowed to have his place amongst the worthyest of men; and that's but a poore place neither; for though fame be not to ayreie for

In the possession of the right hon. John earl of Orrery.

A.D. 1658. for opinion to live in, it's too little substantial for an immortal soule in the exercise of it's rational faculties to find satisfaction in. I doubt his loss will be a growing affliction upon these nations, and that we shall learne to value him more by missing him, than we did when we enjoyed him; a perversenes of our nature, that teaches us in every condition, wherein we are, therewith to be discontent, by undervaluing what we have, and overvaluing what we have lost. I confes his performances reached not the makeing good of his professions; but I doubt his performances may goe beyond the professions of those, who may come after him. Al this I say, not as grumbleing at that wise and good hand, that has taken him away, but as laying before you, why I think we should not receive soe smart a blow from that hand, without haveing such a sence thereof, as may really humble us under it, and cause us soe to sett upon mending our ways by this judgment, that we may prevent the worse that are yet to come, if this produce not that effect upon particular persons and these nations in generall.

And now at the foote of this great account of loss upon publick score, I must come in with the penny halfe-penny of my owne particular, who can thorough the goodnes of God say truly, I did even, when I sought his assistance, consider what has now happened, and many other accidents, that might have happened, as very possible to intervene betweene my seekeing and obtaineing of it. Yet I thought it rational to seek it as farr as I did, and knew that whatever accident either should or might happen, was stil under the ordering of God, to whom I desired to comit my cause. For I have binn taught by experience and the mercy of God, to look upon probabilities in human affayres as upon a fayre gale of wind, when one is to cross the seas: it's folly not to sett out with them, and no less folly not to looke upon them as changeable. They ought not to be the principles of our actings, but may be the oportunities of them; and if the former be pious and honest, and the latter rationally taken, whatever comes betweene us and the events we looked for, we may still be satisfied, and leave those to the disposing of him, who alone is the Lord of them. Therefore his death neither makes me condemne myself for having made applycation to him, nor repine at God for takeing him away, before I had received the fruits of that applycation; but it makes me judg myself obliged to consider seriously, what I am called to doe upon the change, that this great turne has brought upon my smale affayres: and haveing endeavoured in some measure to doe soe, I easely perceive, that his death makes that letter of his, that you brought with you over, and have now sent me, of noe use to the end, for which it was desired, and soe takes away what engagement lay upon me to stay in this country, in expectation of what effects it's delivery would produce. In the next place it's as evident, that by the same accident I am put to an end of the expectations I might have had of some returne about the adrefs I made to his highnesse, in poynt of the lease or inheritance of those lands, that I told you of, which was another expectation, that I then thought it convenient for me to wayte upon here; and now also his highnesse is dead, wheather there will be any parliament sudainely called, or in case there should, wheather you would think yourselfe obliged to goe to it or no, I know not, and soe am taken off all the ground, upon which in relation to my owne affayres I suspended my journey into England, which I now thinke myselfe obliged to take up the thoughts of againe upon these reasons. There is noething to be donn here in my affayres one way or other, friends haveing first donn their best therein in vaine; and my lord deputy either has donn his best, or had noe mind to doe soe. Next, his now highnesse seemes not to me soe proper a person to summon my lord, or deale with him in such an affayre, as his father did, from whose authorety and severety against such practices, as my lord's are, I thought the uttmost would be donn, that either persuasions or advice would have effected upon my lord, who, if he should be brought before one not fitted to deale with him at that rate, would be but confirmed in, instead of constrained out of, his owne way; soe as there being little hopes left of bringing him to reason either here or there, I thinke my present worke is to seeke a maintenance for me and my children without him; and that by persueing the petition I drew up to preferr to his father, which I think will be but coldly done, unless I persue it myselfe, since you are now here, and can but recommend it by letter; and of what force those are from an absent partty, I have binn too much taught by experience to be to learne now. It askes noething in present, nor for a long time, from his now highnesse, that he is like to get himselfe, if he give it not mee: he has yet the same council his father had, amongst which I have some frends; and he is likelyest to be most obliging himselfe at first, espetially in doing favours without expence to himselfe. If I get it, I shall need no more as to poynt of maintenance; and since it's probable I may get it, if it be vigorously persued, and more probable that I may get it now than hereafter, and certaine, that in seekeing it I do but what al good laws make my duty, use honest endeavors in order to provideing for myselfe and famelly, so as to keepe us from feeling extreametys, or from being kept from them by being burdensome to friends; I cannot see a ground of satisfaction in siting stil without useing such endeavours, espetially since I beleve scarce any person, that does but rationally reflect upon the condition condition of these nations, does not see, that by his highness's death, God has given a A.D. 1658: warneing-peece of great confusions and disorders aproaching upon these nations, against which every wise man wil surely take this oportunity of present peace, (which is now soe visibly like to be short-lived amongst us) to provide himselfe, and those who God makes it his duty to take care off: and one rational way of that provision (as to outward things) must easely be discerned to be an abridging of unnecessary expences; and those I am sure I have already put my friends to long enough to make it very uneasy to my selfe, and with as great a crossness to my humor, as it has binn to the aymes, with which I at first consented to retyre amongst them from my lord's opressions; and that uneasyness would by reason of these circumstances be soe much increased upon me now, that it would make my life a burden to me. And besides, though I can remove lightly, and need bestowe but few thoughts or cares in gathering my wealth together, or considering how to dispose of it, I have some provision to make against this riseing storme in geting a greater stability of thoughts, and preparednes of mind, than can be descomposed by the shakeing of the world; and to the makeing of that provision retyrednes is absolutely necessary, and therefore into that I desier to hasten, which not being to be got in this country by me, because of the unkindnes of my friends, and the unreasonable of my lord, I shal seeke it, and I hope speedely get into it, in England, wheather the very season of the yeere cals me to get as fast as I can, and where, if I find noe other provision, I shall have a much experienced providence to depend upon, which was all the meanes I had for the greatest part of the time I lived there, and which is the surest and richest provision in the world to those, whom God enables willingly to roule themselves upon it. And to that, I hope, I shal gladly betake my selfe; yet would not execute these thoughts, til I had acquainted both my brother Corke and you with them, who haveing noething to opose against them, but your unreasonable kindnes to me, I shal have resolution enough to resist that with as greate and greater resentments of gratitude for it, than I can expresse by yeelding to stay longer here, where I am altogether unserviceable, and yet very chargeable to my friends, and where, as I told you before, my children are neither like to be preferred in marryage, nor prepared for the narrow condition their father's obstinacy condemnes them to live in. And for prooffe, that I goe not as declineing being obliged to you, (a thing to much consented to by me already to be now declined) but chuse to be soe in a way, wherein your favours may assist my owne endeavours towards geting a subsistence, and rather than in one, whereby you might keepe me from those necessary and honest endeavours, I shall beg your letters to such of your friends at Whitehal, as you think they wil ingage to be assistant to me in getting his now highness's speedy answer to my petition; for by that I shall either speedely be put to order that grant soe as to get a subsistence out of it, or by being taken off the thoughts thereof, be set free to seek it in some other way, wherein my owne honest endeavours may contribute towards it, and hold forth to the world, as wel as more cleerly evidence to my owne conscience, that I left not my lord upon humor, but necessity; and that in soe doing I sought privacy, and submitted to scarsity, rather then persued a croud, or designed aboundance to my selfe, which, in the way I have hetherto binn amongst my friends, may have binn suspected; and none has more reason to suspect my owne hart, than I have; and only upon tryal shal I find, wheather I be mistaken in suspecting it or noe; and since God thus seemes to cal me to put it to that, it is in my purpose to doe soe, who shal be, where-ere I am, unfaynedly and affectionately yours,

The 17. September, 1658.

K. R.

When your leasure permits you, I beg you would remember to write to my lady Francis Courtenay to the purpose I told you the morning you went hence; and that, if you can, you would afford me some guilt paper, my stocke being gonn, and noe supply to be got at Youghall.

My brother Corke has been ill, since he was with you; and my sister has kept him company in being soe. Also the deare 'squire, in one by this post, desiers me to inquire of you, what you have done with captain Courtrope, about 2 morgages of his, of which he desiers a speedy accoumpt. If you can send me any by this bearer, I shal send it him by the post.

My affectionate service, I beseech you, to my deare sister and the children. I did last week let you know, that I was on the behalfe of a friend of myne to pay in 50 l. to honest Standish, that he had directed me to pay it to any knowne officer of horse in this country, takeing from them such a receipt as is here inclosed, that the money lyes ready here, and I loath to pay it to any other, til I had inquired, wheather you would receive it, and signe the receipt, that I may send it, if by the post, to honest Standish. I beg your answer about it now, and shall immediatly send the mony, if you signe the receipt. Standish presents his service to you very humbly; and desires you should know, that the buisness that seemed to have binn donn for him, is vanished into a just nothing.

Intelligence sent by Mr. Downing.

A.D. 1658.

Saturday, 28th September. [N. S.]

Vol. lxi. p. 96.

THE duke of York and Gloucester parted from Antwerp, and came to Sevenbergen, and lay there all night; and the next day being Sunday, they came about 10 at night to the Hague, and the duke of York came up into the princess royal's chamber, when she was almost in bed, and only her nurse and maid with her. There he staid with her all night, and betimes the next morning went away. The princess royal followed him, and lay at Sevenbergen that night, where were the two dukes with her, and there they staid together four nights, and then the dukes went to Flanders, and the princess to the Hague.

The day before the dukes came from Antwerp, they were in council there with the king, and chancellor, and lord Ormond, concerning the affairs of England. And the result was, that they should send over to all their concerned friends in England, to know in what condition their business was since the death of the protector; and upon understanding their condition, he would give further instructions. So in the mean time all things rest, and Charles Stuart is gone to Brussels, and there doth nothing but take his pleasure. The lord Gerard is ordered to France to the queen, and only attends his pass from the French court. Massey, alderman Bunce, Mr. Wood, and captain Titus, are gone from Antwerp to Amsterdam, to Middleton; and their business is to stickle among the presbyterians and clergy; and Massey places much of his hopes upon the dissatisfaction of the fifth-monarchy-men. There is lately come from England old Colte the great gamester; he was in this country about 3 months since. There is one Williams with him, who lives next door to the pump in Covent-Garden, who was formerly accused for concealing several persons in the last plot, which he confesseth he did. There is also with them one Hearne, a Huntingdonshire man, who goes by the name of Williams: he confesseth he was the man, who bought up all the arms in London, to send into the several countries for the last plot, and there were warrants out for him, and 1000 l. was to be given to him that could take him. These are all gone to Charles Stuart, and will return again within 5 or 6 days. Sir Marmaduke Longdale is at Brussels. Charles Stuart and all the court are dejected, and very dull, finding things so well settled in England. Colonel Stephens, and Phillips, and his wife, are still at Brussels. Little Ma. Strahan is ordered by Middleton to stay at Rotterdam, because there will be some occasion for him; for he must be the messenger into Scotland. He lies at Mrs. Moreton's, the Scottish house in Rotterdam upon the Shedam dike. Middleton is maintained at Amsterdam upon the charge of some merchants, who in the time of war between Holland and England had designed to send him to fall into Scotland with some ships and men. The abovementioned account I have from colonel Palmer; and the following letter is from one Thomas Elliot of Charles Stuart's bed-chamber, to a confident friend of his in the Hague,

468 178 111 152 39 158 441 146 147 40 105
184 258 67 323 306 254 365 390 82 119 199 88 286 207 468 304 82 365 159
339 54 361 346 306 413 477 90 217 40 82 362 112 146 147 408 572 231 33
26 319 89 20 286 477 14 254 107 302 263 106 147 48 441 282 408 326 339 credited.

468 319 318 40, and much to be 26 133 279 68 146 279.

Brussels,

585, October, 1658.

man

When I first heard of Cromwell's death, I was of that opinion, that our great 577 had provided for that great accident, that it could never have happened; but that we should have made a present advantage by it; but I find our great men are of opinion, that he dyed two months too soon, their designs not being yet ripe for so good a fortune. All I can learne is, that we are not provided to do any thing, and that we must expect from their divisions a rise to make our fortunes; and to be of another opinion differing from this, is to be an heretic here. The Spaniards are all unsatisfied with us, and, what will be next, I dare not think. The dukes are not yet returned, but we expect him here in two or three letters; he is to leave this country, but who will come in his place, I know not.

Lord

Lord Broghill to secretary Thurloc.

DEARE SIR,

A.D. 1658.

THO' I did on munday last trouble you with a letter, yet haveinge now also received the honnor of another from you of the 7th instant, I could not but pay you my humble and hartly acknowledgments for it, and that in such a deepe affliction as that you are under, and that loade of business you support, you can yet oblige with your letters a person so unworthy of them, and so insignificant, as I am. Your last is so express a picture of sorrow, that none could draw it so well, that did not feele it. I know our late loss wounds deeply both the publike and yourselfe, and yourselfe more upon the publike accounte then your owne. But I thinke sorrow for friends is more tollerable, while they are a dyinge, then after they are deade. David's servants reasoned as ill, as he himselfe did well; they concluded, if his griefe were such, when the child was but in danger of death, what would it be, when he knew 'twas ded? He tooke and consider'd the thinge another way; whilst ther was life, that is, whilst the will of God was not declared, he thought it a duty to endeavor to moove the mercy of God by his prayers and sorrow; but when God's pleasure was declared, he knew 'twas a duty cheerfully to yeeld unto it. I know, in the cause of griefe now before us, I am the unfittest of any to offer comfort, which I neede as much as any; and I know 'tis as unfit to offer to present it you, who, as you neede it most of any, soe you are ablest to afford it others above any: however, this one consideration of David's actings I could not but lay before you, it having proved an effectuell consolation to me in the death of one I but too much loved. But I hope your sorrow for what is past does not drowne your care for what is to com; nay, I am confident of it; for you, that can in your sorrow and business minde me, makes me know your griefe hinders us not from injoyinge the accustomed effects of your care to the publike; and while what we pay the dead does not obstruct what we owe the livinge, such sorrow is a debt, and not a fault.

In this nation his highness has bin proclaymed in most of the considerable places alreddy, and in others he is dayly a proclayminge, and indeede with signall demonstrations of love to his person, and of hope of happyness under his government.

I hartily joyne in all the good you say of him, and hope with you he wil be happy, if his friends stick to him: amongst all thos I know you will, and I know all promises with me are not kept, if you are not reckoned by him in the first ranke; of which I have presumed to minde him in a letter I tooke the confidence to write unto him this weeke.

But I feare, while I thus trouble you, I give the honnor of your letters a very disproportionat returne; and therefore I will only now subscribe myself, what I am from the bottom of my heart,

DEARE SIR,

Ballymallo, the 17th of September, 1658.

Your most humble, most faithfull, and most obliged affectionate servant,

BROGHILL.

I presume to trouble your packet with the inclosed answer to letters I received this post.

H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland, to secretary Thurloc.

SIR,

I TOLD you in my last, how it pleased God to strenthen and enable mee for the discharge of that parte of my duty, which was incumbent upon me at that time; but as soon as that was over, my grief recoiled upon me, so that I have not been able to apply myselfe to any business, but what was absolutely necessary. I can onely give you this account, that things continue quiett, and promise faire for the future. To bemoan my loss to you, who, I beleive, have to great a share in it, were but to refresh your trouble. I pray God, that the eyes of all men may bee opened by it to their true and through humiliation and repentance; and if wee can doe soe sincerely, who knowes but that God, who hath wrought so wonderful deliverance of late by the hand of his precious instrument, now at rest, may yet save us by his power and wisdom, even by the hands of weak instruments? You consider my distraction, and therefore will pardon my brevity. I am

September 18. 1658.

Your very affectionate and humble servant,

H. CROMWELL.

I have sent his highness an addresse subscribed by the field officers here about town, which will bee sent in like manner from the army so soon as returned.

H. Crom-

H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland, to the protector Richard.

A.D. 1658.

In the possession of William Cromwell esq;

May it please your HIGHNESS,
I RECEIVED a letter from your highness by Mr. Underwood, who, according to your commands, hath given me a particular account of the sickness and death of his late highness my dear father, which was such an amazing stroke, that it did deeply affect the heart of every man; much more may it doe those of a nearer relation. And indeed, for my own part, I am so astonish'd at it, that I know not what to say or write upon this so sad and grievous occasion. I know it is our duties upon all accounts to give submission to the will of God, and to be awakened by this mighty noise from the Lord to look into our own hearts and wayes, and to put our mouths in the dust, acknowledging our own vileness and sinfulness before him, that so, if possible, we may thereby yet obtain mercy from him for ourselves and these poor nations. As this stroke was very stupendous, so the happy news of his late highness leaving us so hopefull a foundation for our future peace, in appointing your highness his successor, coming along with it to us, did not a little allay the other. For my part, I can truly say, I was relieved by it, not only upon the public consideration, but even upon the account of the goodness of God to our poor family, who hath preserved us from the contempt of our enemy. I gave a late account to Mr. secretary Thurloe of what passed about the proclaiming your highness here, which, I may say without vanity, was with as great joy and generall satisfaction, as (I believe) in the best affected places in England. I doubt not but to give your highness as good an account of the rest of the places in Ireland, so soon as the proclamations are returned. I did also give some account of the speedy compliance of the army, whose obedience your highness may justly require at my hands. Now, that the God and father of your late father and mine, and your highness's predecessor, would support you, and by pouring down a double portion of the same spirit, which was so eminently upon him, would enable you to walk in his steps, and to do worthily for his name, cause and people, and continually preserve you in so doing, is and shall be the fervent and dayly prayer of

Yours, &c.

Another letter of the same date, [viz. September 18. 1658.] sent at the same time, enclosed to Dr. Petty, to be delivered with his own hand.

May it please, &c.

In the possession of William Cromwell esq;

I SENT a letter to secretary Thurloe, dated the 11th instant, to be communicated to your highness, judging it not very seasonable in so great and fresh a grief to address myself to your highness, without leaving it to the discretion of somebody upon the place, to chuse the fittest opportunity. And in confidence of your highness's privacy to that, to which I refer, I proceed further humbly to acquaint your highness, that on monday morning I caused an address (a copy whereof is enclosed) to be sent throughout the whole army, which is already signed by divers field officers; and when it is perfected, I intend to send it, to remain in your highness's hands, as a witness against the treachery and falshood of any officer of this army, that may hereafter in the least manner warp from his due obedience; so that I may and do assure your highness of the faithfull and active subjection of this army to your highness's government, and shall be content to answer it with my life, if you find it otherwise. By my abovesaid letter and this your highness may perceive, that I lost no time, and also that I used what diligence and industry I could, according to my bounden duty, to make your highness's entrance easy, and your government established. Since this I received an express from your highness by Mr. Underwood, in which your highness is graciously pleased to do me the great honor as to offer me the charge, which I underwent in his late highness my late father's life-time, for which I return my most humble and hearty thanks; but must humbly beg, that I may deal faithfullly, plainly, and freely with your highness, touching this particular. Since his late highness was pleased to place me in this station, I have met with nothing but toil and disquiet of body and mind, and have thereby so exceedingly impaired my health, that it is not possible for me to undergoe the like any longer. His late highness was indeed pleased to favour me, and bear me out as much as he well could; but was besett with so many, who made it their business to encrease my burthen, that he was wrought upon to put Mr. Goodwin disgracefully out of the councill, only for being faithfull to me; I say, only for that, because I wrote many letters to know the cause, but could hear none. They prevailed with him to modell the councill, so that the major part were men of a professed spirit of contradiction to whatsoever I would have, and took counsell together, how to lay wait for me without a cause. They so far prevailed, that that if any officer could revile and clamour against me, he was received and preferred there; A.D. 1658. and they undertook to reduce the army by such rules, as would render me odious, and were preposterous and absurd here, though proper for an army in England; and were so farr from asking my opinion, (tho' I was a little concerned) that when I obtruded it, I could get no reply of reasons, but magisteriall rules, which I must obey. Why should I enumerate, when I consider how little time your highnes hath to spare. In short, my life was made a burthen; and had I not owed a natural and filiall obedience, as well as a full subjection to his late highnes, I could not willingly have undergone it. I humbly beg your highnesse's pardon for what I am about to say: I may not, unlesse your highnes commands me against my will, and condemns me to my grave, any longer undergoe the charge I did in your father's life time. I am not able to live always in the fire; the great God, in whose presence I speak this, he knows my heart. I doe not this out of any froward humour, neither am I so vain as to design being courted; I am willing, nay desirous to spend my small talent, whatsoever it is, in your highnes's service, so my task may be no more than I am able to perform. But I can hardly submit to a combination of pragmatical men, who as they will endeavour to impose on your highnes, as they did upon his late highnes, so I may justly fear they will think it the nearest way to their ends, to misrepresent me to your highnes, whose good esteem and affection I value above any thing in this world, and which I will not hazard at any rate. 'Tis hard to express my mind by writing, unles I should swell a letter to a volume; and besides I have much to say, which is not fitt to be written. I know noe expedient in the case, but this (which I doe not offerr without due consideration of the safety of the army in my absence) that your highnes would give me leave to attend you in person for some short time, where I doubt not but by conference I shall give your highnes abundant testimony of my dutifull obedience to your highnes, and of my readines and hearty desire to serve you, and of the ways and means, which might capacitate me thereunto. For to say truth, it were a treasonable folly for me to undertake a service, which I beforehand knew I have not strength either of body or understanding to manage to your highnes advantage. Besides I desire to be instructed from your highnes own mouth, by what principles I should steer, lest I should ignorantly doe any thing, which might justly displease; and indeed I doe not dissemble, if I say change of air and some recess is necessary for my health, which is the more dear to me, because I seldom enjoy it 24 hours together. Thus I do faithfully spread my cause at your highnes's feet: if your highnes think not fitt to hearken unto my petition, I shall keep the army in due obedience, and deliver it to whomsoever your highnes shall committ the charge thereof, and be truly thankfull for that protection, which you allow to the meanest of your highnes's subjects, and publicly profess entire love and tender affection to you, as my brother, allegiance and perfect subjection and obedience to your highnes, as my rightfull and undoubted supreme magistrate, and continually pray to God for your long life, and prosperous and happy reign, &c.

Dr. Edward Worth to Secretary Thurloe.

RIGHT HONOURABLE;

THOSE many favours and respects, for which I stand obleiged to you, encourage the confidence of this addresse; and the sense of your suffering in our publique loss adds the necessity of duty to that encouragement. Oh! Sir, by how much any persons doe neerer relate to the cheife authority, by soe much is it more needfull, that they exercise faith, and by soe much more is their faith lyable to assaults. I beseech you therefore take heed of fixing your mind on the darke side of this cloud; labour to see God's wisdom and goodnes on the other side. Alas! we are like foolish children, that cry for those knives, wherewith they would cut their owne fingers. God is our loving father; he knowes what is better for us: let us choose him, and leave it to him to choose the rest for us. If magistrates be made more than Gods, or leaned on, or less than God's instruments and despised, it is just for the Lord to remove them. Surely our nations were guilty of both these extremes, and in this sharpe reproofe God hath set both in order before us. But who is like our God? How remembers he mercie in the midst of judgment, vouchsafing a peaceable entrance to his present highnes! Sir, Moses brought Israel out of Egypt, and led them through the wilderness 40 years (because of their murmuring) but he only saw Canaan; a Joshua must bring them into its possession. Surely we have been a murmuring people. God led us by the hand of Moses, who carried us as it were in his bosome, till he saw a settlement. The Lord make his present highnes like Joshua, to complete this conduct. Thus David also fought the Lord's battells, but Solomon must build God an house. Truly hitherto the Lord hath dwelt among us but as in a tabernacle. The good God make his present highnes like Solomon, building up the house

A.D. 1658. of the Lord, which, alas! lyeth waft. Sir, I have found my faith acting on these instances, and therefore present them to your faith alsoe. Certainly death cannot arrest any without God's hand be to the warrant; and that God, who made the Jews banishment in Caldea to be for their good, can produce a soveraigne antidote out of our present los. Besides we have many valleys of Achir, [many former experiences] as doores of hope; and, that which is more than all this, Christ Jesus his interest is imbarqued in the same vessell with us; and if he commands the winds and the seas, they will obey him. I write this to you with my humble prayer unto God, that his spirit would apply it to your heart, as it comes from the heart of

Your most really affectionate and devoted servant,

Dublin, 18 Sept. 1658.

EDW. WORTH.

Sir, though Ireland mournes under the sense of your los, yet it alsoe rejoyces unanimously at the establishment of his present highnes.

Captain Wray, governor of Beumaris-castle, to secretary Thurloc.

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

Vol. lxi.
p. 104.

COMING for Conway to waite on the lord Frances Russel, I met with the enclosed letter, which I humbly transmitt to your lordshippe; and uppon enquirie and diligent search theire, att last I found the said Hinckes, that had divulged such notorious untruthes, which I caused to be secured for that night; but as the souldiers were going with him to the place where he was to be confined, the deputy sheriffe, one Mr. William Morris, one whose disaffection to the present government and his former delinquency is well known to the well affected in these parts, itt being the sessions-weeke, did rescue him from the souldiers; so that I was forced to goe to the judges, where I found he had repaired with the prisoner. Their lordships caused the prisoner to be delivered to my souldiers betimes in the next morning; he was brought before my lord Russell, and uppon examination before his lordshippe it appeared, that he was employed by one collonel John Bodvell to the said William Morris, deputy sheriffe, with some papers; and that he did on tuesday the 14th instant, deliver those papers; and it was on thursday the 16 instant, before I could meet with him, he having related those notorious untruths to the said deputy sheriffe, yet he did endeavour his rescue. When my lord, together with the judges, were examining the prisoner, one Lewis Powell came to his lordship's chamber, and did very uncivilly carry himselfe towards his lordshippe, and did endeavour as much as lay in him to justifie the said prisoner; whereupon his lordshippe commanded me to secure them both, which I have obeyed; and have them in my custody at Bewmares castle. Your honour would much admire how these untruths did heighten the speritts of the old enemy, and much direct the honest and godly party, being so confidently averred. My lord Russell commanded me to put his examinations in writing, which I send your honour inclosed, humbly desiring your honour's pleasure, what shall be done with the prisoners, and your commands how I shall proceed against the deputy sheriffe, for I am fearfull, least he might in these junctures of times receive any papers, that might be prejudiciall to his highnes and government, the said Hinckes coming from so known a delinquent. Till I heare from your honour I shall have an eye upon him, that he may be forth-coming to receive your * * I have no more to trouble your honour, but humbly to begg his highnes commands and pleasure with them from your honour to

Your Honour's

Very humble and faithfull servant,

Inclosed in the preceeding.

SIR,

Vol. lxi.
p. 105.

AS I came towards Conway on tuesday last in the evening, I crossed the ferry, in company with one Hinckes (as he named himself) who tould mee without much enquiry, that the new protector was dangerously sicke; that he was informed for certain on thursday last in London, my lord Harry Cromwell died there the night before. That my lord major had proclaimed the now protector, and with the citysons did over-power the army, who durst not oppose against itt, in regard the cittizens were far more numerous then they. This (if true) I conceived to be very bad news; if false, no lesse dangerous; so that I thought it very fitt to be timeously imparted to your knowledge for the prevention of any disturbance disturbance, that might happily accrue to our country by the spreading of this intelligence A.D. 1658. amongst malignant spiritts. Use your own discretion for further discoveries herein, but permitt me the honour and happinesse to subscribe myselfe,

S I R,

Your faithful servant,

Wednesday the 15th of 7^{ber} instant 1658.

ED. LLOYD.

For captain William Wray, Esq; governor of Bewmares this present.

William Morris sayth, that upon tuesday last one Samuel Hinckes comeing to this towne of Conway, having brought with him writing and other papers, concerning a triall, that was expected to be this sessions, wherein one Joseph Herne, and Henry Wynne, Esqrs, were plaintiffs, and Thomas LLOYD and others defendants; and being asked what newes from London, replied, that all things were well, save that he heard at his coming from town, that the lord Richard, our new lord protector, was not well disposed in health; and that he heard likewise, that the lord Henry Cromwell was dead, being come privately to London, as was conceived, to visit his highness the late lord protector. In witnesse my hand this 23d day of September, 1658.

WILLIAM MORRIS.

Conway, the 18th of September, 1658.

The examination and confession of Samuel Hinckes, gent. the servant of Mr. Andrew Badley, a sollicitor, living at the Flying-horse court in Fleet-street, over-against the Inner-Temple, in Mr. Dancy's house, a barber.

SAMUEL HINKES, aged about 19 years, or thereabouts, confesseth, that he was imploy'd and sent by collonel John Bodwell, from London to Conway, to the now deputy sheriff, Mr. William Morris, with some papers; and he repairing to Mr. Morris on tuesday the 14th inst. to return to the said papers, Mr. Morris enquired of him, what news from London. This examinant reply'd, that the news in London was, when he came out of town, which was on thursday the next instant, that his highness the lord Richard, the protector, was very sick, and that my lord Henry Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland, died in London, wednesday at night, being the 8th instant, before he came out of town; and that the train-bands of the city were up in arms; and being demanded, who in London told him the news, he confesseth, that one Edward Price, the servant of Mr. Hancocke, an attorney of the Inner-temple, told him the aforesaid news on thursday, the very day that he came out of town, in the presence of his master Mr. Badley, and at his master's chamber.

SAMUEL HINCKES.

Captain Langley to secretary Thurloc.

Leith, Sept. the 19th, 1658.

May it please your HONOUR,

SINCE my last, here is litle of importance to present you with, only the Quakers, that formerly seem to be becalmed for a season, are now congregated againe, seeme to take fresh resolutions as to there converting, or rather overturning all things. They cry out soe loude in their preachings, that they astonish the heereers, and spend themselves extreemly. Sarah Knowles, wife to captain Knowles of this regiment, is gone one her foott as it ware one pilgrimage to one Margritt Fell, who lives about Lancheshire, who, they say, is judg Fell's wife; and that she is one that is past the cloud, and hath liberty to were satins, and silver and gold lase, and is a great galant. This day Mr. William Welch tould mee, that his wife, Sarah Welch, who is one of the cheefe of them, tould him, that shee had received a letter from some freind in London, which did intimate, that they had beene with my lord protector, and that hee had promised to doe nothing but just things, soe that now they were resolved to sitt quietly for present. &c. The Anabaptists are still all in a mousing posture. All things are very quiete at present here. In a word, those that were satisfied before are the same, and the contrary are the same; but the Scots hope seemes to have a smale referrection boath in minesters and people, and it chiefly consists in this, that there

A.D. 1658. there will arise som notable deference amonst ourselves, &c. Here is lately an Holland man of war com to give notis to all there shipes to repaire hom with all expedition. The harvift here is now * * * with constant grat raines, which makes sad times and fights to in the feilds. But I shall stay you no longer with these things. I am,

S I R,

Your Honour's devoted servant,

TIMO. LANGLEY.

Mr. Downing, the English resident in Holland, to secretary Thurloc.

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

Vol. lxi.
p. 116.

I Am certaynly informed, that the duke of York did open the first packett, which came by the post after the death of his late highnesse, and there found the letter to me, with the commission you had sent me, and took them, and sent them to the Don John: also he found a letter of yours to my lord Lockhart, in which they say was expressions to this purpose, that he shold keep his troopes of horse together, for that possibly you might have occasion for them at home. The said duke of York came to this town upon Sunday last in the morning, with onely one Charles Barkley and one Brunkett: the princeesse royall would not suffer him to make any stay heer, but he went forthwith hence, with onely the said Barkley, to Deltshaven, whether also the said princeesse followed, with onely one gentlewoman, to be the more private; and ordered her yaught to be there made ready, and whether they went together I know not; and whether his design be for England or back for Flanders, I cannot say; but thought it my duty to let you know thus much, and shall do my utmost to informe myselfe farther. They, who gave me the information, do believe he returns back for Flanders, but were not sure.

Its undowpted, that they had some greate designe in hand. I hope you do constantly
For d, letter s
heare from 305 38, out of whose 361 144 something doth appeare.

Yesterday the president of the states general and another of them came to visite me by order of the states general, to condole and congratulate the death of his late highnesse, and the installment of his highnesse that now is. Obdam is yet with his fleete at the Flye, and the winds are now contrary; but notwithstanding all the letters which have been affirming the rendition of Croningsberg-castle to the king of Sweden, yet the deputies of the states, which were yesterday with me, affirm, that they have later letters, which say it yet defends itselfe. I am,

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

Your most faithfull humble servant,

Hague, 8^{ber} 1, 1658. [N. S.]

G. DOWNING.

I pray consider under what cover you sent the above-mentioned letter to me, that you may chang your way of sending. This letter comes by captain Baskett.

Monseieur Applebom faith positively, that Croningsberghe is surrendred.

General Monck to secretary Thurloc.

MY LORD,

Vol. lxi.
p. 127.

I Received your lordshippe's letter dated the 11th of September: I had answered itt before now, butt upon the receipt of itt I sent to see what news I could heare in the country before I wrote to you; butt I finde, that Charles Stuart has not yett sent a letter to any gentleman of this country that I heare of; and I am confident of my intelligencers, that I have abroad, which are active men. To-morrow I am too meet here with some of the officers for the drawing up of an addresse to his highnesse, to expresse our faithfulness and obedience to him, which I doubt nott butt will bee done with a great deale of chearfulness; which is all at present from

YOUR LORDSHIPPE'S

Very humble servant,

Dalkeith, 21st 7^{ber}, 1658.

GEORGE MONCK.

General

JOHN THURLOE ESQ. &c.

405

General Monck to secretary Thurloe.

My LORD,

A.D. 1658.

THIS gentleman, lieut. col. Stevens having some application to make unto his highnesse, I make bold to intreate your favour in getting him accesse to his highnesse, and a speedy dispatch of his businesse. Hee is an old friend of mine, and now an officer in Ireland; and by shewing this respect unto him, you will lay a very great obligation uppon

YOUR LORDSHIPPE'S

Most humble servant,

Dalkeith, 21st of 7^{ber}, 1658.

GEORGE MONCK.

Secretary Thurloe to H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland.

May it please your EXCELLENCY,

I Received yours by the messenger, and another by Mr. Hambden, with the inclosed proclamation. I must confesse mysele to bee much refreshed by reading your excellency's of the 11th instant, to see therein the support the Lord is pleased to give you under this fore stroke, and upon some other considerations, which I cannot now trouble your excellency with, in respect that I am disabled through eight dayes sicknesse to write with my owne hand, for which cause also I cannot acquaint your excellency with some other things, which may bee fitt for your knowledg. There is this mercy, which God is pleased to give us, that his highnesse is so generally received with the armys in England and Scotland, as also with all the people; and I see by your excellency's, that it is so also in Ireland. There can bee nothing more obliging to his highnesse, then what your excellency is pleased to write to mee, and in the manner of proclaiming him; and so his highnesse takes it. But I dictate this with great difficulty; and therefore I beg your excellency's pardon, if I here breake off, beseeching your excellency still to account mee

In the possession of the rt. hon. the earl of Shelburn.

Your most obedient, humble, and faithfull servant,

Whitehall 21 Sept. 1658.

JO. THURLOE.

Ypre is taken by the French from the Spaniard, and the strong castle of Elsynore by the Swede from the Dane.

General Fleetwood to H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland.

DEARE BROTHER,

I Shall adde little to what my last mentioned, though I think it is a subject we cannot too often think of, nor too seriously search and inquire in what may be the provoaking cause thereof; and the more we understande by earnest searching and finding, the beter shall we improve what such a dispensation requirs. I shall only acquaint you at presant, that there hath bine a late addresse made to his highnes, in the title of which was named Scotland and Ireland, because of both armyes. We had officers, who joyned with us; and it was desired all three armyes might for the great union have joyned in one; but not to take upon us in the least to impose, but that so farre as might be consistent with your own judgment and satisfaction, you might joyne with us, or vary from us, as you shoud be most satisfied. Heare was great union, and surly that shoud be preserved with utmost care and diligence; and rather let all things of a doubtfull acceptation remaine as they are, then hazard the breach of union upon any indifferent, much lesse doubtful account. The Lord continues our peace and quietnes, which indeade is a mercy almost beyond expectations, as beyond our deservings. But surly ther is that in this cause, that the Lord takes pleasure in, and will not forsake. His highnes hath given very great satisfaction to the officers in the late addresse. It is our duty to be earnest for him, that he may be kept up to walke in his father's paths with that integrity, as may manifest by what spirit he is ledde forth by. I

In the possession of the rt. hon. the earl of Shelburn.

A.D. 1658. neade not tell you, what the temptations of such a station is: he hath hitherto much exceeded expectation, and did speak heartily to old freinds. Excuse the abruptnes of

Sept. 21. [1658.]

Your most affectionate brother, and humble fervant,

I intended to have sent you the copy of our addresse, but it seemes the judg advocate hath prevented me; excuse it I begge you.

Lord Fauconberg to H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland.

DEAR MY LORD,

In the possession of the rt. hon. the earl of Shelburn.

T h i s l a f t w e e k t h e c a b a l l m e n 39 14 19 34 28 3 34 39 43 11 11 18 39 14 11 7 3 2 3 23 19 22 11 27
t i o n e d l a t e l y w a s d e l i v e r e d o 39 19 26 27 11 6 23 3 39 11 23 47 43 3 36 6 11 23 19 38 11 35 11 6 26
f a t h i n g t h e y c a l l t h e a r m i e s a d r 10 3 39 14 19 27 17 41 14 13 47 9 5 23 41 16 11 5 37 22 21 11 36 5 8 35 e f s; i t 's i n d e e d p r e t t y w e l l f 13 36 34; 21 39 36 19 29 6 11 13 8 33 35 11 39 41 49 45 11 23 25 12
e a t u r 'd, p r o m i f e s a l l g o o d i n f h 11 5 41 40 37 8, 31 35 28 24 19 36 11 34 5 25 23 17 26 28 6 21 7 36 14
e w; b u t i n t h e e n d I f e a r e w i l p r 11 43; 4 38 41 19 29 41 16 11 13 29 6 21 12 13 5 35 11 45 19 25 33 35 o v e a f e r p e n t.
26 40 13 3 34 11 37 33 13 29 39.
a l l t h e o f f i c e r s i n t o w n e, e x c

5 23 25 39 16 3 28 12 10 19 7 13 37 36 21 27 41 26 43 39 11, 11 42 9
e p t t w o o r t h r e e, f i g n e d i t a t f 13 31 39 41 43 26 28 37 39 16 35 11 13, 34 21 15 29 13 8 21 29 3 41 12
i r f t r e a d i n g, a n d f t r o v e w h o f 19 37 36 39 35 13 3 8 21 27 15, 5 29 8 36 39 35 26 38 13 45 14 28 36 h o u l d b e f o r m o f t.
14 26 38 23 6 4 13 10 28 35 24 26 36 39.
T w o o r t h r e e o f f i c e r s a t I r e

39 45 28 26 37 41 14 35 1 13 28 10 12 21 9 11 35 34 28 12 19 35 13
l a n d a n d S c o t l a n d p r e f e n t a t f i 25 5 27 8 3 29 6 36 9 26 39 23 3 29 6 33 35 11 36 13 27 41 5 39 34 19
g n i n g, g i v e i t t i t l e t o b e a l f o 17 27 21 29 15, 17 19 40 13 21 29 41 19 39 23 11 39 28 2 13 5 23 36 28 t h e a c t o f t h e f e a r m i e s.
41 16 11 59 39 28 10 41 14 26 34 11 3 35 24 19 13 34.
T h e c l o f e c o n t r i v e r s w e r e f d

41 16 11 7 25 26 34 11 9 26 29 42 35 12 40 13 37 36 45 11 35 13 W.W.
S y d e n h a m, B e r r y, H u f o n. A t l a f t
34 49 6 11 29 14 5 23, 4 11 37 35 47, 14 40 36 26 29. 5 39 23 3 34 39
W h a l l e y a n d G o f f w e r e c a l d i n; a 45 16 5 23 25 11 47 5 27 8 17 26 10 10 43 11 35 13 9 3 23 8 19 29; 3
l l o t h e r s i g n o r a n t t i l o f f e r 25 23 26 39 14 11 35 36 21 17 27 26 37 5 29 39 41 19 23 28 12 10 13 35 d t o b e f i g n e d.
8 39 26 4 13 36 21 17 27 11 8.

M a t t e r s c e r t a i n l y g r o w w o r s 24 3 29 41 11 35 34 9 13 37 29 3 19 27 23 47 17 37 28 45 43 26 35 34 a n d w o r s e v e r y d a y. S u d d e n l y c 5 29 8 45 26 37 34 11 38 13 37 47 6 5 49. 34 40 8 6 11 29 25 47 9
l a f h i n g l i k e t o b e i n t h e c o u n c 23 5 34 16 19 29 15 25 21 20 11 39 28 4 11 19 27 41 14 13 7 29 38 29 9
e l. N o n e h e r e a f t e r t o b e a d m i t

11 25. 29 26 27 11 14 13 35 11 5 10 41 13 37 41 26 2 13 3 8 22 21 39
t e d m e m b e r s t h e r e, o r o f t h e a r m 41 11 6 22 13 24 2 11 37 34 41 14 13 35 11 28 35 26 12 39 16 13 5 35 24
y t h a t p r o n o u n c e n o t S h i b b o l e 49 41 16 3 3 33 35 28 27 36 38 29 7 11 29 28 41 34 16 19 2 4 26 25 11
t h. T h e p r e f e n t a i m e c o n c e i v e 41 14. 41 14 13 31 37 11 36 13 27 29 3 21 22 13 7 26 29 9 11 19 40 13 d t o e x c l u d e t a n d b r f r o m c o u n c e l.

6 41 28 13 44 9 23 38 8 11 B 3 29 6 F. 10 37 26 24 9 26 38 29 7 13 23. d m a n i m a g i n e t h e f a d c o n f e q u
A. 22 5 49 19 24 3 15 21 27 13 41 14 13 34 5 8 7 28 29 34 13 30 40 11

e n c e s o f t h i s , a n d t h a t t h e y w i l A.D. 1658.
 11 27 9 11 36 26 12 39 16 19 34 3 29 6 41 14 5 39 39 14 13 49 45 19 25 n o t r e f t h e r e .

 29 36 39 35 11 36 41 14 13 35 11.

I b e l i e v e w i l f h o r t l y b e f e n
 21 2 13 25 11 29 38 13 A. 43 19 25 34 16 26 37 41 23 47 4 11 34 13 27 t f o r o v e r .

41 20 28 35 26 40 11 37.

But, deare my Lord, owne not the knowledg of this to any liveing, as you have any kindnesse for

Your lordship's most devoted humble servant,

B.

L o c k h a r t .

B. was not mistaken in 23 26 7 18 14 3 35 39, but dare undertake for him.

i s f u r e t o b e o f t h e c o u n c e l w

A. 19 34 36 38 35 13 41 26 2 13 26 12 39 16 11 7 26 38 27 9 13 23 43
 h e n h e c o m e s o v e r o r d e r i s a l r e 14 13 29 16 11 9 28 24 11 36 28 38 13 35 26 37 6 13 35 21 36 39 5 18 a d y i n i t .

11 56 47 19 27 21 29.

Sept. 21. 28.

The agent from Dantzick to secretary Thurloe.

Magnifice atque honoratissime domine,

DOMINE NOLENDISSIME,

CUM jam aliquoties in ædibus magnificæ & hon. dominationis viæ fuerim, & eandem Vol. lxi. propter corporis infirmitudinem (quam ut Opt. Max. cum pristina valetudinæ quan- P. 129.
 tocius commutare clementer dignetur, ex animo precor) convenire non potuerim, negotia vero à dominis meis principalibus mihi commissa, pro moderno rerum statu, ulteriorem moram pati nullatenus possint, hisce magnificam & hon. dominationem vestram compellare coactus-sum, eandemque majorem in modum obnixè togare, ut si id valetudinis dispositio per-mittere velit, tempus, quo paucis saltem coram magnifica & H. D. vestra contenta negotii mihi commissi exponere possim, mihi benignè concedatur, aut si id propter morbi gravitatem fieri nequeat, mihi saltem indicetur, an magnificæ & Hon. D. vestræ molestum non sit futurum, propositionem, quam hic post adventum meum juxta mandatum dominorum principalium meorum conceperam, et ad suam serenitatem gloriosè defunctam direxeram, perlegere. Ex illa namque satis luculenter colligere licebit, quid domini principales mei intendunt, mihiq; enixe apud serenissimam suam celsitudinem et florentissimum hunc statum sollicitare in mandatis dederint. Expecto super hoc benevolentissimum responsum, & interea prosperrimam valitudinem apprecatus, permansurus sum

Magnæ atque honoratissimæ dominationis vestræ

Data Londini

Devinctissimus et ad quævis grata officia servitor

2 8^{br}.

22 7^{br}. A°. 1658.

G. WUSTENHOFF.

Ablegatus Civit. Gedanensis.

The Danish agent to the protector Richard.

To his most serene HIGHNESS the lord protector of England, Scotland, and Ireland, and the dominions thereunto belonging.

THE agent of the king of Denmark, Norway, &c. how unwilling to molest your Vol. lxi.
 highness with foreign affairs at such a time, that he cannot chuse but think your highness P. 354.
 vehemently afflicted over the great loss you sustain in the person of your father and predecessor of immortal memory, and exceedingly busied about the government of these nations, which so lately it hath pleased God to commit to your care, is nevertheless bound in duty and by especial command, not to neglect a matter of no less concernment than the preservation or total ruin of the kingdom of Denmark, and the deliverance or utter undoing

A.D. 1658. undoing of his king, and master, and all the royal progeny of the same, as this his majesty's letter will declare, and a more large and as true a relation of all the transactions past between him and the king of Sweden, as soon as it shall be translated into a language fit to be presented unto your highness.

In the mean while, since the business can suffer no delay, the said agent relieth upon the information, which in this particular your highness will receive from his privy council, being able to witness, that in February last, by the authority and mediation of his late highness, a peace was concluded between the two kings of Denmark and Sweden, upon such advantageous terms for Sweden, that the king of Denmark was to deliver up more than half a kingdom, which he hath not only performed on his side, as well as all the other articles contained in that treaty; but over and above, hath nothing left undone, or unoffered, to satisfy (if it were possible) the king of Sweden in his other new and most unreasonable demands, so he might but in some part enjoy the benefits of that peace bought at so great a rate; but all hath been in vain, and without the in reason desired, and by the king of Sweden so often promised, effect, which was that at length the Swedish army might, according to agreement, withdraw out of the dominions of the king and kingdom of Denmark, more hardly used since the conclusion of peace, than they were during the former war.

Whilst the subject sighs under their burden, still fed with hope of a speedy delivery, and their prince endeavoureth on his side to ease them with disbanding his army, the king of Sweden, who in conscience and by his royal word was bound to do the same, instead of quitting that part of the kingdom, already too long by him unjustly possess'd, invadeth anew the Isle of Zeland, layeth siege to the royal residence of Copenhagen and to the castle of Cronenburgh at one time, whilst the remainder of his forces, which he had left behind him, endeavour to surprize at once all the strong places in the dukedom of Holstein, and so makes known to the world, that his insatiable ambition could not be satisfied with less than the intire possession of the three northern kingdoms; and howbeit it hath pleased the lord hitherto miraculously to frustrate the king of Sweden of all his unjust designs; yet it is not his will always to work miracles, lest we should think him to have used little providence in the creation of second causes, so that the king of Denmark in reason ought, next unto God, have recourse to his friends, amongst the which there is none, to whom his majesty wisheth rather to be obliged for his delivery, than to your highness.

Therefore the said agent, by express command, and in the name of his most afflicted king and master, imploreth your highness's aid and assistance for the defence and preservation of two kingdoms, which cannot be alienated from him whom God, hath intrusted with them, but to the great prejudice of your highness's dominions. If besides these considerations, your highness doth not think himself sufficiently bound in honour to relieve a prince, that is otherwise like to sink for relying upon the guarantee of him, whose most worthy son and successor your highness is, in hope that your highness will be pleased to afford these proposals your most serious consideration, and take thereupon such and so speedy resolutions, as the condition wherein both king and kingdom of Denmark are requireth, the said agent shall pray unto God to indue your highness, for the better governing your people in peace and justice, with the heavenly wisdom, and to preserve your highness from such a neighbour as his king and master hath.

Covent-garden, 22 of 7^{bre}. 1658.

SIMON DE PETKUM.

Sir Edward Hyde to the lord Culpepper.

My good LORD,

In the possession of Mr. Deodatus Bye of Maidstone in Kent.

I HAVE yours of the 30; and if it were not to accompany the inclosed from my lord lieutenant, you should hardly have received any trouble from me this post; for meethinkes the conclusion of yours gives me warrante enough to forbear writinge, and to beleive, that you may be heare before this will come to Amsterdam. I beshrew you for givinge us so ugly a prospecte of Denmarke, which I now give for lost; for it is not possible, that the Dutch intende to relieve it, though meethinkes they have such shewes of it, that some should be angry for beinge so deceived. These proceedings cannot end in a calme.

The English letters are not yett come, which must proceede from some stopp on the other syde of the water; for the windes were very good. From hence there are many conjectures, and they write from , that an oister-bote from Englande bringes newes, that younge Richarde is likewise deade of a violent burninge feavour, which some say comes likewise in other letters from other places; yet I do not believe it, nor do I know, that I could be glad it were true. I do confesse, I cannot suspecte, that any sonn of his will will inherit the father's fortune, but that we shall see very notable changes, and I am not at all out of countenance, that they do not yet appeare. A.D. 1658.

I am as little in love with this place or people, as you are; yett I cannot thinke wee should leave ether, till wee see more reason; and here there is much difference betweene and Cleve; nor do I see any possibility of a treaty betweene England and Spayne; and if there were, I should hope to dispose ourselves better then to Cleve. And indeede I thought  would have had more mettle upon this turne, and that the people there would have bene lesse nice; but I never expected it from the bourgemaister, who cannot walke in any path distincte from the government; but I do not understande what you say in yours to my lord lieutenant, that ther are other people meddle in that affayre, and proceede in a way you do not approve. I cannot imagine what that people are, and I am very confident, they have not the least authority to meddle in it. I pray explaine that to me: the service would strangely raise our spirits, for I tell you truly, there was never so much insupportable beggary amongst us. God keep you. My good lord,

Bruxells this 3d. of October. [1658 N. S.]

Your lordshipp's owne.

C.

For the right honourable the lord Culpepper.

Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland, to secretary Thurloe.

SIR,

BY this I shall onely give you to understand, that all things remain quiett here. The proclamations for his highnesse succession in the government of these nations have past throwt this with great expressions of satisfaction from the people, as appeares by the returns of the respective sherriffes. The addresse of the army here goes on with much cleernes. I shall bee able to say more to that by the next post. You will excuse mee, that I write thus brokenly and briefly to you. Truly besides the great sadnes, that is upon my spiritt, my body is in no good condition of health; I am scarce a day without some greivous distemper; I have been somewhat worse then ordinary for these two dayes past, and am now in physicke; I am now in the hands of the lord, let him doe with mee as pleaseth him. Wee have not heard from England since Mr. Underwood came thence. I am

Your very affectionate and most humble servant,

Sept. 23d, 58.

H. CROMWELL.

Petkum to Thurloe.

May it please your LORDSHIP,

THIS inclosed letter from the king my master to his late high renowned highnes received by the last post; and withall such orders, that forced me to draw this annexed paper, addressed to his highnes, in expectation of your lordship's recovery. The one and the other is become some dayes elder then they ought; yet did I thinke it not convenient to doe any thing without your lordship: neither would I trouble you till now, that I am informed your lordship is so far recovered, that I have reason to hope for pardon of this importunity, who am resolved without intermission to pray for your lordship's perfect recovery in the quality of

YOUR LORDSHIP'S

Most humble, and most obedient servant,

Covent-Garden, 23^d of 7^{ber}, 1658.

PETKUM.

Thursday, September 23. 1658.

At the council at Whitehall.

ORDER'D,

THAT it be offered to his highnes, as the advice of the council, that his highnes will please to send the lord ambassador Lockhart to the court of France, with such instructions, as his highnes shall think meet, in order to the preserving of a right understanding

A.D. 1658. standing betwixt the two states, he leaving the charge of his highness's garrison of Dunkirk, during the tyme of his absence, in the hand of col. Alsop; and that his highnesse will please to order his return from the said court to his charge at Dunkirk with all convenient expedition.

W. JESSOP.

Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland, to secretary Thurloc.

SIR,

Vol. lxi.
P. 137.

YOU wel know, how backward I have bin to bee troublesome to you in the private interest of any particuler persons, especially such as have at any time appeared against us; yet having had that satisfaction of the carriage of colonel Trevor, and finding him soe sensible of the favours hee hath received from his late highness, and soe ready on all occasions to testifye his sence thereof, and resolution to live as becomes an honest man under the present government, I could not but second his request to you, which is to have twelve or thirteen hundred pound debentures, (which he hath purchased) satisfied on some lands in Kildare, the greatest part thereof being at present under his owne stock; for which he payes but an inconsiderable rent, yet thought to be as much as the land is worth, the place being rather for pleasure then profit; and only fitt for a person, who can apply it to use. His highness signeture and privy seale to the inclosed impowers mee to do it for him; which I desire you to procure, and to returne it with all convenient speed to mee. Pray take a speciall care of his busines.

Your affectionate friend,

Dublin, 24th of Sept. 1658.

H. CROMWELL.

Mr. Downing to secretary Thurloc.

HONOURABLE SIR,

Vol. lxi.
P. 139.

THE post is not yet come this weeke, and by my letters by the last weeke's post, I gave you an accompt, that I had not as yet received any commission or instructions from you since his late highness his death. ^{The duke of York} 468 573 ^{at Nieuport,} did open the packet 219 390 158 431 131 sent it to Don 145, and tooke your packet to me; in which was my commission, and 139 40 105 John; ^{to the lord Lockhart,} 146 68 147 477 575; they also tooke your packet 477 365 133 34 365 74 319 132 keep 146, in which, among others, they say was expressions to this purpose, that he should 350 his horse together, ^{have use at home,} 284 327 328 133 140 477 311 468 134, for that you might 319 152 40 524 45 comfort; 219 328 379, which expression gave them much 254 89 305 145; and I doe understand, that ^{they are} 468 169 213 41 ^{oft} resolved 408 148 ^{use} to make 524 42 ^{trade.} of this 150 437 263. ^{The duke of York} 468 573 ^{in this towne with Charles Barkley} was upon sunday last 339 469 477 160 390 500 26 319 132 83 287 227 one Brunket. ^{The princeesse royall and hee} 133 75 358 169 and 112 390 20. 447 106 77 289 468 570 207 324 went forth- ^{heere} with away, that his being 324 133 might not be discovered, and went for 263 84 47 ^{t s have n,} 146 142 323 109, and from thence, as I am informed, they are gone to a private ^{baronny of Bredah,} village in the 227 443 393 408 29 133 42 260 55 62, where they are yet together.

I am informed from a very good hand, there is a ^{person of quality} 426 133 142 412 408 126 152 17 ten days gon for England from Charles Stewart, 362 475 within this 466 104 261 287 316 305 547 306 572, and he supposes that it ^{hee or who else} know. 346 576, but whether it be 324 416 498 41 83 142 42 I thinke I shall 353.

The inclosed papers will give you an account of affayres heere, whereby you will perceive that Croningsburg castle is certainly surrendered. It is supposed, that with this change of winde Opdam is put out to sea, but as yet there is none come from him, giving assurance thereof; and yesterday the states of Holland sent two of their deputies to the Vlye to hasten them them out, who are men, it seemes, very expert in the hasting out of fleets, and were made A.D. 1658. use of to that purpose, during the warr with England. Last night arrived heere Mr. La Mer this state's resident at Elfinore, who was also in the castle during the seidge, who confirms the rendition thereof by capitulation, for feare of some mines, which the king of Sweden had ready to spring. He saith also, that he had spoken with the king of Sweden, and that he offered to give this state any contentment, in case they will desist from assisting the Dane; but if otherwise, that he is resolved to attend them, where he is, and not to quitt Denmarke. He saith also, that Copenhagen is yet in a good condition. I am,

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

Your most faithfull humble servant,

Hague, 8^{ber} 4, 1658. [N. S.]

G. DOWNING.

I pray, that you will please now this Michaelmas, that I may have the businesse for the 150l. per annum, mayntayneance heere for the English ministers settled; or at least so farre, as that I may have one quarter, ending this Michaelmas, for the two, which now preach heere.

It will be good to have some new names to write to you by.

Captain Thomas Lilburne to secretary Thurloe.

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

WHYLE I stayd in the country of Durham, I mett not with any thing worth troubling Vol. lxi. your honour with. Abundance there was troubled with the bad newes of the death of p. 148. his late highnesse. He is now in glory crowned; his highnesse was proclaimed with much willingness protector, &c. I went to two places to see it done, which was performed with all solemnity. The Lord give him courage and wisdom from above. As I was to his royall father, so shall I bee to his sonn, even espouse life and all in the world, in the strength of the Lord, to serve and stand by him. Oh, that his highnesse may have a constant converse with God through our Lord Jesus Christ! Sir I was sent for to Scotland, where the officers haith unanimously assigned an address to his highnesse, which I suppose is sent up by my lord general Mounck this post: the truth is, general Mounck is of that prudence and discretion, that he doth ingage every man that knowes him, willingly and freely to doe that which is fitt. Doubtless he is a good man, and the Lord prospers him. Before I came from Durham there was a meeting in order to an address to his highnesse from that county, as they did to his late highnesse. I hope it will not dye there. This next generall sessions of the peace, some of the county would have me stayd, but I could not. As soone as I can dispatch and get into that country, I shall give your honour a further accompt. I am soe much fixt for this settlement, that I looke upon it as a mighty mercy, these nations may enjoy the benefitt of itt. I shall be glad your honour would let me know the receipt of this, for I am likely to stay with my lord generall this month in this place. I am,

Your Honour's

Humble servant,

Dalkeith, 24 Sept. 1658.

THO. LILBURNE.

General Monck to secretary Thurloc.

MY LORD,

I HAVE made bold to give you the trouble of presenting this addresse from the commission Vol. lxi. officers of the forces heere at the head quarters, being desired by my lord Fleetwood to p. 161. present the same addresse, which was sent by the officers in England to the officers here, which I have done to them all, and they have signed itt; and we haveing in some consideration some thing of the like nature to bee signed, which that you may see wee had, I have sent you the inclosed signed, which your lordshippe may please to keepe to yourself for your own satisfaction. For newes we have none; all things are quiett and well at present, only I heare, that severall of these officers that were in the hills, that were under Middleton, are come together in Holland, and expect what commands Charles Stuart will give them. But I believe the want of moneys, and expectations upon this change failing so much of that which

A.D. 1658. which they expected, that we should have had some difference amongst ourselves, will quash all their designs, the Spaniards nor Dutch being able to helpe him in this juncture of time, wherein God in his providence hath provided better for us. I have given order, that those officers, who are in England, that upon reading the copy of the addresse (which is to be sent to them) and their approving of it, they should write to your lordship, and desire their names to be added to the rest. So I shall crave your pardon for giving you this trouble, not knowing otherwise how to doe it, being I thinke itt will be as good as if they had signed itt, which is all at present from

YOUR LORDSHIPPE'S

Most humble servant,

Dalkeith, 25 7^{ber} 1658.

GEORGE MONCK.

Petkum to secretary Thurloc.

May it please your LORDSHIP,

Vol. lx.
p. 189.

TALKE has been this many months, that Sir George Ascue and 10 or 12 sea captains were to take service under the king of Sweden, which I could not be induced to beleve, thinking the the said Ascue would not turne a mercenary soldier of another prince, whilst the warre in his own country lasted, if he could not be satisfied with that welth and honour he has gotten, and live a retired and quiet life. But I have been deceived in my opinion, and finde that certainly he and the said captaines are to depart within a few dayes; they to command each a man of warre, and Sir George the whole Swedish fleet. Wherewith I have thought it my duty to acquaint your lordship, in hope his highnes will thinke it convenient to stay his and their journey, as judging it more convenient, that his subjects should rather assist the king my master, then in the service of the king of Sweden helpe to oppresse him; and this I think would be also conforme to the sence of the article of that treaty concluded betwen his late highnes of immortal memory, and the king my master; viz.

“Ita ut neutra pars populuse, aut subditi alterutrius, neque per se neque per alios, directè vel indirectè quidquam agat, vel quantum in se est, agi permittat, in damnum aut præjudicium alterius, verum altera alteram omnibus bonis officiis adjuvabit, atque alterius rem & commodum pro virili promovebit.”

I rest your lordship's (whose perfect recovery I heartily wish)

Most humble and obedient servant,

Covent-garden, 27 of 7^{ber}, 1658.

SIMON PETKUM.

Secretary Thurloc to H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland.

May it please your EXCELLENCY,

In the possession of the rt. hon. the earl of Shelburn.

I Had the honour to receive your's by Mr. Underwood, and beg your excellency's pardon that I doe not make a returne thereunto by my own hand, which truly yet I am not able to do for want of strength, though I blesse God I am somewhat better then I was by my last. It troubles mee to find your greife returns upon you. I trust the Lord will support and strengthen you under this great losse. Your excellency will herewith receive his highness's prayer the day before his death, whereby is seen, what a spirit of love remayned in him, even to his enemyes to the very last. All the commissions have order to be renewed, and among the rest, that of your excellency's, under the name of lord lieutenant of Ireland. I am not able to say more at this time, then to beg your excellency's pardon for this short account, being all that is possible to be given you at this time by

YOUR EXCELLENCY'S

Most humble servant,

Whitehall, 28 Sept. 1658.

JO. THURLOE.

Lord

Lord Fauconbery to H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland.

MY LORD,

W h a t e v e r o t h e r s m a y t e l, i s In the posses-45 14 5 39 13 38 11 37 26 41 14 11 37 36 24 3 49 39 13 23, A. B. 21 34 sion of the rt.
 m o r e a n d m o r e c o n f i r m d: m a t t e r hon. the earl 22 28 35 13 5 27 6 24 26 37 11 7 26 29 12 19 37 24 8: 22 5 39 41 11 37 of Shelburn.
 s a r e d r a w i n g t o w a r d s r u i n e, a n 34 3 37 11 6 35 5 43 21 27 17 41 26 45 3 37 6 36 35 40 19 29 11, 5 27
 d f p e e d y, i f n o t p r e v e n t e d. T h 8 34 33 11 13 6 49, 19 12 29 26 39 31 37 13 40 11 29 39 13 16. 39 16
 e c a b a l l g e t s g r o u n d a p a c e, h a s w 11 9 3 4 5 23 25 15 13 39 36 17 35 26 40 29 6 5 33 3 7 13, 14 5 34 43
 r o u g h t m i l i t i a t o c o n f o r m t 37 26 40 15 16 41 C. 22 21 25 19 39 21 5 41 26 7 26 29 10 28 35 24 41
 o t h e i r d e f i g n e, a n d w i l f u d d e 26 39 16 11 21 35 6 13 34 21 15 29 11, 3 29 6 43 21 25 34 40 6 8 11 n l y n o w p u l o f f i t s v i z a r d.
 29 23 49 27 26 45 33 38 23 26 10 12 19 41 34 38 21 46 5 35 8.
 T h e y a r e d e m a n d i n g t h i n g s w 39 16 11 49 5 35 13 6 13 22 3 29 8 19 27 17 41 14 21 27 15 34 43
 h i c h n o m a g i f t r a t e i n t h e w o r 16 19 9 14 27 26 24 3 17 19 34 39 37 5 41 11 21 29 39 16 13 45 26 37
 l d c a n g r a n t, w i t h o u t d e v e f t i 23 8 9 3 29 15 37 5 27 41, 43 19 41 14 28 40 39 6 13 38 11 36 39 21 n g h i m f e l f o f f a l l b u t f h a d o w e.
 27 17 14 21 22 34 13 23 12 28 10 5 23 25 2 40 39 34 16 3 8 26 45 11.
 h a v e f o m e d a r e d a l r e a d y t o
 V. 14 3 38 11 34 28 22 13 6 5 35 13 8 3 25 35 13 5 6 49 39 28
 m o v e t o g i v e a w a y h i s p o w e r
 22 28 38 13 Z 39 28 17 19 40 11 5 43 3 49 14 21 36 33 26 43 13 35
 o f d i f p o f i n g a l l c o m m a n d e i n 28 10 8 19 36 31 28 34 21 27 17 5 23 25 7 26 24 22 3 27 6 34 21 27
 t o b u t t h i s a g r e a t f e c r e t y
 M. 39 28 W. 2 40 39 41 14 21 34 5 15 37 11 5 39 34 13 7 37 11 41 49 e t.

13 39.

A f a l f e b r o t h e r a m o n g t h e m t
 3 12 5 23 36 11 4 35 28 39 16 11 37 5 22 48 27 17 41 14 13 22 39
 e l s m e e a l l t h e y d o e, e v e n t h e 13 23 36 24 11 3 3 25 23 39 16 13 47 6 28 11, 13 40 11 27 41 16 11
 i r c l o f e f t d e b a t e s. i s c o n
 21 35 9 23 28 34 11 36 41 8 13 4 5 39 11 34. B. 21 34 9 26 29
 f i d e n t a t t h e n e x t p l a c e i n
 10 19 6 13 27 41 5 39 41 14 13 29 11 44 39 31 23 5 9 11 19 29 M
 f i l d b y i f a f e i l d o f f i c e r s t
 10 21 23 8 4 47 Z 19 12 5 10 13 19 25 6 26 12 10 21 7 11 37 34 39
 h e y w i l l r e m o n f t r a t e.
 16 11 49 45 19 25 23 37 11 24 26 29 34 41 35 5 39 13.
 U n l e s c a n d r a w f t r e n g t h t o 38 29 23 13 34 Z. 7 5 29 6 37 3 45 34 41 35 13 27 15 39 16 41 26 C. a n d t i m e l y l o o k s u p p o n a l l a s
 5 27 8 41 19 24 11 25 47 B. 23 28 26 29 34 40 31 33 26 29 5 23 25 3 36
 l o f t. h a s p r o m i f d t o f e n d f o
 25 26 36 39. Z. 14 5 34 33 35 26 24 19 34 6 41 26 36 11 29 6 10 28
 r o v e r f u d d e n l y.
 35 A. 28 38 13 35 36 38 6 8 11 29 23 49.

t o l d d o c t e r P e t t y a l l a t l a r g
 B. 39 28 23 8 6 28 7 39 13 17 31 11 39 41 47 5 25 23 3 41 23 5 35 15
 e t h i s m o r n i n g; t o h i s m u f t b
 13 41 14 21 34 24 26 37 27 19 29 15; 39 28 14 21 34 A. 22 40 34 41 2 e r e f e r d f o r m o r e p a r t i c u l a r s.
 13 35 11 12 13 37 6 10 28 35 24 26 37 11 31 5 35 41 19 9 38 25 3 37 34.
 T h e y a r e r e f o l v d t o h a v e t h
 39 16 11 47 5 35 13 37 11 36 26 23 40 6 31 29 14 3 38 13 41 14
 e p o w e r o f g i v i n g c o l l i f f i o 11 31 28 45 11 37 28 10 17 19 40 21 27 15 7 28 25 23 19 36 34 21 26 n s i n t h e i r o w n e h a n d s, a n d w i l f 27 36 19 29 41 14 13 19 37 28 45 27 11 16 5 27 8 34, 3 29 8 43 21 25 36
 Vol. VII. 5 N 38

A.D. 1658. u f f e r n o a d d i t i o n t o t h e c o u n c 38 2 10 11 37 29 28 5 8 6 19 41 21 26 29 39 26 41 14 13 7 28 40 27 9
 e l, b e c a u i e t h e y c a n n o t g e t c o
 11 25, 4 13 7 5 38 36 11 41 16 11 49 9 3 29 27 26 41 17 11 39 Z 7 28 n i e n t f o r f u c h a s t h e y d e f i r e.
 27 36 11 29 41 12 28 35 34 40 7 16 5 36 39 16 11 49 6 13 36 19 37 11.
 l n f h o r t, i s m o n i f t r o u s h i g h.
 19 29 34 16 26 35 41, M 21 34 22 28 27 36 41 35 26 38 34 16 19 17 14.
 H o w e v e r t h a t b e, i o r d i e u t e
 16 26 45 11 40 11 37 39 14 5 41 A 4 11, 23 28 35 8 25 19 13 38 39 11
 n a n t i s p a i f e d h a p p i l y, b e c a u i e 29 5 27 41 19 36 31 5 36 34 11 8 16 3 33 31 19 25 49, 2 13 7 5 38 36 11 t h e y k n o w n o t t h e r e a l l o n.
 39 16 13 47 20 27 26 45 29 26 41 39 14 13 34 13 3 36 26 29.

Sept. 28. 1658.

B.

Dr. Thomas Clarges to H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland.

May it please your EXCELENCY,

In the possession of the right hon. the earl of Shel-
 burn.

I HOPE my good friend Sir William Bury have made my excuse to your excellency for the discontinuance of my duty to you by reason of my journey into Scotland, with his highnes commands to my brother, of which I presume your excellency will not think it impertinent, if I give you a brief account. When I first came to him, I found him overwhelm'd with sorrow in a greater degree, then I thought his temper had bin capable of; but he was much comforted with the assurances I gave him of his highnes affection to him, and return'd me with large testimonies of it, which I brought from him and his highness council there, whoe were very unanimous in their resolutions and actions. They are now preparing a large adresse from all the military and civill power of the nation, which will be as speedily sent hither, as a work of that consequence and time can be effected. Last night an adresse was presented to his highnes by my lord Wolseley and colonel Bridge, from the gentry and freeholders of Staffordshire, filled with expressions of duty and love, and had an answerable returne from his highnes; and I beleive the other counties will follow the example, for I never observed in any action a more sweeter concurrence from all degrees of people.

Since the taking of Ypre the French army have taken Comine, a very strong place upon the river of Lys; and by the taking of Menine and Odenarte before, they will have a large tract of ground secure for winter quarters for their army. Odenarte is a place large and more considerably for commerce then Ypre, the best and greatest manufacture of tapistrie being there. I suppose the army will make little more attempts this winter, as well because of the season, as also for that some of their horse are to march into Normandy to allay an insurrection there, which is headed by many considerable gentry, and chiefly by one Monsieur Crequi a neere kinsman of that duke of Crequi, that came from the king of France this summer to complement his highnes. There is no account of the king of Sweden's progresse before Copenhagen, more then what is in the printed bookes. So that I have no more at this present to add to your excellencie's trouble, but that I am,

May it please your EXCELENCY,

London, the 28th of Sept. 1658.

Your excellencie's most humble,

and most oblig'd servant,

THO. CLARGES.

General Monck to secretary Thurloe.

MY LORD,

Vol. lxi. p. 190.

I AM as heartily sorry to heare of your being ill, as any friend you have. I hope God will be pleased to restore your health againe. I make noe doubt, butt before this comes to your hands, you will receive the adresse, which was signed by all the comission-officers about the head quarters; which I hope will give his highnes satisfaction, till the same adresse bee signed by the comission-officers of each regiment, according as I wrote to you in my former letter. I am glad to heare, that all the good people of the nation are so united to the present government. Truly itt is a great happiness to us in this this juncture of time, and I hope God will continue it. As yett I heare of noe designe of A.D. 1658. Charles Stuart heere in Scotland; but as soone as any such thing is, I am confident I shall heare of itt; and assoone as I heare of it, I shall acquaint you with itt. I am very glad to heare, that the king of Sweden has taken the stronge castle of Elsenore from the Dane; for truly that business, if it pleases God to blesse him, soe that he takes Copenhagen too, and be master of that island of Zealand, itt will be a great advantage to our affaires, as I conceive. Soe desiring the Almighty God to blesse you, and restore you to your health, I take leave, and remayne

YOUR LORDSHIPPE'S

Most affectionate humble servant,

Dalkeith, 28. September, 1658.

GEORGE MONCK.

Mr. John Barwick to king Charles II.

I AM too short-sighted to write of state affaires, and yet, having this opportunity, I think it my duty to give your majesty some account of what I conceive present condition of affaires are. About a week before Cromwell's death, he made his son Richard generalissimo of all the forces both by sea and land; but it was not till the very day before he dyed, that he nominated him his successor, and that so sleightly, as some doubt, whether he did it at all. It was justly expected by all men, that a matter of such weight should not be done without a formall instrument under hand and seall before the counsell, &c. but those, that speak the highest of this, say, it was only verball, before Thurloe and one of the commissioners of the great seall; and those, that duly ponder the proclamation, will have cause to think the penner of it did not believe so much. And though hitherto things pass with some smoothness in the former channel, yet there is some underhand muttering already upon this poynt of his succession, which makes them dread the very name of a parliament, and yet they are upon the very poynt of being forced to call one for want of money. Their debts are great, and no other visible way of raising any competent summe. Whether this be the cause, or his so tamely parting with the generalship of England at lest to Fleetwood, or both, of young Cromwell's melancholie, I know not; but sure it is, most men say he is sick; and yet those, that are likest to know the disease, say, it is chiefly to give way to his counsell to doe what they please, which some of them like well enough. There was some confusion at Whitehall the night before Cromwell's death, though closely conveyed. Some of the grandees, distrusting the place, removed their trunks out of the house. At least six howers before his death, the fifth-monarchy-men sent out their emissaries post into most parts of England, having notice how desperate his condition was. They speak their minds freely already, and have something a brewing in all likelihood. They have pitched upon Lambert for their general, and Harrison is content with the next command under him. Ever since old Cromwell had his eye upon the crown, he hath courted Lambert very much. One office he had was restored, with 2000 l. arrears, and his estate was promised to be doubled from 3000 l. per annum to six; and still they carry fair with him, and have sent him mourning against the funerall. The want of money makes them fall short of their first designe of the funerall pageantrie. At first they proposed to themselves the funerall of K. James for their pattern, and intended to go beyond it; but second thoughts are wiser. If a parliament come, the fifth-monarchie-men will cut them out worke both in the house and field. They hope Fleetwood will be no bitter enemy; and give out, as if they had Monck's army sure on their side, though not his person. If they have not learned the . . . of bragging, there may be some cause of fear, least they get . . . the saddle, and ride us all; yet some of them say your majesty will need no other sword but their own to make way to your throne, in case they clash in earnest; for the weaker party will espouse your majestie's cause, and that upon your owne termes, rather than yield to the other. I wish they may be true prophets. And I humbly crave leave to add, that some persons here of good repute for wisdom and fidelity to your majesty think this will be more feasible, if your own party be not too forward to ingage on either side; and seeing your majesty having now no visible force on foot, will make them more secure, and consequently the more likely to quarrell among themselves. I beseech your majestie pardon this boldness. I was never cut out for a statesman. If there be any thing in it of moment, your majestie's wisdom may make use of it; if nothing, I hope your clemency will pardon it. That God would direct

In the possession of Joseph Radcliffe, of the Inner Temple, esq;

A.D. 1658. direct your majestie's counsell, protect your person, and prosper your designes, is a part of the dayly prayer of

Your MAJESTIE'S

Obscure, but most loyall and faithfull servant,

J. B.

The great stormy munday, Cromwell (upon a revelation they say) told his physicians, he should now live to perfect the work. At his death, he had no sinne, that troubled him, but only his want of faith. By faith, I presume, he meant (as the divines of that party doe) a full assurance of remission of sinns, and eternall salvation; and then it was no wonder he wanted it.

Collonel W. Michell to secretary Thurloe.

MY LORD,

Vol. lxi. p. 200. HAVING att the first meeting with the lord general Monck, and other officers, subscribed the address allreadie presented to his highness, itt being then determined, that the same forme should be recommended to the comition officers of the respective regiments, and to be transmitted to your lordshipp; my lord, in pursuance thereof, myself and officers have signed the inclosed; and I must humbly begg your lordshipp's leave to mention their cordiall affections and cherefullness for his highnesse service. I dare nott give your weightie affaires more trouble, but remaine,

MY LORD,

Dundee, the 29. of Sept. 1658.

Your lordshipp's humblest servant,

W. MICHELL.

Captain Langley to secretary Thurloe.

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

Leith, the 30th of Sept. 1658.

Vol. lxi. p. 208. I RECEIVED yours of the 21st instant, for which I returne your honour most hartly thanks, and shall doe my utmost in obsarveing your desires therein expressed, being exceeding joyfull to heere and see all things correspond, and give such large hopes as to future injoyment of the nation's peace and tranquillitie, houlding myselfe obleidged to indeavour the continuance of the same with all might, being soe resolved to sarve out my generation. Sir, as to that of Scots blessing God, that he had heard them in some things, they speak it mystically; for just as the newes came of the death of his H. they declared a fast to bee kept the saboath following, and speake those words as a motive to incourage the people to keep the day, that they daylie pray for their K. in such termes as these, that the Lord would be mertifull to the exiled, and all those that are in captivitie; and that once more he would cause them to returne with sheaves of joy; and some speak in plainer termes against the government. They pray under the termes of being delivered from the yoake of Pharaoh, Egiptian bondage, or the taske-master of Egipt, &c. They use severall imprecations, praying for the confution of all tirants, and from enemies, and all their oppressors and afflictors, &c. desireing God to cutt them off, to shorten their time, thereby hastening their deliverance, and giving ease to his people, meaning themselves, &c. Thus they speake, but so ambiguously, that they can evade, if questioned; yet soe plainly, that the whole people knowes their meaning; soe that, the premises considered, it is easie to understand they prayesd God, that he had hard them in taking away his highnes, which they take to be the begining of what God hath further to doe for them as to that deliverance they further expect and pray for, promiseing the people, that God will yet bring forth further deliverance to them. Thus at large, if not too large, have I delivered my thoughts as to that particular; and what you are pleased further to mention in your letter, I shall be carefull to observe you in. But seering my letter will growe out large, I shall make that the subject of my next, which shall shortly follow. In the mean time I desire you to exsept of the tender of my cordiall thanks for the care as to the two last respects mentioned in yours. Soe kiss your hand, and crave leave to continue,

SIR,

Your honour's most oblidge servant,

TIMOTHY LANGLEY.

Extrast

Extract of the resolutions of the states of Holland and West-Friseland.

Thursday, 10. Octob. 1658. [N. S.]

A.D. 1658.

Vol. lxi. p. 207.

THE Sr. pensionary Voglesang reported to this assembly the consideration and opinion of their deputies, having, in execution of their resolution of the seventh of this month, examined and reviewed the contents of a letter of Paul Briel, bailiff and dykegrave of the Brill and country of Voome of twentieth of last month, writ to their most noble lordships, importing, that, according to the order of the seventh of August, he had made exact inquiry concerning prizes made upon the subjects of the commonwealth of England by Spanish capers, and brought into the said port, and had stopped an English pinace, which captain Caspar Verstelle at Dunkirk took at sea the 31. May, 1657. Whereupon consideration being had, and having seen the attestations and other papers accompanying the said letter, it is thought fit and resolved, that the said bailiff shall be enjoined, and the burgomasters of the Brill, that they shall give order, that the said vessel shall be delivered to the true owners without any charges; and that they send word to their lordships what they shall do therein.

Extract of the resolutions of the states of Holland and West-Frise in their assembly.

Thursday, 10. Octob. 1658. [N. S.]

Vol lxi. p. 210.

THE Sr. pensioner Voglesang hath reported to the assembly the consideration and opinion of the deputies of their most noble lordships, that, in pursuance of their resolution the eighth of this month, they have examined and reviewed the demand made by the Sieur resident Downing from the protector of England, Scotland, and Ireland, the second of the said month, that it would please their lordships the states general to give order, that a certain English vessel, named the Rachel of London, taken by James Zacharias of Ostend, and carried to Medenbleck, be, with its lading, restored to the owners. Whereupon being deliberated, and found, that the said prize hath broken bulk in the roads of these countries, contrary to the resolution of their mighty lordships, which hath been confirmed by their placart of the ninth of August last published upon this matter, it is thought fit and resolved, that besides the letter of the second of this month, which their mighty lordships have written to the college of the admiralty of North-Holland, it shall be written in the name of their most noble lordships to the counsellors of Holland in the said college, that it is the serious intention of their lordships, that they proceed precisely according to the contents of the placarts, and to observe it in every respect; and that therefore the said vessel Rachel, with its lading, be forthwith restored to its owners; and that they inform their lordships, what the said college shall do thereupon; yet that it shall be seriously made known to the resident Downing, that their lordships will in like manner expect justice from the protector, that when, in like case, prizes are made upon the subjects of this state, and carried into the ports of England, and having there broken bulk, they shall in like manner be restored to the owners, and particularly the sugar prize taken by the Portugals, (but taken away in England from the men of war of this state, contrary to all law and reason) to the end it may be forthwith restored.

Mr. Downing, the English resident in Holland, to secretary Thurloc.

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

YOURS by the last post, of 24. Sept. old stile, is come safe to me, together with the inclosed papers, and I hope by the next I shall receive a draught of the treaty of Portugall, as is therein mentioned, least something should be offered by the Portugall ambassador heere in the prejudice of England, which he is very willing to prevent, if he had a copy of that treaty. The Spanish ambassador's secretary upon monday last brought to the president of the states general the letter, which was sent from his highness to the states, with a compliment, that a letter being come to the hands of Don Jean, directed to them, he would not open it, but sent it forthwith; but for your letter to me, and the instructions, that they keepe; and they did also rifle the last pacquet but one, and are resolved to make frequent use of this course in this conjuncture of affaires, being much enraged to finde noe consolation out of England. Upon monday last, the French ambassador and myself had a conference with the deputies of the states general about the Portugall peace, at which conference the said deputies gave to each of us a whole volume of paper, concerning all, that had passed betweene Portugall and this state since the businesse of Brasile, desiring us,

A.D. 1658. that we would employ our endeavours, that their lands in Brasile might be restored to them, and other just satisfaction made them by the crowne of Portugall. Since that, we have had a conference with the Portugall embassador, and, in pursuite thereof, he is resolved this day to give in another memoriall to the states generall, farther declaring, that it is not in his master's power to restore any lands in Brasile; but increaseing the offers of money to the sume I formerly gave you an accompt of; and also engaging, that his master shall employ every yeare twenty sayle of Dutch ships to Brasile, or other his plantations; and that those said ships shall have liberty of carrying comodities upon their owne accompts. The Spanish embassador doth his utmost to hinder the Portugal peace. The fleete destinated for the reliefe of Copenhagen is yet in the Vlye, kept there for want of a winde to get out. I did direct captain Mims, commander of the Vulture frigat, who was driven into Medenbleck by the late storme, to goe himself to the Vlye, and take a view of the fleete, and send me an accompt thereof; as also himself, upon his arrivall in England, to send another copy of the same accompt to the commissioners of the admiralty, from whence, I hope, you may ere this have had it, although, for more sureness, I have also sent you a copy thereof. Since that time, there are not above 3 or foure sayle more aded to the fleete. All men did beleve, that it had bin gone this day se'nnight; but it seemes, that though the winde was then faire, yet the seas were so greate, by reason of the late storme, as that though under sayle, they were forced againe to come to an anchor; and by this may be seene a greate want of this country, that they have noe roade at the Downes, or Yarmoth-roads, for their shipping to fall downe into, and to lye, unland-lockt, for the first puff of a faire wind; so that though the windes are and have bin continually faire to goe to the Sound, for want thereof they are like to loose their designe. The king of Sweeden yet continues to doe his utmost by all manner of wayes to disingage them from succouring the Dane, as you may perceive by the many memorialls of late given in by Mr. Appleboom to that purpose; as also by the king of Sweden's letters to them, and late discourse with La Mer, their late resident at Cronnigburg; but yet notwithstanding, there is as yet noe answer given to Mr. Appleboom, but the fleete yet waites for the first occasion of a winde, and the states of Holland have yet continued together, to see the issue of this business, though it's said, they begin now to be weary, and will goe home. This is the some of that business: they do not think it their ^{interest} 339 466 rest, ^{the k. of Swede have the Sound,} 136 287 147, that the ^{of} 536 319 153 42 468 459 155 110 38. They could ^{of} 314 155 verne the k. of Denmark would; if it be possible, 286 319 468 537 as they 501; and therefore, 72 51 73 150 231 431 143 141 334 358, they will ^{relieve Copenhagen;} 136 44 362 42 155 40 254 426 108 319 311 110; but if that ^{they will} 231 365 144 151, 468 171 503 make use of their ^{fleet,} 52 358 289, by its ^{against} 254 155 c. untenance to make their peace, 107 466 387 107 251 477 376 468 72 136 427, and all their endeavours ^{the k. of Sweden will} 16 310 the k. of Swed. nothing; 468 536 shall be as 395 470; and I beleve, that 468 536 503 give them even then ^{joyning with his} very good termes 155 42 441 317 466 135 100 287 to keepe them from ^{the k. of Swed. courts them,} 72 112 339 55 500 327 enemies; 42 390 381 287; and so far as I can finde, ^{more then the lord protector.} 536 254 155 133 147 141 468 90, even rather ^{minister of the elector of Bruntenb.} 384 135 468 105 534. This is true, that the ^{and the k. of Spayne, and the emperour,} 381 393 142 150 286 140 408 543, 207 545, 207 42 101 426 443 154 133, doe endeavour their utmost to ^{engage the states generali,} engage with them; 41 107 308 311 468 535 downe-right to ^{trade,} 42 107 308 311 500 468 103; but foe ^{they must follow} greate is their concernment in their ^{Copenhagen;} 148 437 263, that 468 170 386 304 83 365 162 254 426 109 319 311 110; and this will, I beleve, be the issue of the business, unless ^{the k. of Swed.} that 536 should finde himself in a condition ^{not to feare them,} 395 151 477 52 45 213 468 100, which yet is hardly probable.

As for any succours of souldiers gone, or going, ^{from the states generall for Flanders,} 306 535 305 49 355 110 38 286 ^{the it res gen.} 143, I dare assure you, there is noe such thing; but withall it's as true, that ^{exchange some} 468 545 ^{embassidour is} 202 227 140 449 416 346 labouring might and maine to ^{places,} 294 27 319 109 311 460 ^{sel or pawn them,} 121 355 30 287, or to 142 44 81 85 416 120 13 161 468 103, of which I shall ^{endea-} endeavour, from time to time, to give you an accompt, and to doe what further I can for A.D. 1658. prevention thereof.

I was the occasion of 536 327 161 441 475 109 58 both to 534 207 542, complaining much to his resident heere, that in a matter so important as that was, he should have fayled to have done it; and I doe finde by the 532, that 468 245 132 33 339 199 is much offended, that 536 350 52 151 468 business of 311 136 371 393, and undertooke this 153 109 294 426 27 147 279 221, and that 500 418 184 127 155 acquainting them therewith; 16 339 475 110 59 468 101 468 136 500; yet withall, that upon the accompt of the keeping him from engaging with the house of Austria, 468 350 284 339 57 326 306 42 108 308 312 109 59 500 468 544, they will make but very little 138 324 162 thereof; but it's certaine, and so I found by discourse at large with Mr. 263 362 412, 467 they are much 267 144 254 104 466 104 145 279 500 326. 530 142 343 were only what I formerly gave you an accompt of, to wit, 395 151 477 150 132 43 15 466, but to put the 144 157 30 254 156 135 into Copenhagen, 339 477 254 426 110 319 311 105, and in case of 415 68 149 345 from 536 ships, to fight them, 456 140, 477 302 55 63 148 468, but not otherwise; 244 343 doe dayly change with all accidents, of which I shall endeavour, from time to time, to give you an accompt; but I beleeve you will finde that matter steere itself much as I have above hinted.

My former letters, and the memoriall thereupon given to the states generall, did give you an accompt of 572 his having bin in this country. I knew every place he was at, and what company came with him, and to him; but it being the first time I had complained in that kinde, I did not thinke it necessary to mention all places. He was at 566, but very privately. He was also at the 112 83 38 124 441 106 251 143 270 483 311 136 144, and most nobly enterteyned 239 324 137; but I doe not finde there was much more in all that, then taking his 123 358 16 143 156 134; and I can assure you, that hee was not at the sea-coast, 324 488 395 151 219 468 143 41 16 254 217 148, and that 523 534 263 219 hee repayed forthwith for Don Jonn. 62, 324 136 42 423 134 279 305 150 60 500 305 585.

The 535 have this last week given an 400 408 144 45 27 136 42 140 170 to all their 26 358 137 10 287, and other 508 302 251 135 144 207 379 89 20 286 138; which puts a new trouble and difficulty, 207, I feare, 28 319 34 311 also 523 me. 379.

The inclosed will give you an accompt of what I have 306 572 254 156 132 145, to which, I am confident, you may give credit. I finde not in yours any mention of the papers 120 14 426 134 141 I lately sent you concerning 142 156 48 304 83 350 477 100 328 483 136 38. I much want the copy of the treaty with Portugall, which I hope, according to your last, to receive by the next post, and have in the meane while endeavoured to keepe things in as generall termes as I could.

Middleton hath 381 32 358 477 108 322 been a good while, and is yet, 219 566, and I am sure, that there are divers 141 254 150 29 65 380 493 270 219 149 282 326, and I am very apprehensive, that 324 346 523 460 263 144 71 56 390. I doe finde also, that there are 460 213 379 144 241 154 59 66 151 219 566. I shall endeavour to penetrate farther into the business, and give you an accompt thereof. 576 346 395 147 316

A.D. 1658. for England.

316 305 547. Harry German is gone for France, to trye what is to be done there.
I am,

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

Hague, 11th October, 1658. [N. S.]

Your most faithfull humble servant,

G. DOWNING.

I have already putt my whole family, and two coaches, and one apartement in my house, into mourning, and for my life could not have been a better husband.

jealousy betweene Charles Stuart and the
There is very great 68 41 13 369 140 171 231 150 161 40 43 390 572 207
d. of York, the d. of York sent Talbot 573, upon the accompt, that 573 hath 138 43 107 151 one 463 82 19 112 into Spayne, priest) 147 339 477 550, (who is a 120 441 287 149) for to prosecute his particular affayres, 192 298 171 133 287, and to obteyne a settlement of them as to his own armie, and his pension, employment in the 214, 207 327 426 108 142 345, &c. and this makes great worke among them.

Mr. Downing, the English resident in Holland, to secretary Thurloe.

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

Vol. lxi. p. 221.

YOURS by the last post is come safe to my hands, together with the inclosed; and haveing this oppertunity, and considering the continuall rising of packquetts, I think it fitt to be at a little charge so often as possible, and as any thing of concernment comes, to send to you by the way of Skevling. The Hollands fleete is not yett put out to sea, so far as we know, of which the best account I have, is in an inclosed letter to me from Amsterdam, as also in another paper, which you will finde inclosed, which was an accompt taken of the said fleete by captain Mims, who being driven by the late storm into Medenbleck, I writt to him to go and view the fleete, and send me one accompt of its condition, and carry another with him for England; so that it's possible you may, long ere this, have had the same from the commissioners of the admiralty, whom I directed him to send the said accompt unto; since which time there are but 3 or foure men of warr more come to the fleete. I believe I need not tell you, how much many are troubled, that there fleete cannot yet get to sea; and many reports there are, as if Copenhagen should be taken; but there is no ground thereof to be given creditt unto, farther than the generall supposition, that it can hardly hold out; and for 468 535, this is most certaine, and the longer I search into their temper, the more I shall be of that opinion, that whatever their 120 441 105 252 120 358 139 be, yet that they are wholly 318 336 279 by 40 152 41 105 146 140; and if that they can doe nothing against the k. of Sweden, Copenhagen bee taken, 16 310 468 536, but that 254 426 107 319 311 105 231 464 106, then they will presently, and that by the countenance of their 47 358 289, which, they say, shall go however, peace with the k. of Sweden;

314 328 160 291, make their 427 500 536; and to deale plainly with you, the
k. of Sweden court them,

536 doth now most extreemly 254 153 182 146 468 102, and I am apt to believe, that even then he will be willing to give them very good termes, for feare of his other enemies, and thereby give advantage to the Imperiallists of transporting themselves into Zeeland and Funen, which is certainly the main thing intended. The inclosed papers will also give you an accompt, and truly I think that, which is to be credited, (and I am confident thereof) from Charles Stuart's court, the two persons, from whom I have the said advices, knowing nothing of each other. 576 is not yet gone for England; but it's certain they are sending severall, of which I shall endeavour to give you an accompt.

Harry German is gone for France, to sound and trye, what is to be done there; which may possibly hinder Gerrard's going. By a memoriall, which I sent you, which I presented to the states generall, you had an accompt of my haveing therein complained to the states of Charles Stuart's being to and fro in their countryes. He was highly enterteyned by old dowager of Orange. ^{at Amsterdam;} A.D. 1658.

 by the 113 83 33 270 483 311 134 408 416 205 311. He was also 219 566, and severall other places; but I thought it not needfull to mention them all in my memoriall.
 But I am sure, that he was not on the coast-side, in order to any designe for England;
 for I had an accompt of every place where he was; neither were any of the states with him, but only one Zulerston of Utrecht, who is much affected to him, and ^{count William,} 258 503 67 202, at the first mentioned place, where he was so well treated; but this I am confident, that Midleton, ^{at Amsterdam,} 381 34 358 150 412, who is now, and hath bin for a good while together, 219 566, hath some designe in hand ^{for Scotland.} 305 140 254 150 82 207. This is certaine, that he hath ordered many of the ^{Scots} 142 254 151 144 officers to attend his orders. I shall endeavour to give you a more particular accompt, but the tide will not suffer me to be more large at present; and am,

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

Hague, 11th October, 1658.
 12 a clock noone, [N. S.]

Your most faithfull humble servant,

G. DOWNING.

General Monck to secretary Thurloe.

MY LORD,

SR. John Scott of Scottis-Tarvutt having guift from the late king under the great seale, Vol. lxi. p. 224.
 for the place of director of the chancery in Scotland for life, and the said place being disposed of by the comissioners from the parliament in the year 1651. hee made fower seve-rall addressees to his late highness, at the last whereof it was found by the comissioners of the great seale, Sir Thomas Widdrington, the lord Mountague, the lord Whitlock, and
 col. Sydenham, to whom his highnesse referred the cognition thereof, that they found no cause, why hee should have bin displaced out of that office, the same being only ministe-riall. But uppon his last petition, seeking to be restored, his highnes would give no determined answer, till hee had advised with his councill, the cause whereof was, because he had given a guift of the same before to one Alexander Jaffray, (not having understood of Sir John Scott his right thereto) and now Mr. Jaffray being very sicke, Sr. John and myself made itt our request unto you, that your lordshippe will be pleased to stand his friend to his highnesse, that, in case Mr. Jaffray should dye, his highnesse will not dispose of the said place of director of the chancery, till he hath heard Sr. John Scott speake for himself. I crave your lordshipps pardon for givinge you this trouble, and remayne

Your LORDSHIPPE'S

Dalkeith, 1. October, 1658.

Most humble servant,

GEORGE MONCK.

Mr. Downing, resident in Holland, to secretary Thurloe.

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

UPON friday last I wrote to you by the post, and, for more surenesse, by a Skeeve-Vol. lxi. p. 250.
 ling boate, since which, little of concernment hath occurred. The post this day from Hamburgh brings no assurance of Copenhagen's being taken, thow for severall dayes heere hath been a report of it. I suppose the Dutch fleet will now gett to sea from the Flye, the wind being now come to the south-east, which is as fayre for them as can blowe. If ^{the k. of Sweden} 536 carry Copenhagen, he will be very ^{formidable.} 305 381 260 18 358. If ^{states general} 535 relieve it, they will be insupportably ^{insolent;} 339 459 358 104 145; so it is an unhappy businesse, let it goe either way. And of a peace I see no hopes; for the king of Sweden hath declared, hee will hazard all for the carrying of it.

Heere is great expectation of what will be the issue of my lord Newport's transactions;
 but in the mean while I see very little remedy of the pranks played heere by the Flanders men of warr. I have obtained restitution of two or three ships to the proprietors, but with such a trouble, as would weary any one, and of many others no restitution to be

A.D. 1658. had; and this is a businesse, which, if some way or other not rectified, will in time be the ruine of all English shipping.

It's written from Flanders from very good hands, that Henry Germin is gone for France, with propositions for promoting a peace between France and Spayne; and if any probability thereof, then to try, whether any thing may be done for Charles Stuart, or the duke of Yorke. The bearer, captain Baskett, cannot stay, the wind being fayre. I am,

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

Hague, October 15. 58. [N. S.]

Your most faithfull humble servant,

G. DOWNING.

I send you the inclosed papers, as they are, not having time to translate them. If Holland sett foote in Zeland, they will not easily quitt it, and soe they say plainly; and I apprehend, that then may nearly touch England.

Lockhart to secretary Thurloc.

May it please your LORDSHIP,

Vol. lxi. p. 248. I KNOW not by what preface to introduce a discourse of coals to your lordship, whose thoughts are so continually employed upon other subjects; but being our necessities put us upon such kind of commodities, and your lordship's care is universall, I take the boldness to let your lordship know, that we have contracted with Mr. Symball for 500 chaldron of coals, which he hath here delivered; but by that contract he was to be freed from all forraine duties. Therefore I humbly beseech your lordship to move the councill, that he may be discharged of the said duties, and the same may be discounted to Mr. Noel. This will be a great favour; but I must beg another almost as great, that your lordship would pardon this importunity from,

MY LORD,

Dunkerk, the $\frac{5}{15}$ th of Octob. 1658.

Your lordship's most humble,

and most obedient servant,

WILL. LOCKHART.

General Monck to secretary Thurloc.

HONOURABLE SIR,

Vol. lxi. p. 262. IN regard of the manifold occasions, which require daily use of the publique seales of this nation, not only for infeofing of persons in their estates, but likewise for the writts issuing from the council here, upon differences between party and party as to civil rights, it will be very necessary, that while new publique seales for the country are in makeing, there be a declaration or proclamation, that all writts, letters, enseoffments, guifts of any kinde, and busines whatsoever, that by law ought to passe under the great seale of Scotland, quarter seale, privy seale, or signet, may and shall passe under the respective seales of his late highness here, untill new seales be made and appointed. And therefore his highnes councill heere desire you will please to take a fitt opportunity to represent their humble desire in this matter to his highnes and the councill's consideration, it being much conducing to his highnes service, that such authority may be given concerning it, as in their wisdomes shall be thought fitt.

Signed in the name and by order of the councill,

Edinburgh, the 5th of October, 1658.

GEORGE MONCK.

The elector of Brandenburg's agent to secretary Thurloe.

HONORATISSIME DOMINE,

COMMODOUM hoc ipso mane dominus Cuperus, verbi divini minister, ad me venit; ac cum antehac sermo mihi cum ipso fuisset de quodam intimo meo viro egregio domino Bokelio, ejusque summo in serenissimum quondam principem vestrum affectu ac veneratione, quam dedicatione alicujus opusculi testatam facere voluit, renunciavit mihi non ingratis fore dominationi vestrae libri istius inspectionem. Mitto itaque eum statim, sed exemplar aliquod mecum retineo, celsitudini suae serenissimae, quae jam imperii vestri res moderatur, debita cum submissione exhibendum, ubi dominationi vestrae visum illud fuerit. Certum interim dominatio vestra habeat, dulcissimum illud & val ac flagrantissimum inter me ac dictum illum amicum meum certamen esse, uter majora publico, ac speciatim, si quando res ita ferat, Angliae vestrae servitia praestare queat; ac si dominatio vestra dignata fuerit eum inter clientes suos recipere, provocaturum meipsum quoque ad istud, utrum majore ac sinceriore reverentia ac observantia prosequi possit honoratissimam dominationem vestram

A.D. 1658.

In the possession of the right hon. Philip lord Hardwicke, lord high chancellor of Great Britain.

Omni studio ac obsequio ipsi addictissimus,

Die 5. Octobr. [1658.]

J. SCHLEZER.

Secretary Thurloe to Henry Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland.

May it please your EXCELLENCY,

I AM, blessed be God, able to write againe, though not much; nor will it be needfull for me by this to trouble your excellency with any thinge, intendinge to dispatch away an expresse with your comission to-morrow, or next day, by which I shall write at large, if the Lord enable me; and in the meane tyme crave leave to subscribe

In the possession of the right hon. the earl of Shelburn.

Your EXCELENCY'S

5. Oct. 1658.

Most humble and faithfull servant,

JO. THURLOE.

General Fleetwood to Henry Cromwell, lord lieutenant of Ireland.

DEARE BROTHER,

I HAVE had some discourse with my lord Russell, by whom I perceive, you have a desire to return for some time into England, wherein I have given some thoughts to his lordship, who will acquaint you with it accordingly. Doe not think you have unkindnes heare; no, you may finde thos most suspected, best freinds. I confesse, I desire to have one or 2 houres discourse with you, and it may be the Lord may please to let us to understand things as formerly I have thought we have don; and why shoud we not have the same love? I can with much affection remember the dearnes, playnnes, which was betwixt us. If it wer to be bought, I could part with a great dell to regayne it. The Lord teach us both, wherein we have either fayled! I have that hopes we may agayn embrace with the former love. Excuse my playnnes and freedom. I hope ther is a true honesty in it. Let you and myselfe tell our unkindnessees each to other, and not to others; but let's labour to overcom with love. We have nothing of newes considerable, only we have coll. Barry com over from Jamecah, who hath brought us a relation of a very good successe against 700 of the Spanyards landed on the island, with a generall, as governor of that place. Our forces fell upon them, where they were fortifyed, killed above 300, tooke about a 100 prisoners, besids officers, 6 pieces of ordynance, their amunition, and what else was ther; the rest dispersed, and supposed will not know how to live in wild woods and rocks. The Lord, I trust, will own that small begining to his prayse. I have one small sute in the behalfe of lieutenant-collonel Duckfeild, that you would please to be tender to him. He is honest, I am perswaded, though in some things he may hesitate, of which I know not; but having writt to him my minde, I begge your kindnes in this, till I hear from him. I am

In the possession of the right hon. the earl of Shelburn.

Oct. 5. [1658.]

Your most affectionate brother.

Dr. Thomas Clarges to Henry Cromwell, lord lieutenant of Ireland.

A.D. 1658.

In the possession of the right hon. the earl of Shelburne.

May it please your EXCELENCY,
IT is commonly rumour'd, that the Spanish marchants have moved his highnes to an accommodation with Spaine, and, for an inducement to it, have offer'd to pay the arrears of the armyes and navy.

The king of Sweden's friends are in some confusion of feare for his majesty's affaires, in regard very great forces are draweing towards him, under the command of the duke of Brandenburg, to the number of six-and-thirty thousand horse and foot, viz. seven thousand horse, and as many foot, and two thousand dragoons, under Mountecuculi, of the Austrian forces; nine thousand foot, four thousand horse, and three thousand dragoons, Brandenburgers; and five thousand good Poland horse, under Czarnesky, which are all to be commanded by the duke of Brandenburg, whoe has left his lady at Berlin, and the prince of Anhalt governor of his country in his absence. Yet notwithstanding all these preparations, if the Hollanders have not good winds to bring them in, the rest are lesse fear'd; and there are whispers, that the Holland fleet is yet in the Vlie; but it is certaine, that private orders are emitted heere for the rigging of seventeen ships, to be set out under general Mountegue, which are supposed to be for the Baltique sea, to observe the Hollanders motions. By the later part of the inclosed print, your excellency may perceive, in what termes your excellencie's servant generall Monck is as to his addresse from Scotland. He sent to his highnes both the addresse he intended himself, and that also sent to him by my lord Fleetwood, both of them signed by his officers; and because some were absent, he hath since caused every regiment to signe a perticular addresse, of which I have this day delivered his highnes those from generall Monck's regiments of horse and foot, and the rest will followe. I have only now to intreate your excellencie's pardon for this long letter, and to assure you, that I ever shall be,

May it please your EXCELENCY,

Your excellencie's most humble, and most obleig'd servant,

London, this 5th of October, 1658.

THO. CLARGES.

I am not able to expresse the testimonies of faithfullnes, duty and affection, which I had commands from my brother Monck to deliver to his highnes, which are not very fitt to be put in paper at this distance; but I know your excellency apprehends as much as I can say. As I was sealing my letter, I had intimation from the French ambassadour, that the French army in Flanders are drawn towards Lisle.

Coll. John Clarke to H. Cromwell, lord lieutenant of Ireland.

May it please your EXCELLENCE,

Whitehall, Oct. 5. 58.

In the possession of the right hon. the earl of Shelburne.

I KNOW your excellency has much better intelligence of affaires then I can give; yet I presume to give your excellency the trouble of the enclosed narrative of the late successe, wherewith God was pleased to blesse the handfull of our forces at Jamaica, the newes whereof came yesterday by the Marten galley, who brought over coll. Barry from thence, by whome came also the royall standart and ensignes taken from the enemy. And in regard, that the enclosed containes much more particularly then any thing that came from thence, I thought it not altogether unacceptable to your excellency. There are some probable reports, as that the Swede had taken in Copenhagen; but nothing yet certaine. 'Tis certaine great opposition is against him by the conjoined army of the Brandenburgish, Austrian, and Polish, which the duke of Brandenburg has brought toward Holstein; and the Duch speake high of giving releefe to the Dane; but there fleete was not gone ten dais agoe, and 'tis questionable, whether it be gone yet or not. Affaires here, blessed be God! are in a quiett and peaceable posture, beyond what could be imagined upon the losse of so choice a head and governor, as indeed did much in himselfe concenter the peace and quiett of these 3 nations; but the will of the Lord is done, and it becomes us to lay our mouths in the dust, whom the Lord hath not thought worthy longer to enjoy so great mercy; and yet, blessed be his name! he hath not left us without hope, in that he hath established a successor out of his loines, that may leave upon him his name and spiritt, and maintaine that cause and interest, which God so eminently owned and blessed in the hands of your late blessed father, whose memory will be blessed and precious in the esteeme and remembrance of all good men. But, my lord, I feare I doe not so well to renew any thing before you, that may minister sadnes to your spiritt; but the Lord sanctify sanctify all these tryalls to your excellencye. I shall adde no more, save the humble and A.D. 1658.

thankfull acknowledgments of all your excellencies favour and respect towards me, and subscribe

Your EXCELLENCYE'S

Most humble servant,

JOHN CLERKE.

Col. Tho. Cooper to H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland.

My LORD,

I Have been long silent, fearing to give your lordship any unnecessary trouble; and of late unwilling to ad affliction to your trouble, by giving you any accompt of his highnesse's death, being assured you would receive that sad newse from many hands, which affects not onely so near a relation as your lordship, but hath its stroke of deep and astonishing sorrow upon the hearts of all good men in these nations. To read the sad letters from all quarters would break a heart of stone; and sure this stroke in the head is for some head sinne amongst us; and it will be our mercye to bee made truly senseable of it; and the edg of this blow falls chiefly upon the people of God, which may intemate the sinne chiefly to lye there; and good men heere are layeing this to hearte, and inquireing into the mynde of God about it, and I think it not without a signal blessinge, which appears in the peace and quietness wee are in under soe great a dispensation; and I hope the many prayers and tears powered out before the Lord, as to the spareing of his highnesse's life, tho' not answered in kynde, will have their effect upon the head and heart of his present highness, and he will experience how far the dew of heaven exceeds the fatness of the earth. I am very much troubled to hear my lieutenant colonell hath refused to signe the late address to his highness; but I humbly begg your pittie and patience towards him, for the man is, I am perswaded, one, that truly fears God, and a good officer; and I am well perswaded will soone bee recovered out of his mistake, if your lordship would be pleased to send for him, and speake with him. I dare say hee will never prove unfaithful to your lordship: if hee receaves not satisfaction to serve your lordship in his capacity, he will desire to be dismist, being a man of a veary plaine as well as honest hearte. I have writt to him, and I hope hee will be satisfyed to give your lordship (and his highnesse, if need be) such satisfaction as may render him a person fit for your lordship's further service and favour; and if your lordship gaines him by love and forbearance, the publicque will have advantage by it. Alsoe I beg your lordship's favour for this long trouble, but more especially for my long absence, though it hath not been occasioned by myself or my concernments, being detained by his highnesse's commands, untill the tyme of his sickness, and put upon with some of the counsell and officers of the army to consider of some things previous to the calling of a parliament, and am now waiting his highnesse's commands, or such as I shall receive from your lordship, whoe am,

My LORD,

Your LORDSHIP'S

Veary faithfull servant,

October the 5th. 1658.

THO. COOPER.

H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland, to secretary Thurloe.

SIR,

I Understand by your last, that the commissions are renewing; and amongst the rest mine Vol. lxi.
under a new title. Truly, Sir, the very thought of it putts mee into confusion; you P. 263.
know very well what an intollerable life I have led here, to the impaireing my health, and in perpetual anxiety and disquiet of mind. I cannot tell what vertue a bare title will have as to the bettering my condition. I should not dare to refuse the serving his present highness and my country in the meanest capacitie; but to be alwayes in the fier, who can bear it?

A.D. 1658. I remember, that in the first account you gave mee of this great change, there was an odd hint of some ill spiritts in the army, disputing whether the military power devolved to his highness; and being able to picke up something of the same tendency (if not worse, if that can bee) it leaves me not without some feare concerning the true state of affaires in England, though I am withall glad, that the outside of things shew faire. I am sorry to heare of your indisposition at this juncture; wherefore I shall forbear enlarging at this time.

The address of this army to his highness is now returned out of all quarters, unanimously subscribed by all officers, and shall shortly be sent by a convenient hand. It is, it may bee, short of others in expressions, but I dare say equall with the best in true duty and affection. I remain,

Your very affectionate and humble servant,

Oct. 6. 58.

H. CROMWELL.

Dr. Tho. Harrison to secretary Thurloc.

May it please your Honour,

Vol. lxi.
p. 267.

I Cannot sufficiently expresse my thankfulness for the hopes of your pardoning my former presumption given me by the favour of your last letter. It was out of zeale for the publike good and prosperity of that family, wherein God hath made the publike so much concerned, that I adventured therein, only opening my poore thoughts to yourselfe; but not in the least syllable (tending that way) to my lord deputy, or any other.

The gentleman, that brings this to your hand, was steward to the late queene for the mannor of Wimbleton, and by that meanes well acquainted with the courtiers, and with the present possessor of that mannour. He saith, he came over hither with a purpose to have practised as a counsellour at law, but it is much prest in spirit to returne into England, hoping to do some considerable service to his highness and the publike, by discovering the designs of some persons, whome he suspects now to be brewing mischeife. He hath appeared in print for his late highnesses person and government; how farre he will prove either faithfull or usefull, will be much sooner discerned by your honour, then by poore servant,

Your Honour's

Dublin Castle, Oct. 6. 58.

THO. HARRISON.

Mr. Downing, resident in Holland, to secretary Thurloc.

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

Vol. lxi.
p. 264.

ALL yours came to my hands this weeke safe, so that I am now furnished with the copy of the Portugal treaty, and have heerein inclosed to you the proposition made by the Portugal ambassador heere; the substance whereof I gave you in my last. This day sennight a man of warr of this state of 32 guns, but which could carry above 40, which had never bin at sea, endeavouring to goe out at Heleford-fluce in the night, hastening to get to the Vlye to the fleete, run on ground, and was overset and lost; but the fleete are, we believe, now at last gone to sea out of the Ulye, another list whereof, and later than that I formerly sent you, is herein inclosed; and we shall this next weeke begin to be in expectation of newes from them: and there is no manner of doubt at all made heere of their releiving Copenha-

K. of Sweden

a peace with the K. of Denmark,

gen. And I cannot perceive, that 536 hath any thoughts of 17 427 500 537, but to master of the Sound, hazard all upon the making himself 371 140 150 286 408 468 459 152 105 36,

the lord protector

which is like to draw very deepe in the consequences of it; and how farr 534 may be concerned therein

254 105 26 286 107 279 468 131 339 I am not soe well able to judge; and on the reliefe

gett into Copenhagen, that other hand its certain, that if this 132 43 362 41 50 39 shall 311 150 339 477, 254

the states generall

will dayly send more men into it;

426 108 319 311 109 467 535 503 261 362 143 282 284 133 41 380 339

477 transport

477 71 151; and rather then fayle, 150 437 105 140 431 136 150 the Imperiall under the elect. of Brandenburg to Zeeland, very insolent; forces 519 543 339 477 558, and will certainly become 156 44 135 170 339 459
 Cronenberg castle

358 107 151; and undoubtedly endeavour to gaine 27 443 393 110 58 231 137 53
 250 358 for themselves, and for which there will not want very much of pretence this succour;

upon the accompt of 469 141 155 28 254 152 137; and thereby endeavour againe to give law to England.

313 468 357 477 547. I am sure takeing all things together, it is a very unhappy bu-Applebome the K. of Sweden will fight this Holland fleete.

fines. Mr. 210 358 241 412 faith, that 536 503 302 55 61 148 469 557 358 289.
 the fleet now equipped in England,

Heere is very much talk and enquiry about 468 51 358 289 397 40 126 153 70 120 designed for the Sound,

125 279 339 547, and a great jealousy least it should have bin 263 140 70 54 108
 the

279 304 468 459 156 110 38, which if it had bin, would undoubtedly with what 536
 K. of Sweden hath, given the law; the Dutch ambass. hath abused the lord protector

322 323 313 109 468 357; but certainly 533 532 178 524 279 534 339 in that stop of Sir George memorial of his mentioned in your last, wherein he desires the 144 477 120 408 140 68

 Afcu treatie that no men shall bee sent,

134 311 416 311 217 259: upon that article of the 479 467 395 380 140 319 822 31 to the enemies of the other,

140 41 41 108 150 477 41 390 381 287 408 468 112 468 135, for there is nothing declared by the stat. gen. or the K. of Sw.

at all yet 263 25 355 135 279 239 535 416 536, against each other; but on the contrary, papers passing between each other as formerly, as you will perceive by the succour get into Copenhagen inclosed: but if this 144 154 30 254 156 136 311 151 339 477 254 426 109 319 high; this fleete

311 110, then they will be 325 58 66; but if otherwise, yet by 469 50 358 289 they will make their peace with the king of Sweden;

468 170 503 376 468 70 135 427 500 536; and upon this accompt they doe daily laugh at the lord protector the ld. prot. loos by siding with the king of Sweden;

355 154 56 60 219 534, saying, that 534 may well 365 112 139 239 142 71 267 108 58 500 536; but that they see nothing that hee is in a way of getting thereby, but that the stat. gen. succede, that they on the contrary, 467 535 if the present enterprize 144 152 26 251 279 467 468 173 will have what they will of the king of Sweden, but if otherwise that yet

503 323 491 468 172 503 408 536 244 70 49 114 468 135 502 144 45 467 all things getting as good conditions as England.

171 289 they make no manner of doubt of in 199 470 144 311 149 475 108 56 217 317 254 107 267 475 412 143 217 547. Mr. Weyman, deputy extraordinary for the elector of Brandenburg, came last week to this towne, so that now all these persons, of whose being to come hither I long agoe gave you an accompt, are now all here. He hath to push on not yet notified to me his arrivall according to the custome, and his busines is 477 122

 the succour for Denmark, the elector of Brand.

155 141 64 412 468 144 156 28 254 156 137 305 552, and that 543 327 305 his forces may be transported by the states general's fleete into Zeland.

29 287 377 231 148 437 108 140 431 134 148 279 239 535 51 358 289 339 477 558. There is great quantity of provisions, which goes dayly from Amsterdam for the reliefe of the imperiall army under the elector of Brandenburg, which is a great army; and unless relieved from hence, would hardly be able to subsist in Holstein, and must necessarily be extreemly incommodated by the abundance of wet weather, which hath bin and yet continues; as it hath also, as is said, much hindered the king of Sweden in his beseidging Copenhagen. And I perceive, that he is very thrifty of his men, and he is fortifying Corsoar, and some other places in Zeland. It's said, that his fleete is not man'd, but that he intends, if occasion be, to fill his ships with souldiers, though with all his force, is not so considerable in Zeland, as to be able to spare many men. If he should fight the Holland fleete; and beate them, he would carry all and give the law; if his fleete should be beaten,

 All the possible force of the states general of the king

he is in a prison. 199 468 431 142 143 334 358 305 251 408 535 408 456 144 of Sweden's which are reade are with their fleete;

493 213 41 134 42 15 267 213 40 500 468 73 134 51 358 289; but in my last patents are out for the fowr thousand men more,

I gave you an accompt, that 121 15 466 105 148 139 213 40 418 305 468 304
 161

A.D. 1658. 161 135 474 380 384 133, but very little progress made for the hastening of them, or for shippes, issue of this fleet;
 416 305 456 142, nor will there be till they see the 346 142 155 44 408 469 51
 As for Charles Stuart his having been in 358 289; and then accordingly matters will goe. 217 305 572 327 323 339 55
 Holland,
 232 339 557, surely you had my memoriall complaining thereof, which was even at the while he was in Holland; one Killivery time 499 358 324 488 339 657, and at the very time I had an accompt from 112 390 grew of his bed-chamber, of every place where he 351 82 358 54 132 41 159 408 327 231 34 28 319 89 20 286, 408 43 154 44 441 was, and the time, with his stay and company 120 355 251 496 324 488 207 468 476 500 327 142 463 169 207 254 102 122 14 393 of
 He vowed which also I gave you an accompt in mine by the last post. 324 153 113 159 287, that it was a journey of pleasure, none of the states general, 17 70 115 155 132 108 171 408 123 358 16 142 153 132, and that 396 408 535 395 136
 nor anie person of note of Amsterdam, came to him; I have gain 206 426 132 140 412 408 395 466 408 566 246 477 326; besides 72 323 perfectly 309 ed To m Ho wa r d * of Ho wa r d of S u f f o l k, 38 477 89 328 483 135 36 408 321 483 134 38 408 140 155 49 304 85 78, whose papers I sent, hee 495 123 15 426 135 142 70 140 41 105 127, (which yet 324 hath noe knowledge
 I and hee assured mee, of at all, or that 72 have any such things) 207 324 217 143 156 134 287 379, that journe of pleasure; hee
 it was a 72 116 156 36 393 408 122 358 16 143 156 135 41; but withall 324 tells me, Hen. Germin is gon into France 466 85 141 379 467 324 106 441 311 135 101 339 346 certainly 316 339 477 for a peace with Spaine, 549 upon some notable busines; some think it is with propositions 305 16 427 500 550, lord Germain which the 365 134 36 311 134 100 339 is to put forward; and some do conjecture, visit which the cardinall that this is the product of the 156 72 141 71 466 493 468 245 133 36 339 199 is to the little queene, newes of said to have given 477 468 362 150 358 126 157 43 45 390, upon the 390 158 the death of the lord protector; 287 408 534 263 219 62; of which I gave you an accompt in a late letter, which I assure you is heere very much talked of, and absolutely beleaved by all heere. Others marriage the king of whisper, as if there were some propositions of a 371 134 441 16 311 between 542 207
 France and Charles Steward's sister at Paris; hee the last night, 572 141 346 148 286 219 122 213 346; but this 324 assures me 468 355 141 the princeesse royall shewed him a letter from the duke of York to her, 148 393 57 64 148, 468 570 142 324 160 279 326 15 361 306 468 573 477 hee was come from the Spanish armie, 61 286, wherein he writes, that 324 488 255 306 468 141 124 205 346 64 214, returne thither no more;
 and to 135 42 148 156 134 390 150 325 468 137 395 284 136 44; but the reason he knows not. Germin's going to 137 45 144 412 324 353 287 395 151. But this was done upon 311 136 102 339
 France, 143 314 339 56 477 549, nor doe I for my part knowe, what to make of it. Its from Bruxells, that hee is again to be employed in written also 306 585 467 324 346 16 309 477 231 43 101 122 365 171 279 339 France, a great pension.
 549, or to have 16 58 135 44 219 426 109 142 345. There is certainly Prince William something in this busines. 124 441 110 251 503 333 90 is now in this towne;
 the prince's dowager one of the times when Charles Stewart was there:
 he was with 468 123 107 251 141 270 483 311 136 413 408 468 476 143 492 hee sayth that Charles Stuart came uninvited, and only upon a 572 488 468: 137 324 450 149 64 467 572 246 156 107 339 155 71 149 visit to her house, 279 207 412 362 523 16 157 72 144 73 466 65 286 329, within two or three Hockstrate, where Ch. St. was; but I little credit leagues of 328 30 75 141 149 437 466 160, 63 286 572; 488 244 73 362 150

* This gentleman recommended Mr. Downing to the king's favour. See Carte's Collection of Original Letters and Papers, Vol. II. p. 319.

150 358 31 136 279 73 146 491 324 450 149 66, for that 324 346 now might and maine endeavouring, by all imaginable industrie and artifice, to be 371 263 302 41 87 38 371 136 41 144 319 85; and upon the accompt highly 254 156 137 150 339 56 557, and particularly 566; and upon that accompt hath of late spoken liberally of the protector; the king of Sweden: Ch. St. Enchuisen, 408 534; but especially 536: and this I know, that 571 was as far as 42 107 30 331 346 45 109, and 327 328 136 143 286 were 456 279 339 477 563; and that Ch. St. intend to go himself into West-Freizland to visite prince William,
 572 did 341 477 314 326 142 44 85 50 339 477 563 477 155 70 144 72 466 123
 441 108 251 503 71 202, but 381 379 384 441 199 stoped that 72 117 156 137 393; and every body knowes, that the 115 83 35 124 441 108 251 128 is wholly Spanish; C. St. the K. of Hung. Spanish ambassadour
 143 122 205 346 65; and this I know, that 468 539 and 144 125 205 346 65
 202 227 143 449 416 did 161 441 466 477 64 286 477 426 135 143 156 17
 Brandenburg to give his voyce for the king of Hungary the elect. of Brand. against the 263 543 477 313 32 156 115 171 251 305 468 539 and 543 being now 15 310
 K. of Sw. Orange Zeeland 536 carryes all the 416 205 311 interest with it, so that 558, which could never before be brought to 254 108 142 44 109 147 to any thing 16 310 536, hath yet now 15 57 135 44 279 to the 143 282 339 58 469 50 358 44 150 477 552. I think I can hardly pitch upon for one 16 302 149 146 286 339 142 149 447 380 151 468 110
 Tom Howard, hee beeing master of the horse to the prin-477 100 328 483 136 37 324 231 339 58 371 142 149 286 408 468 328 136 cesse royall; to improve him. Prince Wil-140 477 468 570; and I shall endeavour 477 338 123 443 155 44 326 121 441 liam asked me, visite the old 107 251 503 73 202 217 350 35 379, why I did not 155 72 143 71 466 468 116 83 37 122 441 107 251 143? I put it off, not thinking fitt to be engaged to such a thing without your positive mind therein first had.
 Whitford DeWitt
 As for 162 325 145 305 32; I did give 263 502 149 two or three times notice of lodging, taken, his 365 36 58 339 57; and he must have bin 464 110, but that it was always 24 hours ere an order could be had; and he removed his lodging every night. And if I had en-stat. gen.
 deavoured to have done it by the 535, it would have bin much more tedious, and would also have bin knowne; and he is since, as I a good while ago gave you an accompt, 316 for Muscovy, 305 100 524 254 157 170, in a ship bound with ammunition thither. I am,

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

Your most faithfull humble servant,

Hague, 8^{ber} 18. 58. [N. S.]

G. DOWNING.

Mr. Downing to Secretary Thurloe.

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

I AM from day to day most extreamly perplexed and troubled with the cries of Vol. lxi.
 poor English people seamen, whose ships are taken and brought into the harbours P. 273.
 of this state, and there the goods unladen and sold; concerning which I yesterday gave in another memorial to the states general, a copy whereof is herein inclosed. And the truth is, this is as bad as the worm in the West Indies to the shipping and navigation of
 Vol. VII. 5 R England,

A.D. 1658. England, and will certainly, in a short time, if not prevented, be the destruction thereof. There are not less than a dozen or 14 English ships now in the harbours of this state in this condition. Last night I had a conference with the deputies of the states for 3 hours together upon my memoriall. I told them, that it was a business of very near concernement to his highness, both in point of honour and interest; that his subjects ever since the warr with Spain, had bin, and still are, greater sufferers by the havens and subjects of this state, then during the warr between England and them. That I had made many complaints, but with very little effect. That it was true, that the states general had, for the most part, given me seeming promising answers; but that no real effect had followed thereupon; but instead thereof, an addition of farther trouble and charge to the poore people interested. That the resolutions of the states were always addressed to their respective admiralties, who have never in any one case done the English any right, but put them off with storyes; yea, upon several occasions, could hardly be induced to take any cognizance of the matters, saying that they had their instructions from the said superiors with the states general, and not from the states general, and therefore that they very well knew what they had to do; but that I would acknowledge, that in two or three cases in the province of Holland, wherein the states of Holland did please to take cognizance of the matter, and give order, not to the admiralties, but to the burgomasters of the respective townes, to examine the matters complained of, and do right, that in those cases restitution had been made to the persons interested; but otherwise nothing had come of all the complaints made in this kind, but farther trouble and charge to the persons injured. That being pressed by the deputies of the states, that the treaty marine might be dispatched, and that that would regulate all theis things, I answered them, that what I desired was noe more than what was already his highness his due by the treaty already made; for that by the 26 article his highness subjects are to enjoy the benefitt, not only of the articles of the said treaty, and of common right, or jus gentium, but that it was against common known right, or jus gentium, that the private men of warr, enemies to England, should unlade or dispose of the shipping and goods of Englishmen in the havens of this state, not having bin before condemned in some lawfull court of admiralty authorized thereunto; and that it was against the 7th article of the said treaty, to relieve, or suffer to be relieved, the enemies of each other with men, victuals, &c. by sea or land; and that by the law of nations theis private men of warr ought only to enter their harbours in case of necessity, and to abide there no longer than necessary; but on the contrary, that theis private men of warr, their constant abode was in the havens of this state, and that they were there constantly victualled and fitted out, and supplied with all manner of necessaryes; that it was their constant trade to sayle out from thence, and bring in thither their prizes. That whereas in Argiers, if a merchant ship goe out from thence, which came thither to trade, that no man of warr shall be suffered to go out of 24 hours after that; heere theis Spanish men of war being permitted to abide at all times in their havens, have their spies and correspondents in all townes, that presently upon the going out of any English ship without convoy, theis men of warr are upon them. I told them farther, that England had formerly had warrs with Spayne, and yet not put to such a course of complaints in this kinde. And that England and this country had lived in very good amity and friendship, though without a treaty marine; and that the honour of England was too deere to his highness, to be forced by such a practise as this is to the making of new treatyes; but that what he did, must be of his own free motion and goodness; and that nothing could so much worke upon that, as the religious and real observance of the treaty already made, and of that which is the knowne and undoubted common right and jus gentium. Besides I told them, that a man might be a pirate or sea-rover, though he had a commission; witness their late law, making such pirates as had two commissions; and that for my part, I deemed it to be as true piracy to sell and dispose ships and goods taken without and before a sentence first had and obteyned in some lawfull court of admiralty, as to take them without a commission; for as it was the commission, that authorized them to take them, so it was the sentence of some court, that gave them a right in them so taken; and if it were the sentence, which gave them a right in them, then to sell or dispose them before or without such sentence, must be to sell and dispose what they had noe right in, and consequently sea-robbery or piracys; and that this was as dangerous a sort of piracy, and much worse than that of two commissions; and that if the taking of ships were enough to give right, then who could be free at sea? And that upon this account all private men of warr whatsoever were obliged by them, who gave them their commission, to bring such prizes as they took to some lawful court of admiralty thereunto authorized, there to be judged; and therefore, considering the rigorous prosecution, which is in this country against such as have two commissions, by whom their own interest is concerned, that it is very hard that not one of

of the many offenders in this other kind could be ever obtained to be in any kind punished A.D. 1658. or meddled with, notwithstanding the many instances made by me to that effect. That noe sooner was any English ship taken and brought into the harbours of this state, but that the master and men were forthwith taken out of hir, and not suffered to come any more on board, whereby to be able to come to the knowledge, whether any thing was imbezled or taken out of their ships, was very hard, and thereby the prooffe of such misdemeanours render'd extreme difficult. Yet that I had obteyned, and did with my aforesaid memoriall present to the states general clear proofs of what was complained of my aforesaid memoriall; but that finding the matter referred back again to the admiralty of Zeeland, that I had very little reason to hope any relief would come thereby to the persons injured. That I had also an attestation of a very able advocate in Zeland, that he had been many times in such like cases imployed by the English; that for the most part he could not so farr prevayle with the admiralty as to take any cognizance of the matters complained of; and that when they did that, it was to as little purpose. I desire that I may have your particular and expresse orders as to this business, it being of so very great concernment. I farther told them, that as to their placart of 9 August lately emitted, that the English found not any benefitt at all thereby; but instead thereof, nothing but farther debates and expences; and that for mine own part, I shall never expect any redress of this matter until some of those men of warr, that offend in this kinde, be exemplarily punish'd, to which I saw very little inclination; and besides, that the English that were brought in hither were in a worse condition than those which were carried into Flanders, in this respect, that such as were carried into Flanders had the advantage of pleading before an admiralty, and thereby such goods as were only freighted in English bottoms, but belonged to other nations, were freed; yea, and many times, that they found ways and means of recovering such goods as did belong to the English; but here, whatever was taken, was forthwith, right or wrong, disposed of; and that upon this accompt no stranger could lade any goods in an English bottome, a benefitt not easily to be quitted by England. Much more I pressed upon them, which I have forgotten; and many of them do not stick to say that they do hope by this means to ruin the English shipping in these seas.

207 374 408 468 90 270 395 150 140 275 27 350 477 450 467 468 169 270

328 426 239 469 379 205 287 477 447 339 468 40 106 55 362 140 64 456
If two or three letters of marke should

339 59 In 468 141 144 43 16 138 71 52 150 160 113 416 150 63 135 43 361 be given out to persons

140 408 379 134 350 141 319 84 231 313 108 418 477 426 135 142 412 139 it will remedy all this, but nothing but feare will prevayle, and

73 147 503 132 41 379 267 199 469 244 395 470 244 52 45 213 503 122 when their people shall begin to feele

133 42 155 16 168 358 and 492 468 72 134 426 414 358 142 319 86 231
the smart, and to see that his highnes

312 107 477 50 42 45 358 468 142 371 150 145 207 477 141 39 45 467 534 takes the matter to heart, you will have them court effectually

464 140 468 371 150 145 286 477 324 213 151 510 503 323 469 254 155 for a remedy, and not otherwise.

133 141 39 46 48 278 150 156 199 362 131 42 379 267 279 207 395 148 115 general Montagu had kept the shipping stopped

468 135 502 143 40 and if 311 390 437 82 384 109 463 318 319 36 350 123 came from Cadis, you had

149 468 456 142 144 477 122 124 279 by him, which 246 306 245 267 174
the English East Indy ships

510 319 35 319 38 468 44 107 55 362 138 60 40 12 140 151 339 267 456 without p ro v i so es.

138 500 418 120 143 152 68 459 287.
go with Opdam, Opdam hath instructions

Ther are no commissioners which 314 500 530, but 530 322 343, as matters shall to treat with the king of Sweden.

succeed, so accordingly 477 145 132 40 219 500 536. I am

RIGHT HONOURABLE

Your most faithfull humble servant

Hague, 8^{br}. 18. 58. [N. S.]

G. DOWNING.

Newes

A.D. 1658.

Newes is now come, that the fleet went out yesterday morning.

Ch. St.

England,

want of money a parliament

572 hath for certain advise out of 547, that for 483 104 150 408 384 393 12 120 must bee speedily called,213 362 202 40 108 149 386 231 141 426 279 70 362 245 82 87 279, and upon this he now builds his chiefe hopes. This is a true advise.*Mr. Downing's memorial, touching three English ships brought into Zealand.*Vol. lxi.
p. 316.

THE underwritten resident of England, &c. having received the resolution of their lordships, the states general of the 27th of September last past, together with a copy of a letter of the admiralty of Zealand, of the 24th of September, wherein it is affirmed, that they could not discover that any merchandizes belonging to the ship Alexander had been taken out of her; the said resident (though well assured of the matter of fact complained of by him in his memorial of the 4th of September) yet, upon the receipt of the said resolution and letter, did forthwith dispatch into Zealand the advocate of the English nation; and doth herewith tender to their lordships the examinations and depositions, which were tendered to the admiralty of Zealand, concerning the unlading and disposing of the tackling and merchandizes of the said ship Alexander.

And further the said resident doth represent, that notwithstanding his memorial of the 18th of September, wherein he made complaint, that the best cable, sails, and other goods, to the value of 500 guilders, were, at Tervere, taken out of a certain English ship, called the Rebecca of Ipswich, and offered to sale:

And notwithstanding the resolution of their lordships, of the 18th of September, whereby they require the admiralty of Zealand to inform themselves therein, and to proceed according to the placard of the 9th of August last; yet nothing hath been done by the said admiralty thereupon: yea, they would not so much as stop the said ship before Tervere, though earnestly solicited, and desired thereunto, by the master of the said ship, and by the said advocate, who also did shew them the proofs for the making good of what had been complained concerning her; notarial extracts whereof are herewith tendered to their lordships, insomuch, that, on saturday last, the said ship was carried away by the pirate that brought her thither.

The said resident doth also herewith tender a notarial extract of a proof concerning what hath been done to another English ship, called the Mary of Ipswich, now at Flushing; and also before the said admiralty; and yet not so much as a stop of the said ship can be obtained.

And, in a word, from day to day, the pirates of Ostend do enjoy in Zealand greater liberty then in Flanders itself; which cannot but seem the more strange, considering the strict (to say no more) inquisition and procedure in that place against such men of war, by whom their own proper and particular interest may be touched and concerned; and if full and effectual remedy shall not be forthwith given thereunto; but that these, and suchlike injuries, be done, and suffered to be done, in the havens of this state, to the English against the treaty of peace, and against common right; as it is in vain for the most serene lord protector, his master, to be at that great charge he is at for blocking up Ostend, and other ports of Flanders, so it will be impossible for him to shut his ears against the continual cries and complaints made in this kind by his subjects; their ruined wives and children; of their continual sufferings in the havens, and by the subjects of his friends and allies; but he will be enforced to make use of such ways and means, as are set down in the treaty of peace, for satisfaction in such cases, wherein justice is delayed, and not done, nor satisfaction given; and also which may be able to maintain and preserve the traffick of his subjects, his own honour, and the honour and interest of the subjects of England, Scotland and Ireland, with their dependencies, which was not these many hundred years laid so low, and made so little of, as it is by this practice; concerning which the said resident hath so oft complained to their lordships, the states general, with so little real effect.

Given at the Hague 17 October, 1658. [N. S.]

To this memorial, the same 17th day, the states made the resolution following:

There hath been read in the assembly a certain memorial of the sieur resident Downing, and therewith tendered several pieces concerning three English ships, called the Alexander, the Rebecca, and the Mary, taken by Spanish men of war, &c.

Whereupon, after deliberation, it was found good, that besides, that a copy of the said memorial shall be sent, together with the said pieces, letters shall also be writ in very serious terms to the college of the admiralty, residing at Middleburg in Zealand, that the intention and the will of their high mightinesses is absolutely, that touching these three English ships, and others of the like nature, there may be precise and punctual proceedings according to the placart of the 9th of August last: And therefore, that the same ships with their merchandises, in case it appears that they have been unladen in these countries, may be speedily restored to the owners; and that they be required to inform their high mightinesses by a letter, of what shall be therein done and effected, taking notice that their high mightinesses take this matter much to heart. In the mean time it shall be again very seriously recommended to the said sieur resident Downing by the sieurs d'Ommeren and Ripperse, deputies of their high mightinesses, that they shall expect in like manner the equity of the lord protector in the like cases, when any prizes made upon the subjects of this state shall be carried into the ports of England, and unladen there, that such prizes shall likewise be restored to their owners; and especially that the Portugal prize, which against right and reason hath been taken away in England from the men of war of this state, may be speedily restored; and that they make report to this assembly of what they shall have done.

Resolution of the states, the 19th of October, 6 o'clock evening.

After deliberation it was resolved, that there shall be sent speedily a minister to the great duke of Muscovy; and the sieur Ommeren, and other deputies of their high mightinesses, are required to draw up an instruction for the said minister, and to make report thereof.

Resolution of the 21st of October. [N. S.]

After deliberation it was resolved, that the provinces, that had not consented, should declare themselves speedily, touching the making up of the absent officers for the succour of Denmark; as also touching the demand of the captains of French and English companies for the same succour, to increase their companies by 25 as the Dutch are.

Resolution of the 21st of October. [N. S.]

The sieurs Vlooswic, Ben, Roothoft, Lampsius, and Ameronge, deputies of their high mightinesses, returning from the Vlye, made their report of their trouble to make the fleet go to sea, &c. Whereupon, after deliberation their high mightinesses gave them thanks for their pains, trouble, zeale and diligence in that business, and resolved farther, that their whole relation, &c. should be put into the hands of the sieur Huygens, and other deputies of this state; and the said relation shall be sent to the counsellors of the chamber of accounts to be examined and discharged; and the assignation given thereupon shall be paid out of the charges upon the state of war. And whereas, in the said relation it is observed, that the Dutch officers for Denmark demand, in case of increasing their companies, that the state would find those men musquets with double firelocks, the council of state is desired to give their opinions hereupon; also to command colonel Puchler to choose an auditor and provost upon the wonted wages.

From Nicuport, the Dutch ambassador at London, 18 October. [N. S.]

THE ministers of Sweden have been very earnest for a final answer of the letter of the king their master, sent by an expresse to the protector, upon the taking of the castle of Cronenburgh. I am told, the king offers great advantages in the Sound and Baltic-sea to this nation, and that he presseth hard a conclusion of a straighter alliance; and to facilitate the same, the ministers of Sweden had persuaded some principal merchants, who traffick in

A.D. 1658. the Baltic-sea, to sign a petition, wherein they maintain, that it would be of great advantage for the commerce and navigation of this state and nation, that the king of Sweden should be master of the Sound. I spake thereof to some of the council of state, and shewed that the late lord protector had divers times assured me, that he would take no advantages, but jointly with the United Provinces; and that the resident Downing had declared in his name the same to their lordships the states. And although the secretary of state were not yet recovered enough to look after public affairs, yet I wrote him a letter, praying him, that the protector might be informed of the promises made unto him heretofore in this matter; and that he would not treat apart with Sweden, who had so unexpectedly violated the treaty of Denmark made by the mediation of a minister of England; and he sent me answer by the sieur Marfelt, that he had read my letter; and although he was so indisposed in health, that he could not go to council, that he would endeavour that nothing should be done in haste, but that conference should first be had with me, and nothing be done by surprise. The other counsellors of state told me, that the lords Fiennes and Wolfely, who had conference with me the last week, would renew the same to-day or to-morrow. In the mean time I thought fit to demand a private audience touching the affairs of the North, and the treaty marine; and to this purpose I wrote yesterday to the said secretary of state, who answered me, that he would send me his highness's answer suddenly; but in the evening I was told, that there was some disturbance amongst the under officers of the army, who had resolved to present a petition to his highness to give to the lord Fleetwood, heretofore deputy of Ireland, the charge of general of the army, and power to choose all officers in the same. But I now hear, that the business is quashed, and no more mention is made thereof. The 12th I received the letter of their high mightinesses, touching the two prizes of sugar, and I shall prosecute the restitution or reparation of the same according to the intention of their high mightinesses.

Captain Thomas Lilburne to secretary Thurloc.

MY LORD,

Vol. lxi.
p. 281.

I HAVE received yours, and shall always give you accompt of what things worthy your lordshipp's taking notice of I shall meet withall. To-morrow is the funerall of that precious judge Smith solemnized at Edinburgh; he dyed at Innerness in his circuit. The Lord maiketh us thankfull for that mercy received in Jamica, that his presence may be with us, that he may delight in us, for his people. I have intimation from the sessions at Durham, that the address to his highness from that county is forborne till the next meeting. My lord, really I hold it my duty to informe you, how convenient it will be, that the sherife of that county of Durham be altered upon severall accompts, and that in order to peace and settlement; not that I would have any in those times disengaged if possible, but this sherife hath bene in 2 yeares, and we used to have new sheriffs every yeare or 2 yeares at farthest. The time is now about the 18th instant to nominate new sherifes, by his highness, since the parliament was dissolved good men, was afflicted at the cause thereof, others to ready to holdforth what single persons would doe with parliaments, and in such a time the sherife came not to the sessions, nor kept that correspondence with the justices in there sessions as formerly; and the last assizes was so negligent, that baron Parker and judge Newdigate fyned him 100 l. There is maney other things, that indeed I thinke it may be for the service of his highness, and the good countrey, if the sherifs be chainged as formerly, which I humbly submit to your lordshipp's consideration. I am,

YOUR LORDSHIPP'S

Most faithfull servant,

Dalkeith, 11 Oct. 1658.

THO. LILBURNE.

General

General Monck to secretary Thurloe.

MY LORD,

I RECEIVED your lordshippe's of the 5th instant, by which I understand the two A.D. 1658. addressees I sent you came safe to your hands; and I thanke you for your favour, in presenting of them to his highnesse. I am very glad to heare you are uppon recoverie of your health. I returne you many thanks for the good newes you sent us from Jamaica. Truly it was very considerable to us att this time. God give us hearts to bee thankfull to him for itt. For newes heere wee have none. There are noe letters come over yett to any persons heere to make any disturbance; and I hope as thinges stand, those designs of Charles Stuart's will be laid aside, and there is little probability of their doing any good in these parts. I am very glad to heare there is like to bee noe more motion of that businesse amongst the officers, that you wrote of last. This day I was at the buryall of judge Smyth. Hee was a very honest man; his death is much lamented by the Scotts as well as English. It would doe very well to have an English judge in his place, for Scotch judges are too apt to favour their allies and friends, soe that justice will not bee so well administred, as if Englishmen were in that place. I thought fitt to acquaint you with his death, and my opinion concerning it. I remayne

Dalkeith, 12. October 1658.

Your LORDSHIPPE's very humble servant,

GEORGE MONCK.

Mr. S. Disbrowe, one of the council of Scotland, to secretary Thurloe.

MY LORD,

I RECEIVED yours of the 5th instant, and returne my humble thanks for the intelligence therein containd, and desire to blesse the Lord for so great a mercy, in giving us peace at this time, when the harts of our enemyes was bigg with expectation of new troubles. I hoped, that wee should have had ann adresse to his highnesse from those in civill power in this nation, that might have testified theyr duty and faithfulness; but our Scotch freyns are backward, and except ther was fredom and hartines in it, I never judge such things significant; but I trust ther is noe feare of any troubles here, if God continue peace in England.

It hath pleased God to take out of this world judge Smith, one of the commissioners for administration of justice here, who was buryed this day. I perceave our Scotch judges will indeavor to have his place filled up by a Scotsman; but I suppose, upon good consideration, it will bee found for his highnes service to keepe the ballance something even in that court, being the supream in the nation. Ther is now five Scots judges, and but three English, only I am ther sometimes, as other occasions will permit; and judge Goodyear, one of them three, is very sicke, and not like to recover. I intreat your lordship will take thoughts of us, that som able Englishman or men, as occasion shall bee, may be sent downe to suply. I beleve the councill heer will humbly present their thoughts heerin to his highnes speedily. Mr. John Harper, that is now at London, and in whose behalfe I formerly wrote a few lines to your lordship, may posibly looke after this place, which constraynes me to informe, that since hee went from hence, I have bin told by honest men, that hee did not carey it fayrely in his trust, as trustee for the state in the confiscated lands of Scotland. And though since his being there hee hath desired mee more then once, to recomend him to your lordship for som employment; but I have writt to him in playnes, that I could neyther writte nor speake for him, untill he had cleared himselfe of som miscarredges, that are come to light since his going from hence. This I thought but my duty to communicate to your lordship, and humbly and hartilly subscribe myselfe

The 12th October, 58.

Your LORDSHIP's most faythfull and humble servant,

SA. DISBROWE.

Captain Langley begs your lordship will remember him as opertunity presents.

Captain

Captain Thomas Lilburne to Secretary Thurloe.

A.D. 1658. MY LORD,

Vol. lxi. p. 284.

THIS day I was at the funerall of judge Smith, and observed among some, that there is a kind of whispering, as though there might be some proposals, or such a thing intended, as to have a generall besides his highness to give commissions. Indeed I thinke that cannot be by the petition and advise, because that is appropriated to the cheife majestrate, that I am not much afraid, that such whisperings should arise upon any ground above. If such a thing be, I hope the Lord will prevent it. In my humble thoughts, if that come to pass, I foresee what almost the issue will be. The Lord give his highness courage and counsell to consider well upon that. There was somewhat of this nature, when the petition was signed at Edinburgh, but I can thinke nothing of it; for surely his highness will consider well. I am soe unwilling to writt any thing against any, that it troubles me to acquaint you with my thoughts; only I am soe settled upon this government, that I am ready to part with any thing for the maintaining of it, maiks me speake more than I would. There is one lutennant-collonel Mason, that I advise you to take heed of. My lord generall in this countrey is soe diligent and carefull, that not a man but he is ether ingaged to him, or daire not appeare. What I can observe, there is not maney for starting things of that nature, and, I hope, all very faithfull, I meane the officers. Were I fitt to advise, my lord, take care things of that nature be allayed and suppressed before a parliament. And the Lord direct his highness and those that's about him, to take speciall care in bringing in counsellors, that God may have the glory, his highness may be established, and all his people may continue to enjoy peace and quietness in all godliness and honesty; and I am perswaded the more power in his highness with his counsell in the intervalls of parliament, and in his highness and parliament when they fitt, will enable his highness to prevent disorder, and protect his people. God in mercy direct him to have a care of that power God hath putt into his hands, is the prayers of Edinburgh, 12th October, 1658.

Your LORDSHIPP's most faithful servant,

THO. LILBURNE.

My Lord, it were to much boldness to know if you received this.

General Fleetwood to H. Cromwell, lord lieutenant of Ireland.

DEARE BROTHER,

In the possession of the right hon. the earl of Shelburne.

THER having bine some late discourses amongst officers of the army, I presume to give a breife account thereof.

It seemes severall officers had a meeting, where was offered a petition, which being reade, they resolved not to proceede therein, without first acquainting the generall officers; and accordingly some of them came to us, with whom we discoursed, labouring to satisfye them in the things which they desired; the perticulers of which wer 3: that they might have a commander in cheife under his highness: that no officer might be put out of his imployment without a tryall, according to the lawes martiall: that the commander in cheife might have power to give commissions to all inferior officers: all of which we thought to wait upon his highness in, and appointed the counsell of officers to meet upon the fry-day following. His highness having bine pleased to give satisfaction to us in the substance of what is desired, reserving the power of commissions to himselfe, we did acquaint the officers with the same, who departed with much satisfaction, and I hope will be carefull of giving the least umbrage or colour of doing any thing, which may give offence. The army have a great desire, that the good old spirit may still be kept alive to carry on this worke by, wherein his highness hath declared himselfe very fully, which hath given very great satisfaction; and the Lord keeping that fresh upon our hearts, to mak thos, who have acquaintance with the Lord, and otherwise suitably qualified, the men of our choyce, as instruments to cary on this worke by, we shall have a blessing. The union of the armyes will be a great advantage to his highness affayres, wherein I have and shall be, I hope, faithfully carefull to discharge my duty; and however by some I may be render'd, yet condemn nothing in me, I begge you, without first being heard, and then I shall, I hope, satisfy you, as to give no other occasion then to be esteemed as

October 12. [1658.]

Your most affectionate brother and humble servant.

Dr. Tho. Clarges to Henry Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland.

May it please your EXCELENCY,

A.D. 1658.

ON fryday last many of the officers mett at St. Jamees to debate a very bold petition, which his highnes had before heard on, and somewhat passionately resented. I presume your excellency has the perticulars from better hands, which makes me forbear a repetition of them; only I'll assure your lordship, such actions are not beyond Twede. I heare my lord Desbrowe and colonel Berry were two of the chiefeft, that favour'd the buffines; and I hope they had no ill intentions in what they did, but I cannot but say it was ill-timed. My devotion to your excellency and your family makes me somewhat free in my opinion; but I shall not dispaire of your excellencie's pardon, because I have no end but duty to both in all my endeavours. The Duch fleet went away but on third day last towards Copenhagen; and I am privately told, (though I dare not affirme it) that wee have sent some ships after them. The Muscovites have invaded the Polonish territories, and taken Remdan, which makes the king of Poland take new measures; but it is not certainly knowne, whither this diversion hath made him rise from before Thoren. The French have struck so great a terror to the inhabitants of Flanders, that they are ready to deliver up their townes into their hands. Cambray and Valenciennes, with some other places, have sent commissioners to Peronne, to desire a neutrallity, and to preserve commerce, which is graunted by the king of France.

From Madrid it is writ, that the Catallonians are not without much difficulty brought to armes to repulse the Portugueses, whoe continue the seidge of Badejox with much resolution.

The king of Spaine hath lately sent propositions to the duke Charles of Lorraine for his liberty, at the instances of the emperour, whoe intends to make him generalissimo of his forces; but I doe not heare what effect they have. The king of France is goeing to Marfeilles to quiet some troubles in those parts, and hath desired the duke of Savoy to meet him with the duchesse his mother at Agrenoble. This is all the forreigne newes I have to communicate to your excellency, nor litle of domestique, only the French ambassidor is shortly to have audience to condole and congratulate his highnes. I am,

May it please your EXCELENCY,

London, October
the 12th, 1658.

Your excellency's most humble servant,

THO. CLARGES.

Lord Fauconberg to H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland.

MY LORD,

YOUR sister is weeping so extreemly by me, that I can scarce tell you in plaine English, I am going 80 miles out of towne to-morrow for some days, and so, if Z proceed at this rate,

31 35 26 7 13 11 8 5 41 39 16 21 34 37 3 41 11, into the north, from whence your lordshipp can expect no other service then my prayers. I have informed 31 13 at large.

39 41 47 5 23 25 3 39 255 35 17 11. Z 14 5 6 3 10 19 29 13 17 5 24 11

39 26 33 24 3 49 5 45 13 11 20 06 19 29 9 11 21 12 14 13 16 3 6 14 5 8

10 3 21 41 14 2 38 23 7 26 40 29 9 11 25 5 29 6 21 39 16 19 27 20 41 14

13 35 11 21 34 49 11 41 36 26 24 11 37 11 22 13 8 47; 4 38 41 5 23 3 36

43 13 11 45 3 29 39 22 5 27 49 26 12 38 36 11 49 39 16 13 35 45 19 41

28 35 28 35 9 26 38 37 5 15 13.

A 21 34 17 11 29 13 35 5 23 25 47 37 11 40 19 23 8, 3 36 22 26 36 41

38 29 17 26 6 25 49 5 27 6 5 29 39 19 7 16 35 21 34 39 19 5 29; 2 40

39 15 28 6 4 11 39 16 3 29 18 39 49 26 40 5 35 13 33 35 11 41 39 49

36 3 12 11.

VOL. VII.

5 T

B.

A.D. 1658.

will be throwne out of the windowe,

B. 45 19 25 2 13 41 14 37 26 45 27 13 28 40 39 28 10 41 14 11 45 19
 if he stay; yet flies not 29 6 28 43 13 21 12 16 11 34 41 3 49; 47 13 39 10 25 47 13 34 27 26 41 uppon that account; for if he had orders, 40 33 31 26 29 39 16 5 41 3 9 7 26 38 27 39; 10 28 35 21 10 16 13 14 5 he has a regiment of 8 26 37 6 13 35 34, 14 13 16 3 36 5 1 37 11 17 19 24 13 27 39 28 10 14 honest fellows in towne, would guard 28 27 13 36 41 12 13 25 23 28 43 11 36 21 27 39 28 43 27 13, 45 26 38 the belt of them to the tower.
 25 6 15 40 3 37 8 41 13 11 4 13 34 41 28 10 41 14 13 24 39 26 41 14 13 that place is not 39 26 43 13 35. But I feare, the master of 41 14 3 39 33 23 5 7 13 19 36 29 right.
 26 39 37 19 17 14 41. I yet trust, that God will in mercy looke upon us, and deliver this nation from those, that, I feare, under the notion of godlinesse are indeed serving lusts of there own. I shall never cease to pray, that the Lord of hosts would direct your excellency.

October the 12. 1658.

B.

Mr. William Bedford to secretary Thurloe.

May it please your HONOR,

Vol. lxi. p. 289.

HAVEING sett on foote an humble addresse to his highnesse in our country, which I doubt not but will bee signed by the generallity, I have taken the boldnesse to send you a copy of it here inclosed. It was at our generall quarter sessions agreed unto by the whole bench: wee sent to the corporation to joyne with us, or to send by themselves, which they resolve to doe. Captain Wagstaffe, my selfe, and another gentleman, are to present it about the begining of the tearme, hoping by that to get our copyes returned from all parts of the country. I finde the country generally very well satisfied in his late high-nesse's disposall, and noe regret towards the old family. The cavaleeres with us very quiett, and much dasht att his highnesse's peaceable entrance, and does not seeme to have the least hopes. They were much afraid, least they should have beene secured agayne. Sir, I humbly beg your pardon for this boldnesse. I shall pray the Lord to perfect his mercy in your recovery, and remayne

Henloe, [in Bedfordshire]
 12th October, 1658.

Your HONOR's most faithfull servant.

W. BEDFORD.

Sir, if it bee not too much confidence in me to put you to such a trouble, I beg of you, that if others, who stood in such a relation of office as I did, bee put in the list of mourners att the funerall of his late highnesse, you would remember me as an old servant and officer.

H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland, to secretary Thurloe.

SIR,

October 13, 1658.

Vol. lxi. p. 301.

I UNDERSTAND by your last, you are speeding away my comission. I doe long to see the messenger heere, not that I am fonde of a gay title, but because you promised you would then write at large; for, to say the truth, I am more in the darke as to all your affaires in England, then ever I was wont to bee, which I must wholly impute to your late indisposition, haveing for 3 or 4 packetts together received nothing from you but letters of course. I hope by this time your condition is such, as to admitt access of persons about busines; and that you have heard from my lord Russel, or som other hand, how much it would conduce to my satisfaction, if I might have the advantage, though it were but a week's conference with yourself and the rest of my freinds, that I might the more confidently goe on in my duty, and not bee put to the hazard of steering by conjecture. I need not enforce it by considerations of my longe absence, which makes me a stranger to the very persons of my neere relations, nor with the variety of difficulties, which have not onely much impaired my health, but put mee under such disquiett of minde, as is almost insupportable without some relaxation. A word to you is sufficient. Things heere are in so great a calme, that I can never better bee spared; and if they shall verge towards any alteration, alteration, I may bee soon here again. As in all other matters, so in this especially, I A.D. 1658. rely much upon you, whom I have alwayes esteemed as my best freind, assuring you, that I am

Your most affectionate freind, and most faithfull servant,

H. CROMWELL.

Sir Thomas Bendyshe, ambassador at Constantinople, to secretary Thurloc.

SIR,

BEFORE I received your recommendation of collonell Holdip, of Aprill the 20th last Vol. lxi. p. 244i past, I had done what was requisite, at least what possibly was here to be done, for his establishment in the Morea. However, though I have thus prevented your commands to act for him, yet shall I comfort my selfe in having done what you pleased to command, and take your letters as an approbation of what I have acted, whereof I question not but his first advices have or will so freely assure you, as to leave that a work needlesse for mee to doe; yet shall further assure you, that so oft as I shall have opportunities (which I shall diligently watch for) further to serve him, or he any need of me, (wherewith I doubt not but hee will acquaint me) he shall soone finde how greate force your comands have uppon me: As for the gentleman's owne worth, (which none shall more forwardly encourage than myself) that hath binne so well knowne to mee, as I could not uppon first news of his designe, but think him much misplaced, whilst in an employment of so known danger and trouble, and of so scrambling, so uncertain profit as that consulship, even in better times was, much more now, when the empire being as 'twere in a scuffle, the licentiousness of commander and soldiers abroad (from whence comes the mischeife the Morea usually feelles) is too headstrong to bee controuled by course of justice here, where those, who are placed to do it, are so restrained and limitted, as that they dare not determine in any case extraordinary, at least without first consulting the vizir, whom this summer's expedition against Transylvania hath kept at too great a distance, and this winter's engagement likely to keepe too busie in Asia, to attend the cryes for justice here; the bassa of Aleppo still keeping the fiede, notwithstanding all edicts and threats, and against whom the vizir is preparing. Meane while (besides the forementioned inconveniencies to us) by this means our intercourse with Aleppo is so interrupted, as that we have not hearde from thence of divers months, which makes me even hopeles (to my no small affliction of mind I say it) of satisfying (in any reasonable tyme at least) his highnesse expectation of Arab horses, these armyes, that especially of the bassa of Aleppo, having swept those places of best breeds, and would undoubtedly intercept (his forces lying in the way) such as should be sent from thence, if any were there in readines, which the great meanes and importunities I have used make me believe there may. This want (whereat I can't but blush) and that of usuall intelligence, caused by the sicknesse, (which, raging in the city, drave me into the country, and pursued mee so close, as to cutt off 4 of my family, and make friends stand as strangers as farre off) is the reason, why by this opportunity I dared not make immediate tender of my humble duty and service to his highnesse, which I earnestly crave you, Sir, would please to undertake, and so to excuse mee, as that I may not goe less in his highnesse good opinion; by which favour you will for ever make my best service a due debt to you, and mee,

SIR,

Pera di Constantinople,

October 14. 1658.

Your very humble servant,

THO. BENDYSHE.

From Boreel, the Dutch ambassador in France.

Paris, 25. October, 1658. [N. S.]

I HAD yesterday audience of the king, queen, and cardinal, as well to compliment Vol. lxi. p. 307. about the congratulations, as the condolings of this time, as principally to propose and recommend, according to the resolution of their high mightinesses, the accommodating of the new war of the kings of the north; and that the treaties may be religiously observed. 2dly, that it would please their majesties, and his eminence, to endeavour by their great power with the king and queen of Portugal, that they would give a reasonable satisfaction to your high mightinesses in their demands, both for the restoring of the lands, isles, cities and places in Africa and America, which have been unjustly taken from them, and usurped

A.D. 1658. W usurped till now; as also for the millions of injuries and losses suffered by them. I there made use of the reasons in my instructions, and what might serve for the same; whereupon their majesties and the cardinal, who discoursed a little thereon, answered me very well by promises, whereof I hope the effects for the welfare of the United Provinces: after which I took my leave, because of the voyage the court is taking, to which the cardinal answered me, that the court will be back again about the tenth of December.

The English ambassador, governor of Dunkirk, is here treating about some business, before the court goes hence; and tells me, that he goes presently after to Dunkirk with 200 horse, that wait for him at Abbeville. In Normandy there are yet some dissensions, which the court endeavours to suppress by force, or to accommodate friendly. On the 23d, went hence towards Burgundy 14 companies of guards. The court will have above one hundred coaches, besides the coaches of the nobility, &c.

At the council at Whitehall.

Friday the 15th of October, 1658.

Vol. lxii.
p. 129.

ORDERED, that it be offered to his highness, as the advice of the council, that his highness will please to write his letter to the king of Sweden, taking notice therein of the intimacy of affection, that was betwixt his father his late highness and the said king, as also of the good affection his highness bears and continues to that crown; and that, although his highness, being newly come to his government, finds not himself in a condition to give a present answer to some particular desires, which are insisted upon by his public ministers here, yet his highness is desirous to proceed in the treaty begun in his father's life-time, and to enter into nearer terms of friendship and alliance; and when he shall more fully understand the particular state of affairs, shall be very ready to do what shall be for the good and interest of both states, or to the purpose hereof, in such terms as his highness shall in his wisdom think fitt.

Mr. Downing, the resident in Holland, to secretary Thurloe.

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

Hague, October 25. 1658.

Vol. lxi. p. 257.

THIS weeke arrived here a French gentleman called Mr. Akakey, who came from Moscovye, whether he had bin sent by the king of France as envoye, to mediate a peace betweene the king of Sweden and grand duke of Muscovy. He came by sea to Copenhagen, and came out of Copenhagen upon saturday was a fennight; and saith, that Copenhagen was then in a condition able to defend itself for a long time; for that the sea was open to them, the king of Sweden haveing drawne all his men of warr from thence to Cronenberg, but continues to attacque the town by land with what force he hath, being, as he saith, about 8000 men, and a battery of 44 greate peices of ordnance. He saith farther, that the king of Sweden's fleete at his coming away consisted of 38 men of warr and 12 fire-ships; and that he expected dayly seaven more, which were very great ones, and lay ready at Borneholme, expecting the first puff of faire winde, but that he wants seamen; and that for the helping thereof he had put 2000 foot on board his ships; and also hath placed greate guns with all possible advantage, both at Elsinore and Elsingburg on both sides of the Sound, and is resolved in that place to fight the Holland fleete; and the report is, that he will in person be in the fleet, though others thinke, that will hardly be suffered by those that are about him. He mett Opdam with the Dutch fleete upon saturday night last, not above 12 leagues from the Texell, and with a contrary great winde; and yesterday and to-day the windes have heere been southardly, which is as contrary to them, if they have gotten the cape, as the northwardly windes were before. There came with him to the Texell a Swedish gentleman, who, as soone as he arrived, hired a vessell, in which he went for England to condole and congratulate with his highness on the behalf of the king of Swedes, and also to demand, that his highness would positively declare himself for him, in case of this state's assisting the Dane against him. I

this French gentleman is angry with finde that 469 46 131 39 104 25 60 311 104 145 358 372 346 205 53 441 500

the king of Sweden. Hee says

duke of Muscovy

468 536. 324 450 146 61, that the reason why the 273 408 88 524 254 152 168

send passeports to Bradshaw was,

did not sooner 139 282 119 217 140 431 133 147 140 477 Mr. 19 437 32 140

king of Sw. had

he would

319 158 488, because that the 536 319 32 given him notice, that 324 160 112 have no mediator.

153 82 33 323 395 379 267 13 477 134 141. He saith moreover, that the warr of Poland good to France, the h. of Aust. A.D. 1658.

 487 438 553 doth noe 317 477 549, but onely gives 468 544 oppertunity of 443 113 147 339 55 339 553, which otherwise of itself is extreamly disaffected to them ; that this warre is against the interest of France and England, and farther, that 469 487 346 14 310 468 339 466 133 287 147 408 549 207 547, hoped that hee engaged against the house of Austria;

whereas they had 328 121 279 467 324 would have 41 105 388 311 34 16 310 king of Sweden expects alwayes when pressed,

468 544; and yet, faith he, the 536 294 426 27 148 139 199 483 170 287 492 assisted by the king of France, hee will 123 134 287 142 279 to be 217 141 346 150 379 239 542, or else that 324 513 joyne with the house of Austria; the Fr. emb.

70 113 171 390 500 468 544; yet notwithstanding this, I finde dayly, that 532 good words to Applebome;

gives very 317 161 416 37 142 477 Mr. 210 351 241 412; but I see plainly, that at the heart angry with him.

219 468 61 42 213 150 they are 205 56 441 500 326. By the last I sent you a list of the Dutch fleete, and I have heerein inclosed to you a copy of that list, which is brought to the states by the commissioners, which were at the Vlye with the fleete. I had forgott to tell you, that the above-mentioned French gentleman said, that the king of Sweden was in dayly expectation of 4000 foote out of Sweden.

The Spanish ambassador heere doth as much or rather more for the 537 then the mini-Denm.

sters of 552, and greate is the joy for the getting out of the fleete, and no manner of doubt made of the enterprize, and 4000 more are in a list to be sent as occasion shall require ; and haveinge once set foote on ground, nothing will be wanting for the mainteyning thereof, that can possibly be done ; and the states generall have again, upon a conference of k. of D. el. of Br.

with the ministers 537, and 543, renewed their resolution, that admirall Opdam doe put the succours, which he hath with him, into Copenhagen, and that against whatever states gen.

opposition may be made by Swedes or others ; and it hath bin moved in the 535, that their fleete

when the succours shall be put into Copenhagen, 468 67 131 48 358 289 may block up by sea anie place, which the elector of Brand. shall 20 365 27 76 522 239 140 41 15 206 120 355 251 493 543 141 319 82 21 block up by land ; Fredericks

365 28 77 522 239 355 106 33, and the meaning is, 47 133 42 263 441 27 77 ode

287 112 263 in the first place, but that is not yet agreed unto ; but things of this nature comonly come by peeces, and one after another : and you will perceive by the inclosed, that the states have resolved to send an ambassadour into Muscovy, 207 503 and will leave no stone unturned against the king of 358 14 153 41 395 141 477 390 154 106 149 152 133 107 279 16 310 468

 Sweden, will insupportably inolent

536, and 503 be most 339 141 155 120 123 416 463 23 362 339 459 358 109 it this designe succede, and already they 150 72 50 469 263 143 72 57 390 144 157 31 251 279 207 199 134 42 16 taik of forcing the king of Sweden, quitt what he 216 468 171 463 84 77 408 305 29 339 37 468 536, not only to 127 154 71 got in the last, warr with the king of Den.

147 491 324 314 148 151 339 468 356, but also in the former 487 500 468 537;
 quitt their hold in that Zeeland, and I doe not beleve, that they will so easily 128 156 71 148 468 70 133 328 83 35

 as king James did in this Zeeland;

339 467 558 217 352 71 202 287 268 339 469 558; but probably enough among they will expect to keep Croningberg castle other things for more sureness 468 169 503 294 426 28 149 477 350 284 26 443 for the king of Denmark, divers places for the 393 107 58 231 135 59 250 358 305 468 537, as they doe 267 155 286 141 elector of Brandenburg not be good for England.

121 355 251 142 805 468 543 to this day ; and this will 395 147 231 317 305
 The commissioners are all returned hither from the Flye,

547 468 254 88 213 41 199 134 289 154 135 106 279 325 468 134 306 468 gon with Opdam, the st. gen. fear, that Copenhagen might be

49 362 45, and none 516 500 530, who, when 535 were in 48 41 213 467 254 426 taken, private intructions from de Witt;

107 319 311 109 381 59 65 149 231 464 108, had 123 429 154 16 466 543 306 263
 feare

161 67 148; but since that 52 44 213 is over, this hath bin the reason of the renewing of thier

A.D. 1658.

and now Opdam hath no instructions, ^{the ft. g.} their former order as above-mentioned; 207 397 530 329 395 343, neither from 535, nor de Witt, to treat with the k. of Sweden from 263 502 151 477 149 136 42 219 500 536 upon any account whatsoever; instructions given by the ft. gen. pierce into them;
 and this you may beleve: and for 343 313 107 239 535, I hope I can 426 213 251 given by de Witt, this I cannot be 339 477 468 102; but such as are from time to time 313 106 239 263 161 67 145 assured of;
 469 70 247 395 150 231 217 144 152 131 279 408; and this is the constant accidents and the states general do owne them custome upon all 184 252 263 106 149 142 so to doe, 207 535 270 114 160 390 or not, as the matter succeeds;
 468 101 416 395 149 217 468 371 148 145 286 142 155 28 251 279 138; and they do say, that this ayde to the k. of Denmark a breach with 468 171 270 450 467 469 15 170 263 477 537 cannot be construed as 16 23 135
 the k. of Swed.
 43 15 25 60 500 536; but when the business is over, the construction will be made by both sides, according to the condition they shall then finde themselves in. In the mean not only no commissioners go with the fleet, but the states general have recalled time, 395 146 412 362 395 254 103 314 500 468 46 358 289 244 535 323 134 278 Maesdam their ambassadour to the k. of Sweden;
 199 358 44 Mr. 371 287 260 103 468 73 137 202 287 141 449 416 477 468 536;
 states of Holland have resolved, that no one of their ships and alsoe the 142 463 466 142 408 557 323 135 287 115 85 156 279 467 395 412 do go into anie harbours of the king of Sweden, 408 468 72 135 456 138 270 314 339 477 206 319 135 241 135 142 408 468 harbours of the k. of Denmark to trade; 536, but only into the 319 131 18 416 138 408 537 477 151 437 263; and you ministers of Denmark have desired the states general to send will perceive by an inclosed, that the 381 393 142 145 286 140 408 552 323 263 an ambassadour to Copenhagen, to whose actings there the lord protector 144 73 136 279 535 477 144 282 205 202 287 142 449 416 477 254 246 109 verie
 319 311 105 477 498 141 42 189 330 58 142 468 133 534 had need have a 156 strict eye.
 44 441 144 151 441 29 148 39 172 44. There are several merchants, that had already made an overture to the king of Sweden, to give him a million of rix-dollars for the tolls of the Sound for one year; whereas it's said, that the king of Denmarke never the states of Flanders, made 3000 gilders of it. Heere are two deputies from the 142 468 466 142 408 50 now in the Hague, sollicite for succour of men 355 107 263 135 142 397 339 468 319 318 44, who doe 459 83 362 252 466 and money. the states 305 143 156 29 254 135 144 408 380 207 384 293 207. Such of 535 as are affectioned to Spaine do give them hopes, that when this 192 49 278 475 412 279 477 550 270 313 468 101 328 426 142 467 492 469 business of Denmark is over, they also shall be 242 143 339 287 408 552 346 117 156 286 468 171 199 459 144 319 83 231 relieved; states gen. amb. and the emperours, 134 43 362 44 153 279; and this is certain, that the 545 202 23 217 449 416 and the king of Poland's envoy, are most busy 207 468 42 100 426 443 135 141 207 538 43 107 154 115 169 213 42 385 perpetually together;
 242 144 172 426 135 426 147 154 199 362 477 311 468 136; but I doe not anie stat. g.
 finde yet 206 product thereof brought to the 535. The French gentleman above-mentioned saith, that the peace between the king of Sweden and king of Poland is in a great forwardness by the last overture made by the king of Sweden, wherein he proffers to accept of 3 millions, as an equivalent for the restitution of Prussen, and this to be paid, as is exprest in the enclosed; and if this overture had been made before the new rupture with Denmarke, he saith, that that peace had undoubtedly bin suddenly concluded; but he beleeves, that the imperialists will now doe their utmost, and possibly be able to stave the king of Poland off from a peace upon the generall account; and indeed all the king of Sweden's enemies doe now seeme to flight these overtures from him, which before his re-entry into Zeeland they would have bin most heartily glad of. Upon perusall of the lord p. and k. Portug. k. Por.
 treaty betweene 534 207 541, I finde in the eleventh article, that the subjects of 541,
 k. Port. here any ships of it there nor 541 himself, ought to 325 133 40 206 456 142 408 any other nation, 69 50 be in his harbours ships enough of England;
 468 133 231 339 327 319 132 241 134 141 456 142 43 395 155 57 64 408 547;

the ambassadour of Portugal, in his last proposition,
 547; and 468 202 227 142 138 14 35 111 137 408 551 339 327 356 120 443 hath profered, that every yeare that twenty ships of Holland shall be hired 431 142 71 475 412 322 123 443 49 51 286 279 467 41 152 43 441 170 40 byt he king of 213 150 161 43 108 475 456 141 408 557 142 319 82 231 325 136 279 239
 Portugal,
 468 541, as you may perceiue in the copy thereof, which I lately sent you; whereupon
 I have showed to the sayd ambassadour, that this 72 328 142 324 159 279 477 468 450 36 16 89 287 144 489 416 467 469 is directly contrary to treatie between the protector and the 346 267 133 278 149 362 254 107 148 437 441 477 479 231 149 161 43 45 king of Portugal. that it is in 108 534 207 541. He was sorry, that he had not knowne it sooner; yet faith, 467 73 his instructions,
 151 346 339 327 343, which he much wonders at; but that he will do his endeavour
 If I had had the to remedy it, by offering some equivalent for it. 72 50 71 319 38 319 32 468
 treaty
 479 that post, your letter mentioned its being to be sent, it had come time enough to have prevented this, which may now cause much trouble; and not comeing till the post England.
 after, it came 3 or 4 days too late: and it is a thing of very great importance to 547. The said ambassadour hath had much discourse with de Witt, 468 450 35 202 227 139 449 117 135 322 319 38 102 156 29 57 267 143 254 156 hopes 135 140 500 263 502 147, who tells him, that there is noe 328 122 287, that the provinces will be content to a peace with the king of Portugal, rest of the 123 443 155 339 251 142 503 254 108 141 44 107 146 477 14 427
 the lands in Brazenie bee restored; 500 541, unless that 468 82 207 144 339 23 437 174 43 41 358 231 134 287 Holland engage in it, the 477 137 279; nor will 557 43 107 308 311 339 72 150, unless instead of 468 lands of the king of Port. will give them five millions.
 355 108 36 144 468 541 503 313 468 102 302 155 41 381 86 362 412 140, payed in ten years; they may enjoye and this to be 423 37 339 466 110 177 40 213 144; and that 468 171 377 43 conditions in point of trade.
 106 70 117 169 in all things the same 254 108 267 475 412 143 339 148 408 treatie with the l. pr.
 136 437 263 500 547. I told him, that by the 479 500 534 severall priviledges are England; breake this granted to 547; and that to give the same to any other, will be to 23 136 42 197
 treaty;
 467 479; and I desired him to consider the 26th article, wherein it is agreed, that noe Hee such thing shall be done by any following treaty. 324 is resolved forthwith to dispatch the k. of Port.
 an expresse to 468 541, with this above-mentioned accompt; and I think it would be most the l. p. write into Portugall, to warne Portugal, that noething be granted to the fitt, that 534 doe also forthwith 161 475 466 339 477 551, to 483 135 106 541 467 states gen. prejudice of the treaty with the lord prot.
 395 470 231 57 437 108 147 279 477 535, in 124 136 44 73 157 267 251 408 complaine, that the ambassadour here had given 468 479 500 534; and to 254 101 123 355 339 467 468 202 227 141 449 416 to him in his instructions, the st. gen. to hire twenty ships 324 136 319 313 108 477 326 339 327 343, to offer to 535 477 325 136 44 every yeare of this country, contrary to the treatie 145 161 42 168 147 171 456 143 40 153 45 441 173 44 213 408 469 254 with the lord protector;
 155 107 146 134 41 171 254 108 150 437 441 477 468 479 500 534; and I doe thinke this very necessary for the prevention of other inconveniencies, which otherwise the st. g. they can have peace when they will with the king of may follow. The truth is, 535 doe see, that 468 173 247 323 427 492 468 173 503 Portugal; their subjects have their trade 500 541; and that in the mean while 468 73 137 144 155 21 72 278 150 144 in Portugall, 323 468 72 136 150 437 263 339 551, and also that they are not incomodated by private men of warr with Portugall commissions; any 124 441 155 16 466 380 408 487 500 551 254 89 100 346 143 345 143; slight the king of Portugall. warr without a warning, de and this makes them 141 362 58 65 147 468 541. It being a 487 500 418 14 487 the king of Portugall should do Witt
 108 339 55 263 502 151 being asked, whether in case that 468 541 142 328 83 34
 270

A.D. 1658. what they desired, that he ^{of a peace, he} 270 491 468 173 263 144 72 136 279 467 324 would assure them 408 13 427 324
 No; that without this no peace can replied, 395; but that he would assure him, 467 500 418 469 395 427 247 231 294 bee expected.

122 278 150 279. And I thought it my duty to give you this accompt at large of this businesse, that so you may betimes take order accordingly. I finde the French ambassador exceedingly troubled at the hanging of the French gentlemen in Zeeland, and the rather for the hopes, that was given him, of saveing them; 207 339 468 379 205 and in the meane time, order was forthwith dispatched into Zeeland, 476 416 35 286 488 305 148 63 500 267 142 120 219 29 65 279 339 477 558 to execute them.

477 294 43 259 466 468 103. Some of them were of very neare kin to some very greate men in France; and I saw a letter from the queene of France to the ambassador, wherein she enjoyned him to doe his utmost for the saveing of them. In my last I sent you a memoriall, wherein I complained to the states of severall English ships brought into Zeeland, and there unladen by Ostenders; and I also then gave you an accompt of the conference, which I had had with the deputies of the states thereupon, at which conference they also pressed me about the Portugall prizes; to which I answered them, that they were not meddled with by his highnes, but stopt by arreast of the law, according to the 5th article of the treaty of peace betweene his highnesse and this state. And moreover, I told them, that his highnes subjects had very little encouragement to come and sue for their sugars in this country; for that I had lately an accompt of some proffes, that had bin made of that kinde at Amsterdam, wherein after full prooffe made, that the sugars belonged to the English, they were yet notwithstanding adjudged prise upon the sole accompt of being laden in Portugall ships; and therefore to what end should the English apply hither for releife in that kinde? They also complained to me, that captain Baskitt, who was lately before the Brill, had there received on board of him foure Englishmen, which had taken service in their fleete, and refused to deliver them; to which I answered, that by the law of England noe English marriners could take service under any foreigne prince or state, without leave first obtained; but that if this did not content them, that I should write to England to have the men first punished for runing away, and then afterwards for taking their money without leave first had; but I have since heard noe farther of them about this matter. 468 121 441 106 251 140 270

 The princeesse dowager companies spoken most highly in comendation of 483 311 133 hath lately in severall 254 101 121 15 393 287 142 431 350 108

 Ch. Stewart.

385 325 56 61 362 339 254 102 103 282 220 408 572. I have this day received the two following letters given to mee by Tom Howard.

468 150 161 116 304 85 365 502 106 58 361 142 313 108 477 379 239 477
 This is the dullest place I ever saw; all heere thinke of 90 328 483 136 34 469 346 468 37 155 85 358 139 145 121 355 251 71 40 viitts, and getting

153 286 141 14 161 199 324 135 148 325 107 78 nothing but 156 346 73 151
 monie; and yet I must tell you, that we talk of nothing

144 207 311 150 475 110 59 384 393 207 170 289 72 386 466 83 510 467 but invading England: signed Brunclett, who 161 42 463 82 75 408 395 470 244 339 155 17 267 109 58 547 142 71 57 is most gracious with the duke of York, Bruxels, the seaventeenth

108 279 24 443 156 108 30 78 289 498 346 385 58 437 475 116 524 500 573 instant.

585 468 141 43 155 45 110 466 40 106 145 60 339 139 146 205 151.

The following letter is from Taffe to Tom Howard, and from Bruxels,

468 304 84 365 502 108 56 361 346 306 463 50 51 44 477 146 411 328 dated the sixteenth instant. Yours of the eleventh 487 36 207 306 585, 260 150 279 468 142 71 136 466 39 105 151 66 339

 I received,

143 463 110 151 511 143 408 468 45 358 156 41 106 145 66 73 123 278 40 and in a word, let me tell you, that if the king's friends or 68 154 279 207 339 17 159 416 38 360 379 466 84 510 467 12 51 468 352 enemies in England give not occasion for such 144 46 441 282 238 416 283 138 339 547 313 395 150 406 305 142 155 29 a difference as may give the king ground to go and joyn

64 15 267 49 52 286 205 251 217 377 313 468 352 59 443 156 109 37 477 with some party, our stay here will be long, there being no

314 207 72 116 171 109 500 460 422 171 113 156 134 142 463 172 324 137 appearance of a possibility of 503 231 366 468 136 231 339 55 395 212 408 16 431 140 144 334 72 362 475 408 procureing any such assistance hence, and 408 121 443 259 441 108 57 206 144 157 30 64 217 141 246 463 108 251 63 might either encourage anie friends 42 109 251 207 381 58 65 150 44 72 468 136 339 253 437 311 206 50 441 to joine with us, or to defend ourselves against: howsoever 282 138 477 73 117 339 500 524 416 477 263 51 282 116 155 137 140 42 86 manie are of opinion, that it is impossible for the 157 287 16 310 328 159 137 374 213 42 408 414 71 393 412 467 72 148 139 present government in England 338 431 144 143 334 358 305 468 123 134 287 45 107 146 314 155 286 108 379 to subsist, yet that there must bee blowes to subvert it; 109 149 339 547 477 142 154 21 142 346 145 171 289 467 468 137 386 231 21 but there must bee an 365 161 287 477 138 152 18 153 286 247 71 150 244 468 134 386 231 205 trying our fortunes, and all yet seeme quiet amongst them.

 opportunity for the 148 441 339 53 115 134 305 151 156 110 287 207 199 171 289
 The king is removed to a new house, 142 43 44 102 28 129 154 72 289 203 468 102 468 352 346 135 43 384 155 279 where his domesticks serve in 477 14 390 161 329 496 327 270 379 142 149 335 340 144 140 286 152 339 their severall capacities, and as much form used as 468 72 135 144 39 152 41 437 84 245 120 16 252 475 287 207 217 156 formerly in Whitehall, 30 63 305 103 524 279 217 305 379 136 362 339 161 325 466 319 84, which like instructing everie bodie, what their dutys are, look 362 350 339 142 150 134 153 27 147 339 56 42 155 45 441 241 267 491 before they come thither, which I hope 468 72 135 274 142 213 42 233 468 172 255 151 325 468 131 493 72 328 will soon, else our misery will be 131 493 426 503 461 44 85 142 117 156 137 381 142 286 173 503 231 58 greater than ever.
 135 44 219 286 468 110 42 165 286. Wee have bin this last weeke filled with reports from England, and which are also written out of Flanders, as that the judges have refused to sit; and that the term is putt off; and that the army is not paid; and that a parliament must be forthwith called for the finding of money; and that the officers of the army have had severall meetings against the minde of his highness; and they are there formeing and frameing of such things, as they will have done: yea, a great part of this is printed in the publique gazetts of Brussells; and greater hopes are raised from theis things and such-like stories, then from any forreine matters whatsoever. I am sorry to find by yours, that there is so much ground 73 202 143 416 441 477 303 239 511 142 467 468 136 346 459 90 155 26 61 54 416 154 108 for what related to the armie.
 37 305 491 136 44 355 466 38 477 468 214. I pray that you will be pleased to settle the 150 l. per annum for the mayntenance of the two English preachers at the Hague; else this congregation must fall for want of mayntenance; and I have assured them, they shall have it. I pray, that this last quarter may be payd to some person, which you shall think fitt, at London, for that purpose; and then I shall take care for its return hither; and although Mr. Beaumont be only as yet settled, yet others are gott, that must be payd, till another be heere settled: I am,

RIGHT HONORABLE,

Your most faithfull humble servant,

G. DOWNING.

Tom Howard asks a thousand pounds

145 411 328 487 33 217 74 287 17 474 431 152 104 32 138 426 132 205 per annum.105 518. Pray let me have your order, what you will have me do. My paper is spent.

General Monck to secretary Thurloe.

MY LORD,

I WROTE to you formerlie my opinion concerning the placing of a judge in judge Vol. lxi. p. 313.
 Smythe's place. Truly I thinke it would bee best to have an English judge; but in case his highnesse councill should thinke fitt nott chuse an Englishman, but a Scotchman, I told you, that Sir John Cheifly would be the fittest man. But since I am informed,

VOL. VII.

5 X

A.D. 1658. formed, that though hee bee a very honest man, and a man of good naturall parts, yet he hath not bin soe well versed in the law, as to dispatch the businesse of the outer court, which is the cheif businesse of the judges here; yett I doe not finde him soe fitt now, as I thought he was before; and to comend unto you a Scotch advocate, in case he have it not, I know not how to doe it, they being in the nature of councellors, and are so used to take money, that I doubt they may be corrupted; but truly I think it would be best for the English interest to have an Englishman. Judge Goodere is likewise very weake, and I doubt, if hee does recover, he will not bee able to dispatch any businesse as a judge till summer next. I thought fitt to give you this trouble, least Sir John Cheisly should gett the place, being not soe fitt for it as I could wish; and I know likewise hee hath made very great friends to my lord Fleetwood about itt. You wrote to mee once about one George Oliphant. I tooke some of that name formerly, but now I thinke I have the right man; and if you have any thinge against him, I shall keepe him in prison, till I heare from you. He is a schollar and an ingenious man. I heare the Dutch fleete went on thursday was fennight towards the Sound; and that the king of Sweden resolved tenn days agoe to give a general assault to Copenhagen. This newes is brought by a shippe, that is come newly from the Sound, and I think is the latestt you have had from those parts. All things are quiett heere, which is all at present from Dalkeith, 16th October, 1658.

Your LORDSHIPP's very humble servant,

GEORGE MONCK.

Colonel Daniell to secretary Thurloc.

May it please your LORDSHIP,

Vol. lxi. p. 321.

BY comande from my lord generall Moncke, I have herewith sente to your honour the publique addresse, signed by all the commission-officers of my regiment, which had sooner arrived, but that severall companyes disposed farre distante into Heighlande castles hinder the spedie subscription.

I thinke I can with reallity affirme to your lordship, that we are of one resolution for his highnesse service; and though with much sadninge to our spiritts, wee beare our share in the nation's great affliction, by the death of our worthy and renowned protector; yet I hope our faithfull indeavours shall be so conjoyn'd with the rest of his highnesse's army, that the publique enemyes shall gayne noe advantage against the honest intereste of the commonwealth.

I will not trouble your lordship further, but remayne

St. Johnston, October 18. 1658.

Your LORDSHIP's most humble servant,

WILLIAM DANIELL.

Intelligence sent from Holland by Mr. Downing.

28th October, 1658. Resolution touching 3 English ships in Zeland, &c.

Vol. lxi. p. 323.

A LETTER being received from the college of the admiralty of Zeland, dated at Middelburg the 23d instant, containing an answer to a letter of their high mightinesses of the 17th instant, and information touching what the sieur resident Downing had complained about 3 English ships taken by the Ostenders, and carried into Zeland; the ship called the Alexander had been arrested by her owner, and so that the businesse hath been in suit, that according to the placarts of their high mightinesses, and the orders of the state, speedy justice might be administred; besides, that they had caused to be arrested all the Spanish private men of war, that were to be found with any prizes within their jurisdiction, to the end they might inform themselves, if there had been the least unlading of the merchandizes; if so, that they would not fail speedily to execute the placart of their high mightinesses, and immediately restore the ships and merchandizes to their owners. Whereupon, after deliberation, it hath been found good, that the said letter shall be by the agent de Heide communicated to the said sieur resident Downing for information to him.

The admiralty's letter above-mentioned.

We have received the resolution of their high mightinesses of the 17th instant, and therewith a copy of a memorial of the sieur resident Downing, with many papers concerning three English ships, taken by the Spanish men of war, and brought into places places under our jurisdiction. Whereupon your high mightinesses may be pleased to know, that the ship called the Alexander hath been arrested by her owner, and so the business put in suit, that according to the placarts of your high mightinesses speedy justice may be administred. We have also arrested all the Spanish men of war, which are to be found with any prizes within the havens of our jurisdiction, to the end that there may be exact inquiry, if there hath been the least unlading of the merchandizes; in which case we will not fail to execute speedily the placart of your high mightinesses, and to cause immediate restitution of the ships and goods to their owners.

A.D. 1658.

The speech of the protector Richard to the officers of the army: in the hand-writing of secretary Thurloe, and corrected by him.

TAKEINGE notice, that there are now in towne very many of the officers of the army both of English and Scotch army, and some alsoe from Ireland, and probablie more then are like to be againe for some tyme, I had a desire to see you together, and thought myselfe obliged to speake some things to you, which I judge the present state of affaires makes it necessary for me to say.

In the possession of the right hon. Philip lord Hardwicke, lord high chancellor of Great-Britain.

I need not to observe to you, in what a conjuncture of tyme and affayres I am come to the government. You all knowe it; and you know the difficulties my father all his tyme wrestled with; and I beleve noe man thinks, that his death hath lessened them. I am sure our enemies thinke they are much encreased, and that now is their tyme to devoure us all at once; and they have their instruments in every corner, and in all shapes, to manage their designes that way. Their maine worke is to divide. It's the worke of their day to divide you from me, and me from you, whom God and the law have joyned together, and you amongst yourselves. And if they can effect this, they thinke they effect their desires; and truly I beleve they make no ill judgment: and if they miscarry in this, it's very likely, that our peace will still be continued.

Then if their worke be division, our worke is union. And if there be a union in principles and ends, it is more then probable wee shall be united in our affections and actions.

Soone after my accession to the government, I receaved from the whole army an addresse, as you knowe, wherein you expressed your affection and fidelity to me, and engaged to be with me, as you had beene with my father; the kindnes whereof, both to my father and myselfe, I doe and shall ever owne and acknowledge. And this I suppose you did, to strengthen my hands against the opposition I am like to meet with in carryinge on the Lord's worke in this land, and in preserving the good cause my father and the honest men of this nation had engaged in. And the army did in that addresse expresse those particulars, wherein they conceived the life and spirit of that cause to consist, which in few words are,

1. The liberty of the nation, as wee are men:
2. The liberty of conscience, as wee are Christians:
3. The keepinge of the army in the hands of godly men:
4. A godly magistracy, and godly ministrie.

All that the army sayd in their addresse to me, and all that is in the hearts of honest men touchinge our cause, is reducible to these 4 heads. And if it be soe, if in truth this be all that lyes in the bottom of men's spirits, I doe not see, whereupon any differences should growe amongst us. All these things are in my heart to promote, and to venture my life, and all I have, and am, in the defence of; soe that soe farr as you have exprest yourselfe in your addresse, I can truly say, I am as you are, and you are as I am.

For the sake of these things hath God cal'd me to the place I stand in; and I perswade myselfe, my standinge and yours too will be accordinge as wee are true, in the sight of God, and not of men only, to these thinges.

For these ends am I alsoe trusted by this nation, who will and doe expect the account of them from me. And I am resolved in the strength of Christ to doe all which lyes in me, to answere my trust and their expectation.

It is my disadvantage, that I have beene soe little amongst you, and am noe better knowne to you. I hope a little tyme will remove that disadvantage, which indeed is upon us both, not doubtinge, but as I come to knowe you better, and you to knowe more of me, our mutuall confidence in each other will encrease. For my owne part, I have an entire confidence in you, as those who were my father's companions in all his daungers and difficulties, and who were witnesses of all the wonders God wrought for him, and you, and these nations; and I knowe his soule clave to you; and I am perswaded soe did yours to hym. God hath raised me up in my father's stead, and put me in the same relation towards this nation and you, as he stood in. If now I may have the affections and prayers of my father's old friends, (which I shall have, if the Lord take pleasure in me) I shall esteeme

A.D. 1658. esteeme it a better portion then any thinge else my father hath left me. The government, I can assure you, is not that I take pleasure in. If my lott by beinge here be cast amongst the people of God to serve them, yea to suffer with them, I shall rejoyce therein.

I am not ignorant of the surmizes, which are industriously spread abroad, to weaken my confidence in you, and yours in me; and I have heard of some dissatisfactions, which have beene with some of you; wherein I beleeve you in the army might have a very good meaninge, as thinkeinge your desires therein tended to your preservation of the good old cause. I shall take notice of these things noe further, nor make any other use of what I have heard upon this subject, then take occasion from thence to open my heart plainly and fully to you concerning all those things, which any of your feares may have been exercised about.

I knowe the place and station God hath set me in, and the authority which he hath clothed me with; but I shall however be alwayes willinge at any tyme to lay aside all that, to give satisfaction to the meanest person here, that comes with an honest heart to seeke it.

It might have pleased God, and the nation too, to have chosen out a person more fitt and able for this worke then I am. I am sure it may be sayd of me, not for my wisdom, my parts, my experience, my holiness, hath God chosen me before others; there are many here amongst you, who excell me in all these things; but God hath done herein as it pleased him; and the nation, by his providence, hath put things this way.

Beinge then thus trusted, I shall make a conscience, I hope, in the execution of this trust; which I see not how I should doe, if I should part with any parte of the trust, which is committed to me, unto any others, though they may be better men then my selfe: as for instance,

If I should trust it to any one person or more, to fill up the vacancies of the army, otherwise then it is in the Petition and Advise, which directs that the comandars in cheife of England, Scotland and Ireland, and the other field-officers, should be from tyme to tyme supplied by me, with the consent of the counsell, leavinge all other comission-officers only in my disposall; I should therein breake my trust, and doe otherwise then the parliament intended. And it may as well be askt of me, that I would comit it to some other persons to supply the vacancies in the counsell, in the Lord's house, and all other magistrates. I leave it to any reasonable man to imagine, whether this be a thinge in my power to doe. To advise with others, whose experience of men and things hath given them an advantage in this respect, is most necessary; and within a few dayes after my father's death, I did call some of the cheife of the armye, and told them, that in fillinge up of vacancies from tyme to tyme in the armye, I intended to advise with them, and this is still my intention; and I have hitherto observed that course, and shall: but to give it out of my owne hands quite, or to place it in such manner, that I shall exercise no more of my owne judgment, then if I had parted with it, that I cannot doe with a good conscience.

2. It would be a very imprudent thinge in me to doe any such thinge: I should remeyne responsible both to God and men, for all that should be done by the person or persons, that I should trust, and yet exercise my selfe noe judgment about it; soe that if the matter be well done, I should have none of the thanks for it; if it be ill done, all the blame will light upon me, because I am the person trusted by lawe.

3. I should hereby render my selfe insignificant, and uselesse to all the ends of my government. What can I doe to encourage godlines, and discourage profanenes, countenance reformation, and the like, if the army be in other hands, which by this meanes it will in a short tyme be? And I shall be soe farre from being a terror to evill doers, that every body will be a terror to me.

4. The lawe hath now given me an advantage to give a prooffe to you, and all the nation, what my principles are; which are best manifested by the persons I trust, and cheifly those in the army.

I should by this bereave my selfe of that opportunity.

5. I should thereby keepe my selfe a stranger to you, which of all things in this world I shall never consent to; but on the contrary endeavour by all meanes to knowe you, and be knowne to you; being perswaded that you are the best company and body of men, that ever were incorporated into an army in this world. And it shall be my utmost care, that you may be kept soe; it is for the good of us all, that you be kept soe. Thus you see our end and principles are the same. Some would make a question, whether my selfe or other men should act these things, and fill up the vacancies with good men. I have shewed you, why there is a necessity for my doeing it, beinge the person trusted therein.

There hath beene alsoe some discourse about a comaunder in cheife. You knowe how that stands in the Petition and Advise, which I must make my rule in my government; and shall through the blessing of God sticke close to that. I am not obliged to make A.D. 1658.

and

any commaunder in cheife; that is left to my owne liberty, as it was in my father's: only, if I will make any, it must be done by the consent of the councell. And by the commaunder in cheife can be meant noe other then the person who under me commaunds the whole army, call hym what you will; field-marshal, commaunder in cheife, major-general, or lieutenant-general, or be there any other name, that can be devised to signifie that thinge.

And if this be not the meaninge, the parlement would be very much deceived in the obligation they intended to put upon me to take the consent of the counsell; for then I might make a major-general, a lieutenant-general, a field-marshal, who should commaund all the forces next a general, without the consent of the counsell, soe as I did not call him commaunder in cheife. And this exposition would set me at liberty; but truly I desire not to be set at liberty, where the meaning was I should be bound. Comaunder in cheife is the genus; the others are the species.

And though I am not obliged to have any such person besides my selfe, to commaund all the forces, yet I have made one; that is, I have made my brother Fleetwood lieutenant-general of all the army, and so by consequence commaunder in cheife; and I am sure I can doe nothinge, that will give him more influence in the army, then that title will give him, unless I should make him general; and I have told you the reasons why I cannot doe that.

And as for the feares, which are of puttinge any body over his head, they are groundles and needles jealousies cast into mens minds. I have on my owne accord assured the contrary to many, that I intend him to be ymediately under my selfe. And if I am not trusted upon my word, I am not fitt to be protector. Besides, the callinge him commaunder in cheife doth not hinder me from bringinge in one over his heade, if I have a mind to breake my word. And it is too hard put upon mee to say, I am not to be trusted upon my word.

I looke upon such and the like sayings to be but taes sowne amongst us by the evill ones.

I have noe other thoughts about the government of these nations then you have, soe farre as you have exprest them in your address; and havinge sayd this to you, I expect that whatsoever may be sayd to the contrary, or whisper'd abroad amongst you, that you looke upon them as calumnyes, and intended against us all, untill my actions declare the contrary; and if any thinge be done, which at any tyme sticks with you, I shall be willinge, that any of you tell me of it, and reason out of any of your mouths shall preveyle with me as much as if the greatest person in the nation spoke it. I assure you, I shall carry it thus to you, and you shall have the justice of being heard by me, before I give beliefe to any thinge, that is sayd; and I hope your general may expect the same justice. And if I finde any of you at any tyme faulty, and actinge contrary to your trust, I shall not proceed arbitrarily, and only exercise my owne discretion, (which I heare too is a thinge suggested) but shall referre thinges to the discipline of the army, which I wish were kept up more strictly then it hath beene.

In these paths shall you find me; and therefore goe to your charges with this confidence, and suffer not evill and wily men to disquiet and trouble your mindes with thinges, which have beinge only in their owne bosomes; and I shall remeyne here with all confidence of the fidelity and affection of every one of you towards me and this nation.

There is one thinge I am troubled at very much, which is, that the army is soe much in arreare of their pay; and I could have wisht, that I could have sent you out of towne with some certenty to your fellow-souldiers as to this. I can assure you, both myself and the councell doe consider nothinge so much, as to pay the arreares, and to settle your pay better for the future; and I hope you will soone see the effect of our care in parte; and I shall take noe comfort in my government, untill I can see you substantially provided for. And I pray the Lord to be with you, and blesse you.

General Monck to the protector.

May it please your HIGHNESS,

UPON occasion of the decease of judge Smyth, one of the commissioners for administration of justice, as well in civill as criminall causes in Scotland, who lately dyed, whilst he was on the northern circuit, your highnesse councill here hold it their duty humbly to acquaint your highness, that upon the first establishment of the courts of justice here by the English authority, it was thought expedient, that the prime judicature for civill causes in this nation (to which there is an appeale from all inferior courts of justice) should consist of all persons of both nations, as well for reasons of state, for the more impartial administration of justice to this people, and as that which might in time

A.D. 1658. have a tendency to the bringing the way and practice of proceedings for the administration of justice here to as near a conformity as might be with those in England. And it was likewise held fitt, that whereas formerly one single person (as justice generall) was entrusted in adjudging upon criminall causes here, that instead thereof, some of the said commissioners should be commissioned in criminall causes, and accordingly commissions were issued under the great seale of England, erecting those judicatories; but in that for criminall causes, there were but two commissioners of the Scottish nation, with all those of the English nation, who were in the commission for the civill causes, being fewer in number, who have chiefly (if not wholly) executed that commission, which said judicatures have ever since been, and are (in the opinion of your highnes said councill) meet to be so continued with the addition of your highnes chancellor or keeper of the great seale here, in the commission for civill causes, as your highnes father of blessed memory had appointed, according to the dignity of that office; in regard whereof, and of the present bodily weakeness of judge Goodere, another of the commissioners for civill and criminall causes here, he having for many weekes been visited with sickness, in which he still continues, insoemuch as it is not probable, that he can undergo the travell and paines of those important and burdensome employments during most of the next session, beginning the first of November, and ending the last of February; during which time (there being but two sessions or termes here in the year) the work of the commissioners for justice will be very great, because of the manifold causes depending before them; your highnes said councill, in all humility, offer their humble opinion of the urgent necessity of a speedy adding another able and worthy person of the English nation (instead of judge Smyth) in both the said commissions, for the carrying on of justice in this country for the reasons aforesaid, especially there being but two more of the English nation besides your chancellor or keeper of the great seale, (whose other necessary employments in your highnes service cannott admit his constant or very frequent sitting there) and judge Goodere in those commissions, which they humbly submit to your highnes consideration and order; all which by appointment of your highnes councill heere is humbly represented to your highnes, by

Hallyrude-house, the 19th
October, 1658.

Your HIGHNES most humble and most faithfull servant,

GEORGE MONCK.

Lord Fauconberg to H. Cromwell, lord lieutenant of Ireland.

MY LORD,

In the possession of the right hon. the earl of Shelburn.

Affairs have at present an outward appearance of quiet,

5 12 10 3 19 37 34 16 3 40 11 5 39 33 35 11 36 13 17 41 5 27 28 38 41

but are

45 3 35 8 5 33 31 11 3 37 5 27 9 11 26 12 32 38 21 11 41, 2 38 41 5 37 effectively

further

11 13 12 10 13 7 39 21 40 25 49 (if I know any thing) 12 38 35 41 14 13 37 from then ever.

10 35 28 22 39 16 11 24 11 40 13 35.

has lost one or the fairest opportunities,

Z. 14 5 34 228 28 34 41 28 28 11 26 12 39 14 13 10 5 19 37 11 36 39

that was ever put

26 3 33 128 35 39 40 27 21 41 19 11 36 39 14 5 41 43 5 34 13 38 11 35 31 38 into a young prince's hands to settle

41 19 27 41 26 5 49 26 38 29 15 31 37 21 27 7 11 36 14 5 27 9 34 39 28 34 the nation and himself.

11 41 39 23 13 39 16 11 29 5 39 19 28 27 5 27 8 16 19 24 34 11 23 12.

wilnes it be the last thing they give,

B. 45 19 34 16 11 34 21 39 4 11 41 14 13 23 5 34 41 39 14 19 25 15 41

and he lost; but I feare

14 13 47 17 18 40 11 5 27 8 14 13 23 28 34 11; 29 38 41 21 10 11 5 37 13 both.

2 28 39 16.

Desb. Berry, Couper, and inferiour

V. 2 11 37 35 47 7 28 38 33 11 35 5 27 8 19 27 12 13 35 19 28 38 37 officers, wors then themselves, if possible,

26 10 12 21 9 11 35 36 45 26 35 34 41 14 11 29 41 16 13 22 34 11 23 38

have dayly

11 36 19 10 31 26 36 34 19 4 23 13, 14 5 38 13 6 5 47 25 49 22 13 11 39 21 meetings.

29 15 34.

A.D. 1658.

I wish we had so too; but that 19 43 19 36 14 45 13 11 14 5 6 36 26 41 26 28; 2 38 41 39 6 5 41 21 34 is our weaknes;

you have the bottom

26 40 35 45 11 3 20 27 13 34; and now, my lord, 47 28 38 14 5 38 11 41 16

which, when read, pray

11 4 26 41 39 28 22 11, 43 16 19 7 14, 45 14 11 29 37 11 5 8 33 35 3 47

let it be burnt.

25 11 41 2 18 4 38 37 29 39.

H. H. tells mee dayly shall come over,

Z. 41 11 23 36 2 13 11 6 3 47 25 49 A. 34 16 3 25 9 26 24 11 28 38 13

though for my owne part I love him too well

35, 39 14 28 38 17 16 12 26 37 22 4 26 45 27 13 31 5 35 41 19 23 28 40 11 to advise it, unless hee bring something

14 21 24 41 28 26 45 11 25 39 28 5 8 38 19 36 11 21 39 38 27 25 11 36 at his heels.

16 11 13 4 36 19 29 17 34 26 24 11 11 39 16 10 29 17 5 39 16 19 36 14

So long as hee staies where

13 11 25 34. 34 28 25 26 29 17 3 36 14 13 11 36 39 5 19 13 34 45 14 13 he is, the after-game is pretty

35 11 16 11 13 21 34 41 14 13 5 10 39 13 37 17 3 24 11 19 36 31 37 11 safe.

41 39 49 34 5 12 11.

is resolv'd for T. or north, when

B. 21 34 37 11 34 28 25 38 6 10 28 35 41 28 35 27 28 35 41 14 43 16

funerals over, and with his dear freind

13 27 12 38 29 11 37 5 25 36 26 40 11 37 5 27 8 43 21 39 16 14 21 34

lord Howard, to expect

6 13 5 35 10 37 11 21 27 8 25 26 35 6 14 28 45 3 37 6 39 28 11 44 31 13 commands, the one having good interest in 9 39 B's 7 26 14 22 5 29 6 36 39 16 11 28 27 13 14 5 38 21 27 17 15 28

Yorkshire; the other from thence 26 8 21 27 39 13 35 11 36 39 19 29 49 26 37 18 34 16 21 35 13 41 14 13

as far as Monke, who wishes

26 41 14 11 37 10 35 28 24 39 16 11 29 7 13 5 34 12 3 37 3 36 22 26 29 would correspond with.

20 11 43 16 28 43 21 34 16 11 36. A. 45 26 40 23 8 7 28 37 35 11 34 33

28 27 8 43 21 39 16. Since I writt this, I am more confirmed in what I said by life for to come over, discourse with Q. and R; and that it is not 34 5 12 11 10 26 34 A. 39 28 7 26

feared and hated by the 22 13 28 38 13 37, being so very much 12 11 5 37 13 8 5 29 6 14 3 41 11 6 opposite party.

4 47 41 14 13 26 33 31 28 34 19 39 31 5 35 39 49.

October 19th, 1658.

Your EXCELENCY's most faithfull servant,

B.

would quit his regiment, did he not hope to serve with it,

B. 45 26 40 25 6 32 38 19 12 41 14 21 34 35 13 15 21 29 11 29 41 8 19 6 16 13

11 27 26 41 14 28 33 11 39 28 36 11 37 38 13 A. 45 19 41 14 19 41 upon a good account.

General Fleetwood to H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland.

DEARE BROTHER,

I HAVE no time to wright, but must reserve myselfe till the next, and shall therfor only make use of this present addresse to let you know, ther cannot be a greater inclination of the nation and desire in yourselfe, then is in me, to have a cleare, right, and through understanding 'twixt us. I think interest upon the account of publicke as well as privat should oblige thereunto. I must confesse that old friendshippe and heartynes, that was betwixt us. I canot but remember we are still upon our old debate, but can come to no resolve; the difficultyes we meet with about the maner of calling parliament being great, as allso the necessity of our affayres putting us upon the streight, how we shall be able to obviat thos difficultyes and tryalls, which such a season may put us under, that being a time all interests will be working, and the want we shall be under may put our affayres into much hazard thereby. But that being the only remedy left, we must trust the Lord in what way his providence leads unto, and hope for his presance to prevent what we feare, and to give in what the necessity of our occations call for a supply of; and the more both that and all our other affayres are carryed on by that spirit, the easier will our worke be, and the more successfull. We are much concerned in the buysnes of the Sownd; if the Sweade

In the possession of the right hon. the earl of Shelburne.

A.D. 1568. Sweade be worsted, we probably shall feele the smart, though we understand not so well the late attempt as to justify him; yet the consequence therof we are deeply concerned in. Severall reports ther of Copenhagen's being taken, but the contrare is more probable. The Dutch are gone with their fleet.

October 19. [1658.]

Your most affectionate brother and servant.

Dr. Thomas Clarges to H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland.

May it please your EXCELENCY,

In the possession of the right hon. the earl of Shelburne.

YESTERDAY morning his highnes call'd together the generall officers of the army, and they had a conference concerning the present posture of affaires, which I hope had a very good result, because they parted with much kindnes. My lord Fleetwood hath renewed his commission of lieutenant-generall under his highnes, by the advice of his councill, which is according to the petition of the eighth article of the Petition and Advice. Most of the like disquiets in the army were managed by the inferior officers; but I feare they were influenc'd by some of the rest. They are to have another meeting on fryday; but I believe things are so well moderated, that no disturbances can arise from it. In Scotland all are quiet, and care is taken, that no officers or soldiers have any meetings to interpose in publique matters.

There is little forreigne news since my last to your excellency. The king of France hath appeas'd some mutinous riseings in his province of Normandy, by the good conduct and courage of the marquis of Mountpesat. And his majesty is now goeing to Lyons, in pursuit of an inclination he has to a marriage with the duke of Savoy's eldest daughter. The French ambassador had audience yesterday about three of the clock at Whitehall; he had a numerous traine of gentlemen, all in mourning, to attend him, and was followed by eighty coaches. He told his highnes, (after the usuall compliments of condoleing the death of his late highnes, and congratulateing his peaceable accession to the government of thes nations) that his master commanded him in his name to offer to him the assistance of his counsell and armies, to confirme him in the gloryes of his father's conquests, and assist him against all the enemies of the peace of England at home and abroad. To which his highnes made a returne worthy his owne goodnes and respect to so great a king, his freind and allye.

I humbly desire your excellency to conceale this letter from view of any but your confident freinds, because some expressions in the beginning of it may receive a frowarder interpretation then was meant in them by,

May it please your EXCELENCY,

Your excellencie's most obliged humble servant,

London, this 19th of
October, 1658.

THO. CLARGES.

The information of George Gregson of Carleton, in the parish of Poulton, in the county of Lancaster, husbandman.

Vol. ix. p. 325. THIS informant faith, that about three years since, he this informant was servant to the lord Brudenell of Dean in the county of Northampton, where he became acquainted with one Mr. Francis Fortescue, who came thither as a guest.

That he this informant hath been with the said Fortescue several times since at Dean, and other places in Northamptonshire; and that about twelve monthes since, the said Fortescue sent letters by this informant into Lancashire to Mrs. Anderton and Anne Goldinge.

That this informant about May-day last, went up to London to bind his brother apprentice; and did then carry a letter from Mrs. Anderton to Mr. Fortescue; but not placing of him, this examinant and his brother went to the isle of Sheepy in the county of Kent, to work harvest-work, where they staid two months; and since harvest, this informant came to and did remain in London, and since with his sister Agnes Ringrose at Walgrave in the county of Northampton; and from thence went to Dean, from whence he was sent by one Mrs. Clanton of Dean aforesaid to Mr. Colewell's an apothecary in Oundle, where this informant met with the said Mr. Francis Fortescue, who did then and there deliver to this informant the four letters (two of which he staid the writing of) found about him, the contents of which letters this informant denyes that he did know, or of any imployment, that the said Fortescue is upon; but doth verily believe the said Fortescue is a Catholic, as this informant confesseth himself to be.

Intelligence

*Intelligence sent from Holland by resident Downing.*The 30th of October, 1658. [N. S.] A.D. 1658.

SINCE my last, wherein I acquainted you, that the duke of York and Gloucester had surrendered their commissions to Don John, there is arrived at Brussels father Barton and father Talbot, two English Jesuits, who, together with the old Irish lord Musgrave, and George Hamilton, the old treasurer of Ireland, are employed from the king of Spain to engage the duke of York to continue in the Spanish army; and, by way of inducement thereunto, do promise to augment his stipend of five thousand pistoles per annum to ten thousand, and to raise a new regiment of horse for him, whereunto 'tis thought he will listen. He hath also a house in Brussels allotted to him, where he keeps a great court, and gives great salaries to his attendants, insomuch that his grooms of his chamber, comptroller, 'squire, and several others, keep their coaches. Charles Stuart is still at Brussels, but very solitary, having received but small encouragement from England in his last letters.

Captain Holmes, whom I mentioned in my last, went over by the last convoy to Gravesend, but, for privacy, went in company with, and as one of the retinue to the lady Staresmore, one of the ladies of honour to the princess royal. He is very suddenly to return by the way of Gravesend again for these parts.

There is one captain Lee, who came lately over with some three horses from England to the princess royal at the Hague, with some message, which Nicolas Armorer having received from him, was immediately dispatched away to Charles Stuart. This Lee was a captain in Oxford, and hath since been a merchant in Spain. He is a fat man, with curl'd black hair, and goes over by the next passage to Gravesend. Mrs. Stevens, who hath been so much employed in England, is now to come over by the next ships from Gravesend; for her husband is gone to Flushing to meet her there at her coming; and doubtless she hath some considerable affair to Charles Stuart, for she hath been a great while away.

There is ^{one} 413 for certain 255 477 355 108 56 260 358 306 468 395 137 146 60; but this I can assure you, that the best news, as they call it, which he brings, and also George Coult, ^{from England at Brussels,} 311 416 311 254 156 85 151, who is also arrived 306 547 219 585, is, that there ^{great jealousy} ^{division} is 56 136 42 219 71 42 16 365 524 171 and probability of 267 155 71 142 345 in England among the great ones in the army; ^{one Smith,} 339 547 203 468 53 137 41 219 413 144 339 468 214; and 413 144 381 146 ^{a Jesuit,} ^{arrived at Brussels from England,} 61, 15 72 41 142 154 346 145, is also 213 441 156 279 219 585 306 547, who ^{and upon this, and the calling of a par-} also saith the like; 207 523 469 207 468 245 81 362 110 59 408 14 122 213 ^{liament,} ^{all their hopes.} 362 202 43 104 145, at present they do found 199 468 70 131 328 123 287. There ^{Jesuit} is another letter come to the same place from another 72 44 142 153 346 146 to the same purpose.

I have it from a good hand, that ^{there} 468 134 is at this time much whispering ^{at Brussels} 219 585 about a wife for Ch. Stuart; 182 17 502 48 39 305 572; but whether any thing will come of it, or the name of the person, I am not able yet to inform you; but shall listen after it as much as I may.

H. Cromwell, lord deputy of Ireland, to the protector Richard.

May it please your HIGHNESS,

20. Octob. 1658.

IF the account be true, which I have received of the state of affairs in England, I cannot tell what to advise your highness upon this sad occasion, though I confess 'tis no more than I looked for. Only I had some hopes, it might have been prevented, by keeping all officers at their respective charges. But as things now stand, I doubt the flood is so strong, you can neither stem it, nor come to an anchor, but must be content to go adrift, and expect the ebb. I thought those, whom my father had raised from nothing, would not so soon have forgot him, and endeavour to destroy his family, before he is in his grave. Why do I say, I thought, when I know ambition and affectation of empire never had any bounds? I cannot think these men will ever rest, till they are in the saddle; and we have of late years been so used to changes, that it will be but a 9 days wonder. And

A.D. 1658. yet I fear there is no remedy, but what must be used gradually, and pedetentim. Sometimes I think of a parliament; but am doubtful whether sober men will adventure to embark themselves, when things are in so high a distraction; or if they would, whether the army can be restrained from forcing elections. I know not what to advise at this distance, unless I could hear all the arguments pro and con. upon a true state of the case; yet I am almost afraid to come to your highness, lest I should be kept there, and so your highness lose this army, which, for aught I know, is the only stay you have, tho' I cannot but earnestly desire it. I do also think it dangerous to write freely to your highness, or for you to do it to me, unless by a messenger, that will not be outwitted or corrupted; for I make no question, but that all the letters will be opened, which come either to or from your highness, which can be suspected to contain business. I pray God help you, and bless your counsells. The inclosed is a copy of my letter this post to my brother Fleetwood, which I send, that your highness may see, whether I am mistaken in my apprehension of things. I remain, &c.

Lord deputy Cromwell to general Fleetwood.

DEAR BROTHER,

20. Oct. 58.

In the possession of William Cromwell esq;

I RECEIVED the account you give of the petition of your officers, for which I give you thanks, and especially for your caution, that I should not believe any thing concerning you, till I had heard you. Truly it was seasonable advice; for I am told strange things: and pray give me leave to expostulate with you. How came these 2 or 300 officers together? If they came of their own heads, the being absent from their charge without licence would have flown in their face, when they petitioned for a due observance of martiall discipline. If they were called together, were they not also taught what to say and do? If they were called, was it with his highness's privity? If they met without leave in so great a number, were they told their error? I shall not meddle with the matter of their petition, though some things in it do unhandsonely reflect, not only upon his present, but his late highness. I wish with all my heart, you were commander in chief of all the forces in the 3 nations; but I had rather have it done by his highness's especiall grace and meer motion, than put upon you in a tumultuary unsoldierly way. But, dear brother, I must tell you (and I cannot do it without tears) I hear, that dirt was thrown upon his late highness at that great meeting. They were exhorted to stand up for that good old cause, which had long lain asleep, &c. I thought, my dear father had pursued it to the last. He dyed like a servant of God, and prayed for those, that desired to trample upon his dust, for they were also God's people. O dear brother! let us not render evil for good; let us not make his memory stink, before he is under ground: let us remember his last legacy, and even for his sake render his successor considerable, and not make him vile, a thing of nought, and a by-word. O! whither do these things tend! Surely God hath a controversy with us. What a hurly-burly is there made! a 100 independant ministers called together! a councill, as you call it, of 2 or 300 officers of a judgment! Remember what has always befallen imposing spiritts. Will not the loins of an imposing independent or anabaptist be as heavy as the loins of an imposing prelate or presbyter? And is it a dangerous error, that dominion is founded in grace, when it is held by the church of Rome, and a sound principle, when it is held by the fifth-monarchy? Dear brother, let us not fall into the sins of other men, lest we partake of their plagues. Let it be so carryed, that all the people of God, though under different forms, yea, even those whom you count without, may enjoy their birth-right and civil liberty, and that no one party may tread upon the neck of another. It doth not become the magistrate to descend into parties; but can the things you do, tend to this end? Can those things be done, and the world not think his highness a knave or a fool, or oppressed with mutinous spirits? O dear brother, my spirit is sorely oppressed with the consideration of the miserable estate of the innocent people of these three poor nations! What have these sheep done, that their blood should be the price of our lust and ambition? Let me beg of you to remember, how his late highness loved you, how he honoured you with the highest trust in the world by leaving the sword in your hand, which must defend or destroy us; and his declaring his highness his successor shews, that he left it there to preserve him and his reputation. O brother, use it to curb extravagant spirits, and busy bodys; but let not the nations be governed by it. Let us take heed of arbitrary power. Let us be governed by the known laws of the land, and let all things be kept in their proper channels; and let the army be so governed, that the world may never hear of them, unless there be occasion to fight. And truly, brother, you must pardon me, if I say, God and man may require this duty at your hand, and lay all miscarriages in the army, in point of discipline, at your door. You see I deal freely and plainly with you, as becomes your friend, and a good subject.

And the great God, in whose presence I speak this, he knows, that I do it not to reproach A.D. 1658. you, but out of my tender affection and faithfulness to you; and you may rest assured, that you shall always find me

Your true friend, and loving brother.

Postscript. Why were we comprehended in the title of your address, and concluded by 2 officers? If it be not printed, pray do not cozen the world.

Lord deputy Cromwell to secretary Thurloc.

SIR,

I FEARE by your last weeke's silence, that your indisposition is returned upon you. I Vol. lxi. p. 338. wish it be from noe worse cause, though that be bad enough at this juncture, if my account of things bee true. This is but what I expected would unavoidably follow the death of my deare father, and whether it may tend, God knowes. I have thought myself obliged to discharge my conscience to my brother Fleetwood upon this occasion of this tumultuous meeting; which I have done faithfully and freely. I knowe not, whether you are in a condition to read this without trouble, and therefore forbear to enlarge. I know, when you are able, you will make good your promise to give me the full state of things at large. Wee are quiett here, and shall endeavour to keep so. I remane

Your very affectionate freind and humble servant,

Dublin, October 20th, 1658.

H. CROMWELL.

Lord deputy Cromwell to secretary Thurloc.

SIR,

I KNOW you had a very great reverence for that most worthie and learned person, the Vol. lxi. p. 397. late primate of Ireland, and upon his account did prevaile with his late highnes to resolve upon shewing some marke of his favour to his daughter, my lady Tyrrell, and her children. I have been informed by Sr. Tym. Tyrrell her husband, that there was a graunt readie to pass, of an annuity of 3 or 400 l. for some longe tearme, to bee charged upon the profits of the lands belonging to the sea of Ardmagh. Truly, Sir, I would not have those so good and charitable inclinations of his late highnes to bee without effect. I doe presume his now highnes (if you please to concern yourself as much now as heretofore) will not bee backward to see good a worke. Indeed I thinke they will need this help for their subsistence, and it's pittie the posteritie of such a person should want. If I can make any judgment of professions with such other observations, which have occurred to mee of his deportment, I beleive the bearer to bee not onely peaceably enclined, but readie, to the best of his power, to be serviceable to your interest. I remane

Your very affectionate freind and servant,

Octob. 20th, 58.

H. CROMWELL.

Mr. Downing, the English resident in Holland, to secretary Thurloc.

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

THIS day I received from the states general, by the hand of their agent, the answer of Vol. lxi. p. 339. the admiralty of Zeeland to my memoriall presented to the states this day 14 dayes; the summe whereof is, that they have stoped all the Flanders men of warr in Zeeland, and that justice shall be done. By the post you shall have a copy thereof; but it seemes by this, that they doe not finde the businesse as they had represented in their former letter to the states generall; yet, for my one part, I am very much an infidell as to the issue;

for I see plainly it runs from one end of this country to the other, ^{by this meanes} 239 469 379 205 287 to destroy the shipping of England,

477 263 140 148 443 171 468 456 339 56 408 547, and that must and will certainly 231 468 346 140 u 42 468 137 408. I thinke, yea I am sure, it would be of importance, that 510 268, in a 459 358 102 109 254 108 50 286 205 251 for that very purpose and noe other, 135 42 384 109 142 146 437 466 469 371 148

A.D. 1658.

to Nieuport.

great noise here,

145 286 477 527. This would make a 55 134 42 219 395 346 324 134, and, I am good.

sure, doe very much 316. I pray seriously think of it, and let it be done; and upon notice of its being done, 395 475 251 408 71 149 140 231 339 56 272, I hope I shall not be wanting to improve it heere.

This week this last post by the letters from Hamburg we have newes, that the king of Sweden's forces, under the command of major-general Douglas, have fallen into Curland, taken his capitall city of Mittau, with the duke and his whole family, (his dutchess having bin brought to-bed but few dayes before) and carryed them away prisoners for Riga; a thing, which administers much discourse heere, and the rather for that it's said, that the said duke had obteyned of the king of Poland, whose vassall he was, to be neutrall in this warr betweene the Swedes and the Poles. The king of Sweden hath lately written another letter to this state, wherein is an expresseion to this purpose, that this state would at least have as great priviledges as any nation whatsoever, in relation to the trade of the Baltique sea. I have herein inclosed to you a copy of a letter, which was taken by a Danish vessell, going from the king of Sweden to generall Douglas; and I doe it the rather, because in the postscript thereof there is mention made of the protector that now is, and that a postscript written with the king of Sweeden's own hand. Not more, but that I am,

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

Hague, the $\frac{21}{31}$. October, 1658.

Your most faythfull humble servant,

G. DOWNING.

Not one word of newes from admirall Opdam. Heere was a report, as if the king of Sweden's fleete was retired; but it doth not hold. We begin now to be in houely expectation of the issue of that greate business.

Memorial of the Portugal ambassador.

1. Novemb. 1658. [N. S.]

Vol. lxi. p. 346.

THE underwritten ambassador of Portugal, having seen and considered the treaty of peace made with the commonwealth of England, hath been found, that the 20 ships he hath offered, which his majesty of Portugal should freight every year for the subjects of the states general, which touch partly the second article of the said treaty. Wherefore he finds himself obliged to advertise their lordships thereof, that, in that particular, he will oblige himself to do only so far, as it may not prejudice England. Given at the Hague, 1st Novemb. 1658.

Mr. Downing, the English resident in Holland, to secretary Thurloc.

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

Vol. lxi. p. 341.

HAVEING written unto you yesterday by the way of Skeveling, I have nothing farther to add; yet doe not thinke fitt to omitt the post. We heare not any thing yet from admiral Opdam, nor his fleete; but the weather hath bin extreame good ever since he went to sea, and so continues; so that we are in hourly expectation of what is past. There was a report heere since the last post, as if the king of Sweden had drawne his fleete from Cronnigburg to Copenhagen, and thereupon it was conjectured, that he would avoyd fighting; but that report continues not, so that it is now verily believed, that blowes have past between them, and the consequences thereof must be greate, which way soever that business turne, of which I have severall times hinted in my former letters. By the last post from Hamburg we have newes, that general Douglas hath fallen into Courland, and seized Mittau, the principall city thereof, and carryed away the said duke, with his dutchess and whole family, prisoners to Riga; another unexpected action, and which administers much discourse heere, Courland being a dependence of the kingdome of Poland, but which had obteyned leave to be neutrall in this late warr; and it seemes the dutchess had bin brought to-bed but few dayes before she was carryed away, as you will perceive by the inclosed. And I have heerein inclosed to you a letter of the king of Sweden's, giveing farther order for the doing thereof, which was intercepted by the Danes, and printed heere; and I the rather doe it, because there is therein mention of his highnes, that now is. The states of Holland being seperated, there is nothing here of moment at this time, time, nor will be, till the issue be knowne of the great business towards the North, according to which all counsells will be steered here. In mine yesterday I sent you what newes I

Ch. Stuart's court, had from 572 254 155 133 146, and, as was therein hinted, I doe assure you, that Tom. Howard hath seen

477 90 328 483 132 36 323 141 42 43 105 severall letters from severall 73 45 144

157 346 149 138, wherein they write most confidently and particularly of 267 155 73

138 345 140 339 468 214, and particularly amongst 468 56 135 42 219 413 141

468 156 408 388 339 53 468 103; and for the more particular account hereof, I referre you to mine yesterday. It's said, that the states of Poland are now assembled, or assembling, upon the business of the peace with Sweden. Whether this new accident of Courland may be a hindrance thereunto, I know not.

Since my last, I have so laboured with the Portugall ambassador about that part of his proposition concerning the hiring of 20 ships of the Low-Countryes every yeare to goe to Brasile, and other the Portugall plantations, as that I have induced him to give in a memoriall to the commissioners, with whom he treats, recanting the same in so far as it is contrary to the treaty with England, a copy whereof I have heere inclosed sent unto you; and I thought it was better to prevent this business by times, then to lett it run on farther, and it may be past remedy. I am,

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

Hague, 22. October, 1658.
1st Novemb.

Your most affectionate,

saythfull humble servant,

G. DOWNING.

I pray your thoughts and care, that I may have for this quarter, which ended at Michaelmasse, for the mayntenance of the English ministers heer; else the English congregation heer will fall; and this bring a great obloquy upon his highness: the queen and that party expect it, and would highly glory therein.

Dobson,

There is one 270 22 144 412, a young man, pretending to follow a law-suite at London 305 327 300 339 468 565, who hath often recourse to 468 365 137

38 31 355 170 431 112 84 287 329, who very frequently 161 441 150 287

390 162 140 325 468 131.

From Nicuport, the Dutch ambassador in England.

London, 1. Novemb. [1658. N. S.]

BY the Sieur Morland I prayed the secretary of state, that I may have a final answer to my memorials, and principally touching the affairs of Denmark, and the marine treaty, because I had left my wife and part of my family in Holland, and for other reasons very important, as the death of my father-in-law, and other kindred, I was constrained to return to the Hague, and that their high mightinesses would be amazed, that I should not be able to give a good account of what I had in charge. I also saluted some counsellors of state; and tuesday came to me the Sieurs Wolsely and Strickland, with secretary Jessop, saying, that many merchants of this nation make high complaints of the damages suffered in the East Indies from the company of Holland; that the council had thereupon given order, that they should prove the same before the court of admiralty; and that being now justified by the writings of doctor Walker and doctor Turner, the said council had ordered to put the writings into my hands, that due restitution may be given to the plaintiffs. I answered, that, before my departure from the Hague, the Sieur resident Downing had complained of this business; that their high mightinesses had considered thereon, sent to and heard the directors of the said company, and resolved, that if it appeared to be true, as was complained, that reparation should be made. That since their high mightinesses had sent me a resolution of the sixth of August last with divers peers, which were translated into English, and whereof I had the twenty-second of the same month communicated the substance in writing, according to the order and intention of their high mightinesses, to his late highness; and that I had often endeavoured to inform

A.D. 1658. myself of what was thereon resolved. Whereupon they told me, that they had heard nothing at council; that because of the great change, and the sickness of the secretary of state, it might be, that it was still in his hands; and having communicated unto them the particulars, they promised me to make report thereof. Afterward I read the twenty-fourth article of the last treaty of peace, and told them, that divers subjects of the United Provinces were also grievously injured near the Barbados and Caribbee islands by general Penn; that an Amsterdam ship, called the St. James, had been most outrageously pillaged upon the coast of Sussex by the inhabitants of the same country; that there were many other complaints of the injuries and damages, which divers merchants and masters of ships of the United Provinces had suffered, and that had been by me signified to this government, without obtaining any restitution or reparation; that for this reason there ought to be held a mutual order and willingness to end the business upon the proofs made before the court of admiralty, they would do the same in this case in Holland, although the twentieth article speaks otherwise. They told me, that they would report the same; and at last I shewed them by many reasons, and to prevent the complaints on both sides, that the treaty marine should be concluded, principally seeing that their high mightinesses (as by a writing of the twenty-ninth of August of mine might be seen) had yielded to all that was proposed touching that business; and that, if that had been done before, the complaints of the merchants trading in the Indies had not been; that they of the company of Holland, not knowing in the Indies, that there was any agreement for more moderation in either side; and that a man of war of Zeland being here arrived, wherein I intended, God willing, to pass the seas into Holland before the season pass, I prayed them, that I might know the final resolution of this state, that I might give account thereof to their high mightinesses. The Sieur Wolfely told me, that he was obliged to make a journey into the country, but that now he would speedily make report to his highness and to his council. Yesterday I saluted them again, and shewed, that I was no longer to stay the men of war. Whereupon he desired me to have a little patience till next week, that then it might be determined; that now they were upon a business, wherein the state was greatly interested, even such an one, that the prosperity and welfare of the state depended thereon, intimating, that it was for satisfying the army touching their proposition for a general. He promised me also, that he would speak the same day with the secretary for the preparing of all things. And the wind being east since yesterday, and continuing still, the captain of the man of war told me, that he would be ready for next wednesday. I hope, that their high mightinesses will find, that I have endeavoured, according to my most humble duty, to put in execution their orders and good intentions.

Resolution of the states general in answer to resident Downing's last memorial of the same date.

2. Novemb. 1658. [N. S.]

Vol. lxi. p. 357. THERE hath been read in the assembly a certain memorial of the Sieur resident Downing, containing complaints concerning an English ship carried to Enchuysen, and another to Delfsiel; also that notwithstanding their high mightinesses letter of the fourth of September to the admiralty of Friseland, and their placart of the ninth of August, yet the said admiralty, instead of restoring another ship called the Love and Friendship, had given sentence to return the ship and goods to the Flemish men of war, that brought her in, and that the proprietor should pay half the charges of the suit, &c. Whereupon, after deliberation, it is found good, that a copy of the said memorial shall be sent to the admiralty of the North quarter, and in Friseland, with requisition and commandment very serious, that they will, concerning all the English ships and goods brought in by any Flemish men of war, punctually and precisely execute the contents of the said placart of the ninth of August, without failing in any manner whatsoever; and therefore not to permit by any means, that the English ships so brought in, be unladen, disposed, or alienated, making the violators of the same to feel the penalties set down in the said placart.

